

Library

University of Pittsburgh

Darlington Memorial Library

Class DER

Book N 62

v. 61

NILES'
NATIONAL REGISTER,

CONTAINING

POLITICAL, HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, SCIENTIFIC, STATISTICAL, ECONOMICAL, AND BIOGRAPHICAL

DOCUMENTS, ESSAYS AND FACTS:

TOGETHER WITH

NOTICES OF THE ARTS AND MANUFACTURES,

AND A

RECORD OF THE EVENTS OF THE TIMES.

JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

FROM SEPTEMBER, 1841, TO MARCH, 1842—VOLUME LXI—OR, VOL. XI, FIFTH SERIES.

BALTIMORE:
PRINTED BY THE EDITOR,
EXCHANGE PLACE, SECOND DOOR EAST OF SOUTH STREET.

[illegible][illegible]

- navigation and commerce on, tonnage rates 369; report of Chesapeake and Ohio 352; of New York 363; and asked for the Illinois and Michigan 114; ib. resolution relative to Chesapeake and Ohio 352
- Candia 52
- Canton—Newtown (Gov. of Tennessee) death of 63, 97
- Canton—rebellion at 63, 97
- Caroline, the—Lord Russell on the destruction of, Cal. 178, 114
- Napier on 32; a card concerning 178, 114
- Cass, G. (Illinois) in house of representatives 37
- Cass, Gen.—purport of letter from 37
- Cattle 134
- Cecil county (Maryland) assessment of 384
- Census—report of committee of congress on distribution of printed returns 19; vote of representatives on 14, 13; message relative to 27, 37; of Great Britain 113; U. S. 113, 114, 115; notes on Cal. of Charleston 128; of Belfast 144; of Great Britain 109; returns of sixth prize ship, transited in congress 287; of Ireland 285; appropriation bill according to 46; in congress 334; China 333; communication relative to 412
- Centenary of Lethersan 221
- Central America 35; earthquake in 257; General Murphay arrives in 334; attempt to assassinate Gen. Carrera 177; minister from United States to ib.
- Champagne wine 96
- Champlain, Sir Francis (Scotland) death of 273
- Champlain—resolution in U. S. senate relative to 273
- Chapman, H. letter from declining to serve on committee of congress 239
- Charleston—cessant of 128
- Chesapeake and Ohio canal—resolution for transfer of stock to 265; report of president of 320, 415
- China—leave to establish port of entry 299, 300
- China—British fleet in Canton 97; blockade of Canton, proceedings 120; forces of expedition to 132; alleged defrauds on river, paragraphs from Canton press, Sir H. G. G. expected, ransom money, angry edict from emperor, surrender of Nansai Kiao 162-8; H. F. Potter's arrival, notification, news 225; island of Amoy besieged by Great Britain, Mandarins feeble, populace of Amoy, Chinese, junks attacked, Wang Tung destroyed, Cow Loong taken, reports of capture of Chinese and island of Amoy captured by British, news 225; classes, landings, amount of revenue, taxes & contributions 333, news from 334
- Chinese collection from 334
- Chloride of lime, petitions for duties on 11, 23
- Choctaw reservations; bill passed U. S. senate 23
- 25; referred to house of representatives ib.
- Christmas, account of in the Sandwich Isles 66
- Christmas day 287
- Cincinnati—not 32; mobs in 336
- Circassians victorious over Russians 953
- Civil expenses, appropriations for 359, 393, 415
- Classes in China 239
- C. C. Clay, resignation of 219, 401
- Clay, Henry, letter from 67; on present of plough 209
- Clayton—different countries 80
- Coal, 32; in Cuba 60, 100; trade of Pennsylvania 203, in 336; quantity in port of Boston 220
- Coast, report of survey of transmitted to senate of U. S. 23
- Coastal committee on appointed 415
- Coastal union, account of 176
- Coffin Wainman, account of 176
- Colombian history of New York, inquiry relative to 294
- Colony—population—Sketch of laws of Maryland relative to 215, 216; of Virginia 215; of Ohio, colony proposed 229; petition from the Mass. to naturalization law 229
- Colonization 224, 250; meeting in Washington 335
- Columb, John, Mr. (of Georgia) qualified 381
- Columbia river, account of 226
- Commerce—see trade, ib. resolutions by committee on 28; laid on table ib.; resolution on relations of U. S. with other nations, adopted 29; annual report of United States 196; statistics of 122; sketch continued 210, 226; standing committee of U. S. senate on 234; of house of representatives 255; resolution that committee expedite to 264; expediency of appropriation conducive to 264; of Baltimore 255; of New York 255; of French Guiana 283; chamber of present memorial for aid 283; of Boston 303; bill in senate regulating with Cayenne 283; of Guiana &c. 299; committee on instructed to inquire into the necessity of appropriation for constructing a new lake, of Northern Lakes 336; trade on and lakes 338; letter on 333; of cotton crops of U. S. States 269; of Cleveland 270; committee on to make inquiry into the expediency of excluding British vessels from certain ports 363
- Commercial emporium 294
- Committee of purchases 312
- Commissioners, house of, bill to establish 254
- Committees standing 254
- Common schools, of New Jersey 352
- Comparative table, of agricultural industry 360
- Compromise act, memorial from Pennsylvania opposing 360
- Constitutional frigate 125
- Consent of senate, bill for mail, founded 372
- Congress—of 27th, 31st, 32nd, divisions of 372
- Mr. Clay's resolution relative to members of being re-elected from civil appointments during official term 229, on amending 27th of senate 303; privilege question disposed of, vote thereon 363
- Congressional temperance society 400
- Consular, resignation of, 175, 197; resignation of C. C. Clay 219, death of H. Black 225
- Connecticut—banks 20; Tyler convention, history of 57; abolition movements 89; discovery 91; thanksgiving 107
- Consent of Maryland 57; vote on amendment of 133; of Virginia for a liberation of 213; amendments proposed to the U. S. States 273; petition of L. V. Wright 8; others relative to 377; new one in Rhode Island 320; Mr. Clay's resolutions in United States senate for amendment of the U. S. States 373, 381, 394; vote on amendment 373; petition for amendment of 373
- Consul, recognition of 1, 55, 98, 131, 145, 177, 201, 256; recognitions 273, 416
- Consular election (of Florida) 28
- Continental army, sketch of lecture on 28
- Contingent expenses 22; report of secretary of state on 254; standing committee on 254, 415
- Contingent fund, report of secretary of senate 268
- Convention, American, unannounced congress on the between New York and Virginia 243
- Corruptions, suppression of 401
- Corruptions, called in Connecticut and New York; 37 slaveholders 58; Universal general 102
- Episcopal 33; mechanics of Maine 116; great suffrage of Rhode Island, Van Buren, mass, home industry 118; whig of New York 123, 125, 147; anti-slavery 123; military of Maryland 133; General 148, 151; of New Hampshire 147; military 148, 151; of western 173; of whigs of Vermont 182; in Virginia for 178; colored held 229; history of the Harrisburg 232; 335; addition in New York 320; in Maryland 321, 336, 357
- Cost, the national for encouragement of, home industry 384; Van Buren in Virginia 384, national red 416
- Copper, iron, &c., begins 281, letter from 339
- Copyrights, leave asked to editors of Cal. relative to 341
- Corn—laws of G. Britain 1, 16; crop in Florida 48, 210
- Correspondence, letter from Mr. Crittenden on resigning 33, 34; from D. W. G. to editors of Cal. 341
- U. S. Ketchum to G. E. Badger, John Bell 53, 54; Mr. Webster 34; extract from Florida 36; Henry Clay's to 103; the Oregon 1467; Gen. Jackson 361; Mr. Tallmadge 361; Mr. C. Calhoun, Tennessee 361; Mr. Van Buren 361; Mr. Foster 152, 153; letter from Gen. Scott 163; Tyler Fe. from H. Clay to editors of Cal. 178, 194; from Santa Fe, William S. Wait on Illinois bonds 242; Mr. Bell 231; U. S. trade and commerce, canal navigation &c. by J. Tallmadge 361; relative to Santa Fe, capture 242, 343; political 392; Carter Beverly ib.; Mr. Webster 361, Everett 403, 494
- Cotton—prices, crops 16, 45, 61, 96, 100; goods 112, manufactures 163; Boundary prices current, Texan, crops 176; remarks and important statistics 176; market 180; imports of in France 155; trade of 177; market 263; cultivation of in East Indies 337; crops of Egypt 334
- Court, proceedings in McLeod's case 99; McLeod in case in 101, 119; trial in Illinois 119; de-lusion of case in Louisiana 268; decision of supreme of Ohio in case of misprision of felony 274
- Cranberry creek 160
- Cream of tartar, exempted from duty 11
- Cuba—late 258; resolution submitted to United States senate 312; 313; 325, 326; 327; 328; 329; 330; 331; 332; 333; 334; 335; 336; 337; 338; 339; 340; 341; 342; 343; 344; 345; 346; 347; 348; 349; 350; 351; 352; 353; 354; 355; 356; 357; 358; 359; 360; 361; 362; 363; 364; 365; 366; 367; 368; 369; 370; 371; 372; 373; 374; 375; 376; 377; 378; 379; 380; 381; 382; 383; 384; 385; 386; 387; 388; 389; 390; 391; 392; 393; 394; 395; 396; 397; 398; 399; 400; 401; 402; 403; 404; 405; 406; 407; 408; 409; 410; 411; 412; 413; 414; 415; 416; 417; 418; 419; 420; 421; 422; 423; 424; 425; 426; 427; 428; 429; 430; 431; 432; 433; 434; 435; 436; 437; 438; 439; 440; 441; 442; 443; 444; 445; 446; 447; 448; 449; 450; 451; 452; 453; 454; 455; 456; 457; 458; 459; 460; 461; 462; 463; 464; 465; 466; 467; 468; 469; 470; 471; 472; 473; 474; 475; 476; 477; 478; 479; 480; 481; 482; 483; 484; 485; 486; 487; 488; 489; 490; 491; 492; 493; 494; 495; 496; 497; 498; 499; 500; 501; 502; 503; 504; 505; 506; 507; 508; 509; 510; 511; 512; 513; 514; 515; 516; 517; 518; 519; 520; 521; 522; 523; 524; 525; 526; 527; 528; 529; 530; 531; 532; 533; 534; 535; 536; 537; 538; 539; 540; 541; 542; 543; 544; 545; 546; 547; 548; 549; 550; 551; 552; 553; 554; 555; 556; 557; 558; 559; 560; 561; 562; 563; 564; 565; 566; 567; 568; 569; 570; 571; 572; 573; 574; 575; 576; 577; 578; 579; 580; 581; 582; 583; 584; 585; 586; 587; 588; 589; 590; 591; 592; 593; 594; 595; 596; 597; 598; 599; 600; 601; 602; 603; 604; 605; 606; 607; 608; 609; 610; 611; 612; 613; 614; 615; 616; 617; 618; 619; 620; 621; 622; 623; 624; 625; 626; 627; 628; 629; 630; 631; 632; 633; 634; 635; 636; 637; 638; 639; 640; 641; 642; 643; 644; 645; 646; 647; 648; 649; 650; 651; 652; 653; 654; 655; 656; 657; 658; 659; 660; 661; 662; 663; 664; 665; 666; 667; 668; 669; 670; 671; 672; 673; 674; 675; 676; 677; 678; 679; 680; 681; 682; 683; 684; 685; 686; 687; 688; 689; 690; 691; 692; 693; 694; 695; 696; 697; 698; 699; 700; 701; 702; 703; 704; 705; 706; 707; 708; 709; 710; 711; 712; 713; 714; 715; 716; 717; 718; 719; 720; 721; 722; 723; 724; 725; 726; 727; 728; 729; 730; 731; 732; 733; 734; 735; 736; 737; 738; 739; 740; 741; 742; 743; 744; 745; 746; 747; 748; 749; 750; 751; 752; 753; 754; 755; 756; 757; 758; 759; 760; 761; 762; 763; 764; 765; 766; 767; 768; 769; 770; 771; 772; 773; 774; 775; 776; 777; 778; 779; 780; 781; 782; 783; 784; 785; 786; 787; 788; 789; 790; 791; 792; 793; 794; 795; 796; 797; 798; 799; 800; 801; 802; 803; 804; 805; 806; 807; 808; 809; 810; 811; 812; 813; 814; 815; 816; 817; 818; 819; 820; 821; 822; 823; 824; 825; 826; 827; 828; 829; 830; 831; 832; 833; 834; 835; 836; 837; 838; 839; 840; 841; 842; 843; 844; 845; 846; 847; 848; 849; 850; 851; 852; 853; 854; 855; 856; 857; 858; 859; 860; 861; 862; 863; 864; 865; 866; 867; 868; 869; 870; 871; 872; 873; 874; 875; 876; 877; 878; 879; 880; 881; 882; 883; 884; 885; 886; 887; 888; 889; 890; 891; 892; 893; 894; 895; 896; 897; 898; 899; 900; 901; 902; 903; 904; 905; 906; 907; 908; 909; 910; 911; 912; 913; 914; 915; 916; 917; 918; 919; 920; 921; 922; 923; 924; 925; 926; 927; 928; 929; 930; 931; 932; 933; 934; 935; 936; 937; 938; 939; 940; 941; 942; 943; 944; 945; 946; 947; 948; 949; 950; 951; 952; 953; 954; 955; 956; 957; 958; 959; 960; 961; 962; 963; 964; 965; 966; 967; 968; 969; 970; 971; 972; 973; 974; 975; 976; 977; 978; 979; 980; 981; 982; 983; 984; 985; 986; 987; 988; 989; 990; 991; 992; 993; 994; 995; 996; 997; 998; 999; 1000

[illegible]

- Rice harvest 32, 80, 203
 Richards, J. P., governor of South Carolina, in-224, 241, 243, 245
 Right of netting on Delaware crowd out of netting
 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 380, 381, 382, 383, 409,
 410, 411, 412
 Right of search, Mr. Allen's resolution of enquiry relative to 296
 Right of visitation 241
 Ripley, rev. Ezra, death of, 96
 Rivers, Mr., second speech on veto message 58
 Roanoke, 24, statement showing situation of, ing com. of U. S. senate on, 254; of house of rep. on, 255
 Roanoke inlet, bill for appropriations to reopen, 359
 Roberts, Mr., governor of Liberia 359
 Rochester—manufacture of iron in, 208; architecture 240
 Rogers, Mary, persons implicated in murder of 20
 Rules of house of representatives of congress—report on, 47; discussion on, 235, 239; debate on motion suspending 241, 201; notice of motion to amend 343; notice of resolution to alter, 207
 Russell, Mr., choice of, at special election in Pennsylvania 206; in U. S. senate 300
 Russia—religions of, 63; items concerning 193; Cereuscians victorious over 328
 Rutherford, gov., extract from message of, relative to relations of states 335
 S.
 Sackett's harbor 370
 Saes and Foxes 212
 Saes and Foxes, statement showing situation of, 227
 Salt trade in New York 21
 Salt spring, newly discovered 103
 Salvages, amount of, at Key West 365 Sandwich islands—affair between British consul and newspaper editor in, 66; Christianity in, ibid. our trade with 68; letter from, 226
 Santa Fe—expedition 69; traders 100; traders 110; letter from, descriptive of, 209; expedition to, seized 209; account of, 209; expedition to, 209; expedition to, relative to American traders to, presented to congress 333; resolution adopted in house of representatives relative to information concerning traders to, ibid.; message from president Tyler relative to information concerning capture 342; account of expedition to, 363; resolution in senate relative to 303, 412
 Sarcophagi, of W. H. Harrison 123
 Sargent, Mr., secretary of U. S. treasury 359
 Scott, judge, of Missouri, on bench of supreme court 3
 Scott, gen., letter from, 169
 Scott, Charles, death of, 416
 Schuch, countess—report of communion, of Cincinnati
 214, 215; further statements of, 225; of New Jersey 322
 Massachusetts 332
 Schuyll navigation 304
 Secretary of navy—G. E. Badger resigned and judge
 Upshur appointed 359; Mr. Simms acting secretary 359;
 Mr. Badger's letter of resignation ibid. A. P. Upshur appointed 95, 131; report on contingent expenses transmitted to senate 234; communication from to house of representatives relative to expenditures 254, 335; annual report of, 203, 204, 365, 256, 267, 285; report from, on practicability of establishing navy yard and depot in gulf of Mexico 371; communications relative to opinions of, 384; letter from containing cost of steamers 415; statement of, 416
 Secretary of state (Daniel Webster)—letters from 34; letter from 54; relative to 67, 98; reports showing incidental expenses 234; letter from, containing statement of expenditures of contingent fund in house of representatives 233; committee of house representatives on expenditures of department of state 239; communication from, relative to census 238; practice copy of census transmitted to house of representatives by, 257, 331; communication relative to Santa Fe traders 342; letter to Mr. Everett from, 403, 404; report and information from relative to Creole 414
 Secretary of treasury (Thomas Edwin)—letters and papers, in relation to removals from office 14;
 loan obtained by, 19; amount of notes issued 16; letter of resignation by, 33, 34; letter from, relative to Indian money &c. 41; communication from, on money in U. S. bank of Pennsylvania 42; Mr. Forward temporary head officer at department of, 33;
 Walter Forward 88; return of, to Washington 164;
 Mr. Forward's report in relation to annual report received in senate 234; report of, in house of representatives 235; report upon fiscal account 257, 258, 259, 260, 261; report on state of finances 275, 276; statement of exports and imports 280; annual report of,
 in house of representatives 230; report of, considered 300, 329; report of, considered in U. S. senate 330; resolutions in U. S. senate for reports by 347; report of, on progress of coast surveys 350; a bill amending of several acts establishing department of, 408,
 409, 415
 Secretary of war (John Bell of Tennessee)—communication from, relative to certain troops 15; contract submitted by, also letter and report on harbour of New Castle 29; McLean acting secretary of, 359;
 Bell's letter and statement on resigning 334; John C.
 Spencer appointed 34, 98; report of 250, 251, 252, 253; report from, on public defences transmitted to senate 254; abstracts of expenditures of contingent funds in senate 257; report from, submitted to house of representatives 255; communication from, to U. S. senate relative to applicants for pensions 250; resolution of equality of, relative to boundary line of Wisconsin and Michigan 249; report from, on origin of Sealine war 280; resolution of enquiry of, relative to tariff on foreign nations adopted in U. S. senate 395; communication from, relative to surveys of lakes, submitted to U. S. senate 397; letter of information on cost of military road in Maine transmitted to congress from, 399
 Security, for person, petition for, in all states 339 laid on table 349
 Seminole war, report from secretary of war on origin of, 380; see Florida
 Senate of U. States—meeting of, 237; election of Mr. Sprague to, 369
 Mr. Sargent, Mr., resigns seat in congress 58
 Seward, gov.—reward offered by, 57; extract from message of, relative to position with regard to Virginia and South Carolina 325
 Sheep husbandry 350
 Sharpshooters 102
 Ships of U. States 191
 Ship building 102
 Shipwrecks, items of, 128
 Silk 128
 Silver—mine—in deposit from, to U. S. mint at Philadelphia 16; in N. Carolina 74; resolution for statement of exports and imports of, 278; imports and exports of, since 1820, 128
 Sites—bill reported relative to duty of attorney general concerning, 25, 28; on printing papers relative to certain, 29
 Slade, Mr., speech by, on abolition of slavery 135, continued 134
 Slaveholders—convention in Maryland 320; convention held and resolutions adopted by, 322, 323; proceedings of, 356, 357, 358; item relative to convention in Maryland 363
 Slaves—appeal in behalf of, 16; case of, in Ohio 134; memorial on insurance of, presented to U. S. senate 273; referred to committee on foreign relations 36; petitions from Ohio relative to, 315; law passed in Maryland, to prevent emancipation of, 320; resolution of inquiry in certain case, 115 Slavery—Cuba in reference to, 34; petitions relative to, in U. S. senate 277, 414; proceedings in congress relative to, 316; petitions having reference to, in house of representatives 335; Vermont resolution on, in U. S. senate 349
 Slave trade—correspondence on suppression of, 178, 179; treaty in Europe for suppression of 337;
 number of vessels engaged in, captured by Fantome
 268
 Smith, gen. S., resolution to erect monument to, 38
 Smithsonian bequest 27; annuities loaned and losses
 69; select committee on, in house of representatives 235; part of president's message submitted to committee on, 301
 Smith, fire at, 16
 Sparks, Mr., extract of lecture of, 220
 Spain—Espartero ill, bill of proposition withdrawn, 52, 128; riot at Madrid, revolted regiments submit to regent, republicans of Barcelona submit to republicans of France, account of insurrection 163, difficulties over, fate of leaders, regent's address 195; Barcelona ibid.; extract from Madrid Gazette and other papers, the cavalry of royal guard suppressed, the resolution relative to royal guard, coasts ordered, character of royal speech, democracy, character of municipal bill, cottons of Catalonia, corn trade 338; Espartero refuses to accede to pretensions of French minister, convents and monasteries to be sold 401
 Special election 178; in Pennsylvania 16
 Specie 43, 96, 112, 128, 144, 160, 176, 192, 205,
 240, 304
 Special mission, to U. States from Great Britain 337
 Speech—Mr. Botts on second veto message 74, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9; Mr. Poillon on second veto 92, 93, 94, 95;
 of Mr. Slade on condition of slavery 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143; of Mr. Kayser of receipt of abolition petitions 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175
 Spencer, J. C., appointed secretary of war 84, 98
 Spoilsman, memorial for indemnity for, 347
 Sprague, Wm., elected United States senator 369
 Squier, E., death of, 416
 Stanley, Mr., difference Mr. Wise 43, 44
 St. James, (Mich.) petition for appropriation of St. Josephs, (Mich.) petition for appropriation of improvement of, 371; referred ib. 352
 State bonds 352
 State debts, Kentucky resolutions on 358
 State island, (N. Y.) bill referred making appropriation of, reported 27; postponed ib., bill reported for appropriations for, 30
 Stationary, resolution relative to, passed 29, 315
 Statistics—of cod-fishery in France 17; of trade between United States and Great Britain 19; of New York canals 20, 21; of Pennsylvania 21, 22; of religion in Russia 63; of population of Illinois 90; Methodist, steamers 112; of commerce 132; of schools in Massachusetts 182; of Prussia 195; vehicles in Paris 208; of slaves 211; of elections in N. York 212; in Ohio 214; of imports and exports from 1791 to 1821 226;
 of canal tolls 288; of Maine 320; of lead trade, of export of coin, on receipts of Schuyllkill canal 138; of commerce on lakes 336; of Pennsylvania coal trade 336; of banks of Maine 352; of schools in Massachusetts 352; of China 338; exports and imports of gold and silver 400
 Statue of Washington—bill on, passed house of representatives 123; passed in senate 23, 29, 43, 127, placed in rotunda 224, 270; committee on, 282
 Statue of Napoleon 18, 160
 Steamers—ship Precursor for Calcutta, line between Bremen and United States 48; items of, ib.;
 Platte sunk, coach, ship items, British 64; Chilli, Erie, frigate Kamscharka 80; prices in, West India boats, British Queen 96; accident to Beaufort 101;
 St. Louis trade, President, Canada's, new line 112; law 116, 128; running ashore, coal for, items 160, 192, 208, 224; ship Savannah lost 400; owned at St.
 Louis 208; arrival of Kamscharka in Russia 273; Erie burnt 322; the, of Great Britain 368; the war, on lake Erie 334; trial of the Mississippi ib., line projected between Pacific coast of South America and New Zealand and Australia 401; cost of ships Mississippi and Mississippi 415
 Steamboat—bill from Charleston to England, burning of the Mississippi 273
 Steam navigation, to India 273
 Stevenson, Mr., 48; return of, to United States 161; correspondence of, 178, 179; reply of, to citizens of Philadelphia 206; correspondence of, relative to determination of American vessels 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249
 Stocks 16, 32, 96, 112, 144, 160, 176, 192, 208, 240, 250
 Sound dues, of Denmark 1
 South America 66; Rio Grande 84; Monte Video, Buenos Ayres naval fleet, Paraguay ib.; interesting facts 97; despatches from, 256
 South Carolina—statement of bank of, 74; military report 89; commencement of annual session of, 203; legislature 213; governor's message 220, 221, 223;
 George Gantt resigns, 229; bill for the purpose of certain acts passed 274; law passed to prevent emancipation 320; report from executive of, in relation to public lands, and Virginia and New York controversy, submitted to U. S. senate 372; extract from gov. Seward's letter relative to relations with 385
 Southwestern road, (Va.) memorial 212, 213
 Submarine armour 268
 Sub-treasury—robbed 56; Mr. Walker's resolution calling for statement of losses see 330
 Sugar trade 87; from cornstalks 96, 192
 Suicides in army 69
 Suit 132; against Hoyt 178
 Sumas exempted from duty 16
 Sunday mails 333
 Supreme court, annual session of, 303
 Suvey—of Patapasco river 69; of coast 301; communications relative to 397
 Sweden, tariff of, 363
 Switzerland, canton Tessino in, represses convent
 397
 Sydenham, lord, gov. gen. of Canada, death of, 33
 Syria—anarchy in, 52, 84; civil commotions quelled, Damascus, British to evacuate, 333
 T.
 Table of comparative value of states in agriculture 70
 Tallahassee, health of, 16
 Tallmadge, Gen.,—on trade of lakes 305; address of before American institute 296, 297, 298, 299; letter from to editor on lake trade 309, 310
 Tallmadge, Mr., letter from 308
 Tallmadge, judge, review of decision on McClellan's case 187
 Tariff—state of Vermont on 182, 280, Mr. Slade on 290, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 300; question of reference, decided 301; Louisiana and the 307, 308, 309, 310, 311; Vermont's resolutions on 341;
 resolutions of enquiry on laws of 313; debate 314; meeting 352, letter on 353; of Sweden 368; resolution for information relative to 381; movement relative to 384; resolutions of 389, 390; on the 397, 398; subject in relation to laid on the table 3; duration of the law on certain imports 402, 412; memorial from Pennsylvania referred 413; debate 413, 414; meeting in Hagerstown relative to 416
 Tax law, vote on repeal of, in Maryland 304
 Tea, 45, 96, 144, 160, 240
 Telegraph, system of considering 112
 Temperance—naval 70, 80; in N. Jersey 89; reform
 96; celebration in New York 115; in Canada 160
 Temperance Society Congressional, 400, 414

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 1.—VOL. XL.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 4, 1841.

[VOL. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,562.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1, VOL. 11.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE VOLUME.—CONGRESSIONAL. APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT, investigating commissioners. TRADE AND COMMERCE, civil law duties, sound dues and quarantine. BANKRUPT LAW, history of the. ARMY, general order No. 31, Gen. Scott, military academy. NAVY, items. STATES OF THE UNION, Rhode Island, general suffrage—Virginia, copper ore—Arkansas, terrible application of lynch law—Indiana, election—Illinois, more lynching, canal state debt—Missouri, appointments—Florida, west operations—Iowa, election.—THE BANKRUPT LAW. DEBATE OF THE PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE, Mr. Rice's speech, Mr. Clay's rejoinder. CONGRESS, proceedings of the senate, of the house of representatives. CHRONICLE.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

The number of the REGISTER, issued last week, completed the tenth volume of the new series. We have the pleasure of forwarding the first number of the eleventh volume, or sixty-first volume of the entire work, printed upon new type—manufactured for us at Mr. Carter's Baltimore type foundry—which will considerably improve the appearance of the publication.

For the generous and efficient support which the REGISTER continues to receive from a portion of its subscribers, the editor returns his heartfelt acknowledgment—and sincerely hopes that the efforts he is making to render the work useful, will be seconded by the friendly aid of those subscribers who—most of them, we are sure, from mere inadvertence—have allowed their accounts to be in arrear.

It is not necessary at this day to say one word in commendation of the character of the REGISTER, as a historical record; for it is so closely identified with the progress of the nation, that no man, who desires to attain correct information in relation to "men and things," can do so, satisfactorily, without reference to its pages. Those who possess entire copies of the work are, indeed, rich in its possession, and there is not a volume which is not daily increasing in value. To keep up its well earned reputation will be our constant aim—and we appeal to our old friends and the public to aid us in the effort to bequeath a rich political legacy to those who may come after us.

THE U. S. senate was occupied Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in a warm debate upon the bill which passed the house last week, to establish a FISCAL CORPORATION. The bill finally passed the senate yesterday, without amendment, yeas 27, nays 22—a strict party vote, with the exception of Mr. RIVES, who voted against the bill. Mr. ANCHER made a speech in favor of the bill on Thursday.

THE LAND DISTRIBUTION BILL having passed both houses, was yesterday signed by the president.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT, By and with the advice and consent of the senate. Charles S. Todd, of Kentucky, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia. David Jenifer of Maryland, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Austria. H. M. Breckwidge, of Pennsylvania, to be a commissioner under the act of congress to carry into effect the convention with the Mexican republic of the 11th April, 1839. Thomas B. Pottinger, marshal for the district of Maryland. John R. Vance, register of the land office, at Danville, Illinois.

VICE CONSULS. The president has recognized JOHN M. WRIGHT, esq. as vice consul of Brazil, for the port of Philadelphia. ARISTIDE BRANCO, esq. vice consul of Belgium, for the port of Norfolk, Virginia.

VOL. XI.—SIC. I.

THE PUBLIC FUNDS. The sub-treasurers having been dispensed with by virtue of the repeal of the sub-treasury law, at Boston, the American bank has been selected to keep the deposits.

At N. York the Merchants' bank was at first designated, but subsequently the Bank of Commerce was substituted—report says because the former refused to give the security required. The Bank of Commerce took out $500 of the government loan just negotiated, at 3 1/2 per centum.

INVESTIGATION. The Board of Commissioners appointed to investigate the New York custom house concerns, after a session of nearly three months, have brought their inquiries to a close. The testimony collected is said to occupy 800 folio pages, some of it of a very serious import.

The N. Y. American says, "The commissioners, on the eve of breaking up, addressed a letter to the collector, Mr. Curtis, approving the reform introduced by him into the custom house in the manner of keeping and accounting with the public moneys, in the reduction of the enormous incidental expenses of the office, and that of the number of persons employed. They also say that nothing has appeared which in any manner implicates Mr. Curtis in the discharging of his official duties. The testimony borne by all the commissioners to his diligence, intelligence and fidelity, cannot but be grateful to Mr. Curtis and to his friends."

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

THE BRITISH CORN LAWS. The question having been fairly submitted to the people of Great Britain, in their ultimate constitutional capacity, at the polls, whether they would adopt something more like reciprocity, and neutralize akin to free trade, or would adhere to the system which has so long and is still operating so disadvantageously to us, and they, by electing a decided majority of the tory party to parliament upon the express ground that, if elected, they would continue that policy, it now becomes the duty of every American citizen to acquaint himself with the scope of those said corn laws, and discern how it is that they affect our trade.

To facilitate this object, we subjoin a tabular statement of the duty payable, per barrel, on American flour, under the corn laws of Great Britain, carefully prepared by an American merchant, resident in Liverpool.

By act 9, of George IV, ch. 69, the duty on foreign wheat is as follows, viz:—When the average price of wheat is at and above—

Per cwt.	Duty per qr.	Duty per bbl. on flour.
5.	s. d.	s. d.
73	1 0	7 7.32
72	2 8	7 1.14
71	6 8	4 0.18
70	10 8	6 5
69	13 8	8 2.21.32
68	16 8	10 0.5.16
67	19 8	11 2.3.4
66	22 8	12 5.3.16
65	25 8	13 0.1.32
64	28 8	13 7.5.8
63	31 8	14 2.2.32
62	34 8	14 10.1.6
61	37 8	15 5.9.32
60	40 8	16 0
59	43 8	16 7.2.32
58	46 8	17 1.15.16
57	49 8	17 10.5.32
56	52 8	18 5.3.8
55	55 8	19 0.1.32
54	58 8	19 7.30.32
53	61 8	20 3.1.32
52	64 8	20 10.1.4
51	67 8	21 5.15.32
50	70 8	22 0.2.32
49	73 8	22 7.2.32
48	76 8	23 2.1.32
47	79 8	23 10.11.32
46	82 8	24 5.9.16
45	85 8	25 0.2.32
44	88 8	25 8
43	91 8	26 7.7.32

On barley and Indian corn, if the average price is 31s. and under 34s. the duty is 12s. 4d. per imperial quarter, and for every 1s. per quarter it advances, the duty is decreased 1s. 6d. until it reaches 41s. per

qr. at which price and upwards, no more than 1s. per qr. is levied; and the duty increases in like manner 1s. 6d. per qr. as the price declines 1s. or part of 1s. under 34s. per quarter.

On oats, if the average price is 35s. and under 26s. per qr. the duty is 9s. 3d. per qr.; decreasing 1s. 6d. per qr. as the average price advances 1s. until it reaches 31s. when at that price or more, the duty is only 1s. per qr.; and in like manner it is increased 1s. 6d. per qr. for every 1s. or part of 1s. per qr. the average recedes below 34s. per quarter.

For the convenience of those who do not readily understand quarters and sterling money, I. H. Hedley has prepared the following tables exhibiting the rates of duty per bushel in federal money, together with the duty on flour per barrel in federal money, so arranged that they correspond with the preceding table, and will be at once understood. Thus when wheat is at and over—

Per bushel.	Duty per bushel.	On flour per bbl.
82 cts. 6 mills.	02 cts. 8 mills.	13 cts.
1 39 8	04 9	35 2 mills.
1 97 0	18 5	88 8
1 94 2	20 6	$1 42 4
1 91 5	37 9	1 81 3
1 88 7	46 2	2 32 0
1 85 9	51 8	2 47 9
1 83 1	57 3	2 75 7
1 80 4	60 1	2 88 6
1 77 6	62 9	3 00 6
1 74 8	65 7	3 14 5
1 72 0	68 4	3 29 3
1 69 3	69 4	3 42 2
1 66 5	74 0	3 55 6
1 63 7	74 9	3 68 6
1 60 9	79 5	3 81 1
1 57 5	80 5	3 95 9
1 55 4	85 1	4 08 8
1 52 6	86 0	4 21 8
1 49 6	90 6	4 34 8
1 47 1	91 6	4 49 6
1 44 3	94 9	4 62 5
1 41 5	97 1	4 75 5
1 38 7	$1 01 7	4 88 4
1 35 9	1 02 7	5 01 4
1 33 2	1 07 3	5 16 1
1 30 4	1 08 2	5 29 1
1 27 6	1 12 8	5 42 0
1 24 8	1 13 8	5 55 0
1 22 1	1 18 4	5 69 6
1 19 3	1 19 3	5 90 2

Mr. Hedley observes, "From the inspection of the above tables it will be seen that the duty on flour is 50 per cent. higher than on grain: consequently shipper generally send wheat in bulk to England, unless the price is very high, when the duty is so small as to make the freight more than to counterbalance the extra duties. At best, however, it is but a hazardous business, and often attended with ruinous loss to American exporters. The extra duty on flour is no doubt intended as a sort of protective tariff to English flour manufacturers, and is abundantly characteristic of English tact and statesmanship. I have no wish to make comments now; the time is coming when this subject will be canvassed in all its parts, and an administration elected that will put forth all its power to procure either a total repeal of these unjust laws, or such a modification of them as will justify American merchants in seeking the ports of Great Britain as an available market for our increasing surplus of bread stuffs."

THE SWEET DUES.—QUARANTINE. A communication from the Elsinore custom house announces a reduction in the Christianiope tariff, to take effect on the 15th June 1841—annexed are the alterations:

	New duties.	Former duties.
Alkipce per 100 lbs.	41st*	9
Oranges, lemons, &c. chest.	1	2
Arsenic 300 lbs.	6	12
Opiment 100 lbs.	6	9
Cocoa "	6	24
Coffee "	6	24
Cannell's hair 50 lbs.	12	30
Cannella alba 100 lbs.	12	36
Cardamom "	18	36
Cassia fistula "	12	36
" lignea "	9	36

*45 shillings equal to two Danish dollars specie.

Cement	12 brls.	12	36
Cubies	per 100 lbs.	8	12
Juniper berries	800 lbs.	12	36
Cotton yarn or twist	100 lbs.	16	30
" " sewings	50 lbs.	15	30
" " printing	50 lbs.	15	30
" " Turkey	50 lbs.	15	30
" " for embly	50 lbs.	15	30
Camel's yarn	50 lbs.	18	30
Manna or manna groats	100 lbs.	2	9
Turnerie	100 lbs.	2	12
Sisal	100 lbs.	2	4
Dyewoods, viz: Japan and Spaw-wood, Provencewood, Sandalwood, Camwood or Barwood,
Calicutwood, Honduras-Campeachywood, Logwood, Firewood Gallicewood, Niaraguaewood, per 1,000 lbs. Stock-	8	30 or 36
fishwood, St. Marthawood, Ito
de la Hachewood per 1,000 lbs.	12	36
Dyewoods not mentioned or stated in the Christian-tariff schedule		1 percent ad val.
Mixed natural galls, all kinds, with the exception of white or ordinary calices, and those mentioned here		1 percent ad val.
Cotton hose per 50 pairs	6	30
Cotton hose and children's do.	6	30
per 100 pairs	6	30
Oldre per 200 lbs.	1	9
Pachre per 100 lbs.	6	1st
		[per bush]
Sarsaparilla per 100 lbs.	18	36
Soda per 300 lbs.	18	36
Spices not mentioned here		1 percent ad val.
Sugar, raw per 100 lbs.	5	9
Zinc per 100 lbs.	2	3

Ships from Cuba, and other American ports, have now, as long as the places are considered healthy, no detention at all, when they have had no case of sickness on the passage; otherwise, they will be liable to an observation quarantine. In case, however, any place should be declared infected, the vessels coming from the same will only have to perform an observation quarantine of from four to fourteen days, and not as formerly be subjected to a purification unloading.

We have received a communication from our custom house, stating that in accordance with the negotiations which have lately taken place, some dues on several articles not mentioned in the Christian-tariff, have been reduced from the 15th of June.

BANKRUPT LAW—ITS HISTORY. On the 4th of April, 1800, congress passed a uniform bankrupt law. At this time the business of the country was limited; the relations between debtor and creditor stood upon a different footing; imprisonment for debt existed in nearly all the states. The law applied to merchants and traders only. A farmer, a lawyer, or a mechanic had to become a trader, within the meaning of the act, to be entitled to the benefit of its provisions. A change in the political parties of the day was not without its effect upon this law. It was repealed December 19, 1803. Had the law remained, and been amended as time and experience would have suggested, it would have been of great benefit to the country, not only in a moral but in a pecuniary point of view. The country would have escaped many of the convulsions and disasters which it has, since that period, passed through.

The next action on the subject was in the house of representatives, January 1, 1812, when a committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcy.

In the house, January 3, 1815, Mr. Ingersoll, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill. (See bill H. R. No. 650.) At this time Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, sent in strong petitions in favor. (See house journal, 15th congress.)

In the house, February 27, 1816, Mr. Nelson, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill; April 22, committee discharged, and the subject indefinitely postponed.

In the house, December 13, 1816, Mr. Hopkins, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill. February 24, 1817, committee discharged and the subject indefinitely postponed.

In the house, December 12, 1817, Mr. Hopkins, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill. (See bill No. 6.) February 13, taken up in committee of the whole, debated from time to time, and finally indefinitely postponed—82 to 70. (See this debate.)

In the house, November 24, 1818, Mr. Hopkins, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill again; but it was not acted upon.

In the house, December 11, 1819, Mr. Sergeant, from the committee on the judiciary reported a bill; but it was not acted upon.

In the senate, January 12, 1820, Mr. Smith, from the committee on the judiciary, to whom were referred the memorials of a large number of the merchants of Boston and other towns of Massachusetts; of merchants and others of New Haven, Connecticut; of merchants and others of Portsmouth, New Hampshire; of the chambers of commerce in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Charleston, S. C., reported a uniform system of bankruptcy, reported a bill, and it was debated from January 14 to March 30, and lost in its passage to be engrossed—19 to 17.

In the senate January 2, 1821, Mr. Van Dyke asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill, which was referred to the committee on the judiciary. January 11, Mr. Smith, from the committee of the judiciary, reported the bill without amendment, which was debated and engrossed. February 14, the question, shall this bill pass? was decided in the affirmative—yeas 22, nays 19. So the bill passed the senate, and was sent down to the house.

In the house, February 20, 1821, the secretary of the senate came in with a bill from the senate to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, and asked the concurrence of the house; and the bill was referred to the committee on the judiciary. (See bill from senate, No. 30.) This bill failed from not being acted upon.

In the house, December 11, 1821, Mr. Sergeant, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill again, (see bill No. 1), which was debated from time to time until May 12, 1822, when the bill was lost in its passage to be engrossed—59 yeas to 77 nays. In the house, February 20, 1822, Mr. Walworth laid upon the table a joint resolution that the constitution be amended so as to give back to the states the power they had on this subject previously to the adoption of the constitution. March 22, the above resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the committee on the whole on the state of the union. (See house journal, 1821 and '22, page 340.)

In the house, December 11, 1823, Mr. Breck moved that the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy. December 30, Mr. Briggs moved that the committee on the judiciary be reported that, from want of time at this session, it was inexpedient to bring in a bill.

In the house, May 26, 1824, Mr. Webster, from the committee on the judiciary, reported that it was now expedient to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

In the house, December 6, 1825, John Q. Adams, president of the United States, in his annual message to both houses, recommended the passage of a bill. The subject was referred to the committee on the judiciary. January 3, 1826, Mr. Webster, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a resolution that it was expedient to pass such a bill. The resolution was read and referred to the committee of the whole house on the state of the union. February 6, Mr. Wickliffe moved that the clerk of the house procure the statutes of Great Britain on this subject, and have the same printed for the use of the members.—Subject laid upon the table.

In the senate, December 13, 1825, Mr. Smith moved that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing imprisonment for debt. Mr. Hayne moved to amend the same so as to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy. February 22, 1826, Mr. Hayne reported a bill, which was debated from time to time, and finally laid upon the table May 24, 1826.

In the senate December 6, 1826, Mr. Hayne asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill, which was, December 19, considered in committee of the whole.—February 12, 1827, the bill was debated, and lost in its passage to be engrossed—27 to 21. (See speeches on this bill.)

December 4, 1827, John Q. Adams, president of the United States, in his annual message recommended to both houses the passage of a bankrupt bill. February 22, 1828, Mr. Adams, in his message, presented a resolution of the legislature of Massachusetts in favor of a uniform system of bankruptcy.—(See house journal, 22d congress, page 668.)

In the house, September 5, 1837—extra session—Mr. Van Buren, president of the United States, recommended in his message to both houses the passage of a bill, and to apply in particular to banks and banks, and the judiciary of the several states, a report. Referred to the committee on the judiciary. September 21, the committee on the judiciary reported that it is inexpedient to legislate this extra session.

In the senate, September 5, 1837—extra session—the same action was had in the house—that it was inexpedient to legislate on the subject at this session.

In the senate, January 13, 1840, Mr. Norvell moved that the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill.—April 1, Mr. Webster asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill, (S. No. 244), which was read and referred. April 3, Mr. Tallmadge asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill, (S. No. 295), which was read and referred. April 23, Mr. Clayton, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill, (S. No. 324). Mr. Wall, from a minority of the committee, reported an amendment to bill No. 324. June 12, Mr. Crittenden, from the select committee to whom was referred the senate bill No. 324, with the amendment proposed by Mr. Wall, reported the bill with the amendments to the senate. He also reported a bill (S. No. 369) which was debated from time to time; and June 25, the question, shall this bill pass? was decided in the affirmative—21 to 19. So the senate passed the bill and sent it down to the house.

In the house, February 10, 1840, Mr. Hubbard moved that the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy. March 9, Mr. McKay moved that they should inquire also as to banks and other corporations. February 29, Mr. Curtis informed the house that, when in order, he should ask leave to introduce a bill. July 25, 1840, Mr. McKays, secretary of the senate, came in with the bill from the senate to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, and asked the concurrence of the house. (Senate bill No. 369.) July 7, laid upon the table by nearly a party vote—101 to 85.

In the senate, December 30, 1840, Mr. Crittenden, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill, (S. No. 160), which was debated from time to time until February 27, 1841, when the subject was passed over from want of time, with the understanding that the subject should be acted upon at the next session.

In the house—extra session—June 12, 1841, Mr. Briggs moved that the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

In the senate—extra session—June 25, 1841, Mr. Briggs moved from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill.

In the house, July 1, 1841, John Tyler, president of the United States, sent a special message to the house in favor of the passage of a bill, with a petition of 3,000 citizens, from New York.

In the house, August 21, Mr. Barnard, from the committee on the judiciary, reported a bill with a written report in favor of the measure; both of which were read and ordered to be printed. He also offered a resolution that it was inexpedient to legislate upon the subject at this extra session; which resolution, after debate, was laid upon the table; yeas 118, nays 81.

In senate, July 22, 1841, Mr. Berrien, according to notice, called up the bankrupt bill. July 23, Mr. Nicholson moved to amend the bill by inserting "banks and other corporations," which motion was decided in the negative, 34 to 16. The bill was debated until July 24, when the question was put—"shall this bill pass?" and decided in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 23. So the senate passed the bill and sent it down to the house.

In the house July 24, 1841, the secretary of the senate came in with the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, and asked the concurrence of the house.

In the house, July 31, 1841, Mr. Barnard moved that the bill from the senate be referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the union, and be printed. Mr. Sprigg moved to lay the bill on the table, and called the yeas and nays—decided in the negative, 123 to 91. The bill was then referred.

In the house, August 7, 1841, Mr. Sergeant moved that the committee take up the senate bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, as reported with amendments to the house from the select committee. August 22, 1841, Mr. Sprigg moved, yeas 29, nays 29. Same day, Mr. W. W. Irwin, moved a further consideration of the bill—yeas 87, nays 68. Mr. Briggs then moved that the bill be laid aside for the present; yeas 104, nays 11. No quorum.

In the house, August 10, 1841, Mr. Briggs withdrew a motion he had offered on the bill; it was further considered, but no definite action was had thereon.

August 17, The bill being again under consideration, action was taken on Mr. Gordon's motion, to strike out the enacting clause of the bill—negative; yeas 79, nays 90. Mr. Barnard moved to postpone the action of the bill to 1st February—agreed to.—Mr. Underwood moved to lay the bill and amendments on the table; agreed to; yeas 110, nays 97.

August 18. Mr. Gamble moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the bankrupt bill and the amendments had been laid on the table. Decided in the affirmative, yeas 116, nays 93. The bill was then amended; and Mr. Briggs moved the previous question. And the main question, "shall the bill pass," was decided in the affirmative; yeas 110, nays 106.

President Tyler has subsequently signed the bill, which establishes a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States—for a copy of which see page 4.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 51.

War Department, Adjutant General's Office,

Washington, Sept. 1, 1841.

I. The 7th military department, as detailed in general orders, No. 32, of 1837, will hereafter be included in the western division. Brigadier General Brady will report to the major general commanding the western division, and also, in cases of emergency, to general head-quarters.

II. Brevet Brigadier General Wool, inspector general, having been appointed brigadier general, vice Brevet Major General Scott, he is assigned to the command of the eastern division of the army.

Until further orders the head-quarters of the eastern division will be changed to Troy, New York.

Captain E. SCHREYER, Assistant adjutant general, is for the present, assigned to the staff of Brigadier General Wool. By order, L. THOMAS,

Assistant Adjutant General.

Major general WINFIELD SCOTT, accompanied by his aids, Captains ANDERSON and ALLEN, left Albany on the 25th inst. for the western part of N. York.

MILITARY ACADEMY. The cadets at West Point, we understand, say that N. Y. American, have been obliged to strike their tents and go to barracks, in consequence of the prevalence of dysentery among them.

THE NAVY.

The U. S. ships Constitution and Yorktown, and store ship Relief, were at Callao on the 20 May.

The U. S. ship St. Louis, capt. F. Forrest, arrived at Sandwich Islands on the 6th April, and proceeded shortly after to visit St. Francisco, Monterey, and Mazatlan, at which latter port she arrived on the 8th June. The St. Louis took from the Marquesas Islands a number of runaway sailors, who had been encouraging the natives in their savage warfare and exercising a demoralizing influence over them.

The U. S. ship Vincennes, Capt. Wilkes, and the brig Porpoise sailed from Sandwich Islands on the 5th April for Colombia river.

The brig Consort has left New York, on a surveying cruise.

The U. S. ship Cyane, Com. Armstrong, says the Norfolk Phoenix, dropped down from the yard, to the naval anchorage, off Town Point, yesterday morning. She is destined for the Brazil station.

The secretary of the navy has appointed Dr. Wm. P. C. BARTON, of the navy, to fill the now vacant station of attending surgeon of the United States naval asylum, on the Schuylkill.

STATES OF THE UNION.

We are yet without official returns of the elections in either of the states that held elections last month. The general results as heretofore given are confirmed.

On Tuesday next the annual election takes place in Vermont, and on the Monday following that of Maine occurs.

RIHODE ISLAND.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE. We learn by the Providence Journal that the executive committee of the Rhode Island Suffrage association, have issued a call for a convention to frame a state constitution, for delegates to be elected from the several towns, in proportion to their population, and to meet in Providence early in October. The entire male population, legally resident of the state, and of lawful age, are invited to vote for the delegates. We learn that it is the intention to present the constitution thus framed, to the general assembly at the October session, and to petition for its adoption as the supreme law of the state.

VIRGINIA.

COPPER ORE. The Wheeling Gazette says that large quantities of copper ore have been discovered in the vicinity. The ore was submitted to Professor Smith and Dr. Blake, (dentist), who analyzed it, and produced pure copper. "The basis of the ore appeared to be carbonate of lime."

ARKANSAS.

TERRIBLE ACT OF LYNCH LAW. The N. Orleans Picayune contains the particulars of a whole sale exercise of Lynch law in the state of Arkansas. It seems that Phillips county of that state, and the county of Cloohoma, on the opposite side of the river, have been the harbor of an extensive band of counterfeits. The citizens, enraged at this system of things, resolved to rid themselves of them, by any and every means placed within their power. They accordingly proceeded, about 100 in number, in a militia, headed by a captain Barney Bedford, all well armed. The following stratagem was then resorted to, for their apprehension. The volunteers engaged a trading boat at Helena, and hid about 50 men in the store room; they then descended the river, landing at every place where they supposed to find in the counterfeits. These depraved men came on board to purchase produce, with the intention of paying for it in counterfeit money. They were thus taken and secured in the boat. When the number had increased to 37 men, they were tied hands and feet, and as the report says, drowned in the Mississippi, near Island No. 63, in the presence of two men, Harrol and Burgess, who, it appears, officiated, or at least took an active part in the execution of the sentence.

The Picayune states, that when their informant left, the volunteers were still in pursuit of others, the main one of whom they wished to secure, was a man named Merion Wright. Among the list of victims, the following names have been named: viz. H. H. Talley, Lewis H. Kingston, Andrew McLaughlin, Willis Pollock, Hugh Cotton, Elliot and Robert Hunter, the latter lately from New York, Joe Merritt and McCormick.

The St. Louis papers contain further particulars, giving a still darker look to this bloody outbreak. The owner Fisher, dropped up and shot was 75, after which the executioners proceeded up and down the river, burning the houses lately occupied by the victims of their vengeance, and ordering their families to leave their homes forever.

INDIANA.

ELECTION. According to Chapman's State Centinel of the 24th ult.

Senate stands, whigs	28	democrats,	21
House stands, whigs	46	democrats,	54

74

75

and there is a vacancy in the senate in Marion county, for which an election is to be held Sept. 18. If a whig is elected, as is probable, parties will be balanced on joint ballot.

ILLINOIS.

MORE LYNNING. We learn from the Peoria (ILL) Register, that a few weeks since, a young man named George Fisher, of Johnson county, was taken out of bed at night by a band of five or six men, who, with their heads shaved, his body tarred and feathered, and then, with his hands tied behind him, put into a canoe, and set adrift in the Mississippi river, with a threat that they would kill him if he came ashore. After floating a few miles, Fisher contrived to free his hands and reach the shore. He immediately returned home, and caused some of the ruffians to be apprehended, who, after due examination, were bound over to appear at the next court—two of them in bonds of $1,200 each, the others from $400 to $800 each. The remaining four ruffians made their escape to the Iowa side of the river, and there succeeded in rallying a mob, who came over in a ferry boat and recaptured Fisher. This was in the middle of the afternoon. Fisher was taken some seventy yards from the road, tied with a chain and rope, and a guard of two men armed with knives and pistols, placed over him, who told him that if he hallooed, instant death was his portion. Here he remained till dark, when he was taken to the second island above Bloomington, and flogged by four men until back, legs and arms were cut into welts. He was then presented with a lie-bill to sign; refusing to do which, he was again put into a canoe, in which was a large stone, and set adrift. He, however, effected a landing a few miles below Burlington.

CANAL—STATE DEBT. We copied an article from the Ottawa paper, says the Springfield Journal, stating that the governor had agreed to appropriate seventeen hundred thousand dollars in bonds for canal purposes. We have understood that the governor had only agreed to issue $150,000 in bonds, for the payment of debts already due to contractors.

The $1,700,000 of bonds, if issued, will increase our state debt to near $16,000,000.

It is said, on the supposition that the governor has determined to issue this amount (1,700,000) of bonds, that the legislature will not be convened the coming winter.

MISSOURI.

APPOINTMENT. The governor of Missouri has appointed Judge Scott, recently judge of the circuit which includes Jefferson city, to the bench of the supreme court of this state.

FLORIDA.

Since Col. Worth has been in command, nearly 300 Indians have either come in and surrendered or been captured. The haunts to which they resorted north of a line drawn from Piskito to the mouth of Withlacoochee, have been broken up, and the war is now removed south of the river. It is stated that the Tiger Tail was to meet Col. Worth on the 25th ultimo, at Amnuteelga to negotiate a surrender. A letter dated the 21st August says—A few days since Capt. Alexander, of the 6th infantry, scouting on the Homosassa, came across a corn field of Tiger Tail, which he destroyed, and which Indian guide informed him was the last field Tiger Tail had left. Halleck's Tussocke has been so roughly handled that he now takes refuge upon Spring Garden Island in Lake St. John's with about 19 warriors and fifty or sixty women and children. An expedition was to start in search of him on the 26th ultimo. The Charleston Patriot publishes a letter dated 28th August, Aug. 23, which states that 25 of Aleck Tustuggee's warriors had gone into Tampa, and that the whole band was about giving up. Lieutenant Anderson had captured six squaws and three children near Volusia.

The steamer William Tell was to leave on the 24th for Fort Pierce, with horses. A party of 30 mounted men was to leave that post immediately on the arrival of the boat, on an excursion to co-operate with the movements now going on.

Despatches have been received at the war department from Col. Worth, up to the 18th instant.—They furnish gratifying evidence of the continued activity of the troops in exploring the hiding places of the enemy, and in promptly pursuing predatory parties among the settlements.

The sections of the country lying in the Horawasassa and Wicassassa rivers have been explored by land and water; in the former the traces of Indian cultivation were discovered and destroyed.

The neighborhood of the Timoka and Halifax rivers has also been minutely examined, but without meeting with any indications of the enemy. The expedition into the Everglades had not been heard from, and the reports of the movements in Middle Florida the troops are kept constantly on the alert.

Much of the country, nearly impracticable at the best season, is now rendered doubly so by unusual inundation, owing to continued rains. The zeal of officers and men, and their perseverance in scouting, under such difficulties, deserves all praise.

The colored commanding reports the coming in of ten Indians since the report of the 8th of August, and the capture, by Lieut. Col. Riley, of a sub-chief of Halleck Tustuggee's band; from the possession of whom he expects material assistance in the futureance of his plans.

TALLAHASSEE, AUG. 21. More Indian Depredations. We learn that on Saturday last, as a party of six men, with a deer hunter and a Golden county, they started an Indian who they pursued for some distance. Mr. Gilchrist, (who had a horse), coming up near him, the Indian secreted himself in the hammock and shot him through the shoulder, but not mortally, when Mr. G. shot the Indian dead, at the same time discovering a party about 40 rods distant, in the act of gathering round him. The party then fled, and moment two more of the hunters arrived, who killed two more Indians and wounded the fourth so that he fell, but made his escape. The Indians, of course, took to the hammock. With shame did we hear, that three of the hunters run with fright on the announcement of Indians.

We also learn that on Tuesday night a party of 7 Indians came down the Augustine road, passed Blocker's Cross Roads to the house adjoining Tom Peters Chairs mill, and finding it well picketed in, went to the miller's house, where they lay in wait until the miller rose to go to his mill. Then they shot him down, wounding him in four or five places (though we are glad he was not mortally), and supposing him dead, plundered his house and set fire to it, then proceeded to the mill, loaded themselves with meal, &c., burned that also, and then took up their line of march for the hammock, where they met a man on horseback, whom they shot at and wounded, when his horse took fright, turned and made for home, but while within gunshot they wounded the man a second time, also the horse, so that it was with much difficulty that his horse, with himself, escaped their chary shooting, as he was pursued for [Floridian.

OWA

BANKRUPT LAW.

A BILL

out any priority or preference whatsoever, except only for debts due by such bankrupt to the United States, and for all debts due by him to persons who by the laws of the United States have a preference, in consequence of having paid moneys as his surety, which shall be paid out of the assets; and any person who shall have performed any labor as an operative in the service of any bankrupt shall be entitled to receive the full amount of the wages due to him for such labor, not exceeding twenty-five dollars: Provided, That such labor shall have been performed within six months next before the bankruptcy of his employer; and all creditors whose debts are not due and payable until a future day, all annuitants, holders of annuities and respondentia bonds, holders of policies of insurances, sureties, endorsers, bail or other persons, having uncertain or contingent demands against any bankrupt, shall be permitted to come in and prove such debts or claims under this act, and shall have a right, when their debts and claims become absolute, to have the same allowed them; and such annuitants and holders of debts payable in future may have the present value thereof ascertained, the court directing such valuation, and allowing them accordingly as debts in present; and no creditor or other person, coming in and proving his debt or other claim, shall be allowed to maintain any suit at law or in equity therefor, but shall be deemed thereby to have waived all right of action and suit against such bankrupt, and to have submitted to the validity of all and unsatisfied judgments already obtained thereon shall be deemed to be surrendered thereby; and in all cases where there are mutual debts or mutual credits between the parties, the balance only shall be deemed the true debt or claim between them, and the residue shall be deemed adjusted by the court; and proof of debts shall be made before the court decreeing the bankruptcy, or before some commissioners appointed by the court for that purpose; but such court shall have full power to set aside and disallow any debt, upon proof that such debt is founded in fraud, imposition, illegality or mistake; and corporations to whom any debts due may be proved thereby, by the president, cashier, treasurer or other officer, who may be specially appointed for that purpose; and in appointing commissioners to receive proof of debts, and perform other duties, under the provisions of this act, the said court shall appoint such persons as have their residence in the county in which the bankrupt lives.

Jurisdiction of the United States district court over all cases of bankruptcy—Rules of proceedings—Fees.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the district court of every State shall have jurisdiction in all matters and proceedings of bankruptcy arising under this act and any other act which may hereafter be passed on the subject of bankruptcy; the said jurisdiction to be exercised summarily, in the nature of summary proceedings in equity; and for this purpose the said district court shall be deemed always open. And the district judge may at any time or upon question arising in any case in bankruptcy, into the circuit court for the district, in his discretion, to be there heard and determined; and for this purpose the circuit court of such district shall also be deemed always open. And the jurisdiction hereby conferred on the district court shall extend to all claims and controversies in bankruptcy arising between the bankrupt and any creditor or creditors who shall claim any debt or demand under the bankruptcy; to all cases and controversies between such creditor or creditors and the assignee of the estate, whether in any case removed out of the district court, or between such assignee and the bankrupt, and to all acts, matters and things to be done under and in virtue of the bankruptcy, until the final distribution and settlement of the estate of the bankrupt and the close of the proceedings in bankruptcy. And the said court shall have full authority and jurisdiction to compel obedience to all orders and decrees of the court in bankruptcy, by process of contempt and other remedial process, to the same extent the circuit courts may now do in any suit pending therein in equity. And it shall be the duty of the district court in each and every case of proceedings in bankruptcy, to make rules of bankruptcy; which rules, regulations, and forms shall be subject to be altered, added, to, revised or annulled, by the circuit court of the same district, and other rules, and regulations, and forms substituted therefor; and in all such rules, regulations and orders, it shall be the duty of the court to make them as simple and brief as practicable, so to the end to avoid all unnecessary expenses, and to facilitate the use thereof by the public at large. And the said courts shall, from time to time, prescribe a tariff or table of fees and charges, to be taxed by the officers of the court, or other persons for services under this act, or any other on the subject of bankruptcy; which fees shall be as low as practicable, with reference to the nature and character of such services.

Proceedings must be in the district where the bankrupt resides—Notice to creditors to show cause—Evidence under oath—Proof of debt—Trial awarded in case of dispute—Case of perjury punished.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all petitions by any bankrupt for the benefit of this act, and all petitions by a creditor against any bankrupt under this act, and all proceedings in the case to the close thereof, shall be had in the district court within and for the district in which the person supposed to be the bankrupt, or the creditor, or the holder of such business at the time when such petition is filed, except where otherwise provided in this act. And upon every such petition, notice thereof shall be published in or more public newspapers printed in such district, to be designated in such court, at least twenty days before the hearing thereof; and all persons interested may appear at the time and place where the hearing is thus to be had, and show cause, if they have, why the prayer of the said petitioner should not be granted; all evidence by witnesses to be used in all hearings before such court shall be under oath, and examination and cross-examination conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, and may be oral or by deposition, taken before such court, or before any commissioner appointed by such court, or before any disinterested state judge of the state in which the deposition is taken; and all proofs of debts or other claims by creditors, and all proofs of the same by this act, shall be under oath or solemn affirmation as aforesaid, before such court or commissioner appointed thereby, or before some disinterested state judge of the state where the creditors live, in such form as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations hereby provided to be made and established by the courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy. But all such proofs of debts and other claims shall be open to contestation in the proper court having jurisdiction over the proceedings in the particular case in bankruptcy; and as well the assignee as the creditor shall have a right to a trial by jury upon any such debt or claim, and to have ascertained the validity and amount of such debts or other claims; and the result therein, unless a new trial shall be granted, if in favor of the claims, shall be evidence of the validity and amount of such debts and other claims. And if any person or persons, or any creditor or creditors, swear or affirm, in any hearing or trial, or in any matter, or in any proceeding in such court in bankruptcy, or before any commissioner, he or they shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and punishable therefor in the manner and to the extent provided by law for other cases.

Jurisdiction of the circuit court in cases against the assignee of a bankrupt—Limitation against such suit.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the circuit court within and for the district where the decree of bankruptcy is passed, shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the district court of the same district of all suits at law and in equity which may and shall be brought by any assignee of the bankrupt against any person or persons claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee, touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt or assignee, or vested in such assignee, and no suit at law or in equity shall, in any case, be maintainable by or against such assignee, or by or against any person claiming an adverse interest, touching the property and rights of property aforesaid, in any court of record, unless the same shall be brought within two years after the declaration and decree of bankruptcy, or after the cause of suit shall first have accrued.

Suits of property—Disposition of proceeds—Bonds required of assignee.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That all sales, transfers and other conveyance of the assignee, of the bankrupt's property and rights of property, shall be made at such times and in such manner as shall be ordered and appointed by the court in bankruptcy; and all assets received by the assignee in money shall, within sixty days afterwards, be paid into the court, subject to its order respecting its future safe keeping and disposition; and the court may require of such assignee a bond, with at least two sureties, in such sum as it may deem proper, conditioned that he shall be faithful in discharge of all his duties, and his compliance with the orders and directions of the court, which bond shall be taken in the name of the United States, and shall, if there be any breach thereof, be sued and sued under the order of such court, for the benefit of the creditors and other persons in interest.

Prompt proceedings directed—Dividends of assets at least every six months—Notice thereof required—Suits at law not to postpone dividends—Proceedings to be closed in ten years—Claims not proved in time.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That in order to ensure a speedy settlement and close of the proceedings in each case in bankruptcy, it shall be the duty of the court to order and direct a collection of the assets, and a reduction of the same to money, and a distribution thereof, at as early periods as practicable consistent with a regard to the interests of the creditors; and a dividend and distribution of such assets as shall be collected and reduced to money, or so much thereof as can be safely so disposed of, consistently with the rights and interests of third persons having adverse claims thereto, shall be made among the creditors who have proved their debts, as often as once in six months from the time of the decree declaring the bankruptcy; notice of such dividends and distribution to be given in some newspaper or newspapers in the district, designated by the court, ten days at least before the order thereof is passed; and the pendency of any suit at law or in equity, by or against such third persons, shall not postpone such division and distribution, except so far as the assets may be necessary to satisfy the same; and all the proceedings in bankruptcy in each case shall, if practicable, be finally adjusted, settled and brought to a close, by the court, within two years after the decree declaring the bankruptcy. And no creditor or debtor shall not have proved his debt until a dividend or distribution shall have been made and declared, he shall be entitled to be paid the same amount, pro rata, out of the remaining dividends or distributions thereafter made, as the other creditors have already received, before the latter shall be entitled to any portion thereof.

Assignee may by order of court, redeem mortgaged or hypothecated property—Compound doubtful claims, &c.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the assignee shall have full authority, by and under the order and direction of the proper court in bankruptcy, to redeem and discharge any mortgage or other pledge, or deposit, or lien upon any property, real or personal, whether payable in present or at a future day, and to tender a due performance of the conditions thereof. And such assignee shall also have authority, by and under the order of the court in bankruptcy, to compound any debts, or other claims and securities, due or belonging to the estate of the bankrupt; but no such order or direction shall be made until notice of the application is given in some public newspaper in the district, to be designated by the court, ten days before the hearing, so that all creditors and other persons in interest may appear and show cause, if any they have, at the hearing, why the order or direction should not be passed.

A person once discharged, excepted from the benefit of another discharge—Unless, &c.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That if any person who shall have been discharged under this act shall afterwards become bankrupt, he shall not again be entitled to a discharge under this act, unless his estate shall produce (after all charges), sufficient to pay such person a security-five per cent. on the amount of the debt which shall have been allowed to each creditor.

Proceedings to be recorded—Office copy—Fees.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the proceedings in all cases in bankruptcy shall be deemed matters of record; but that the same shall not be required to be recorded at large, but shall be carefully filed, kept and numbered in the office of the court, and a docket only or security-five per cent. on the amount of the debt which shall have been allowed to each creditor, with the numbers, kept in a book by the clerk of the court; and the clerk of the court, for affixing his name and the seal of the court to any form, or certifying a copy thereof, when required thereto, shall be entitled to receive, as compensation, the sum of twenty cents for every security-five per cent. of the court, or commissioner, shall be allowed by the court more than one dollar for taking the proof of any debt or claim of any creditor or other person against the estate of the bankrupt; but he may be allowed, in addition, his actual travel expenses for that purpose.

Regulations in relation to partnerships.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That where two or more persons, who are partners in trade, become bankrupt, an order may be made in the manner provided in this act, either on the petition of such partners, or any one of them, or on the petition of any creditor of the partners; upon which order all the joint stock and property of the company, and also all of the separate estate of each of the partners, shall be taken, excepting such parts thereof as are hereto excepted: That all the creditors of the company, and the separate creditors of each partner, shall be allowed to prove their respective debts; and the assignees shall also keep separate accounts of the joint stock or property of the company, and of the separate estate of each member thereof; and after deducting out of the whole amount received by the assignees, the whole of the expenses and disbursements paid by them, the nett proceeds of the joint stock shall be appropriated to pay the creditors of the company, and the nett proceeds of the separate estate of each partner shall be appropriated to pay his separate creditors; and there shall be in any balance of the separate estate of any partner, after the payment of his separate debts, such balance shall be allowed to the joint stock, for the payment of the joint creditors; and if there shall be any balance of the joint stock, after payment of the joint debts, such balance shall be divided and appropriated to, and among the separate estate of the several partners, according to their respective rights and interests therein, and as it would have been if the partnership had been dissolved without any bankruptcy; and the sum so appropriated to the separate estate of each partner shall be applied to the payment of his separate debts; and the certificate of such debts shall be granted or refused to each partner, as the same would or ought to be if the proceedings had been against him alone under this act; and in all other respects the proceedings against partners shall be conducted in the like manner as if they had been commenced and prosecuted against one person alone.

Decree of bankruptcy and copy of order of appointments of assignees to be recited in all deeds for land sold by assignees—Such deeds confirmed.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That a copy of any decree of bankruptcy, and the appointment of assignees, as directed by the third section of this act, shall be recited in every deed of lands belonging to the bankrupt, sold and conveyed by any assignees under and by virtue of this act; and that such recital, together with a certified copy of such order, shall be full and complete evidence both of the bankruptcy and assignment therein recited, and supersede the need of any other proof of such bankruptcy and assignment to validate the said deed; and all deeds containing such recital, and supported by such proof, shall be as effectual to pass the title of the bankrupt or of, and to the lands therein mentioned and described to the purchaser, as fully, to all intents and purposes, as if made by the bankrupt himself immediately before such order.

District of Columbia and territory ceded.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That all jurisdiction and authority conferred upon and vested in the district court of the United States by this act, in cases of bankruptcy, are hereby conferred upon and vested in the circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and in and upon the supreme or superior courts of any of the territories of the United States, in cases of bankruptcy, where the bankrupt resides in the said District of Columbia or in either of the said territories.

This act to take effect 1st February, 1842.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect from and after the first day of February next.

JOHN WHITE,

Speaker of the house of representatives.

SAM'L. L. SOUTHWARD,

President of the senate pro tempore.

Approved, August 19, 1841.

JOHN TYLER.

DEBATE ON THE VETO.

SPEECH OF MR. RIVES, OF VIRGINIA.

On the Executive message containing the president's objection to the bank bill.

IN SENATE UNITED STATES, AUGUST 19, 1841.

Mr. RIVES, said he was prepared to give a silent vote on the bill, and he would have contented himself with doing so, but for the observations which had fallen from the senator from Kentucky in respect to the conduct of the president of the United States. Mr. R. had hoped the senator would have confined himself strictly to the merits of the question before the senate. He told us, said Mr. R., that the question was this: whether the president having returned the bill for a fiscal bank with his exceptions thereto, the bill was such as one as ought to pass by the constitutional majority of two-thirds, and thus become a law of the land. Now, what was the reason before the senate was not to vote on the naked question between the bill and the objections to it, as compared with each other? I had really hoped that the honorable senator, after announcing to us the issue in this very proper manner, would have confined his observations to it alone; and, if he had done so, I should not have troubled the senate with a single word.

But what has been the course of the honorable senator? I do not reproach him with it; he, no doubt, is entitled to the privilege to vindicate his own position before the country, to inculcate the course which I should not have troubled the senate with a single word. But what has been the course of the honorable senator? I do not reproach him with it; he, no doubt, is entitled to the privilege to vindicate his own position before the country, to inculcate the course which I should not have troubled the senate with a single word. But what has been the course of the honorable senator? I do not reproach him with it; he, no doubt, is entitled to the privilege to vindicate his own position before the country, to inculcate the course which I should not have troubled the senate with a single word.

The senator begins with the violation, by the president, of the pledge given in his inaugural address. Now, I must say, with all due deference, that the view taken by the honorable senator is altogether unavailing. I have already proved this, received, wherever I had any opportunity of hearing the expressions of public opinion, a very different construction. The president told the nation that he would give his sanction "to any constitutional measure," which might be devised by congress for the relief of the country on the subject of the currency. He does not say any measure, but to any "constitutional" measure. Why insert the word "constitutional," if he did not intend to qualify, in an important sense, the pledge given? But the senator finds, in the next clause of the inaugural address, an explanation of the sense in which the word "constitutional" is here to be understood, viz: that it should be governed by the sage views of the fathers of the republican school, and by the light of their ever-glorious example." The senator, in his commentary on this clause, seems to have stricken out, as significant and expressive, a portion of it as any other part, viz: that the president should be guided by "the sage views," as well as the ever-glorious example of the republican fathers to whom he alludes. What were these sage views, as expressed in the purest days of the republic? The sage views of Mr. Madison in 1791—the unvarying opinions and consistent conduct of the fathers of the republic—the "sage views" delivered by these fathers in their example. And, on this point, I could not but remember what (if I have not been misinformed) was the fact, viz: that the honorable senator himself stood in a relation of particular privacy to a memorandum of another of the "fathers of the republican school," who has since his decease been the agent of a renewal of the bank charter. Was there nothing in the sage views and examples to instruct the president, in addition to the convictions of his own judgment. Who is the individual that by universal consent, is recognised as the founder of what the president alludes to as "the republican school," viz: Thomas Jefferson. For, however I concur with the senator from Kentucky in paying all homage to the unrivalled virtues and ever-glorious public services of George Washington, I must be permitted to say that he has not generally been considered as belonging to that "republican" party to which the president alludes.

We are told, however, of the example of Mr. Madison, which, it is said, President Tyler must have had particularly in mind when he penned this passage. I have already adverted to Mr. Madison's views in relation to a national bank in 1791, views which were not retracted by him till 1815; but the senator tells us the president referred to his conduct in relation to the signature of the bill for the second bank of the United States, as that example by which he was himself to be governed. How does that example apply to the present case? Look at the letter written by Mr. Madison to Mr. Ingersoll in explanation of that act, and let any candid man who is not the declared enemy of the constitution, tell us if he is not fairly to be drawn from it. It is this: that Mr. Madison had changed his opinion. Not that he still believed a bank unconstitutional, and so believing, and signed the bill; but that his opinion as to its unconstitutionality had undergone a change; for, in the very first paragraph of that letter, he says that he considered "the constitutionality of the bank as assumed by the considerations," which he proceeds to detail. I refer the senator to the letter itself. But that is not all. Before we condemn President Tyler, under existing circumstances, for putting his negative on what he believes to be against the constitution, he has sworn to support, let those circumstances which he supposes to exist, be what they will, under which Mr. Madison acted. In the letter to Mr. Ingersoll, Mr. Madison says the obligatory force of precedents in interpreting the constitution depends, among other things "on the prospect which there may be of a change of construction by the public or its agents." The constitutionality of a bank had, at the time of Mr. Madison's action upon it, been annually recognised, as he says, for twenty years successively—the whole nation had acquiesced in it; it was the prospect of any change in it, I yield to no one in profound respect for the principles and character of Mr. Madison, and I have ever been disposed to make every allowance for the course he felt it his duty to pursue. Let me read a sentence or two from his letter to Mr. Ingersoll.

"The act establishing a bank of the United States," says he, "had been carried into execution, throughout a period of twenty years, with annual legislative recognitions—in one instance, indeed, with the positive ratification of it into a new state, with the entire acquiescence of all the local authorities, as well as the nation at large, and which could not be added a decreasing prospect of any change in the public opinion adverse to the constitutionality of such an institution."

Now, will any man pretend to assert that the same circumstances exist now? Has there been an annual recognition of the constitutionality of the bank for the last twenty years? Do the local authorities everywhere acquiesce in it? And is the opinion in favor of the constitutionality of a national bank so universal and so confirmed that there is no prospect of any respectable body of public opinion being arrayed against it? No. To say that all this is true, if the nation are arrayed against the constitutionality and its expediency; the local authorities in several quarters are in open arms of remonstrance and threatened resistance against it. So far from there being no prospect of any change by the public or its agents, the contrary view has affirmed on the constitutionality of a national bank, that construction has already, to a great extent, been reversed. These are the circumstances under which President Tyler had to decide on his course of action—circumstances, in every feature, strikingly contrasted with the circumstances of Mr. Madison's time. Therefore I say that if, in his inaugural address, he had in view the example of Mr. Madison, referred to by the senator from Kentucky, it formed no rule by which he was bound to surrender his solemn convictions as to the unconstitutionality of the bank.

But the senator from Kentucky has told us that Mr. Jefferson, in various ways, recognized the constitutionality of a national bank; and, in illustration of this position, he has referred to a number of authorities. I know not of any other authority, which I must say is but little in consonance with Mr. Jefferson's life and opinions. It represents him, who never shrunk from any responsibility, as willing to slink back under the fraudulent and ignominious shelter of a perversion of the words of the constitution, to screen himself from the duty of asserting those glorious principles which had been the ornament of a long life. Until the positive testimony of a responsible and unimpeachable witness to the fact itself shall be produced, I never can yield any belief to his being willing to do this. I have no objection to a declaration of the constitutionality of the bank, and the occasion for his doing so? He was to go out of office in the month of March, 1809, and the bank charter would not expire till 1811; and the record will show that, after that time, he renewed repeatedly, and in the most solemn form, the expression of his liability to resign an institution. I do not mean to cast the slightest imputation on the statement of the honorable senator himself, so far as any knowledge of his own is concerned; but an anecdote of such a character, coming to him at second or third hand, and contradicted by the whole public life of Mr. Jefferson, he will pardon me for not believing, and I must deem it eminently apocryphal. But the senator permitted himself to refer to two public official acts of Mr. Jefferson, after his own refusal, many years ago, of the argument deduced from them; I mean his signing a bill to establish a branch of the bank at New Orleans, and a bill to amend the constitutionality of the bills of the bank. Can I do better, in reply to this argument, than quote to the senator his own language? I know, indeed, his reluctance to have that speech referred to. [Mr. CLAY. Not at all; not at all.] I remember the signal vengeance with which one of the senators was visited for having dared to quote it, and therefore felt some delicacy in referring to it myself.

In the able and eloquent speech made by the honorable senator against the constitutionality of a national bank, in 1811, he used the following language:

"Gentlemen contend that the construction which they give to the constitution has been sustained by all past administrations; and they rely particularly on an act which passed in 1804 for extending a branch to New Orleans, and another act of 1807 for punishing those who should forge or utter forged paper of the bank. With regard to the first law, passed no doubt upon the recommendation of the treasury department, I would remark that it was the extension of a branch to a territory, over which congress possesses power of legislation almost uncontrolled, and where, without any constitutional impediment, charters of incorporation may be granted."

"There is the answer—the triumphant, the conclusive answer. That branch was to be established in a territory, where the constitution expressly gives to congress a general discretionary legislative authority. The bill, on the contrary, contemplated the establishment of branches within the limits of sovereign states, in regard to which congress has none but specific powers, formally enumerated and defined. As to the other bill, to punish counterfeiters of the bank paper, what did the honorable senator also tell us in 1811? This was the veto."

"As to the other act, it was passed no less for the benefit of the community than the bank—to protect the ignorant and unwary from counterfeit paper, purporting to have been emitted by the bank. When gentlemen are claiming the advantage supposed to be derivable from acquiescence, let me inquire what they would have had those to have done who believed the establishment of the bank an encroachment upon state rights? Were they to have resisted, and how? By force?"

"The honorable senator then proceeds to bear the following testimony, as an actor in the scene, to the principles upon which both of those laws were passed:

"The acts of 1804 and 1807, relied on as pledges for rechartering this company, passed not only without any discussion whatever of the constitutional principle of congress to establish a bank, but I venture to say, without a single member having had the attention drawn to this question. I had the honor of a seat in the senate when the latter law passed, and probably voted for it; and I declare with the utmost sincerity, that I never once thought of that point, and appear confident to every honorable member who will be present to that that was not the case."

"The senator himself thus furnishes the true explanation of the considerations on which those acts were passed—an explanation the benefit of which he must in justice extend to Mr. Jefferson, while he claims it for himself, and so has disposed of his own argument."

"I had the honor of President Tyler had respect either to the "safe views" or the "unfavorable example" of the "fathers of the great republican school," he never could have brought his mind to the conclusion that he was in duty bound to give his official sanction and approval to such a bill as we sent him."

"I beg leave to refer the honorable senator from Kentucky to another passage in the inaugural address of President Tyler, which he seems to have wholly overlooked, and which plainly intimates, as it appears to me, the determination of the president to make the constitution, in his own conscientious interpretation of it, the sole rule of his conduct. In the opening of that address he makes the following impressive reference to the solemn obligation he had taken upon himself in assuming the office of chief magistrate: "My earnest prayer," says he, "shall be to carry out understandingly the principles of that constitution which I have sworn to 'protect, preserve and defend.'" Why this emphatic reference to the constitution of his country, in connection with the solemn sanction of his oath of office. If he did not intend to make it, under all circumstances, the primary and unending rule of his official conduct? In the closing part of the same address he repeats, in the following language, a just admonition against the exercise of any power not clearly granted by the constitution.

"Those (said he) who are charged with the administration of the government, should carefully abstain from all attempts to enlarge the range of powers thus granted to the several departments, other than by an express to the people of additional grants, lest by so doing they disturb that balance which the patriots and statesmen, who framed the constitution, designed to establish between the federal government and the states composing the union."

"In this language like this upon his lips, and sentiments such as these in his heart, the president could not be justly expected to sign a bill which by his conscience he believed, and had so repeatedly and solemnly declared, to be contrary to the constitution of his country."

"We then, then, nothing in the opinions of the fathers and founders of the republican school to induce President Tyler, in a course of nearly thirty years of that school for twenty-five years past, and in which he had over and over expressed his conviction of the unconstitutionality of a bank of the United States, to take that opinion, what course but that which he has pursued was due to him when the bill for such a bank was presented for his signature?"

"The senator from Kentucky tells us that the opinion of the individual nominated, by the patriotic and enlightened convention which assembled at Harrisburg, as a candidate for the vice presidency, on this great and important subject, were but little thought of."

"[MR. CLAY. The senator has stated this very differently from the manner in which I stated the fact. What I said was, that the president thought his opinions more extensively known, than they actually are, and that the less consequence was attached to them where they were known, because he was the candidate for the second office only.]

"I acquiesce in the senator's explanation. But was not this a most extraordinary state of things? And did it not, if it were so, bespeak on the part of that convention a signal instance of recklessness and want of common sense? The party he says he represented on the one great object of an old fashioned bank of the United States, and they knew that a bill chartering such a bank might be dependent for its fate on the casting vote of the vice president in this body, (as it was when it was negatived by the potent vote of General Clay.) And yet they would have evinced a most extraordinary want of foresight, when such issues were depending, to select a candidate for that chair without the most careful inquiry into his constitutional opinions. Was John Tyler so insignificant a character that they knew nothing of his political history? What is the man, whether member or spectator, within these walls, to whom his political principles and character were not more or less familiar? If there is any one thing which has distinguished him above all other traits in his character, it is his unflinching adherence to the school of strict construction and state rights. Who can forget when he stood proudly on this floor as a minority of one (on the occasion of the revenue collection bill in 1833), in vindication of what he deemed a vital doctrine of that school?"

"Who was ignorant of the part which had been assigned him by the senate, as a well known but honorable and high minded opponent of the Bank of the United States on constitutional grounds, to conduct an investigation of the proceedings and affairs of that institution? One would think that if gentlemen acted under a due sense of their responsibility to a great and patriotic party, and if they attached to the establishment of the bank, the establishment of a national bank, they would of course take the most careful consideration of the qualifications of the candidate for the vice presidency on whose decision they could rely. How was it in regard to General Harrison himself, the candidate selected for the presidency? Was he a bank man? Was he identified with a national bank? Not at all. He, on the contrary, expressly disclaimed such an imputation as a political slander, and defied those who made it to the proof. If that had been the true issue at Harrisburg, all will concur with me when I say (and it gives me pleasure to pay a merited tribute to the high character of the gentleman from Kentucky) that he himself could not have been thought of as the candidate for the presidency. On the contrary, it was because his party were unwilling to make that the issue before the people in the presidential election, that the honorable and distinguished senator from Kentucky did not obtain that honorable position, and was reversed, as the reward of a life devoted to what he considered the interest and glory of his country. But the issue was avowed as hazardous."

"Let me go a little more into detail as to the opinions of General Harrison. What was his course in the other house of congress, in 1819, when he and President Tyler were gallant coopers in the first veto of the constitution of the United States? I went even further than the president did in his opposition to the bank. John Tyler, in conformity with those conservative principles (I use the term in its broad and general sense) which form a part of the political education of every Virginian, was unwilling to relinquish his solid character, once acquired, and General Harrison, brought up as he had been in the United States and free school of the west, was for a summary act, annulling the charter of the bank. To this vote he himself referred, as showing that he was no "bank" or "federal" candidate (to use his own words) for the presidential office. In 1821, in a published address to the people of his district, he openly and distinctly avowed his opposition to a bank. He then proclaimed himself to be a disciple of the republican school of 1798, and explicitly declared his opinion that the Bank of the United States had been established in violation to the constitution of the United States. In his letter of 1836 to Mr. Sherman, Williams, a distinguished member of congress from the senator's own state, he said he would not give his sanction to a bank of the United States, unless, by the failure of all other expedients, it should be deemed necessary to carry on the operations of government, and unless there were a general and unequivocal manifestation of the will of the nation in favor of such an institution; and then only as a fiat, and not as a commercial bank."

"I am reluctant, Mr. President, to refer to any thing that I may have said or done in the common course during the late contest, but I may be permitted to say that I, for one, with an honest conviction of the truth of the statement, and founding myself upon authentic declarations of General Harrison himself, did, in a published address to my fellow citizens, represent his opinions as the only sound and judiciously adopted of a bank of the United States. Certain it is that hundreds and thousands of our countrymen voted for him without the least reference to a bank. The issue of bank or no banks was not made in the presidential election. In the mind of the honorable senator, no doubt, it was a prominent issue; but it was an issue his friends were not prepared to propose to the country. General Harrison, in the latest expression of his opinions in the presidential canvass, (in his Dayton speech,) said that there was no grant in the constitution of power to create a national bank, and that could never be constitutional save in the event that the powers granted to congress could not be carried into effect without such an institution." That dura necessitas must be clearly shown, or the power to charter a bank did not exist. Yet we are now told that John Tyler, by accepting the nomination of the convention as their candidate for the presidency, is president of the United States, and that a national bank had been fully and lawfully organized, and were borne on the most familiar records of the national history, incurred an unequalled obligation to sign a bill for a bank of the United States in the contingency which has made him, in the place of the lamented Harrison, president of the United States."

"I am firm in the belief, Mr. President, and I trust, that if General Harrison were now living, and in the same circumstances that surround President Tyler, he would, like him, never yield his sanction to the establishment of branches of such a corporation as this bill proposes within the limits of the several states, without their free and unshackled assent. In his letter to Sherman, Williams, (adopting the language of Gen. Jackson on a similar occasion) that he believed a "bank of the United States, competent to all the duties which may be required by the government, might be so organized as not to infringe on our delegated powers or the reserved rights of the states." I am confident, Mr. President, that if the honorable senator from Kentucky, I may be permitted to allude to a passage of the secret political history of the times, I will state that I have been informed that the assent of the states to branches within their limits was a favorite and fundamental idea with him in the organization of such an institution. This information, at least, has been communicated to me by gentlemen who stood in relations of the most intimate confidence with Gen. Harrison, one of whom was a member of the committee who came to this city to perform the melancholy duty of attending the remains of the late president to their final resting place at North Bend."

"I think it abundantly demonstrated that there was no such issue as bank or no bank presented to the nation in the late presidential election. And even if it was otherwise, the well-known opinions of Mr. Tyler as candidate for the vice presidency being not only not unavowed, but, on the contrary, reaffirmed, he at least was not to be supposed to have believed, to give his sanction to an institution so completely and so manifestly unconstitutional. The question has been raised here whether he will sanction any organization in the nature of a bank to conduct the fiscal affairs of the government? I have no means of information on this subject which are not common to other gentlemen. From the terms of the senator's message I collect that, if some fiscal agency can be organized which, while its primary object is to conduct the financial operations of the government, would incidentally aid in regulating the exchanges and currency of the country, without infringing on the sovereignty and reserved powers of the states, would deem such an institution legitimate and constitutional. Such an institution, I infer from the message, would, in his view, be a different thing from the former money lending, trading, speculating, stock jobbing bank of the United States, ruling and riding over the independent rights of the states."

"The senator from Kentucky inferred from the message, that President Tyler would not have sanctioned the bill had it been in a modified and restricted form, so as even to require the assent of the states. He felt very sure, however, and he intended to say so, that he would not have sanctioned it, if he mistook any thing he had said. He did not say what the president would or would not do with regard to a bank limited to the mere power of dealing in exchange. He had thought that, in respect to such a bank, he would not have required the previous assent of the states, as the senator now said he would. But considered as casting the slightest censure on that venerable and venerated nation.

I beg leave to be indulged with a word or two as to the course it now devolves upon us to take. The senator from Kentucky says he hopes we shall go on and perfect a new bank bill. While I avow myself willing, if such a bill shall be presented as my judge, and my right and duty support, I would not be permitted to say that, in my opinion, we shall better consult our duty to the country and the subject if we do not attempt a second bill at this time. It is a great, a difficult, a complex question. It is a question on which the country is entitled to decide, probably not on any other expedient as to the form which a bank shall assume. I may conclude, if you please, that there is a majority in the country in favor of a fiscal institution of some kind, and which shall render some incidental assistance to the currency and the exchanges of the country; yet, as the form of the institution, its powers, its capital and all its details, men are more divided in opinion than about any thing else. No project has yet received the support of a majority either of congress or of the people. The presses even which support the honorable senator do themselves now say of his bill that it would have been imprudent and its loss is calamity to the country. Shall we, then, when we are all worn out, in mind and body, by our unnatural labors in these dogdays, be called upon to make yet another disastrous experiment? I say to this side of the house, and I would say to the other side, (I will not be permitted to say without treason,) that, (I partly) shall, at this moment, with all the evidences of extensive dissidence as to such a measure before us, rush on blindfold, and in triple haste seek to get up another crude scheme for the finances of the country? I would respectfully say, no. If prudence is to be the thing, let us do nothing. Let us say again, no. Mr. Gallatin, in his late admirable pamphlet on the currency, says, most truly, that a bank of the U. States, from its intrinsic unpopularity and liability to abuse, is a subject which, above all others ought to be acted on "with great caution and the deliberation." Mr. Appleton, too, tells us, when no man has evinced a greater acquaintance with the whole subject, tells us that "the establishment of a bank of the United States is the last thing to be done in haste, or as a mere party measure." I never will agree to act upon any measures touching the great subject of the currency, until we have taken time. We are entitled to the joint wisdom of the whole people, and every part of them, in adjusting this great common interest. Let us, then, for the present pass the subject by. One bill has been rejected by the president, and has failed to command the approbation of a majority of either house of congress. Many whigs are to my certain knowledge, at this moment heartily rejoicing in the defeat of that measure. I have in my pocket a letter from an eminent whig financier congratulating the country on the loss of the bill. We have done much in repealing the sut-treasury.

We have thus taken an obstacle out of the way of the resumption of specie payments; for it has been most truly said that that system wreathed its vengeance only on specie paying banks, while to those which did not pay specie its requirement of bullion was a matter of indifference. Where is the gentleman who will say that the incorporation of a national bank will, for the time, operate as an obstacle to resumption? On that point, I refer gentlemen again to the able pamphlet of Mr. Appleton. I would prefer, indeed, that some temporary act be passed limiting the discretion now left to the executive in relation to the custody and management of the treasury. But I cannot enter into that question, let the question be adjourned—let us take time for deliberation—for reflection—for comparison of views. Let us call in the aid of practical men. Let us not attempt to arrange in haste the details of such an institution on mere theoretical or party principles; but let us get up with us a system of deliberation, a system which will stand the test of scrutiny. Let us be worthy of the administration and the country. All previous systems have been rejected and condemned—the old treasury—the pet banks—the old-fashioned bank of the United States—a new-fashioned fiscal agent—let all parties to lay down their arms. All previous systems have been rejected and condemned—appealing emphatically to the country. Let us say as this question is concerned, a complete tabula rasa—let us begin again. Let us be true to our professions on the altar of the country, and to unite in an honest and patriotic effort to build up a permanent system for the common good.

MR. CLAY'S REJOINER.

Mr. CLAY rose to rejoiner. I have no desire, said he, to prolong this unpleasant discussion; but I must say that I heard with great surprise and regret the closing remark especially of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, as, indeed, I did many of those which preceded it. That gentleman stands in a peculiar situation. I found him several years since in the languish hour, where he seems afraid to remain, and from which he is yet unwilling to go. I had thought, after the thorough riddling which the roof of the house had received in the breaking up of the pet bank system, he would have fled some where else for refuge; but he has remained in the same place, and has been pelted by the pitiless storm. The sub-treasury is repealed—the pet bank system is abandoned—the United States bank bill is vetoed—and now, when there is as complete and perfect a re-union of the purse and the sword in the hands of the executive as there was under General Jackson or Mr. Van Buren, the senator is for doing nothing! The senator is for going home, leaving the treasury and the country in their lawless condition! Yet no man has heretofore, more than he has, deplored and deprecated a state of things so utterly unsafe and repugnant to all just precautions, implicitly asking for sound theory and experience in free governments. And the senator talks to us about applying to the wisdom of practical men, in respect to banking, and advises further deliberation! Why I should suppose that we are at present in the very best situation to act upon the subject, and that the hands of the country had for a long time, we have been nearly three months almost exclusively engrossed with the very subject itself. We have heard all manner of facts, statements, and arguments in any way connected with it. We understand, it seems to me, all we ever can learn about the subject, and we are enabled, as I suppose, at least, some conception too of what sort of one will be acceptable at the other end of the avenue. Yet now, with a vast majority of the people of the entire country crying out to us for a bank—with the people throughout the whole valley of the Mississippi rising in their majesty, and demanding, as it is called, the right to have a bank, and to have it on such terms, their sacrifices, and their sufferings for the want of such an institution—in such a state of things, we are gravely and coldly told by the honorable senator from Virginia, that we had best go home, leaving the purse and the sword in the uncontrolled possession of the president, and above all things, never to make a party bank! Why, sir, does he, with all his knowledge of the conflicting opinions which prevail here, and have prevailed, believe that we ever can make a bank but by the votes of one party who are in favor of it, in opposition to the votes of another party who are against it? I would like to hear the senator from that gentleman the more, because although the honorable senator professes not to know the opinions of the president, it certainly does turn out in the sequel that there is a most remarkable coincidence between those opinions and his own; and he has, on the present occasion, defended the motion and the course of the president with all the solicitation and the fervent zeal of a member of his party congress. [A laugh.] There is a rumor abroad that a cabinet exists—a new sort of kitchen cabinet—whose object is the dissolution of the regular cabinet—the dissolution of the whig party—the dispersion of congress, without accomplishing any of the great purposes of the extra session—and a total change, in fact, in the whole face of our political affairs. I hope, and I persuade myself, that the honorable senator is not, cannot be, one of the component members of such a cabinet; but I must say that I have been displeased by the honorable senator's way, as I have by the way of an inexplicable, and mischievous almost all of us have said, and a perseverance, after repeated corrections, in misunderstanding—for I will not charge him with wilfully and intentionally misrepresenting—the whole spirit and character of the address which as a man of honor and an orator, I felt myself bound to make to this body.

The senator begins with saying that I charge the president with "perfidy!" Did I use any such language? I appeal to every gentleman who heard me say what I believe I have in a single instance gone beyond a fair and legitimate examination of the executive objections to the bill. Yet he has charged me with "perfidy," and with "misrepresentation." All various counts, and with imputing to him motives such I have never intimated or dreamed, and that, when I was constantly expressing, over and over, my personal respect and regard for President Tyler, for whom I have cherished an intimate personal friendship of twenty years, and for which I express a satisfaction that that friendship should not be interrupted, it should not be why! Why, sir, what possible, what conceivable motive can I have to quarrel with the president, or to break up the whig party? What earthly motive can impel me to wish for any other result than that that party should be so united, so bold, and united forward to the accomplishment of the all-important public objects which it has avowed to be its aim? What imaginable interest or feeling can I have other than the success, the triumph, the glory of the whig party? But that there may be designs and purposes on the part of certain individuals to place me in inimical relations with the president, and to represent me as personally opposed to him, I can well imagine—individuals who are beating up for recruits, and endeavoring to form a party, and who are so ignorant and so ignorant as to be insufficient to compose a decent corporal's guard. I fear there are such individuals, though I do not charge the senator as being himself one of them. What a spectacle has been presented to this nation during this entire session of congress! That of the clerical and confidential friends of John Tyler, persons who boast and claim to be per cunctas, his exclusive and genuine friends, being the bitter, systematic, determined, uncompromising opponents of every leading measure of John Tyler's administration! Was there ever before such an example presented in the case of any other man in this or any other country? I have myself known the president too long, and cherish towards him too sincere a friendship, to allow my feelings to be affected or alienated by anything which has passed here to-day. If the president chooses—which I am sure he cannot, unless falsehood in this case inspired into him, fear or poison poured into his head, and which I have no doubt he will deeply regret it, for the sake of our common friendship and our common country. I now repeat what I before said, that, of all the measures of relief which the American people have called upon us to take, that of the re-union of the purse and the sword, and the uniformity of the currency has been the most loudly and impudently demanded. The senator says that the question of a bank was not the issue made before the people at the late election. I can say, for one, my own conviction is diametrically the contrary. What may have been the character of the canvass in Virginia, I will not say; but, I say, that the people of that State, where, governed in some degree by considerations of local policy. What issues may therefore have been presented to the people of Virginia, either above or below tide-water, I am not prepared to say. The great error, however, of the honorable senator is in thinking that the sentiments of a particular part of Virginia are always a fair representation of the sentiments of the whole Union. [A laugh.] I can tell that senator that wherever I was—in the great valley of the Mississippi—in Kentucky—in Tennessee—in Maryland—in all the circles in which I moved, every where, the bank of the United States was the great, the leading, the vital question. I have, on every tour, during the last summer, at one of the most remarkable and respectable and gratifying assemblages that I ever attended, I distinctly announced my conviction that a bank of the United States was indispensable. As to the opinion of General Harrison, I know that, like many of us, he had conceived doubts as to the constitutionality of a bank; but I also know that, as the election approached, his opinion turned more and more in favor of a national bank; and I speak from my own personal knowledge of his opinions when I say that I have no more doubt he would have signed that bill than that you, Mr. President, now occupy that chair, or that I am addressing you.

I rose not to say one word which should wound the feelings of President Tyler. The senator says that, if placed in like circumstances, I would have been the last man to avoid putting a direct veto upon the bill, had it met my disapprobation; and he does me the honor to attribute to me high qualities of "stern and unbending uniformity of habits," and to a quality that relates to personal friendship—all that concerns a just appreciation of the insignificance of human life—whatever may be attempted to threaten or alarm a soul not easily swayed by opposition, or awed or intimidated by menace—a stout heart and a steady eye that can survey the human race, and, notwithstanding many mere personal perils that assail this poor transient, perishing frame, I may, without disparagement, compare with other men. But there is a sort of courage which, I frankly confess it, I do not possess—a boldness to which I dare not aspire—a valor which I cannot claim, and which I have myself down in the way of the welfare and happiness of my country. That I cannot, I have not the courage to do. I cannot interpose the power with which I may be invested—a power conferred not for my personal benefit, nor for my aggrandizement, but for my country's good—to check her onward march to greatness and glory. I have not the courage to do that. I would not, I dare not, in the exercise of such a trust, lie down, and place my body across the path that leads my country to prosperity and happiness. This is a sort of courage widely different from that which a man may display in his private conduct and in his private life. The courage of a soldier is totally distinct from that higher and nobler courage which prompts the patriot to offer himself a voluntary sacrifice to his country's good.

Nor did I say, as the senator represents, that the president should have resigned. I intimated no personal wish or desire that he should resign. I referred to the fact of a memorable resignation in his public life. And what I did say was, that there were other alternatives before him besides vetoing the bill, and that it was worthy of his consideration whether consistency did not require that the example which he set by when he had consistently vetoed a measure should not be followed when he had a consistency commensurate with the whole union. Another alternative was to suffer the bill, without his signature, to pass into a law under the provisions of the constitution. And I must confess I see, in this, no such escape by the back-door as such jumping out of the window, as the senator talks about. Apprehensions of the imputation of the want of firmness sometimes impel us to perform rash and inconsiderate acts. It is the greatest courage to be able to bear the imputation of the want of courage. But pride, vanity, egotism, so unamiable and so injurious to private life, are vices which partake of the character of crimes in the conduct of public affairs. The unfortunate victim of these passions cannot see beyond the little, petty, contemptible circle of his own personal interests. All his thoughts are withdrawn from his country, and concentrated on his vanity, his rancor, his selfishness. The high, the exalted, the sublime emotions of a patriotism, which, soaring towards Heaven, rises far above all mean, low or selfish things, and is absorbed by one soul-transfusing thought of the good and the glory of one's country, never fall to his unbecomingly bosom. That patriotism which, catching its inspirations from the immortal God, and leaving an immeasurable distance below all lesser, grovelling, personal interests and feelings, animates and prompts to deeds of self-sacrifice, of valor, of devotion and of death itself—that is public virtue—that is the noblest, the sublimest of all public virtues.

I said nothing of any obligation on the part of the president to conform his judgment of the opinions of the senate and house of representatives, although the senator argued as if I had, and persevered in so arguing, after repeated corrections. I said no such thing as to know the names of the members of each department, acting within its proper sphere, of other departments. But I referred to the majorities in the two houses of congress as further and strong evidence of the opinion of the people of the United States in favor of the establishment of a bank and in favor of the maintenance of the doctrine of instructions which were proclaimed in Virginia, and of which the president is a disciple, and, in pursuance of the example already cited, he ought not to have rejected the bill.

I have heard that, on his arrival at the seat of the general government to enter upon the duties of the office of vice president, in March last, he was interrogated how far he meant to conform in his new station, to certain peculiar opinions which were held in Virginia, he made this patriotic and noble reply: "I am vice president of the United States, and not of the state of Virginia; and I shall be governed by the wishes and opinions of my constituents." When I heard of this encouraging satisfactory reply, believing, as I most religiously do, that a large majority of the people of the United States are in favor of a national bank, (and gentlemen may shut their eyes to the fact, deny or dispute, or reason it away as they please, but it is my conscientious conviction that the two-thirds, if not the three-fourths, of the United States desire such an institution,) I thought I held a sure and certain guaranty for the fulfillment of the wishes of the people of the United States. I thought it impossible that the wants and wishes of a great people, who had bestowed such unbounded and generous confidence and confidence in him, such exalted honors, should be disregarded and disappointed. It did not enter into my imagination to conceive that one, who had shown so much deference and respect to the presumed sentiments of a single state, should display less towards the sentiments of the whole nation.

Mr. Clay said, that, in performing the painful duty which had devolved on me, I have not transgressed the limits of legitimate debate. I repeat, in all truth and sincerity, the assurance to the senate and to the country, that nothing but a stern, reluctant, and indispensable sense of honor and of duty have led me forward to the discharge of this painful duty. I have made to the president's objections. But, instead of yielding without restraint to the feelings of disappointment and mortification excited by the perusal of his message, I have anxiously endeavored to temper the notice of it, which have been commensurate to the force of the reasons of right, and to the personal regard and esteem which I have ever entertained for its present incumbent.

TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

August 26. Mr. Tappan, from the joint committee on the library, reported, with amendments, the resolution for the distribution of the printed returns of the 6th census.

The forfeiture bill was taken up, the question being on concurring in the amendments of the house, and after brief remarks by various senators, was laid over till to-morrow.

The distribution and pre-emption bill was again taken up; the question being on its passage, Messrs. Calhoun, McRoberts and Young, opposed the bill.

Some remarks were made on collateral issues, by Messrs. Archer, Sevier, Linn and Clay.

Mr. Rives advocated, and Mr. Benton at length opposed the bill. Without concluding his remarks, the latter gentleman gave way to a motion from Mr. Clay, of Ala. to adjourn.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, expressed the hope that the motion would not prevail, as an adjournment was agreed to yesterday, with the understanding that the question on the passage of the bill should be taken to-morrow.

The motion was negatived: yeas 15, nays 31. Mr. Benton then resumed his remarks, which, after being continued at some length, he concluded by moving to recommit the bill, with instructions to strike out the "bamboozing" pre-emption sections, and insert sections containing the pre-emption and graduation provisions.

This motion failed: yeas 22, nays 29.

The bill was then finally passed, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Bayard, Benton, Claiborne, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Huntington, Kerr, Mangin, M. Merck, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Forrester, Prentiss, Sevier, Simmons, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Calhoun, Fulton, King, Linn, McRoberts, Monroe, Nicholson, Pierce, Preston, Sevier, Smith, of Conn., Sturgeon, Tappan, Walker, Williams, Wood.

And then the session adjourned.

August 27. The president presented the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Washington, with regard to the disorderly proceedings near the president to the night ensuing the veto of the bank bill; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The bill from the house making appropriations for the funeral expenses of William Henry Harrison, was twice read and referred to the committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill from the house making appropriations for the post office department, was twice read and referred to the committee on post offices and post roads.

The resolution for the distribution of the returns of the 6th census, was taken up, and the amendment of the house concurred in, and also an additional amendment increasing the number of copies.

The bill from the house, "relating to duties and drawbacks," was announced, as the general order, and after some conversation, taken up.

The amendments of the committee were first in order. The first of these, was to take from the list of articles exempted from the proposed duty of twenty per cent. the following: gold and silver, and other watches, and parts of watches, gold and silver lace and embroidery, laces of thread, silk or cotton, and all articles composed wholly or chiefly of gold or silver, gems and precious stones, pearls of all kinds which set, jewelry, and including prostheses. (The effect of the amendment is to expose these to the duty of twenty per cent.)

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, said that the committee after consideration had thought best, that the rate of duty on these articles should be increased. They were, he said, and were liable to be smuggled, and from this cause, he did not know as an increase of duty on them would produce more revenue than the present rates. They had had various petitions on the subject, some desiring, others opposing an increase of duty on these articles. But most of the persons alluded to in them were extremely anxious that they should be subjected to higher duty, and more, over, he believed that economical considerations required a higher duty on them for the purpose of revenue. It was from this reason that the committee had proposed the amendment, on which it was for the first time divided.

Mr. Wright doubted the propriety of the amendment, from no feeling to favor the articles by exempting them from duty, but from representations of some of the largest dealers in these articles in New York; that a 20 per cent. duty on them, would not yield as much revenue as a duty of 12½ per cent.; and that this would not yield as much as a duty of five or six per cent. They based this opinion on the ground that these being articles of very great value, and of small compass, were very likely to be smuggled, and would be almost entirely, if the duty were increased.

A package of 15 or 16 inches square, might be worth five or six thousand dollars, might be smuggled beyond the possibility of detection. This increase of duty would make an established system of smuggling these articles, and thus entirely derange the trade, and destroy those men who had too much principle to enter into this system. He should therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. Clay said the amendment would be disposed of as the senate thought proper; he would, however, ask the yeas and nays, as it was a question which had created considerable excitement, that the opinions of senators might be seen. The committee had had before them when this matter was under consideration, some intelligent dealers in these articles, who were decidedly in favor of an increase of the duty. He had told them he believed it would encourage smuggling, and not add to the revenue; but they believed they could prevent this. They knew the principal imports of these goods, and they intended to make an arrangement among the dealers throughout the country, to assist the collector in detecting the smuggling that might be committed, and bringing those engaged in it to punishment. Under this consideration, he believed it would operate beneficially to increase the duty. These articles produced but little duty at any rate, and they had proposed this increase on them as their exemption from duty was the cause of some dissatisfaction throughout the country; it was believed these ought more properly to be taxed than many other articles. He hoped the provision would be retained, but it was for the senate to decide. He asked yeas and nays on the amendment; which were ordered.

Mr. Calhoun said he thought the senator from Kentucky would see that, as they were not prepared for the consideration of the bill, it would be better to put it over till Monday, or to to-morrow; let some other day be taken, and give the opportunity to examine it. He agreed with the senator that it was important to give satisfaction to the people; but the best manner to do this, was to go on and do their duty. He opposed putting the duty on these articles, for, however vigilant the dealers might be, they could not prevent smuggling. They would be entirely smuggled, and the duty would be lost. He would do what was right, and if any one would move it, he would vote to reduce the duty to 5 per cent. and we should then raise more revenue from them. He hoped the senator would put over the subject till to-morrow.

Mr. Clay said he merely proposed to commence the work to-day, and take the question on the amendments of the committee. The question on this was plain, and every senator must understand it. It was merely whether a duty on jewelry and luxuries should be increased to 25 per cent. or not. It could admit of no argument, and he did not intend to discuss it.

Mr. Henderson said he should vote against the amendment, as these articles would not bear such a duty; the increase of which, by encouraging smuggling, would not add to the revenue.

Mr. Smith, of Connecticut, should vote against the amendment.

Mr. Woodbury said the argument against this—that it would tend to an increase of smuggling, would cut into the whole bill, and equally apply to sewing silk and all other articles. They should do their duty, and when the revenue needed an increase, they should do it by increasing the duty on the proper articles, and then provide for the carrying out of the law, and the prevention of smuggling.

Mr. Allen should vote for this amendment. He thought the increase of duty to 20 per cent. would tend to no more smuggling than a duty of ten per cent. He said, and on this subject, he was measured—as an attempt to tax the necessities of life—of distribution. He had no apprehension of the result of appealing to the people on this subject; and he now gave notice that when the distribution bill and the tariff bill would become a law—when a duty of 10 per cent. should be levied on the necessities of life, he would introduce a bill to exempt the bankers, he would introduce a bill to repeal both acts.

Mr. Clay, of Alabama, should vote for the amendment. If they were to exempt any class of articles from duties, it ought to be those which were consumed by the poorer class of people. The only objection to the bill against this amendment was that it would increase the smuggling of these articles. He did not know how great an effect of this kind would be likely to be produced, but he believed these articles ought to be taxed, and provision made against the smuggling.

Next, Clay should vote on the measures presented to him on their merits, without looking to their political effects. He believed the rate of duty now existing would yield more revenue than an increase. They ought to shape their duties so that there might be a fair and honorable competition in the market, and not an advantage given to the dishonest over the honest.

This measure would lead to smuggling. No one could doubt it. It must be the effect of it, and it would not add to the revenue. Why, then, was it introduced? For political effect, that they might hold out to the people the idea that they increased the duties on the duties, and that they increased the duty on articles, and a duty which would be collected. He asked his friends of the cotton-growing regions whether they were prepared to lay the highest duties on articles for which they exchanged their cotton? It would of necessity tend to impair the sale of their productions. He lay the duties on articles of first necessity, if they could be exacted, consistently with the demand for revenue, they ought to be exempted. He should vote against the amendment.

Mr. Calthorn intended on this question to pursue rigidly the line of duty. It was a great question, and should not be diverted to the right or left. Ought they, as statesmen, to do an act which would end in unequalled smuggling, and not bring in a dollar to the treasury? At the beginning of government these articles bore but 5, 6, or 7 per cent. duty; so it ought to be now, and it would produce more revenue. To go further, he would say he did not feel any obligation to vote for any duty because of this sudden emergency. He should vote as if it was a permanent provision, and not looking to exigencies. This necessity had been produced by the present administration—it was of their making, and he should vote for this as if he were settling the taxes, and if the gentlemen had done their duty, and had not by extravagance and distribution created a deficiency in the treasury, for which they were responsible. A rate of duty of 12 per cent. was a fair rate, as an average; some articles to be increased, and some reduced.

Mr. Benton said this bill had been held back till the distribution had been passed, and this a pretext made for it. There was no deficiency till they had passed the land bill, which was a fraud in itself, and would operate to distribute not only land revenue, but was intended into the custom house and revenue, in violation of our rules, when two bills had preference, and this had been taken up, to increase taxes; and that was in accordance with the other measures of the session. He should give every vote to keep all the commodities of life as low as they were in the glorious times on Bureau Jackson. This new tariff would prove to be the most disastrous, and the most wicked, that ever had existed; for former tariffs were laid on some articles, they spared those used by the poor.

The question was then taken, and the amendment adopted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Archer, Barrow, Bates, Bayard, Benton, Berrien, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Fulton, Graham, Huntington, Linn, McRoberts, Mangum, Marshall, Mason, Merriam, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Rives, Sevier, Simmons, Smith, of Ind. Southard, Surgeon, Tallmadge, Tappan, White, Williams, Woodbridge, Woodbury, Young—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Benton, Buchanan, King, Smith, of Conn., Sturgeon, Walker, Young—26.

At the suggestion of Mr. Clay, the bill was then passed informally, to give gentlemen an opportunity for its examination.

On the question of Mr. Rives, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, in which they were occupied during the day.

August 28. Mr. Chadw presented a memorial from merchants of Boston, asking that additional duties might not be imposed on articles which had been shipped. Laid on the table and order to be printed.

The bill from the house of representatives making appropriations for the outfit of diplomatic agents was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the committee on foreign relations.

The bill making appropriation for the arrangement of the statue of Washington, by Greenough, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the committee on the library.

The fortification bill was then taken up, and the amendment of the house having been read, Mr. Preston explained that the committee on military affairs had recommended that the senate disagree with the amendment of the house, and insist on their amendments, which had been stricken out by the house, for an appropriation of $30,000 for a survey of the southwestern frontier, inland and maritime borders; and an appropriation of $75,000 for the purchase of a site for a western, southwestern and northwestern army.

The subject was debated by Messrs. Prentiss, Wright, Huntington, Buchanan, Evans, King, Linn, Preston, Huntington, Calhoun and Pierce; when Mr. Preston asked that the question be taken on the items separately.

The question was first taken on concurring with the amendment in the following amendment:

“For purchase of a site, and for barracks and defensive works, at or near Buffalo, N. York, $50,000.”

On this question the yeas and nays were demanded when the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Barrow, Bates, Christie, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Huntington, Linn, Morehead, Monro, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, Tappan, Walker, White, Woodbridge, Wright, Young—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Benton, Buchanan, Kerr, King, McRoberts, Miller, Nicholson, Pierce, Preston, Smith, of Conn., Sturgeon, Woodbury—18.

The vote was then taken on concurring in the following amendment, and carried, without a division:

“For fortifications at the outlet of Lake Champlain, and purchase of site, $75,000.”

“For defensive works, barracks and other necessary buildings, and purchase of a site for a depot, at or near the junction of the Matawankeag and Penobscot rivers, Maine, $25,000.”

Mr. Preston asked that the committee on military affairs of the senate recommend that the senate insist on their amendments, which the house had stricken out.

One of these amendments, viz making an appropriation of thirty thousand dollars for surveys on the southwestern inland and maritime frontiers, for purposes of defence, was then taken up.

Mr. Montu expressed his surprise that this item should have been left out by the house, and hoped that the senate would persist in retaining that amendment.

Mr. M. sent to the chair a letter from the war department, in order to convince the senate of the importance of this measure.

The question having been taken on the senate's insisting on its amendment, it was carried, without a division.

The next amendment of the senate was the appropriation of seventy-five thousand dollars for the purchase of a site for a western, southwestern or northwestern army.

Mr. Clay hoped this amendment would not be insisted on. He was against the expense, in the first place, in the present state of the treasury; and, if the section were left to the president, it would, he felt, be left to a secretary, who in turn would leave it to a head of a bureau, when, in a matter so important, congress should retain control. Besides, $75,000 for the purchase of a site was a most enormous price, and looked like a job to somebody who had property to sell that was not its value, and then all that money was only for a commencement.

Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Allen and Woodbridge spoke in favor of insisting on the amendment, and Messrs. Clay and Morehead was opposed to insisting, when the question was taken on insisting on the amendment, and carried in the affirmative.

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Barrow, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Calhoun, Fulton, Henderson, King, Linn, McRoberts, Nicholson, Preston, Sevier, Smith, of Conn., Surgeon, Tappan, Walker, White, Woodbridge, Woodbury, Wright, Young—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Bates, Berrien, Christie, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Huntington, Kerr, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Ind. Southard, Tallmadge, White—22.

The bill from the house making appropriations for the repair of the Potomac bridge was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill to carry in effect the provisions of the treaty with Mexico was returned with amendments from the house, and on motion of Mr. Preston, referred to the committee on foreign relations.

Mr. Rives soon after reported the bill back to the senate, recommending that the amendments be concurred in; which was agreed to, and the bill finally passed.

The revenue bill was then taken up.

On the first question was on concurring with the committee in exempting palanquin duty.

Mr. Clay said this was an article of but little value, and was used by the girls of the nation in making bonnets and hats.

The amendment was agreed to.

Another amendment of Mr. Evans, in which was inserted among the articles to be exempted from duty, was inserted smac among the exceptions, as not liable to duty.

On this amendment a debate sprang up, in which Messrs. Woodbury, Calhoun, Clay and Walker participated.

On motion of Mr. Evans, the words “oil of” was stricken out, and clers only admitted, on the ground that the oil was a manufactured article.

On motion of Mr. Clay, the bill was further amended so as to insert bleaching powder and cream of tartar in the bill, and of course exempting them from duty.

Mr. Woodbury would submit an amendment, which he did not desire to have considered then, but to lay over until Monday. It was to insert among the list of free articles tea and coffee, and that the duty on salt and molasses be reduced one-half from the year 1832 to 1845, after which to be entirely exempted.

Mr. Benton sent an amendment to the chair, to the effect that coarse blankets should be admitted free of duty.

Mr. Buchanan said he was induced to offer an amendment. Within the limits of the compromise act, he would protect the manufacturers of the country. It was well known that there was iron in Pennsylvania equal to the best English iron for rail roads, enough indeed to supply the whole world. The amendment he would offer he desired to come in at the 5th section of the bill.

The effect of this amendment was to repeal all the laws which admitted iron for rail roads free of duty.

Mr. Clay said he did not know that he should have any objection to this amendment. The policy was, where there was a large amount of revenue on land, to admit this article free of duty for the encouragement of rail roads. But as there was a large quantity of iron in this country, and extensive manufactures, he thought he should support the proposition, particularly as it would add very considerably to the revenue.

Mr. Buchanan would support it if there was no iron in the country.

As there were any reason why corporations should have this article free of duty, while the farmer was subjected to a tax on the iron used in his ploughs? In Pennsylvania there were immense beds of this iron ore, beside the coal, and he hoped that a duty would be placed on rail road as well as on any other iron.

Mr. King made some remarks, understood to be in opposition to the amendment. The question was whether there was iron in Pennsylvania, but was it manufactured so as to create a proper supply for the purpose of facilitating these roads?

Mr. Huntington would suggest whether it would not be better to let the subject lie over until the first of the week, which suggestion was acquiesced in, and the bill passed over informally.

Mr. Sevier asked the senate to indulge him in taking up the bill in which one of his Choctaw constituents was deeply interested—he had been waiting here for a long time in expectation of having it acted on.

The senate then proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the satisfaction of the outstanding Choctaw reservations, under the nineteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit creek, of September, 1830.

Mr. Sevier explained the objects of the bill and advocated it with great zeal.

Mr. How even spoke in its favor, but the senate adjourned without taking any question.

August 30. Mr. Archer presented the proceedings of a meeting held in Orange county, Virginia, expressive of the disapprobation of the leading measures of the present session, &c.; which were read and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Clay presented a memorial from the manufacturers of bleaching powders, asking that a duty may be imposed on that article.

Mr. Simmons also presented one to the same effect.

Mr. Woodbury also one of similar character, relating to bleaching powders and chloride of lime.

Mr. Tappan moved to take up the resolution submitted by him some days since, in relation to fixing the time of adjournment.

On this question a few remarks were made, and the question was taken by yeas and nays, the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Barrow, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Calhoun, Fulton, King, Linn, McRoberts, Nicholson, Pierce, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Sturgeon, Tappan, Walker, Woodbury, Wright, Young—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Bates, Berrien, Christie, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Huntington, Kerr, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Preston, Simmons, Smith, of Ind. Southard, Tallmadge, White—22.

Mr. Kerr, from the committee on the judiciary, reported back the bill, which had been recommended three days since, recommending that the amendments of the house, which, on motion, were considered and agreed to.

At which hour, the committee, in pursuance of the order of the house of this day, proceeded without further debate to vote on the amendments pending or that might be offered.

And the question being on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. Gilmer.

Mr. McKay moved to amend the amendment of Mr. Gilmer, by striking out the latter part thereof, in the following words:

"That the several sums which the post office department may heretofore have paid into the treasury."

The question being taken, the vote stood; ayes 75, noes 75; a tie.

The chairman then voted in the negative, and the vote of the house was taken. So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

And the question recurring on the amendment of Mr. Gilmer, it was decided in the affirmative: ayes 107, noes not counted. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, moved to amend the bill by reducing the amount appropriated from $497,550 to the sum of $347,000. Which amendment, by yeas 72, noes 79, was rejected.

Mr. McKay then moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following: "That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, in case it is necessary to enable the post office department to meet its present engagements and pay its debts, to cause a sum not exceeding three hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars of the money which may be borrowed in execution of the act entitled 'an act authorising a loan not exceeding the sum of twelve millions of dollars,' approved July 21st, 1841, to be applied to the use of such department for the purposes aforesaid, and to be reimbursed out of the accruing funds of the department; the said money to be accounted for in the manner prescribed in the second section of the act to amend the organization of the post office department, and to provide more effectually for the settlement of the accounts thereof, passed July 2, 1836."

Which amendment, by ayes 60, noes 88, was rejected.

On motion of Mr. Briggs, the committee then rose, and reported the bill with the amendments to the house.

And the question being on concurring with the committee in its amendments, and ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, Mr. Briggs moved the previous question. And there was a second.

And the question, (being first in concurring with the committee in its amendments.)

Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and, being taken, were: yeas 121, nays 47. So the amendment was concurred in.

And the bill was ordered to a third reading now. And having been read a third time, and the question being "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. Snyder asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Landolf, W. Andrews, Sherlock, J. Andrews, Arnold, Arrington, Ayres, Babcock, Banks, Barnard, Barton, Bullock, Eads, Eads, Black, Blair, Boardman, Borden, Briggs, Brockway, Bronson, Brown, A. Brown, Milton Brown, William Butler, William O. Butler, John Campbell, Thomas C. Campbell, Caswell, Claiborne, John C. Clark, Staley N. Clarke, Cowen, Cranston, Cross, Cushing, Win. C. Dawson, Deberry, John Edwards, Everett, Ferris, Fessenden, Fillmore, A. Lawrence Foster, Gamble, George, Giddings, H. H. Gilmer, John H. Gilmer, Green, Greig, Gustine, Habersham, Hall, Halsey, William S. Hastings, Hays, Holmes, Howard, Husted, James Irvine, William W. Irvin, James J. P. Kenney, Charles C. Lester, Littlefield, Malley, Samson Mason, John Thompson Mason, Nathan May, Charles Maxwell, Maynard, Moore, Morzan, Morris, Morrow, Osborne, Owsley, Farmer, Powell, Profit, Rogers, Ridgway, Russell, Samuel, Randolph, Rayner, Renwick, Ridgway, Russell, Samuel, Randolph, Rayner, Renwick, Simonson, Smith, Stokely, Stratton, A. H. H. Stuart, John T. Stuart, Sumner, Talsider, John D. Thompson, Tillamouth, Tillamouth, John D. Thompson, Triplett, Trumbull, Turner, Wallace, Warren, Washington, E. D. White, J. L. White, T. W. White, Winthrop, Wood, York, Young, John Young.

NAYS—Messrs. Adberton, Beeson, Bowne, Bay, Charles A. Caldwell, Eastman, Chas. A. Floyd, A. McClernick, M. Kay, Mathews, Newell, Payne, Rogers, Saunders, Snyder, Underwood—23.

The house then, on motion of Mr. Gilmer, went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Randolph, of New Jersey, in the chair), and took up the bill in relation to placing the statue of Washington in the rotunda of the capital.

The bill having been read, Mr. Gilmer went into a full explanation of the grounds of the bill, quoting from the documents in support of the several items of appropriation contained in it; which were: 1. For the preparation and execution of the work. 2. For freight. And, 3. For the removal of the statue from the navy yard, and its erection in the rotunda.

The bill underwent several amendments as to the sums appropriated, on account of diversity of opinion, &c., also for an iron railing to surround the statue when erected in the rotunda.

Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, moved an amendment, the effect of which would be to rescind a former resolution which had required the statue to be erected in the centre of the rotunda, and permitting it to be placed in such other part of that apartment as might be directed by the secretary of the navy.

Mr. Greenough, the sculptor, in a letter to a committee of congress, had suggested that the centre would not be the proper place for his work, because the light would there fall vertically upon it, and the position would be midway between the centre and the door leading to the first rotunda.

The amendment left that point discretionary with the secretary.

Mr. Holmes opposed the amendment on the ground that any other location of the statue than the centre of the rotunda would destroy the symmetry of that magnificent saloon, and more than counterbalance any advantage from the direction of the rays of light.

Mr. Adams said he had formerly concurred in this opinion, and had expressed it to the house a few days since, when the bill was up. But, on further examination, he had ascertained that there was a drip from the leakage of the glass lantern over the dome of the rotunda, which would threaten the injury, if not eventual destruction, of the statue if placed under it, and he was therefore induced to yield the argument derived from the symmetry of the apartment.

Mr. King suggested a difficulty as to the manner in which the floor had been strengthened by arches over the crypt below, (originally intended for the reception of General Washington's remains); should the immense weight of the statue, (not less than 20 tons), be placed at any other point, the floor might prove insufficient to sustain it.

To this it was replied that there were other arches beneath the floor, which would be quite sufficient to endure the weight.

The amendment was finally agreed to. Whereupon, in the midst of sundry suggestions to take up other bills, and general cries of "no, no; let us rise," the committee rose, and reported the bill to the house.

In the house it forthwith received its third reading, and was passed. And then the house adjourned.

FRIDAY, AUG. 27. Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina, offered a resolution ordering that the clerk of this house do, and cause to be made, arrangements for distributing the seats among members by lot.

Messrs. Morgan, Hopkins and others, professing themselves well satisfied with their present seats, objected to the resolution, and it was therefore not received.

The house then resolved itself into committee of the whole, Mr. Skipped, of North Carolina, in the chair.

Mr. Dawson moved to take up the bill submitted by Mr. Levy, "making further provision for the suppression of Indian hostilities in Florida." The bill was taken up, but was soon laid aside informally for the present.

On motion of Mr. Dawson, the committee took up the bill making provision for the purchase of sites for fortifications and for military surveys.

On motion of Mr. Fillmore, it was amended by striking out the appropriations for the purchase of sites on the outlet of Lake Champlain, and at Detroit and Fort Erie, the appropriations having been anticipated by recent amendments to the fortification bill, now passed.

Mr. Dawson suggested the propriety of striking out the appropriations for the purchase from the state of New York of sites and fortifications in New York harbor, as he had found by an examination of revolutionary claims, that the balance of $200,000 was due from the state of New York to the general government, which, in 1794, was arranged to be paid by fortifications to be erected by the state of New York for the United States government.

A confused desultory debate on this subject ensued between Messrs. Dawson, Fillmore, Harris, Linn and McKay. The bill was at length laid aside, without any order to report it.

[A message was received from the senate informing the house that they had passed the land bill with amendments.]

On motion of Mr. Tillamouth, the committee next took up the resolution for distribution of copies of the Digest of Patents, which, without debate, was reported.

Mr. Fillmore moved to take up the bill making appropriations for the outfits and salaries of diplomatic agents.

Mr. Gilmer objected, and wished to state his reasons, but was prevented by the rule extending debate on such a motion.

On the vote no quorum appeared. The committee rose and reported the fact.

A call of the house was ordered—yeas 102, nays 57. On a quorum being called, the bill was taken up, and the house again resolved itself into committee of the whole.

The committee then voted to take up the diplomatic appropriation bill—ayes 61, noes 60.

Mr. Ingersoll moved to strike out the appropriations for charges to Naples and to Sardinia. He defended his motion by some remarks on the extravagance and uselessness of the diplomatic establishment.

Messrs. Fillmore, Cushing, Tillamouth, Adams, Gilmer, Holmes and Everett replied to Mr. Ingersoll. The amendment was rejected without a division.

Mr. King moved an amendment appropriating $4,000 for the purchase of a new statue of George Washington, and he advocated his amendment in a speech of considerable length. The amendment was rejected.

After some further remarks from Messrs. Fillmore and Cushing, the bill was laid aside and ordered to be reported.

The committee then rose and reported.

The resolution for the distribution of the Digest of Patents.

The diplomatic appropriation bill, without amendment was ordered to a third reading then, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Dawson, the committee of the whole on the state of the union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill in relation to the purchase of sites, and the same was recommitted to the committee on military affairs.

Mr. Adams, on leave, introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee on foreign affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the expenses in the diplomatic department of the government, by diminishing the number of ministers and other diplomatic agents abroad, and report thereon to the house.

Mr. Briggs asked that the house would, by common consent, take up the land bill, and refer it to the committee on public lands, and order the amendments to be printed.

Mr. J. G. Floyd inquired of the speaker if it was in order to move an amendment?

The speaker replied in the negative.

And the bill was then referred to the committee on the public lands, and the amendments were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Campbell then again offered his resolution for the division of the seats by lot among the members, but it was objected to, as was also a substitute proposed by Mr. Peleson, on offering all the desks to be removed except the outer row. The resolution being objected to, it was laid aside.

The house then, on motion of Mr. Underwood, went into committee of the whole, Mr. Arnold in the chair, and took up the bill for the repair of the Potomac bridge, which, without debate, was ordered to be reported.

The bill to provide for the repaving and repairing of the Pennsylvania avenue coming up on the question of engrossment—

Mr. Cave Johnson moved to lay the bill on the table, and asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and being taken, were as follows: yeas 75, nays 83. So the bill was not laid on the table.

And the question recurring on the engrossment of the bill, Mr. Campbell said that he did not suppose the house understood the question—that the impression on the minds of gentlemen might be that the appropriation was intended to pave the principal part of the avenue. Whereas, in reality, upon the statement of the individual who expected to obtain the contract, $15,000 would only pave 300 yards of it at the rate of 36 feet wide, which would, according to that computation, require an appropriation of $75,000. Mr. Underwood, in reply moved the previous question. And there was a second.

And the main question (being on the engrossment) was ordered, and, being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

And the house adjourned.

SATURDAY, AUG. 23. The unfinished business of yesterday was the bill for repaving and repairing a portion of Pennsylvania avenue.

The pending question being on the passage thereof—

Mr. Forke (the house, he said, being very thin) moved that there be a call of the house.

Mr. Hopkins asked the yeas and nays on that motion, but withdrew the motion.

And the call having been ordered—the clerk called the roll, and 193 members answered to their names.

And the names of the absentees having been called, 171 members appeared to be present.

And then all further proceedings on the call were suspended.

The question then recurring on the passage of the bill.

Mr. Hopkins asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows, yeas 69, nays 103. So the bill was rejected.

The house then took up the bill on the speaker's table providing for the division of the printed returns of the sixth census, and concurred in the amendment of the senate (in relation to the number of copies) made thereto.

On motion of Mr. Cushing, the house proceeded to the consideration of the senate bill to carry into effect two conventions between the United States and the Mexican republics.

The committee on foreign affairs of this house, to whom the said bill had been referred, had recommended that the enacting clause thereof be stricken out.

And the question being on concurring with the committee in that recommendation—debate arose, in which Messrs. Cushing, Wise, Everett, Adams, Hunt and Tillinghast, participated.

[A message in writing was received from the president of the United States, by the hands of John Tyler, Jr., his private secretary.]

The question was then taken on concurring in the recommendation of the committee on foreign affairs to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

And the house refusing to concur with the committee in the recommendation, the enacting clause of the bill was not stricken out.

Mr. Wise then moved to amend the bill—

1. By striking out all after the word "that," in the third line of the 1st section, to the words "The secretary," in the 1st line of the 2d section.

2. In the 2d section in the third line, after the words "in the recommendation," have before shall be made, in pursuance of the convention with the republic of Mexico concluded at Washington the 11th day of April, 1839, in favor of citizens of the United States."

And by adding to the end thereof the following words:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to give any rights to the claimants that are not conferred by said convention and the act of June 12th, 1840, and that the substance of this provision be inserted in the certificates that may be issued."

This proviso was offered by Mr. Everett, and accepted by Mr. Wise as a modification of his amendment.]

Mr. G. Davis moved to lay the bill on the table; which motion was rejected.

Mr. H. Wise moved the previous question. And there was a second.

And the main question (being first on the modified amendment of Mr. Wise was ordered; and, being taken, was decided in the affirmative. So the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

And the bill having been ordered to a third reading now, was read a third time, and passed.

And Mr. Cushing then moved that the bill be so amended as to read an act "in addition to" an act, &c. And then the house adjourned.

MONDAY, AUG. 20. The speaker said the first business in order was the presentation of petitions.

On leave given, Mr. Stenrod presented the resolution of protest of the citizens of Marshall county, protesting against the general course of legislation at the present congress; which were laid on the table.

The speaker laid before the house a message from the president of the United States, in answer to a resolution of this house of the 16th ult. transmitting to the committee on the treasury the records, with accompanying papers, in relation to removals from office, &c.

Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed as an appendix to information heretofore received on the same subject.

Mr. Stenrod presented a petition from the citizens of Washington county, North Carolina, praying congress to charter a national bank.

Mr. Barton, of Virginia, presented the petition of 214 citizens of Harper's Ferry and its vicinity, remonstrating against the continuance of a military superintendency over the public works at that place. Also, a petition from the same place, signed by 187 individuals, praying a law to authorize the continuance of a military superintendency over the public armories. Which petitions, on Mr. Barton's affairs, were referred to the committee on military affairs.

Mr. Murray, from the committee on public lands, to whom had been referred the bill "to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights," with certain amendments made thereto by the senate, reported back the same, with a recommendation that the said amendments be concurred in by this house.

And the question being on concurring therein—

Mr. John C. Clark moved the previous question.

Mr. H. Wise rose to a point of order. He submitted to the speaker that the senate had changed the appropriations made by the house; that the bill contained new features of appropriation, both of land and money, which it contained, and that the amendments of the house, be referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the union.

The speaker said that the bill, by its provisions, appropriated, without any limitation, the entire proceeds of the sales of the public lands.

And the speaker said that there is a two per cent fund, independent of the proceeds.

The speaker. That comes out of the proceeds.

Mr. Wise. But they are distinct monies.

The speaker. True; but the bill upon its face absorbs the entire proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and the whole of the proceeds of the sales of the senate; it is true, make a disposition different from that of the house of a portion of these proceeds; but they do not take one dollar more out of the treasury.

They do not enlarge the appropriation made on the face of the bill.

Further conversation on the point of order was cut off by a motion of Mr. Boyd that the bill and amendments be laid on the table.

Mr. Cave Johnson asked the yeas and nays on that motion, which were ordered; and, being taken, were yeas 101, nays 91.

[A message was received from the senate by Asbury Dickies, esq. secretary, informing this house—

First, that the senate had concurred in the amendments of the house to the bill to amend an act entitled "an act to carry into effect a convention between the United States and the Mexican republic."

Also, that the senate had concurred in the amendment of the house to the bill to amend the act to provide for the taking of the sixth census.

Also, that the senate insisted upon the second and fourth amendments made by that body to the bill "making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for armaments and suppressing Indian hostilities," and had concurred in the other amendments of the house to the amendments of the senate.]

And the question recurring on the motion of Mr. John C. Clark for the previous question—Mr. Bidlack renewed the point of order in relation to the necessity of committing the bill.

And after some conversation on that point between Messrs. Bidlack, Cave Johnson, McKay and Lewis Williams—the speaker decided that, under the rule, it was not necessary to commit the bill.

And Mr. H. Wise then appealed.

Mr. Stenrod asked the yeas and nays on the appeal; which were ordered.

And the question, "shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the house?" was then taken, and decided in the affirmative: yeas 107, nays 82. So the decision of the speaker was affirmed.

Some further conversation followed as to the effect of the previous question.

When the question on the motion of Mr. John C. Clark for the previous question was taken, and decided in the affirmative. So there was a second.

And on the question, "shall the main question be now taken?"

Mr. Thornton asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and, being taken, were: yeas 104, nays 92. So the house determined that the main question should now be taken.

And the question recurring on the main question, (On the second reading of the senate in the amendments—Mr. H. Wise asked that a separate question be taken on each amendment, which was ordered.)

And the first amendment (which provides that the territories of Wisconsin, Iowa and Florida shall receive their distributive share of the proceeds) was concurred in without a division.

On the second amendment, viz:

To strike out the second section the words "respective federal representative population, as ascertained by the last census," and insert, "representation, respectively, in the two houses of congress, as the same may be fixed by the apportionment to be made under the census of 1840, and hereafter, according to the representation as ascertained in the two houses of congress, as it shall be apportioned from time to time, under any future census, except that the District of Columbia and each of the territories shall receive a distributive share equal to that which would be assigned in any state for one representative in the congress of the United States."

Mr. H. Wise asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and, being taken, were 61 yeas 136. So the amendment of the senate was not concurred in.

The third amendment of the senate, which provides that the distributive share of the District of Columbia shall be the same as if said District were represented, was not concurred in.

Section 3. The amendment of the senate, inserting the words "and territories, or to the governors thereof, in case the legislatures shall have made no such apportionment," was concurred in.

Section 4. The amendment of the senate, providing that this act shall not apply "to any sum apparently due to the United States as balances of debts growing out of the transactions of the revolutionary war," was concurred in.

Section 5. The amendment of the senate, inserting in the fifth line the words "except as hereinbefore expressly provided," was concurred in.

Section 6. On the amendment of the senate, inserting the words "unless congress shall think proper to grant alternate sections along the line of any canal or other internal improvement, and at the same time to increase the minimum price of the sections reserved,"

Mr. Cave Johnson asked the yeas and nays, which were refused.

And the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment of the senate inserting in the 9th line of the same section the words "except as aforesaid," was concurred in.

Section 6. On concurring in the following amendment to the senate, to wit:

"Provided, That if, at any time during the existence of this act, there shall be an imposition of duties on imports inconsistent with the provisions of the act of March second, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, entitled, 'an act to modify the act of the fourth of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two and all other acts imposing duties on imports,' and beyond the rate of duty fixed by that act, to wit: twenty per centum on the value of such imports, or any of them, then the distribution provided in this act shall be suspended, and shall so continue until the cause of such duties shall be removed; and, when removed, it not prevented by other provisions of this act, such distribution shall be resumed."

Mr. Irwin asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and being taken, were Yeas 108, yeas 94. So the amendment of the senate was concurred in.

The remaining amendments of the senate were concurred in; and the bill was then ordered to be returned to the senate.

Mr. Wise, from the committee on naval affairs, reported the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary of the navy furnish this house at the next session of congress with a list of the names of all officers of the navy, from lieutenant to captain inclusive, who have been on shore for the term of five years, ten years, and for a period longer than five years, without going to sea, or without applying for orders; with a statement of the causes, if any, which prevented their going to sea; and with a statement of the services rendered by each such officer respectively, and the early pay and emoluments of each.

The house took up the bill "making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities," which had been returned from the senate with a message informing this house that the senate had concurred in three of the amendments of this house to the amendments of the senate, but had insisted on the second and fourth.

The first amendment insisted on by the senate was "for surveys in reference to the military defence of the frontier, inland and Atlantic, $30,000."

After some explanations between Mr. Fillmore and Mr. Pickens—Mr. Fillmore moved that the house recede from its disagreement to this amendment of the senate, and moved the previous question. And there was a second.

The main question was ordered to be taken.

Mr. Pickens asked the yeas and nays on the main question, which were ordered; and, being taken, were: yeas 88, yeas 94.

So the house refused to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate.

And the speaker decided that the vote was equivalent to a vote to insist, but not to a vote to adhere.

[Mr. P. C. Goode, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the following bills, and had found them to be correct, (whereupon they received the signature of the speaker):

The joint resolution providing for the distribution of 700 copies of the Digest of Patents.

The joint resolution providing for the distribution of the printed volumes of the sixth census.

The act to amend an act providing for the taking of the sixth census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States.

The act in addition to an act entitled "an act to carry into effect a convention between the United States and the Mexican republic."

The second amendment insisted on by the senate, appropriating $75,000 to defray the expenses of selecting and purchasing a site for a western armory, being before the house.

Mr. Fillmore (with a view to offer an amendment to the amendment of the senate) moved that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate.

Some remarks were made by Messrs. H. W. Irwin and Thompson, of Indiana.

Pending this question, the house adjourned.

TUESDAY, AUG. 31. Mr. Banks, of Virginia, on leave given, presented the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Orange county, Va. Laid on the table.

The speaker laid before the house a communication from the war department, in answer to a resolution of this house, calling for information as to the number of troops at Forts Gibson, Towson, Smith and Wayne.

Laid on the table, on motion of Mr. Fillmore, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Barnard, the house resumed the consideration of the following resolution, heretofore offered by J. C. Floyd, of New York:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to inform this house, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether any officer of the army, or the attorney general of the United States has, since the 4th of March last, been directed to visit the state of New York for any purpose connected with the imprisonment or trial of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to the house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by any executive measures or correspondence, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be ordered to be released.

Mr. Barnard (who was entitled to the floor) addressed the house during the hour on the general merits of the Caroline affair, and the diplomatic correspondence and judicial proceedings in relation thereto.

Mr. Everett stated that he had prepared a statement in relation to this case, which he was not willing to submit to the haz-hazard of a speech, but which he was in hopes he could get in, either in the shape of a report or an adverse report. If he could not do so, he intended to read it as a speech on a future day.

The morning hour having expired, Mr. Fillmore called for the orders of the day.

A message was received from the senate, by Asbury Dickins, esp. secretary, informing this house—

First, that the senate had passed the bill of this house making appropriations for the funeral expenses of William Henry Harrison, late president of the United States.

Also, that the senate had receded from the second, third and sixth amendments, disagreed to by this house, to the bill entitled "an act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant promotion rights."

Mr. Prentiss asked Mr. Fillmore to waive his motion for the orders of the day, to enable him (Mr. P.) to offer a resolution in relation to frauds perpetrated on the government.

Mr. Fillmore declining to do so.

Mr. Prentiss then notified that he would offer such a resolution the first moment he could.

On leave given, Mr. Underwood, from the committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to extend the jurisdictional limits of the corporation of Georgetown, and for other purposes; which was read twice.

The house resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for various fortifications for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities.

The pending question being on the motion of Mr. Fillmore that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate, "appropriating $75,000 for defraying the expenses of selecting and purchasing a site for a western, northwestern or southwestern armory, to be selected by the president of the United States," &c.

Mr. Briggs understood, he said, that some gentlemen had been making an offer on receding. He wished that the house might have the whole question before it. Mr. B. then, for himself, and the section of country which he in part represented, disclaimed any hostility toward the object contemplated in this appropriation.

Mr. Sumners gave notice of his intention to offer the following amendment:

"Strike out all after the word 'selecting,' and insert, 'a suitable site on the western waters for the establishment of a national armory, a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars; and the president of the United States is hereby authorized to cause such site to be made, and to communicate all the proceedings which may be had herein to the congress of the United States, to be subject to its approval.'"

Mr. Thompson, of Indiana, indicated his intention to offer an amendment to the amendment appropriating $75,000 for additional surveys and purchase of a site in the western, southwestern or northwestern states.

Mr. Morgan rose to a privileged question. He moved a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday by which the house had refused to recede from its disagreement in the amendment of the senate appropriating the sum of $75,000 for surveys in reference to the military defences of the frontier, inland and Atlantic.

By general consent the consideration of this motion was laid over until the pending question should have been disposed of.

And the question recurring on the motion of Mr. Fillmore that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate, "appropriating $75,000 for defraying the expenses of selecting and purchasing a site for a western, northwestern, or southwestern armory, to be selected by the president of the United States," &c.

A debate arose, in which Messrs. Underwood, Caldwell, Reynolds, Cate Johnson, Triplett, King, Prentiss, Faye, Henry, Sergeant, and Sumners, participated.

Mr. Andrews, of Kentucky, moved the previous question—there was a second, and the main question was ordered to be taken.

Mr. Sumners asked the yeas and nays on the main question.

And on the question whether the yeas and nays should be taken no quorum voted.

Mr. Andrews, of Kentucky, moved that the house adjourn; which motion was rejected.

Mr. Andrews then moved to lay the motion to recede on the table.

The speaker said that motion, if it prevailed, would carry the bill on the table also.

And the question being put, it was decided in the negative—so the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

And the question recurring on the motion of Mr. Fillmore that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate, the yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted as follows: Yeas 120, yeas 44. So the house receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate.

And the question recurring on concurring in the amendment of the senate, (which amendment was now open to amendment)—

Mr. Somers moved to amend the amendment of the senate by striking out all after the word "selecting," and insert:

"A suitable site on the western waters for the establishment of a national armory, a sum not exceeding $50,000; and the president of the United States is hereby authorized to cause such selection to be made, and to communicate all the proceedings which may be had herein to the congress of the United States, to be subject to its approval."

In submitting this motion, Mr. S. said it had been his intention to offer a few remarks, but so much time had already been consumed in discussion, that he was unwilling further to protract it. He would, therefore, waive his right.

Mr. King moved to amend the amendment of Mr. Sumners, so as to provide for the selection of one site in the western states, and one site in the southern states, which motion was rejected.

And the question recurring on the amendment of Mr. Sumners—

Mr. H. W. Irwin moved the previous question. And there was a second.

And the main question (being on the amendment of Mr. Sumners), was ordered to be taken.

Mr. H. W. Irwin asked the yeas and nays on this main question, which were ordered; and, being taken, were as follows: Yeas 120, yeas 42. So the amendment of Mr. Sumners was agreed to.

And the amendment of the senate, as thus amended by the house, concurred in.

The question then came up on the motion of Mr. Morgan, to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the house had refused to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate appropriating the sum of $75,000 for surveys in reference to the military defences of the frontier, inland and Atlantic.

After an explanation from Mr. Fillmore, Mr. Morgan asked the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider, which were ordered; and, being taken, were: yeas 20, yeas 80. So the vote was not reconsidered.

And, on the motion of Mr. Fillmore, a committee of conference was ordered to be appointed on the part of this house to meet such committee as might be appointed by the senate, to confer on the said disagreement.

Mr. Fillmore rose, and said that the house presented at this moment a spectacle which had never been presented before. They had disposed of the business before them, and they were now simply waiting the action of the other house prior to adjournment. If—Mr. F. was interrupted by loud cries to order.

Mr. S. Mason. I have a resolution calling for information.

Mr. Prentiss wished to offer a resolution.

Mr. Fillmore. I was going to move that hereafter the daily hour of the meeting of this house be 12 o'clock, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. Andrews, of Kentucky, moved that the house adjourn.

Mr. Sumners moved to amend the motion by adding "until Thursday."

Much confusion followed.

Mr. H. W. Irwin asked the yeas and nays on the motion that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. Andrews. I was about to withdraw the motion, but since the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise), has called the yeas and nays, I will not do so. I will let him know that he cannot terrify me by calling the yeas and nays.

The house refused to order the yeas and nays.

And then, at 20 minutes past 2 o'clock, the house adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

POSTSCRIPT.—FOREIGN NEWS.—After part of our paper had been pressed off, the mail from the east brings us accounts of the arrival of the Britannia steamer with Liverpool dates to the 19th August; 105 passengers for Halifax and 71 for Boston.

The steamer Calidonia arrived out on the 14th, in 12 days 17 hours from Boston.

There had been very heavy rains, so seriously threatening the crops that the price of grain and flour had rapidly advanced, and a somewhat corresponding reduction took place in the price of cotton—but the latest dates indicate a fairer prospect—fine weather—prices of grain and flour again declined, and cotton again advanced to within a fraction of former prices.

Liverpool papers of the 18th Aug. says: Since the 4th there has been a further rapid advance in the corn market, the continuance of rain having caused much activity among speculators. The market is, however, calmer this week; and as the weather is now fine, with a settled appearance, there is yet a fair prospect of the harvest turning out well. Prices of flour may now be quoted 35s. per bbl. in bond for western canal, and 40 to 41s. for free flour, the present price of duty being 12s. 5d. per bbl. with the probability of a further reduction in the course of a few weeks.

There has been a brisk enquiry for cotton to-day, and the sales reach 6 to 7,000 bales, at 1d. per lb. advance, including 2,000 on speculation, and 800 for export. The weather keeps very fine.

Parliament was to meet on the 19th, by commission, the queen declining in consequence of her situation, to appear in person.

There are some items about the decision of the court to try McLeod—amounting to nothing.

A frightful fire occurred at Smyrna on the 28th July, by which one-third of the Turkish city, a number of bazons and mosques, eight synagogues and between 9 and 10,000 houses were reduced to ashes; 33 or 40 persons were killed, and 20,000 persons left without bread or an asylum.

CHRONICLE.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES. The suit instituted against Nicholas Biddle, commenced at one million of dollars has been reduced on putting in a bill of particulars to $240,000.

BRITISH DOMINIONS. The subjoined is a statement of the population of the British empire, which the Philadelphia Sentinel says is compiled from the most authentic documents.

Great Britain, Ireland and the neighboring Islands	27,020,000
Greece in Europe, such as Ionian Isles, Malta, Gibraltar, &c.	400,000
North America	1,500,000
Spain	120,000
West Indies	1,000,000
Africa	250,000
Australia, (New Holland, &c.)	120,000
New Zealand	25,000
Asia, (East India Co's dominions)	135,000,000
Affghanistan and Cabul	14,000,000
	210,535,000
The whole of the above territories cover about 2,800,000 square miles.

CORROR, has declined about half a cent per pound in the New York market. The sales of last week were 2,300 Upland and Florida at 12 to 10; 600 Mobile at 8 to 12, and 50 of very fine at 13; 250 New Orleans at 8 to 12.

New Island cotton crop. The recent heavy rains at the south did great injury to the growing crop. The Florida River says: On the west coast, the damage to the Sea Island cotton crop here, we hear, been irreparable. From Edisto Island the accounts are deplorable. In addition to the injury from the copious rains have appeared in great numbers. In the middle and upper sections of the state the injury has been also most extensive. The bridge over the Commerce river, a mile below Columbia, has been carried away and the bridge has been suggested, with water, while in some parts of Greenville district the crop has been nearly destroyed.

THE CORNELL FLOOD. is frequently found on willow trees in various parts of the United States. The New Orleans Bee notices their being in great abundance in the Parish of St. Mary, Louisiana. In 1842 the editor of the Register collected thousands of them off a willow tree then growing in his garden at Annapolis.

CORR, is quoted in New York and Philadelphia at 75 a 71; in Baltimore at 70 to 72.

DEATHS. During the last week in New York 150, of which 96 were under two years—of cholera infantum 41, of consumption 24, in Philadelphia 166, of whom 36 were under two years, and 13 died of consumption; in Baltimore 54, of which 25 were under two years of age, 9 were free colored and 1 slave; in Charleston, S. C., 13, of which 6 were whites and 7 colored.

Joseph Caldwell, died at Raleigh, North Carolina, on Tuesday the 24th instant, Joseph Caldwell, father of one of the editors of the National Intelligencer, and of the wife of the other. He had completed his eightieth year on the 4th of February last, and appeared to have, so far as health was concerned, been in the enjoyment of the vigor of lengthened years before him, when he was, a few days afterwards struck with a paralysis, under the effect of which he suffered immediate privation of speech, and has been in a languid condition by his Mother-in-law to a better and a brighter world.

Mr. Gales was a native of the village of Eckington, (Derbyshire), in England, and commenced business as a printer and bookseller, when of age, at Sheffield, where he established, in 1787, the Sheffield Register. Persecuted on account of his political principles, after publishing that popular paper for seven years, he emigrated in 1794, with his family, to the United States, spending on his way to America nearly a year, and arrived at Philadelphia in August, 1795, beginning business as a printer there, and after a time purchasing from the elder Oswald the establishment of the Independent Gazetteer, which he has since conducted with great success. He has since emigrated (afterwards the founder of the National Intelligencer) emigrated to North Carolina, in September, 1799, and there established the Raleigh Register, which he has since conducted with great success. He has since emigrated (afterwards the founder of the National Intelligencer) emigrated to North Carolina, in September, 1799, and there established the Raleigh Register, which he has since conducted with great success. He has since emigrated (afterwards the founder of the National Intelligencer) emigrated to North Carolina, in September, 1799, and there established the Raleigh Register, which he has since conducted with great success.

During this long life of useful labor he maintained an enviable reputation for the most blameless privacy in private life, for devotedness to public duties, and for enlarged benevolence.

His life was sustained with that fortitude and neckless benevolence the Christian faith, of which he was from his youth upwards, a devout professor and follower. Surrounded by his mourning children and grandchildren, he sunk to rest, as a babe to his slumber, in the full hope of waking again to a glorious immortality.

EXCHANGE. New York upon England 84 a 9 prem; on France 55 22; Boston, per Philadelphia 3; Baltimore 2 a 2; Washington 2; Richmond, Petersburg, Raleigh and Wilmington, N. C. 3; Charleston 1 1/2; Augusta 2; St. Louis 1 1/2; Mobile 2 1/2; New Orleans 4 a 4; St. Louis 9; Louisville 7; Cincinnati 8; Nashville 11.

FLOUR, commands from $6 50 to 7 50 according to brand for shipping, from New York—the supply last week was light—20,000 barrels resold market on the 25th and 26th ult. The inspections last week in Baltimore were 11,596 barrels and 490 half barrels. Prices range from $6 12 to 6 50.

MATRIAS, the importer, died at Asheville, N. Carolina, on the 21st July, aged 60.

NEW ORLEANS. The interments reported from the 13th to the 15th August are 62, of which 10 were by yellow fever. The report of the 20th says, nine deaths occurred the previous twenty-four hours, of which 3 were by yellow fever. Ten deaths occurred in the same period in Lafayette, all of yellow fever. On the 21st, 15 interments, in the city of which 3 were by yellow fever. Total grand, during the last week, 102. On the 22nd, there were 15 interments, 6 of yellow fever; on the 23d, 12 of yellow fever; on the 24th, 21 deaths occurred, of which 11 were by yellow fever.

POSTMASTERS. According to the report of Mr. White, the post office auditor, there were on the 4th of March last, three thousand three hundred and thirty-two postmasters in arrears to the government, for sums varying from a few dollars to many thousands.

PUBLIC LANDS. The quantity of public lands now surveyed and prepared for market, is officially stated to be 8,462,567 acres.

RAIL ROADS. The Boston Transcript publishes the subjoined statement. Longest lines of rail roads, which are completed in—

	Price of the stock.	Length.	Cost.
Grand Junction, 1892 for 100 pl. 57 1/2 miles.	1,906,000
Great Western, 1836 for 100 pl. 112 1/2 miles.	2,284,000
London & Birmingham, 1825 for 100 pl. 112 1/2 miles.	5,724,000
London & S. west, 55 for 100 pl. 112 1/2 miles.	2,284,000
Records of said rail roads for one week in July, 1841:
Grand Junction, 1 week ending July 10, 1841.	12,328
Great Western, 1 " " " " "	10,173
London and Birm., 1 " " " " "	12,607
London and S. west, 1 " " " " "	12,607

The Great Western is just completed. Its last 13 miles were opened 30th June, 1841.

The Washburne rail road is doing a steadily increasing business. Fourteen trains a day are now being conveyed by the locomotive President to Harper's Ferry.

The Hartford and New Haven rail road has cleared out its ordinary expenses, about $20,000 within the last two months.

SILVER MINE. The United States Gazette states that the first deposit of silver from a mine of the United States, was made at the mine in Philadelphia this week. It was from a small quantity, North Carolina, and is believed that the mines there will prove very productive. The essay made at the mill showed that 1,000 parts of the bullion contained 973 of silver and 8 of gold.

SLAVES. One thousand dollars are wanted to transfer eighteen negroes to Liberia. Thos. Wallace, esq. of Birmingham, has offered to release them, on condition that eight slaves on condition that the American Colonization society send them to Liberia in Africa.—We trust that the friends of human liberty will not withhold their aid from this noble and patriotic effort to free from slavery and give them a local habitation and a name in the land of their fathers. Less than one thousand is wanted to accomplish this object.

[N. Y. Star.]

SPOTTED FEVER. Fifteen or twenty cases have occurred in Franklin county, Ohio, nearly all of which proved fatal in 24 hours.

STEAMBOAT LINK FROM CHARLESTON TO ETROPE. We are happy to learn that the subscription is filling to the company, for establishing a direct steam communication with England. This measure will do more for the south than any commercial convention—besides calling upon Hercules—it is being Hercules—and we say "inope," strangle the serpent of distrust in your cradle—and your arm will open in strength to crush the Hydra of monopoly hereafter. Celebration over the success of the public spirit which has headed the list with some of our first names. [Charleston Mercury.]

STEAMBOATS. The Missouri, whilst lying at St. Louis on the 12th ult, took fire and burnt to the waters edge.—She was considered the fastest boat on the western waters. A man was custody charged as the incendiary.

STOCKS. U. S. bank shares sold in New York on the 27th ult. at 81; on the 29th they brought 101. The notes of that institution are quoted at 30 to 37 1/2 discount. Illinois 6's of 1850 sold at 55; Indiana sterling bonds at 56 1/2.

TALLOW. According to the last dates, is restored to health. No new case of fever reported for ten days.

TOBACCO. The inspection of last week at Baltimore comprised 1,040 lbs. Maryland, and 259 Ohio. The finer sorts of Maryland are quite in demand. Inferior and common do not sell so well. The market is said to be maintained former quotations fully and the demand has rather improved—common to middling 84 50s 25; good 85 50s 50; fine red and wrappry 82 1/2; fine yellow 80 1/2; and extra wrappry 81 1/2.

VOTED BY THE PRESIDENTS. The veto power was exercised by Gen. Wm. Harrison, April 1, 1792.

exercised by Gen. Washington,	April 5, 1792
do	March 1, 1797
By Madison,	Feb. 21, 1811
do	" 28, 1811
do	Nov. 6, 1812
do	Jan. 20, 1815
By Monroe,	May 4, 1822
By Jackson,	May 31, 1831
do	Dec. 7, 1831
do	July 10, 1832
do	Dec. 6, 1832
do	Dec. 1834

WESTERN NATIONAL ARMY. At a public meeting of the citizens of Pittsburgh, held last week, the following named gentlemen were appointed a committee for the purpose of collecting facts to lay before the president, in order to show the superior advantages of Pittsburgh, as a location for a national armory: Harmer Denny, Richard B. Smith, John Warden, J. H. Shoenberger, and N. B. Craig, esqrs.

The Pittsburgh board of trade have appointed the following gentlemen a committee to act in conjunction with that named: Wilson McCandless, William Eichbaum, and James May, esqrs.

WHEAT commands from $1 32 to $1 36 in the New York market. The sales of last week were 1,000 bushels at $1 32, (Michigan), August 19th, about 1,000 bushels received per year—price 68 cents cash.

At Alton, Illinois, 7th August, "what is considered as market in grain advertisement." The quality was never finer—price 68 cents bushel.

The Buffalo Advertiser says that much of the wheat arriving there is from Illinois, of the new crop, the quality of which surpasses that of former seasons. It is the various ports on Lake Erie wheat is in demand at $1 10 per bushel.

The Western Farmer, published at Detroit, says of the crop in Michigan: Most of our farmers have got through with their winter harvest, and secured their hay crops. We have letters before us from nearly every county in the state, which are truly encouraging to the prosperity of Michigan, and demonstrate beyond a doubt, that the Peninsula state has added greatly, even to last year's supply. Her surplus, which cannot be less than three millions of bushels, and if present prices are maintained, our friends this season will reap a rich reward as the fruit of their labor.

The export of flour and wheat from Montreal and Quebec to the United Kingdom, during the present year, up to August 31, inclusive, has been 155,243 barrels of flour, and 219,290 barrels of wheat. The provinces of British North America and the West India, 7,876 barrels of flour, 17,130 barrels of pork, and 2,571 barrels of beef.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 2.—VOL. XI.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 11, 1811.

[VOL. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,563.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 2, VOL. 11.

CONGRESSIONAL—Items, 2d veto.
FOREIGN ARTICLES—Rumor relative to a British squadron; New British Peers; Scotch Peers; France, items; Codfishery of Belgian; Purchase of steamer British Queen; Union of Belgium and France; Canada, internal improvements; Wendland canal.

PRESIDENT TYLER'S VETO MESSAGE.
APPOINTMENTS by the President; Diplomatic items; Loans taken; Treasury notes outstanding; Trade with Tahiti; Trade of the United States with Great Britain; Public lands not yet advertised for sale—reasons why; Revolutionary remittance.

ARMY—Dinner to colonel Bankhead; Second regiment of artillery; General orders No. 43; Tribute to worth, D. C. Noyes.

NAVY—Relative to a list of the U. S. ships; Temperance in the City; Appropriations to the various fleets.

STATES OF THE UNION—Maine, Revised code; New Hampshire, Geological survey, Divorce law; Massachusetts, Boston ice trade, Boston and Maine rail road; Vermont, Compromise, to, by Mr. Preston; Connecticut, Banks of; New York, Canals; Pennsylvania, Resources and credit; Tennessee, Elections; Alabama, Court; Mississippi, Crops; Louisiana, Indiana, Farming; Wisconsin, Peas.

CONGRESS—Proceedings of the senate, of the house. CHRONICLE.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

THE SECOND VETO MESSAGE of President TYLER, was sent to the house of representatives on Thursday last, with the FISCAL CORPORATION BILL, which originated in that house and finally passed both houses on the Friday preceding. The message is inserted in this number, page 18. On motion of Mr. Morrison, the house agreed to reconsider the said bill yesterday at 12 o'clock.

THE FORTIFICATION BILL is postponed until next session.

The amendments of the house to the Revenue Bill were all agreed to, in senate on Thursday, except the one which provides that no duty that may be laid by virtue of the 2d section, shall exceed 20 per cent ad valorem, which, on motion of Mr. Clay, was disagreed to, and a committee of conference was ordered.

A very unpleasant scene occurred in the house of representatives on Thursday, between Mr. Wise, of Virginia, and Mr. Stanley, of North Carolina, in consequence of which a committee to inquire and report thereon was adopted, in place of a resolution to expel. It was announced in the house on yesterday, that the difference had been amicably settled between them—as well as a difficulty which occurred in debate that day between Mr. Batts and Mr. Gilmer, of Virginia.

Passengers by this morning's cars state that Mr. EWING, MR. CHITTENDEN, MR. BELL and MR. BAGGER of the cabinet have resigned, and Mr. GRANGER and probably Mr. WEBSTER will do so also.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

A postscript inserted in our last, apprised most of our readers of the arrival, at Boston, of the steamer Britannia, with Liverpool dates to the 19th August, and of the general scope of the information brought by her. An article appeared in the London Morning Herald of the 14th, giving as rumor, that five sail of the line were immediately to be fitted out to proceed to our coast, and here to be joined by ten others ordered from squadrons already abroad, in order to second Mr. Fox's demand for the immediate surrender of McLeod. Although this improbable story was subsequently contradicted by the Globe, the ministerial organ—and the fact that sir C. A. Adams was to take with him only one line-of-battle ship and the Pique frigate, to replace two vessels of the same rates, which are recalled, was distinctly announced, and all was quiet on that topic before the Britannia left—yet the article was seized upon in our cities by some of the penny presses, and immense editions of it diffused among the community. From present appearances, such a movement on the part of Great Britain would furnish almost the only chance that McLeod has of being hung. Let us alone, and he will have a fair chance for every loop-hole of the law, as well as for justice; but an attempt to intimidate, might make us so determined to measure up to the utmost line of strict justice, that we could hardly avoid, like the Indian, leaning a little beyond.

GREAT BRITAIN.

NEW PEERS. A party about to resign the sceptre of power in England, usually exercise their influence in providing for themselves and their friends.

The Gazette of the 13th announced the creation of six new peers. The earl Survey has been called to the upper house by the title of Baron Maltravers. A peerage of the United Kingdom has been conferred on the earl of Stair, who will take his seat at Baron Oxenford, of Cusland. Peerages of the United Kingdom have also been conferred on the earl of Belfast, who will sit as Baron Ennismore and Carrickfergus; and on the earl of Kenmare, who will take his seat as Baron Killybegs. Sir Richard Hussey Vivian, bart. has been raised to the peerage by the name, style, and title of Baron Vivian, of Glyva and of Truro; and sir Henry Brooke Parnell, bart. has been created Baron Conington of Conington. Her majesty has also been pleased to raise lord Segrave to the dignity of an earl, by the name, style and title of Earl Fitzhardinge. A similar honor has been conferred upon lord Barham, who has been created a baron, viscount, and earl of the United Kingdom, under the name, style and title of Baron Noel of Ridgling, Viscount Camperdown of Camperdown and earl of Grainsborough.

ELECTION OF THE PEERS OF SCOTLAND. On the 6th ult. the election of the sixteen representative peers of Scotland took place in the picture gallery of the palace of Holyrood. The following were the peers elected: The marquess of Tweeddale, the earl of Morton, Elgin, Airlie, Leven and Melville, Selkirk, Orkney and Seafield; viscounts Arbutnot and Strathallan; lords Forbes, Saltoun, Sinclair, Colville (of Culross), Keay and Kello; and the marquess of Eglinton. The only alterations were the substitution of the earl of Seafield and lord Rollo for the earl of Home and lord Gray, who retire by their own consent.

FRANCE.

The trial of Madame Lafarge for stealing the diamonds was over, she was found guilty and the diamonds were ordered to be restored to the Letond family, who would pay the costs as the plaintiffs in a civil action; having an ulterior remedy against Madame Lafarge.

The following statistical account of the cod fishery of France is given in the Constitutionnel: "The cod fishery employs annually 400 French ships, measuring together 50,000 tons, and manned by 11,000 sailors; also, 300 transports or coasting vessels, with 2,000 sailors; so that it maintains 600 ships and 13,000 men. France possesses 205 myriameters, or about 450 leagues of coast; and there was a time when the French fishery on the Banks of Newfoundland was sufficiently extensive to supply nearly the wants of all Europe, and to man the whole of the French navy. But in consequence of the treaty of Utrecht in 1713, that of Vervins in 1753, and the cession of Canada, France was reduced to the confined right of fishing on the eastern and western coasts of the island of Newfoundland, without the power of establishing any dwellings or building upon land, except such huts and scaffolding as are absolutely necessary for drying and curing the fish. Under such circumstances, it is evident that France can never compete with the English fishermen, who have the advantage of being close to the coast, and to the open shores, who have the advantage of being close to the open shores. As shelters for her ships, she possesses only the small islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which are but bare rocks, which must be constantly supplied from without with every necessary, even firewood. The maintenance of the French fishery, therefore, depends upon the encouragement it receives from the government; otherwise it would almost entirely cease to exist, and a nursery for 13,000 sailors would be filleted. In 1780 the French lists of able seamen contained 100,000 men. In 1815 the number was reduced to 33,000. In 1836 it increased to 90,511, and in 1840 to 98,706. This augmentation has been derived chiefly from the expansion of the cod fishery, which, in consequence of the encouragement it has received, increased from 30,954 tons and 8,108 men, in 1816, to 54,995 tons and 11,499 men in 1839. Besides the ships expressly fitted out for the fishery, there are between 60 and 50 other vessels employed in conveying cargoes of cod from the Banks to the colonies. There is likewise a number of transports engaged in carrying between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 kilograms (50,000,000 and 60,000,000 lbs.) of salt, and also of pitch tallow, and all the other necessary provisions for 13,000 men during eight months of the year. This keeps annually employed about 50,000 tons of shipping. It may be said, therefore, without exaggeration, that the cod fisheries furnish France with 12,000 able seamen, being nearly one-fourth of the whole number required for her navy, but at the same time insufficient to man her fleets in time of war. No other part of her sea-going trade could produce a similar result, as it would require 170,000 tons of colonial merchandise to supply the 12,000 sailors furnished by the cod fishery. The loss of Saint Domingo deprived France of the employment of 167,655 tons of shipping, and still her trade with that island engaged no more than 9,855 men."

BELGIUM.

THE BRITISH QUEEN STEAMSHIP. This fine steamer has been sold by the British and American Steam company to the Belgian government. We have not heard the amount of the purchase money. She is now getting ready for sea, and will sail about the end of the present month, under the command of Mr. Keene, who navigated the ill-fated President on her second voyage to and from New York, for Antwerp. It is not yet ascertained what the Belgian government means to do with this noble steamer: it is supposed, however, that she is destined to open and continue a communication between Belgium and the U. States. [Liverpool Albion, 16th ult.]

UNION OF BELGIUM WITH FRANCE. Many of the foreign papers, English, French and Belgian, are discussing the expediency of a union of Belgium to France, with some earnestness and warmth.

The Frankfort Journal argues that neutrality alone can keep up the Belgian monarchy, and a union with France would extinguish this, whilst a communication with Germany will in no wise affect Belgian independence. The Brussels independent shows that Belgian commerce is in no suffering state:

"From 1834 to 1838, the consumption of foreign produce in Belgium rose only from 182 to 201 millions of francs, whilst the exportation of Belgian manufactures rose from 118 to 156 millions. The exportation of manufactures from Belgium, proportioned to the population, is double that of France, and within one-fifth of that of England. How can Belgium be said, then, to be in a suffering state, or to be in such imminent need of extreme remedies?"

On the subject of the commercial union between France and Belgium the quotidienne says—

"In suppressing the customs barrier between the countries, we have all the duties of export and import between us and Belgium, being nearly nine millions of francs in 1839. Besides, we take charge of guarding the frontier of Belgium. The Belgians are four millions of manufacturers, capable of supplying 100 millions with the products of their looms; and in France, the Belgians get 33 millions of francs, and whilst France gets in exchange only four millions of consumers."

The Courier replies to this, that the duties on the Belgian frontier are in a great measure levied on English products, sent round through Belgium. The Belgians, though few, are great consumers, and their four millions are in this respect fully equal to eight.

the interests of the country, and fully answer its just expectations. It has been my good fortune and pleasure to concur with them in all measures except this; and why should our difference on this alone be pushed to extremes? It is my anxious desire that they should not be. I too have been burdened with extraordinary labors of late, and I sincerely desire time for deep and deliberate reflection on the greatest difficulty of my administration. May we not now pause until a more favorable time, when with the most anxious hope that the executive and congress may cordially unite, some measure of finance may be deliberately adopted promotive of the good of our common country.

I will take this occasion to declare that the conclusion to which I have brought myself are those of a settled conviction, founded, in my opinion, on a just view of the constitution—that at arriving at it, I have been actuated by no other motive or desire than to uphold the institutions of the country as they have come down to us from the hands of our God-like ancestors—and that I shall esteem my efforts to sustain them, even though I perish, more honorable than to win the applause of men by a sacrifice of my duty and my conscience.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, September 9, 1841.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

By and with the advice and consent of the senate.
Theodore H. McCulloch, judge of the U. States in the district of Louisiana.
Edward Brooks, collector of the customs at Detroit, Michigan.

DIPLOMATIC. COL. CHIEW, late charge d'affaires of the United States at St. Petersburg, and Mr. BENJAMIN REYNOLDS, who has been for several years secretary of legation from the United States at the court of St. James, sailed in the Susquehanna, on the 10th ult. for Philadelphia.

ALLEN M. HALL, esq. the newly appointed charge d'affaires, arrived at Laguna on the 9th of August, after a passage of 18 days from Philadelphia, in the brig Rowena. The next day he proceeded to Caracas, a few miles distant where he contemplates establishing his residence.

THE LOAN. The secretary of the treasury has obtained the one million of dollars, lately advertised for, at 5½ per cent. per annum.

TREASURY NOTES. Treasury Department, September 1, 1841. Amount of treasury notes issued under the provisions of the acts of congress of 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840, $26,681,337 53
 Redeemed of those issues 24,864,363 64

Leaving outstanding $1,816,973 89
 Issued under the act of 1841, viz: Prior to March 4, 673,681 32
 Since March 4, 4,973,251 58
 Redeemed of that issue $,646,939 90
 Leaving outstanding 139,366 30
 Making an aggregate outstanding of $7,264,640 49
 T. EWING, Secretary of the Treasury.

AMERICAN TRADE. Seventy-nine American ships visited the island of Tahiti, during the year 1840, the tonnage of which amounted to 24,757 tons, and employed 1,885 seamen. The ships employed off and on were not included in the number.

TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES WITH GREAT BRITAIN. But few persons not familiar with the subject are aware, says the Boston Mercantile Journal, of the immense amount of trade which is every year carried on between this country and Great Britain, and which is clearly exhibited in the following table, which also shows that this country takes from Great Britain, in manufactures, on an average of years, the whole value of the produce exported to that country.

Value (in dollars) of exports from Great Britain and Ireland to the U. States.	Value (in dollars) of exports from Great Britain and Ireland to the U. States.
1831 26,329,352	24,539,214
1832 30,810,995	36,921,265
1833 32,363,450	37,845,824
1834 44,915,067	47,942,907
1835 52,180,977	61,249,527
1836 57,275,213	78,645,968
1837 58,663,797	84,866,943
1838 52,176,610	44,861,973
1839 59,296,122	65,964,588

PUBLIC LANDS NOT YET ADVERTISED FOR SALE.—REASONS WHY.—The communication of the secretary of the treasury to the senate on the 23d ultimo, covering a report from the commissioner of the general land office, made in compliance with a resolution of the senate of the 15th ultimo, calling for the amount of lands surveyed and ready for sale since March, 1841, represents an aggregate quantity of 8,403,567 acres, surveyed and prepared for market, not yet advertised for sale.

The notes appended to the report show that, of the aforesaid aggregate, the greater portion, lying in eight states and territories, is suspended (among other causes) either by the operation of law, being land reserved, or by reason of not being attached to any land district, and which, therefore, cannot be offered for sale until the action of the legislature shall positively so order. One or the other of these causes hold up all the unoffered lands in Indiana, Missouri, Alabama, Wisconsin and Iowa.

In Illinois, we understand, that, with the exception of 100,000 acres, the residue of the 1,053,346 acres represented in the table, are lands which were once proclaimed for sale on the 18th of February, 1841, to be offered in the present month, but which were withdrawn from market on urgent representations from the inhabitants of the detriment to them which would ensue if the sale should be insisted on.

It may be added that the table shows a large quantity of surveyed land in Michigan, 2,069,098 acres, opposite to which no note has been made. As showing the probable availability to the purposes of revenue of lands in that state, it is to be remarked that, of some millions of acres offered for sale in the last year in that state, only a few hundred acres, we understand, were bought up, and those at the minimum price.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT.

The quantity of public land surveyed and prepared for market, not yet advertised for sale, is put down at 8,463,567 acres.

Indiana, - - - - -	311,365 acres.	[1]
Illinois, - - - - -	1,053,346 do.	[2]
Missouri, - - - - -	4,754,343 do.	[3]
Alabama, - - - - -	161,229 do.	[4]
Mississippi, - - - - -	2,174,707 do.	[5]
Louisiana, - - - - -	233,873 do.	[6]
Michigan, - - - - -	2,069,098 do.
Arkansas, - - - - -	495,408 do.
Wisconsin, - - - - -	157,969 do.	[7]
Iowa, - - - - -	694,229 do.	[8]

[1.] Former Miami reservation—not attached to any land district.

[2.] About 100,000 acres of this land withheld from sale—supposed to contain lead mineral.

[3.] Late northwestern addition to the state—not attached to any land district.

[4.] Late Cherokee cession—not attached to any land district.

[5.] Withheld from sale until certain Choctaw claims, under treaty of 1830, shall be adjusted.

[6.] These lands adjoin the Texian territory—withheld from sale until the line dividing Texas from the United States shall be established.

[7.] Withheld from sale, as being situated in the lead region.

[Nat. Intelligencer.]

REVOLUTIONARY REMINISCENCE. The ceremony of reintering at Rochester, the remains of Lieutenant BORN and his gallant associates, who fell in fight with the Indians on the Genesee river during the revolutionary war, took place a few days ago.—By the accident in the paper it must have been an imposing display. The fine military companies, of which Rochester and the adjoining country boast, were out, and an immense concourse of citizens were in attendance.

ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

DINNER TO COL. BAYNEHEAD and the officers of the 2d regiment artillery. The citizens of Buffalo on learning that the second regiment of U. S. artillery, under command of Col. B., were ordered from hence to the Atlantic coast, addressed a warm friendly letter and an invitation to them, to partake of a public dinner, which was col. B. Blossom, president, H. Seymour, jr. vice president, Col. Crane, of the 4th artillery, and several other invited guests were present. The band of the second contributed to enliven the scene. A number of spirited toasts were given and some excellent speeches made. The whole passed off admirably. On the 13th the regiment embarked in thirteen canal boats for the seaboard.—By their stations are assigned in the army of the north.

Companies F and I, under command of Maj. Payne, arrived at Newport, R. I. Aug. 25, in the steamboat Massachusetts, from New York, and will garrison Fort Adams.

4th artillery. Four companies arrived at Buffalo a few days since, in the steamer Buffalo, in 22 hours from Detroit. 1. Company, capt. J. M. Washington, and F. Company, lieut. R. C. Smead com'g, remain at Buffalo. D and K companies proceed to Sacket's Harbor.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 43.

Head-quarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, Fort Hamilton, New York, July 20, 1841.

I. The 4th regiment of artillery will take post as follows:

Fort Brady, one company; Fort Mackinac, one company; Detroit frontier, three companies; Cleveland, one company; Buffalo, two companies; Madison barracks, two companies.

II. On being relieved by the 4th artillery, the whole of the 3d regiment of the same arm will proceed to the seaboard, and take post as follows:

Fort Columbus, two companies.

(Head-quarters of the regiment.)

Fort Hamilton, one company; Fort La Fayette, one company; Fort Adams two companies.

(Under the major.)

Fort Millin, one company.

Not to take post earlier than the 1st Oct.

Fort Monroe, three companies.

III. On the arrival of the new garrison at Fort Columbus, capt. Dimick's company D, 1st artillery, will proceed to the east, and be posted by brigadier general Eustis, commanding the northern department of the eastern division. By command of maj. general Scott, T. H. TAYLOR.

Assistant Adjutant General.

TRIBUTE TO WORTH. The officers of the army on duty at St. Augustine have been required to perform the last solemn rite on earth to the remains of their late friend and brother, Dr. C. NOYES, assistant surgeon, who died on the 26th instant, another victim from among us to the climate, a long tour of service in a debilitated state, and the privations incident to the interior of Florida.

In communicating this bereavement to the relations and friends of the doctor, and to the army, with our condolence, we have the more agreeable duty also of expressing our sincere and high respect for the deceased for his high attainments, moral worth, and the enduring reputation he attained by persevering devotion to his professional duties; and for respect to his memory we will wear arae for one month.

S. CHURCHILL, major 3d artillery.
 W. L. McCLINTOCK, major U. S. A.
 CHARLES MARX, P. M. U. S. A.
 C. ANDREWS, P. M. U. S. A.
 G. H. CROSSMAN, A. Q. M.
 S. P. HEINTZELMAN, capt. and A. Q. M.
 C. A. WAITE, capt. and A. Q. M.
 BRAXTON BRADG, 1st lieut. 3d art.
 W. A. BRADY, 1st lieut. 3d art.
 HENRY B. JUDG, 1st lieut. 3d art.
 WM. GILHAM, 2d lieut. 3d art.
 St. Augustine, (E. F.) July 27, 1841.

THE NAVY.

The publication of the Army and Navy Chronicle has been resumed. In the number published 2d Sept. the public are told that the statement which first appeared in the Pensacola Gazette, as "made up" by a naval officer and presented to that paper for publication, and has been extensively copied into other papers, purporting to be a list of the U. S. navy, is a mere transcript from the last official Naval Register. The editor adds: "There are on that list the names of vessels that have no existence, except upon paper—some that are rotten, to repair which would cost as much, if not more, than to build new ones—some that are not fitted for cruising ships—and several that are on the stocks."

The last annual report from the navy department does not exhibit the actual condition of each particular ship. We can therefore only give from our own information, their present state. We do this, that people may not be led astray into a belief that our navy, which looks so large upon paper, is as extensive as it appears to be.

Ships rotten and unfit for repairs.—Franklin and Washington, 34; Java and Hudson, 44.
 Broken up and not in existence.—Guerrerie, 44; Natchez, 30.

Converted into store ships.—Lexington, 20; Erie, 18. Not fitted for cruising vessels, (particularly in war time).—Varen, 20; Pioneer and Consort, briggs; Relief, store ship."

By a letter from the secretary of the navy to Samuel Breck, esq. Philadelphia, it is announced as the purpose of the department to retain the steam frigate Mississippi in the Delaware for the protection of the city.

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT FOR THE NAVY. Many of the crew of the U. S. ship Ohio, having been seen in the streets of Boston intoxicated, memorials have been put in circulation to stop "the grog" in our national ships. [Boston paper.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY. The following statement which we derive from a speech of Mr. King of Georgia, shows the amount of appropriations for the navy in different years, and the number of guns afloat.

Year.	Appropriated.	Guns afloat.
1836	$7,011,055	462
1837	8,185,710	554
1838	5,502,430	530
1839	5,502,430	606
1840	5,155,120	882
1841*	7,339,943	1,007

In 1800, with a population of 5,305,000 and 669,000 tons of registered tonnage, we had 876 guns afloat; in 1841 our population is 17,000,000 our tonnage 2,960,000, and yet our guns are less than in 1800. This shows how far our naval force is from keeping up with the growth of the population and the commerce of the country. Applying the same ratio of defence at this day which existed in 1800, we ought to have 2,000 guns afloat. [Newark Daily Ad.]

The Boston Mercantile Journal states that the frigate Massachusetts and sloop of war Vanderburgh received orders to sail immediately on a cruise; and that further orders have been received, to get ready for sea, not only the Ohio, but the frigate Columbia, the sloop of war John Adams, and the schooner Drumcutt. The Columbia will probably require extensive repairs, and of course, will have to go into the dry dock, where the Erie, altered into a store-ship, is now undergoing repairs. The John Adams has been lying at the yard, ready for sea, many months.

It is said that capt. T. Ap Catesby Jones will be appointed to the command of the Pacific squadron. [Boston Mer. Journal.]

The U. S. frigate Brandywine, from New York via Lisbon, arrived at Cadiz, August 1.

The U. S. ship Freble was at Gibraltar August 8, having sailed July 28, from New York.

The U. S. schooner Van Buren sailed from Baltimore on the 6th for the Florida station.

On the 7th, the U. S. schooner Phoenix, built under the superintendence of Lieut. J. T. McLaughlin, and destined for the Florida service, was launched from the ship yard of Mr. M. Gardner. The vessel, together with the ships, Flirt, Wave, Otsego, and Madison, and the brig Jefferson, with a detachment of one hundred marines, compose the squadron to be employed in Florida under the command of Lieut. McLaughlin.

Officers of the Van Buren.—Jno. B. Marchand, lieutenant; H. A. Wise and Alex. Murray, P. midshipmen; Nicholas Niles, Geo. W. Rodgers, midshipmen; V. L. Gordon, ass't surgeon; James Maguire, 2d lieut. marines; R. Marshall, captain's clerk.

Officers of the Phoenix.—C. St. George Noland, acting lieut. comd'g; J. Nicholson Barney, Edward Donnan, passed midshipman; E. A. Barnett, midshipman; Samuel Hollins, captain's clerk.

A DELICIOUS SCENE. We understand that captain More, of the U. S. ship Albatross, recently, for the first time since his station at this place, shipped a crew on board his vessel. At night, he informed them that he was in the habit of reading his Bible every night, and if they chose, they might join him; and all, with one accord, came forward, so that the open skylights of the cabin were surrounded with heads, intently listening to the voice of their commander, as he read the word of life. He then commended them to God, and bid them good night.—Soon after, there came along a pleasure boat, with a party of gentlemen and ladies, who were engaged, agreeably to the apostolical injunction, being merry, in singing Psalms. As they came near, some of the crew sung out, "captain, we know that tune!" "Well," replied he, "strike the next verse." So they all struck in, and sung the following verse with great enthusiasm, and the compliment was returned from the boat with waving of handkerchiefs, &c. As the boat, passing round, again neared the ship, the sailors called out, "captain, we know the missionary hymn!" "Well, then, sing it," he replied. So they struck up, at the top of their voices—

"From Greenland's icy mountains, &c."

And thus, instead of the evening being passed in the fore-castle, singing obscene and profane songs, as often it is with seamen, they were lingering about the captain's door, singing hymns, till time to "retire in."

[Boston Recorder.]

"If all the bills now before congress making appropriations for the navy, become laws.

The French brig of war Dunois arrived at Pensacola on the 18th ult. in 21 days from Vera Cruz. She will await there the arrival of the corvette La Sabine, and probably both vessels will remain there during the hurricane season. All well on board the Dunois.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MAINE.

THE REVISED CODE, which went into operation on the 1st inst. contains sundry new enactments of which the citizens of this state ought immediately to be apprised.

1st. All notes, bills of exchange and orders, payable at a future day or at sight, and not on demand, are entitled to three days grace. If, however, the third day happen on Sunday, or on the days of the annual fast or thanksgiving, or fourth of July, the grace will end on the second day. And if the third day shall happen on Monday, and the fourth of July happen on the same day, the days of grace are to end on the day following; and if the third day of grace happen on Sunday, and the fourth of July happen on the Saturday previous, the grace will end on the Monday following.

Any note, bill or order, whether foreign or inland, may be protested, if dishonored; and the protest, being under the hand and official seal of the notary, and containing a statement of the demand, refusal and notice, will be legal evidence of those facts, in any court of this state.

The notary, for each such protest, duly recorded, is entitled to a fee of one dollar and fifty cents, which is paid when the bill is charged on the drawers.

In reference to the statute of limitations, no new promise will prevent its operation, unless the same be put in writing. Partial payments, however, if within six years, may operate as formerly; but the endorsement of the same, if relied upon as evidence, must not be in the hand-writing of the promisee or of his agent.

In reference to the law of the road teamsters and others are forbidden to leave their teams and carriages in the highway without the presence of the driver or some one to guide the same.

And drivers of stage coaches with passengers are punishable by fine or imprisonment, if they leave their teams unhitched, or without being under the immediate care of some one.

[Portland Advertiser, Aug. 14.]

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY. The Burlington Free Press says: "We have recently had a visit from Dr. Jackson, our distinguished chemist and geologist, who is now employed in the geological survey of N. Hampshire. He took, whilst here, a cursory survey of some of the localities most remarkable for scientific inquiry as connected with a chain of scientific inquiries on the geology of the country eastward from the Connecticut river to the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic coast.

Dr. Jackson has already extensively collected valuable data for the solution of important problems demonstrative of the formation of the American continent. His geological surveys of Nova Scotia, Maine and New Hampshire, have afforded him a connected series of observations which we should wish to see carried westward through Vermont, and connected with the basins of the great lakes and the bed of the Mississippi. The acknowledged skill and experience of Dr. Jackson in the various branches of science connected with geology, we mean chemical analysis and metallurgy, would render his geological investigations in this state of great public interest and importance."

DIVORCE LAW. The legislature has, it seems, passed a law that will give great delight to all covetors of matrimonial abolition, and be hailed by every wide desirous of speedy passage from legal wedlock to the free and easy shores of single blessedness.

The statute provides that the wife of an alien, or citizen of any other state, who shall have resided in New Hampshire for two years together, and her husband during that time shall not have come into that state and claimed his marital rights to the person and property of his wife, may apply for her divorce, and on satisfactory proof of the fact, a divorce shall be decreed. During the separate residence she is to have and retain an exclusive custody and guardianship of minor children born in this country and living with her. This law fits the D'Hauteville case so fully in all particulars, that it is almost impossible to escape the suspicion that it was passed with an express view to it. There are certain cases that will not altogether conclusive against, for the husband will never follow his wife into New Hampshire or any where else, for the purpose of preventing a divorce, or even a worse calamity. In this view of the case, the lady of the reverend gentleman in Connecticut, has we dare say, found the very spot for her wishes.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON ICE TRADE. There are sixteen companies now engaged in the business of shipping ice in Boston. They formerly sold ice in New Orleans at 6 cents a pound; but now sell it at one cent, and by the consequent increase of consumption and the quantity prevented from melting by the dispatch of sales, they make four dollars now to where they made one formerly. The ice is sawed into square blocks not less than 12 inches thick, and is packed into vessels with straw and hay, boxed with thin lumber made air tight. One Boston company paid $7,000 last year for the straw and hay they used for packing.

BOSTON AND MAINE RAIL ROAD. This rail road is advancing step by step towards completion. It is but a short time since it made an advance from Exeter to Newmarket. The rails are now laid between the latter place and Dover, and a train of cars went over the road to that place on Wednesday last, and it will be soon opened thus far to the public, making a distance of 67 miles from Boston. The line for this distance consists of part of the Boston and Lowell rail road, 15 miles—the Boston and Portland to the New Hampshire line, 20 miles, and the Boston and Maine to Dover, 32 miles. We understand that it is to be further continued the present season to the state of Maine, at Great Falls.

VERMONT.

COMPLIMENT. A few days ago, while the fortification bill was under discussion in the United States senate, Mr. Phelps, of Vermont, advocated an amendment in favor of fortifying the frontier of that state and taking some care of Lake Champlain. He adverted to what had been done by the Green Mountain boys in the late war, &c. After he had concluded, Mr. Preston rose and said that "what he had just heard from the senator had certainly left him in some doubt as to the propriety of that state, and taking some care of Lake Champlain. He said, however, no where could they be so with less detriment to the country than in Vermont; the spirit of her Green Mountain boys would make every pass in her hills a Thermopylae and every cove a Salamis!"

CONNECTICUT.

BANKS. There are thirty-one banks in Connecticut. Their aggregate assets are $10,300,000; their liabilities, $2,506,258; their surplus $320,092. The Hartford bank has $77,000 stock; the Phoenix do, $50,000; the others from $2,500 to $33,000.

There are rumors in circulation detrimental to the Stanford bank of Connecticut. The commissioners, in their recent report, state that the bank was not in a condition to declare a dividend, notwithstanding which a dividend was declared of $1 per share, report says, out of the capital.

NEW YORK.

STATE CANALS. There are but few subjects of public importance in which the people of this state should be so generally and so actively engaged as in the canals constructed by the state. It is gratifying to the friends of our system of internal improvement, to observe and note its triumphant success.—But few however, are aware of the fact that the Erie and Champlain canals, with all of the lateral canals, (except the Genesee Valley and Black River, which are as yet completed) are paid for from the funds already provided for that purpose. This will leave the present and future internal improvement debt of the state to amount to about the cost of the enlargement for the Erie canal, the construction of the Genesee Valley and Black River canals, and other improvements.

The following statement will be found interesting, inasmuch as it presents a view of the operations of our canal system from its commencement in 1817 to Sept. 30, 1840. Since then a large balance has accrued in favor of the canal fund.

ERIE AND CHAMPLAIN CANALS.

	Payments.
Cost of construction	$10,035,132 62
Repairs	4,343,035 64
Cost of collecting tolls, &c.	382,892 29
Interest on stocks	5,382 25
Premium on stocks purchased	338,386 55
Miscellaneous	1,051,912 77
	21,927,471 39
Balance in favor of E. & C. canal fund	4,395,473 84
	$26,325,945 23

	Bushels.	Value.
Wheat	12,995,320	$12,995,320
Rye	6,544,654	3,926,793
Barley	206,838	155,144
Oats	20,485,438	5,121,712
Buckwheat	2,082,012	1,041,006
Indian corn	14,022,413	7,011,306
Potatoes	9,463,463	2,365,564
	65,801,463	$32,616,945

	Pounds.
Butter sold in 699 townships	8,291,835
Estimated sold in 361 townships	3,808,165
Butter consumed by producers	36,000,000

Cheese sold in 699 townships	50,000,000	12,500,000
Estimated sold in 361 townships	3,857,080
Consumed by producers	1,142,920	15,000,000

Milk more than	20,000,000	1,500,000
Orchards and gardens more than		1,000,000
Beef sold in 699 townships		3,000,000
Estimated sold in 361 townships		35,335,196
Lumber, pine sawed, in 699 townships	14,464,804
Consumed by producers, say three-fourths	150,000,000

Pork sold in 699 townships	200,000,000	14,000,000
Estimated sold in 361 townships	19,892,312
Consumed by producers, say four-fifths	10,107,688

Mutton and veal estimated	150,000,000	10,500,000
Poultry and fish estimated		9,500,000
		2,000,000

Total value of food	$86,616,945
Value of 1,384,677 tons of hay	12,846,770
Value of 3,028,647 pounds of wool	1,211,455
Lumber, pine sawed, in 699 townships sold	238,511,400 ft.
Estimate in 361 townships	161,385,600 "
Estimate unsold	400,000,000 "

Unswaid timber, shingles and staves sent to market in 699 townships	500,000,000	8,000,000
Estimated sold in 361 townships	$342,068
Estimated consumed at home	157,932	1,500,000

Other agricultural products	2,000,000	2,000,000
		15,000,000

Annual value of agricultural products in the state	$125,684,173
Value of pig bar and east iron	14,000,000
Value of anthracite coal mined	5,000,000
Value of bituminous coal	4,000,000
Value of cotton, woolen, iron, leather, hats, engines and other manufactures—at least	13,000,000

Total value of annual products	$161,685,173
This it will be seen that the annual products of the state exceed one hundred and sixty-one millions of dollars—one per cent. on which will pay the interest on our state debt.

The state has laid a tax, which is estimated by Wm. B. Reed, an intelligent state senator from Philadelphia, to produce annually $1,890,000; more than enough to pay the interest on our debt. The tolls on our public works will this year exceed a million of dollars, which sum will from year to year increase, and the dividends from bank stock, auctions, &c. will far more than defray the expenses of the government. Where then is the cause for alarm or despondency? Besides all this, the bill for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the states, must pass congress, and Pennsylvania will be entitled to a tenth of the whole. The quantity of public lands to which the Indian title is extinguished, after deducting the reserves to the new states, and which remains unsold, exceeds 220,000,000 acres, and the quantity to which the Indian title has not yet been extinguished exceeds 730,000,000.

To conclude who does not feel proud of this picture of Pennsylvania? She has all the resources of a great nation within herself, for happiness in peace, for power in war. She is capable of maintaining 30,000,000 of people within her borders, of feeding and clothing them herself, and making the surrounding states her tributaries. Her water power upon the Susquehanna and her hundred branches, upon the Delaware and Schuylkill and their tributaries, and upon the streams that make up the Allegheny and Monongahela, is capable of performing the labor of 400,000,000 men. What her steam power can do in her anthracite coal fields, and upon her 10,000 square miles of bituminous coal lands, let the seafarers at her credit calculate. Notwithstanding the suicidal stabs at our credit by a coalition of the Philadelphia press, she paid her semi-annual interest in specie on the first day of August, and this in the very crisis of the financial difficulties of the country, before our tax could be made available. A safer and better investment cannot be made than in the public stocks of Pennsylvania. They are based upon resources that will be permanent forever. Those who depreciate them, are either ignorant of their value or dishonest enough to speculate upon the timid. There are no people in the world who have so many advantages and so few burdens. The public debt is a trade in this rich and powerful commonwealth. We can pay it and never feel the burden. Our population are industrious, thriving and honest, and out of the company of the Philadelphia brokers, and the subsidized presses in their interest, there is not a man among the seventeen hundred thousand free people who boast of the title of "Pennsylvanians," who does not scorn the dishonest and recreant sentiment of a violated public faith.

TENNESSEE.
ELECTION RETURNS—FOR GOVERNOR.
East Tennessee.
1841.
Counties.	Jones.	Polk.	Cannon.	Polk.
Anderson	540	265	507	259
Blount	1,065	669	911	811
Bradley	300	300 maj.	300	751
Bledsoe	590	225	516	263
Claiborne	451	750	576	785
Campbell	343	362	279	467
Coeke	821	100	654	263
Carter	728	138	770	141
Grainger	1,003	530	801	630
Greene	894	1,571	1,000	1,700
Hamilton		13 maj.	632	436
Hawkins	1,053	1,343	804	1,433
Jefferson	1,603	148	1,509	207
Jones	351	70	323	95
Knox	1,432	355	1,611	464
Madison	955	884	1,322	960
Monroe	847	985	850	1,077
Meigs	84	572	103	594
Marion	101 maj.		473	399
Morgan	158	125	104	154
Polk	194	345	new county.
Reane	949	577	949	577
Rhea	160	368	162	333
Sullivan	313	1,336	250	1,412
Sevier	869	88	750	191
Washington	798	1,123	796	1,119

Middle Tennessee.
Bedford	1,851	2,344	1,837	2,327
Davidson	1,768	1,236	1,744	1,507
Dickson	519	647	370	656
Franklin	515	1,235	510	1,097
Fentress	144	359	207	352
Giles	1,110	1,276	1,127	1,461
Hardin	510	596	476	613
Hickman	319	958	195	1,054
Humphreys, } 433	603	394	373
Jefferson, } 926	751	926	751
Jackson	1,109	622	1,112	630
Lawrence	522	505	554	433
Lincoln	728	2,504	741	2,584
Maury	1,367	2,187	1,437	2,338
Montgomery	925	751	926	751
Reuben	926	959	926	959
Robertson	968	680	1,067	692
Rutherford	1,711	1,635	1,643	1,749
Smith	2,369	680	2,230	779
Stewart			400	736
Sumner	703	1,626	751	1,919
Warren	476	2,037	395	2,110
Wayne	666	319	709	304
Williamson	1,805	809	1,788	919
White	1,162	511	1,100	497
Wilson	2,246	971	2,273	1,157

24,027	96,313	24,398	29,130
24,027	24,027
	2,286

West Tennessee.
Carroll	1,195	425	1,179	439
Dyer	324	312	317	324
Fayette	1,003	804	908	936
Gibson	1,017	432	1,151	513
Hardeman	624	853	574	842
Henry	721	1,108	699	1,192
Henderson	1,100	328	1,236	368
Haywood	655	544	706	627
Madison	1,046	551	1,191	610
McNairy			291 maj.
Obion	274	387	237	438
Percy	707	388	685	456
Shelby	829	738	781	665
Tipton	519	584	320	425
Weakly	509	726	418	871
	10,523	8,143	10,613	8,629
	8,143
	2,380

RECAPITULATION:
Jones' majority in East Tennessee					3,147
" " " West Tennessee, one county not heard from					2,380
Polk's majority in Middle Tennessee, one county not heard from					5,527
Jones' majority thus far					3,241

REPRESENTATIVES ELECTED.
W. H. Wigs.
Williams, of Carter,					Campbell, of Washington,
Sender, of Grainger,					Miligan, of Greene,
Ross, of Anderson,					Eanes, of Sullivan,
Wheeler, of Campbell,					Jones, of Greene,
Scruggs, of Jefferson,					Fain, of Hawkins,
Lea, of Coeke,					Crantz, of Hawkins,
Miller, of Sevier,					Lane, of Claiborne,
Hodden, of Blount,					Hembree, of Reane,
Pate, of Knox,					Torbitt, of Monroe,
Wester, of Roane,					Walker, of McMinn,
Sherrill, of Bledsoe,					Rowles, of McMinn,
England, of White,					Wan, of Meigs,
Brooks, of Jackson,					Grierson, of Fentress,
Goodall, of Smith,					Ogelsby, of Obion,
Hughes, of Smith,					Hopkins, of Warren,
Campbell, of Davidson,					Hill, of Warren,
Ewing, of Davidson,					Howard, of Franklin,
Mairhead, of Wilson,					Estill, of Franklin,
McKerlie, of Wilson,					Bartley, of Sumner,
Norman, of Rutherford,					Henry, of Sumner,
Barton, of Rutherford,					Dew, of Maury,
Perkins, of Williamson,					Polk, of Maury,
Bostick, of Williamson,					Black, of Bedford,
Buchanan, of Lawrence,					Long, of Bedford,
Brown, of Wayne,					Reece, of Lincoln,
Marable, of Humphreys,					Rogers, of Lincoln,
Buck, of Montgomery,					Buchanan, of Giles,
Powell, of Robertson,					Buford, of Giles,
Bledsoe, of Carroll,					McGinnis, of Hardin,
Mitchell, of Gibson,					Walker, of Hickman,
Polk, of Obion,					Ebanks, of Dickson,
Staudt, of Hamilton,					Cherry, of Stewart,
Haskell, of Madison,					Copeland, of Henry,
Perkins, of Haywood,					Fennell, of Weakly,
Graham, of Perry,					Fentress, of Hardeman,
Alexander, of Shelby,					Glen, of Tipton.

SENATORS ELECTED.
Wigs. V. R.
Dis. 2. Rencan, of Sevier,					1. Powell, of Wash'ton,
4. Williams, of Grainger,					3. Johnson, of Greene,
5. Nelson, of Knox,					6. Miller, of McMinn,
11. Peyton, of Smith,					7. Waterhouse, of Dick,
14. Lebetter, of Ruth'd,					9. Laughlin, of Warren,
15. Jennings, of Davidson,					10. Ross, of Giles,
16. Foster, of Williamson,					12. Warren, of Bedford,
19. Fow, of Robertson,					13. Martin, of Maury,
20. Motley, of Wilson,					21. Mathews, of Law'ree,
21. Brantley, of Henon,					18. Harwick, of Dick,
23. Sevier, of Carroll,					22. Gardner, of Weakly,
24. Ashe, of Haywood,					25. Macklin, of Fayette.
8. Turney, dem. (representing a whig district).

Whigs 39—V. B. 36.
Whigs 12—V. B. 13.

ALABAMA.
THE SUPREME COURT has just closed an unusually laborious session. The judges have already delivered upwards of one hundred written opinions, many of them voluminous, and have thirty or forty, we learn, still to write out, after settling the points of law. The case is still open, although the docket has been cleared, and will not be formally adjudged, until the opinions are all written.

MISSISSIPPI.

Croers. The Vicksburg Whig of August 3d says: A friend who has recently returned from the interior, writes as follows: "I was much gratified to see crops of cotton looking so fine in the back country. I saw considerable wheat and other small grain, and great numbers of hogs. It is the opinion of many planters in the interior that they will raise more than enough meat to supply them. It is a fact that pork has been selling for less in Jinds, Madison and Rankin counties, than it has on the river. The prospect is encouraging."

LOUISIANA.

THE BAYOU LINCOLN EXPEDITION. The grand jury at New Orleans on the 19th ultimo, returned "not a true bill" against Persifer F. Smith, of Philadelphia, captain Charles F. Lozey, and James Geo. W. Reeder, Edward H. Wilson and Thomas Bates, who engaged in the unlucky Bayou Lincoln expedition. Judge Canonge then asked the attorney general if he had any further charge against those gentlemen. Mr. Roslins replied in the negative. The judge accordingly ordered their immediate release.

INDIANA.

FARMING ON A LARGE SCALE. Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Indiana to a forwarding house in Rochester, dated Michigan City, Aug. 11, 1841: "I have this night sold 10,000 bushels of one-fane farmer, and of his own raising, and it is only about one-half of his crop. The same farmer has 800 acres of corn and 2,500 hogs to fat next fall, together with lots of other stock and spring crops.

If you have any farmers in Monroe that can go ahead of that, I will give it up. I have never seen fairer wheat than the new crop is here.

From all accounts it is evident greater quantities of wheat have been raised in the new states this year than ever before; and western New York is compelled for once to knock under, in large farming operations, to Indiana. We are in no danger of farmers for bread. (Democrat.)

WISCONSIN.

LEAD. We copy the following interesting article from the Milwaukee Courier. The lead trade has heretofore gone down the Mississippi, with the exception of a small part of the way of the Wisconsin and Fox rivers to Greenbay and thence to New York. As soon as the Milwaukee and Rock River canal is completed, immense quantities of lead will be carried on it to Milwaukee on Lake Michigan. The best plan, as the roads are not as perfect as the water, is to desire to New Orleans, and to carry the lead over the snow in the winter season to the lake, to be ready for an early departure in spring.

Wisconsin seems to be the wonder of the age, as its soil which is rich to a proverb, is at the same time underlaid with the richest mineral wealth.

The Lead Trade. Our citizens on Saturday afternoon, were not a little surprised by the appearance in the streets of four heavy tons, loaded with lead from the furnace of Thomas Parish, esq near Muskoddy, in Grant county. These teams brought over about ten tons of lead, to be shipped to New York. It was sent on the Madison, on Monday.

We are informed by Mr. Doussan, that lead can be sent from this place to New York, for about fifty cents per hundred, and it costs 93 cents per hundred to deliver it here from Muskoddy, making the entire expense of transporting the lead from the furnace to New York about $1 50 per hundred, or $30 per ton. This is a much less price than it costs to transport to New York from New Orleans. We understand the average cost by that route is about $40 per ton.

The teams returned loaded with salt, which was obtained here at about $2 50 per barrel. This can be disposed of in the mines at about $7 per barrel—a very pretty advantage.

The tanners inform us that the road is such that they did not find the least difficulty in getting through with about 2 tons on each wagon.

The greatest inducement, however, which the lake route holds out to the smelter, over the southern route for the lead trade, is the increased expence with which their lead gets to market. The lead which arrived here on Saturday was shipped on the Madison on Monday, and will be in New York within 20 days from the time it left the furnace, near the Mississippi river; and the owner will get his returns in about four weeks from the time the lead was smelted. A gentleman from Galeville recently informed us that he shipped, over 90 days since, about $1,500 worth of lead to New York by the southern route, and had not then got his returns from it.

We are informed by Mr. Doussan, that he will ship in a few weeks about 20 tons more, which he has purchased and paid for in salt.

TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

SEPTEMBER 1. Mr. Buchanan presented the memorial of the "Artist's Fund society of Philadelphia," requesting congress to impose a duty on the importation of foreign prints and pictures; and, also, the memorial of "the Artists and Amateurs' association of Philadelphia," making a similar request.

The memorials were laid upon the table. Mr. Wright presented the preamble and resolutions adopted at a meeting in Brunswick county, Virginia, in relation to the leading measures before congress, and expressive of their disapprobation of the same; laid on the table and ordered to printed.

The bill to provide for the satisfaction of the outstanding Choeleae reservations under the 19th article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek of September, 1830, was put on its passage.

Mr. Henderson moved to recommit the bill with certain instructions which motion gave rise to some remarks from Mr. Sevier and Mr. Linn in support of the bill and against the motion to recommit, which motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then passed by the following vote: YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Archer, Benton, Buchanan, Choate, Clay, of Alabama, Fulton, King, Linn, McKelers, Morehead, Harrison, Henderson, Huntington, Mangum, Merrell, Miller, Prentiss, Preston, Smith, of Indiana, Southard—15.

The act establishing duties and drawbacks coming up as the unfinished business—

Mr. Berrien, pursuant to notice given yesterday, moved that he lay the bill on the table, with a view to take up the consideration of the bill to establish a fiscal corporation.

Mr. Rives opposed this motion, and expressed his hope that the revenue bill would be proceeded with until it was disposed of. He understood the notice given by the senator from Georgia to proceed on the supposition that the revenue bill would by this time be gone through with.

Mr. Clay said that he was, of course, ready to submit to any arrangement which the senate might prefer; but it certainly had been the general understanding at the adjournment yesterday that the work of the day was to be taken up to-day. Under that understanding, Mr. C. had himself come to the senate to-day. If the revenue bill was to be taken up, he should like to refer to some statistical tables which he had not now with him; he would not say, however, that he was unprepared to proceed with that bill, if such were the pleasure of the senate.

Mr. Archer said that, personally, he was indifferent which bill was taken up; but as his colleague had expressed a wish for further delay, it would be inconsistent with that courtesy he had ever found exercised towards himself to refuse the request.

Mr. Calhoun was reluctant to show any want of courtesy, but he really was very desirous the senate should proceed on with the bank bill, as had yesterday been proposed.

Mr. Rives said that gentlemen had entirely mistaken the whole spirit and purpose of his remarks. He asked no favors. He felt himself as well prepared to go on with the bank bill as other gentlemen, and he had no objection to its being taken up, provided it was with only on the general principle which he thought had been agreed to at the outset, that when once a subject was taken up it should not be abandoned or suspended till it was finally disposed of.

After further brief remarks by Messrs. Berrien and Foodberg, (the latter in favor of the motion), the motion was carried by a vote of yeas 34, nays 14, and thus the revenue bill was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Berrien, the bill from the house, "to provide for the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue, by means of a corporation to be styled the fiscal corporation of the United States," read up, as in committee of the whole, and having been read up by the secretary, was open to amendment.

Mr. Clay said that although this bill was not such as he thought the necessities of the country required—it felt short, far short of what he could have wished to see—yet it would accomplish to a considerable extent the objects he had in view, and the one the extension of the exchanges of the country, the other the insuring a sound and uniform currency throughout all parts of the country. It being thus a measure which was likely to accomplish much good, he should not refuse to vote for it merely because it did not accomplish all the good he had hoped and desired. He went for doing as much good as he could, in every sphere of life in which it was his lot to move; and, on that principle, the bill should have his vote.

Mr. Benton, offered to amend the bill by striking out the word "states" among the classes of stockholders described in the 12th section of the bill, and supported his motion by a speech.

Mr. Berrien briefly replied; when the amendment was rejected:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, King, Linn, McKelers, Morehead, Harrison, Pierce, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Sturgeon, Tappan, Walker, Woodbury, Wright, Young—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Berrien, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Huntington, Kerr, Mangum, Merrell, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge, Wright—28.

Mr. Benton moved to strike out in the same connection the word "corporations." The motion was negative: yeas 21, nays 26.

Mr. Clay, by general consent, here presented a petition of a very respectable number of citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, in behalf of the establishment of a bank of the United States. He said it was right voice should be heard on the subject. The petition was laid on the table.

Mr. Rives briefly stated his reasons why he could not vote for the bill.

Mr. Benton moved an amendment to provide that the corporations of the corporations which are permitted to become subscribers shall be citizens of the U. States. This was rejected: yeas 20, nays 26.

Mr. Benton moved a provision that the stock of the corporation should be transferable only to citizens of the U. States. This was rejected: yeas 20, nays 27.

Mr. Walker moved an amendment, to provide that all the bills should be drawn on short time, and limited to articles already shipped. This was rejected: yeas 21, nays 27.

Mr. Allen moved to insert an additional provision, that the stockholders of the corporation should be liable, in their individual and private capacity to the respective amounts of their stock, if the corporation shall at any time fail to discharge its obligations in gold and silver. This was rejected: yeas 20, nays 28.

Mr. Benton moved that the senate adjourn. The question was taken by yeas and nays at the call of Mr. Sevier, and decided in the negative: yeas 16, nays 22.

Mr. Benton moved to strike out "ten dollars" and insert "fifty dollars," (the amount payable on each share taken by corporations.) Kerr, Mangum, of the subscription. This was rejected as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Culbert, Fulton, King, Linn, McKelers, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Berrien, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Harrison, Henderson, Huntington, Mangum, Merrell, Miller, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Indiana, Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—28.

The question being now on ordering the bill to its third reading, Mr. Archer expressed a desire to address the senate, and moved an adjournment.

Which motion prevailing, yeas 28, nays 18—The senate, a little before sundown, adjourned.

SEPTEMBER 2. Mr. Buchanan presented a memorial from citizens of Philadelphia, asking that a duty may be imposed on the introduction of chloride of lime.

Mr. Calhoun presented the preamble and resolutions of a meeting of Amelia county, Virginia, commendatory of the measures of the present administration.

Mr. Merrell presented a memorial from the stone cutters formerly employed on the public buildings, asking that applications may be made during the present session to continue the same.

Mr. Clayton, from the committee on the library, reported the bill from the house making appropriations for the removal of the statue of Washington and placing it in the rotunda of the capitol under an amendment which was considered in committee of the whole, and read a third time and passed.

The bill to establish a fiscal corporation coming up as the unfinished business of yesterday, and the question being on ordering the bill to its third reading—

Mr. Archer went at large into an argumentative speech in defence of the constitutionality of the bill.

Mr. Buchanan replied, accusing Mr. A. of arguing like a consolidationist and of having forfeited his claim to be considered a state-rights man. Mr. B. having expressed a doubt whether it was his duty to attack gentlemen might fly a kite at the white house, but Here Mr. Archer interposed and remarked that the senator probably knew much more about what would be done at the white house than he did: the senator's party, he believed, knew more of the interior of that house than their opponents.

Mr. Buchanan was sorry the gentleman from Virginia was mistaken: the fact was not so, as yet; but he hoped it might be before long. The president had shown himself a man of mettle, and had not been willing to sacrifice all his old Virginia principles for the sake of a party, with which he differed on almost every great and leading point of policy. Mr. B. after going into a course of animadversion upon the practical working of the bill, expressed the opinion that it was impossible that the president, after vetoing the last bank bill sent to him, could ever sign such a bill as this. No one so could contradict all the avowed principles of his past life.

This course of remark called up Mr. Clay, who spoke with great animation in reply. In the course of the speech he adverted to the late disturbance at the president's mansion, and playfully suggested it might possibly have been produced by the irruption of the loco foco party into the house on the evening of the veto, and he amused himself by a conjectural picture of the part probably acted by the leading gentlemen of that party on the occasion, and the congratulatory speech addressed to the president. Mr. C. then went into a reply to the suggestion of Mr. B. that the president would probably veto the bill, which he treated as implying a most injurious imputation on the character of the president.

From this point the remainder of the debate, which was of a very interesting, animated, and, at times, highly excited character, was directed almost exclusively to remarks on the probability or improbability of the veto, and its probable political consequences. It continued to a late hour, and was not concluded when the senate adjourned, without having taken any question on the bill.

It was continued by Messrs. Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Fremont, Rives, and Wright. Mr. Wright, Pier, Berrien and Linn: when Mr. Berrien, insisting on his right to reply to the arguments which had been urged against the bill he had had the honor to introduce as the organ of a committee, for that purpose moved an adjournment; which motion prevailing, the senate adjourned at seven hours, at a little before sundown, adjourned.

SEPTEMBER 3. Mr. Calhoun presented the resolutions and proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Clarke county, Virginia, condemning the measures of the present session; reviewing the promises made by the whig party previous to the late election, which they declared had been entirely violated; and approving of the veto of the president on the bank bill.

He asked that the proceedings be read and ordered to be printed. They were accordingly read, and consisted of denunciation and outcry against the measures of the administration.

Mr. Preston hoped they would not be printed. He said that he felt to print at the expense of the senate, this low slang, and criminations and reprimands, essays of which character might be produced from every neighborhood in the union. He moved to lay the motion to print on the table.

Mr. Benton said the gentleman would not gain much by that motion, for he had a similar paper, on which he would say all that ought to have been said on this.

Mr. Calhoun appealed to his colleague to withdraw his motion for a moment; which being complied with, he expressed the hope that these resolutions would be printed, as the people had a right at all times to hear every voice. The resolutions denounced in no unbecoming language the proceedings of this body, than many that had been printed, and he knew not why these should be singled out to be rejected in this manner.

Mr. Benton opposed the motion and hoped the papers, as they were of a respectful character to the body would be printed; he opposed at some length this low slang, and criminations and reprimands, essays of which character might be produced from every neighborhood in the union. He moved to lay the motion "veto" among others. He then went into an examination of the veto power, which he said was a great conservative power, for the defence of the people, and was always a most popular measure whenever exercised.

Mr. Preston said the memorial had been read, and received a respectful hearing; and where was the right to demand its printing? It was now on the record of the country, and had probably already been passed. A printing by the senate would rather imply approbation, and be objected to the printing of such rabid effusions of party spirit and slang, which asked for no practical result, would be completely impractical end. He referred to several expressions of an indecent and exceptionable character, and renewed the motion to lay on the table.

The motion was carried by yeas 26, nays 17, and thus the motion to print and the memorial lay on the table.

A joint resolution from the house of representatives, relating to the printing of the departments, was read a first and second time, and was referred to the committee on the library.

The bill from the house of representatives, to repeal the sixth section of the act entitled an act to provide for the establishment of the military academy of the United States for the year 1838, and for other purposes, passed July 1838, and to prohibit any investment of the funds of the United States in stocks of the several states, was read twice, and referred to the committee on finance.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, the bill from the house of representatives authorizing the franking privilege to be extended to Mrs. Harrison, widow of the late General Harrison, was read in committee of the whole the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution from the house of representatives making it the duty of the attorney general to examine for the title of the lands or sites for the purpose of erecting thereon armories and other public works and buildings, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time, and referred to the committee on the judiciary.

The bill to provide for the collection, safe keeping, and distribution of the public revenue by means of a fiscal corporation, coming up, once more, as the unfinished business, and the question still being on ordering the bill to its third reading—

Mr. Simmons, of Rhode Island, delivered a clear practical common sense speech in favor of the bill.

Mr. Berrien, who had been charged with the bill went into a general reply to the objections which had been urged against it especially by Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Walker desired to offer an amendment to the bill which he would submit, and simply ask the yeas and nays on its adoption. It was to insert a new section claiming for congress the power to "modify or repeal." The question having been taken, the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Ala., Calhoun, Fulton, King, Linn, McRoberts, Mouton, Nicholson, Pierce, Sevier, Smith, of Conn., Sturgeon, of Ind., Miller, McMillen, Wright, Young—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Berrien, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Hingham, Kerr, Mangum, Merrick, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—28.

The question was then put, "shall this bill be read a third time?" The yeas and nays having been demanded, the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Berrien, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Hingham, Kerr, Mangum, Merrick, Miller, Morehead, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Simmons, Smith, of Ind., Southard, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Alabama, Culbert, Fulton, King, Linn, McRoberts, Mouton, Nicholson, Pierce, Rives, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Sturgeon, Tappan, Walker, Woodbury, Wright, Young—22.

The bill was then read a third time by its title, and finally passed.

The question was then on its title, which is as follows: "An act to provide for the better collection, safe-keeping, and disbursement of the public revenue, by means of a corporation, to be styled 'the fiscal corporation of the United States.'"

Mr. Chapman moved to amend the title, so as to make it, "an act to establish a bank of the U. S.," &c. He said the title proposed did not belong to the institution; it was a bank of the United States, and why not give it that name on its face."

The amendment was rejected, and the original title adopted.

The fortification bill was then taken up, on motion of Mr. Preston, the question being on concurring in the amendment of the house, to that of the senate, which appropriates $5,000 instead of 75,000 dollars for the selection and purchase of a site for a western, southwestern or northwestern armory.

Mr. Preston moved that the amendment be concurred in; which, after some conversation, was carried by a vote of 27 yeas to 19 nays.

The bill from the house, "authorising the transmission by mail of letters and packets to and from Mrs. Harrison, widow of the late William Henry Harrison, free of postage," was taken up, three times read, and passed.

A joint resolution from the house, making it the duty of the attorney general to inquire into the validity of sites on which fortifications are erected, was twice read, and referred to the committee on military affairs.

The bill from the house making appropriation for repairs of the Potomac bridge, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Rives from the committee on foreign relations, reported the bill from the house making an appropriation for the outfits of diplomatic agents of government.

The senate then went into executive session, and after some time spent therein, adjourned.

SEPTEMBER 4. The bill from the house making appropriation for the purchase of ordnance and ordnance stores was taken up, and after some brief remarks by Messrs. Mangum, Sevier and Woodbury, Mr. Allen moved to amend the bill, to the effect that the appropriation be made from the sales of the public lands, any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, regretted to see the course senators were disposed to take. Would they never cease to assault the land bill? There never had been a bill so long and so desperately contested by the opposition. Every amendment including the one now offered, in principle, that the ingenuity of that opposition could devise, had been offered in the progress of the bill in the senate, and had been voted down. Were these amendments to be repeated upon every bill that came before the senate? Would senators persist in this course? The whole matter connected with the distribution bill had become so completely decided at the present session. Were senators not willing to let the people try the measure. If it was wrong they would find it out and correct it. He said it did not like it. This fighting a measure, indirectly, he said it did not like. He would submit it in all good feeling to senators to let this measure take its course. The bill authorised its repeal when congress should say it should be done. Let the question at all times be fairly and openly met and decided. Mr. S. was rather to be driven nor coaxed into a reargument of that measure at this session. He had heard with pain and regret the senator from North Carolina, (Mr. Calhoun), the other day, call upon the president to put his veto on this important measure. He, (Mr. S.) did not object to the opposition of the senator while the bill was in the senate, but regretted that he could have felt it to be his duty to go further, against all parliamentary rule, and advise the president to veto a measure that had gone from the body, and which was specially recommended by himself in his last message, and urged by him upon congress for its adoption. Mr. S. would not pursue the subject. He wished to see the session brought to a close; and he would say nothing that would lead to debate. He hoped the amendment would not be adopted.

Mr. Allen said they would constantly, unitedly and with accumulated energy follow up the subject. It had all along been said that distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the states would neither do good nor to the satisfaction of the people. Now what had they witnessed? He would give them fair notice that his side of the senate meant to do all it could to repeal the distribution law, to help to alleviate the burdens of the people, which the land bill had imposed for the benefit of foreigners; and these foreigners our enemies, moral and political.

Mr. Walker said the senator from Ohio talked of the land bill as though it had already become a law. He expressed the hope, if the bill was signed, that no bill which violated the spirit of the compromise would receive the sanction of the president.

Mr. Mangum replied that the question was taken on the amendment, and decided in the negative as follows: yeas 19, nays 25. The bill was then laid over to be taken up on Monday.

The revenue bill was then taken up, (the question pending, being the amendment of Mr. Woodbury, to exempt tea and coffee), when Mr. Clay addressed the senate for upwards of an hour and a half, going into a full exhibit of the present state of the treasury, and intimating that a loan might be necessary as early as December next.

Mr. C. in the course of his remarks, made the following estimates for the receipts and expenditures of the treasury for the year 1841: the probable revenue for the last half of the same year, and the existing revenue laws, supposing the present bill not to pass:

Actual revenue for the first half of the year 1841:
Customs,	$6,113,410 95
Lands,	836,069 95
Bank bond,	68,494 47
Miscellaneous items,	64,945 83
	$7,642,925 76
Expenditure during the same time:
Civil, miscellaneous and foreign interest,
course,	$3,062,524 71
Military,	6,442,893 53
Naval,	2,559,706 52
	$12,065,124 76

Public debt, - - - - -	3,937 35
Treasury notes redeemed, including interest, - - - - -	$1,431,519 15
	$3,932,450 62
Difference between actual receipt and expenditure on the first half of 1841, - - - - -	6,789,437 00
Probable revenue for the last half year, - - - - -	3,937 35
Customs, - - - - -	$6,113,410 51
Lands, - - - - -	826,669 95
Miscellaneous items, - - - - -	64,945 83
	$7,005,026 29
Expenditure.
Civil, miscellaneous and foreign intercourse, - - - - -	$3,662,524 71
Military, - - - - -	6,442,893 53
Naval, - - - - -	2,559,706 52
Public debt, - - - - -	3,937 35
Treasury notes redeemed, - - - - -	4,047,498 16
	$16,116,560 47
Deficiency of the revenue during the last half year of 1841 to meet the expenditure of the same time, - - - - -	9,111,534 18
Deficiency of the first half brought forward, - - - - -	6,789,437 00

Total deficiency of actual revenue to meet actual expenditure during the year 1841, - - - - - $15,906,971 18

To which should be added as much more as may be expended out of the appropriation of the extra session.

Mr. Woodbury replied at some length. Mr. Calhoun followed when the question was taken on the amendment, and decided in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bates, Benton, Buchanan, Calhoun, Choate, Clay, of Ala., Clayton, Cuthbert, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Huntington, King, Linn, Moore, Roberts, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Mouton, Nicholson, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Sevier, Simmons, Smith, of Connecticut, Smith, of Indiana, Sturgeon, Tallmadge, Tappan, Walker, White, Woodbridge, Woodbury, Wright, Young—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Berrien, Clay, of Ky., Henderson, Kerr, Merriick, Preston, Rivers, Southard—12.

Mr. Allen then moved to amend the bill by exempting the article of salt from duty.

Mr. Benton spoke for some time in support of the amendment. He said that the tax on salt acted on the poor most oppressively; that the banker with his millions, did not use as much salt in a year as a farmer would use up in half a season.

Mr. Walker moved to amend the amendment by adding gunny bags.

Mr. Benton warmly objected to mixing up any thing so incongruous as gunny bags with salt.

Mr. Bates moved that the senate adjourn.

Mr. Sevier, demanded the yeas and nays; which having been ordered, the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Bates, Berrien, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Huntington, Kerr, Mangum, Merriick, Miller, Morehead, Mouton, Nicholson, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Simmons, Southard, Sturgeon, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Barrow, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Graham, Henderson, King, Linn, McLehose, Nicholson, Pierce, Preston, Rivers, Sevier, Smith, of Connecticut, Smith, of Indiana, Walker, Woodbury, Wright, Young—22.

And the senate adjourned to Monday.

SEPTEMBER 6. Mr. Benton presented the proceedings and resolutions of a meeting of citizens of Surrey county, Virginia, condemning the measures of the extra session, and approving the veto of the president on the bank bill; which without debate were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Berrien, from the committee on the judiciary, reported the bill from the house, making it the duty of the attorney general to inquire into the validity of title to sites on which fortifications are erected.

The bill making appropriations for the expense of the outlets of diplomatic agents of government, and the resolution relative to the purchase of water-rotted hemp for the use of the navy, were taken up, and laid over.

Mr. Benton offered a resolution directing the secretary of the senate to transmit to the president of the United States a copy of the recent report from the secretary of the treasury to the senate, in compliance with its resolution, giving a statement of the public lands surveyed, prepared for sale, and not advertised and brought into market.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, opposed this motion, considering it of a most remarkable character, as the president was unacquainted with the reports made to the senate; to endeavor to inform him, would be degradation, and disrespectful to him. He briefly explained the facts why the lands had not been brought into market as soon as prepared for sale—that they were attached to no land district, which rendered it impossible. He moved to lay the motion on the table; which, after some further debate, was carried.

Mr. Bayard introduced a joint resolution providing for the settlement of the title to the Pea Patch Island; which was twice read, and referred to the judiciary committee.

The revenue bill was then taken up; the question pending being the amendment offered by Mr. Allen, to exempt salt from duty, and the amendment to the amendment as proposed by Mr. Walker, to include gunny bags with salt.

Mr. Walker said at the suggestion of his friends, he should withdraw his amendment for the present, as it was supposed by some it might embarrass the original amendment.

Mr. Huntington spoke zealously against the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Allen, as calculated to violate the spirit of the compromise act. He asked the friends desired to destroy the home manufactures and give a monopoly to foreigners.

Mr. King was in favor of the amendment. Though not disposed to run counter to the spirit of the compromise, he yet desired to take duties off all articles of necessity and used by the poorer classes.

Mr. Bates opposed the amendment with much zeal, and insisted that if the duty were removed, the price, so far from being lessened, would be increased, from the fact that there would be no rivalry in the market.

Mr. Calhoun thought salt ought not to be interfered with now—the duty was going off gradually, and commercial interests as was consistent with safety to commercial interests. No one could regard the bill before them as permanent. It was evident that the whole system would have to be revised under the compromise system.

Mr. Walker was warmly in favor of the amendment. He regarded a tax on salt as inhuman and unjust. It was almost as necessary to human life as the air they breathe, and should be exempted from all burthens whatever.

Mr. Allen then modified his amendment so as that it should not take effect until after the 3d of June, 1842.

Mr. Clay spoke against the amendment; and said the very circumstance of the universality of its use was a reason it should come in for its share of taxation. He never talked about the poor, but he believed he felt as much, and probably more, than those who did. Who were the poor? Why they were all poor; and any attempt to select certain classes for relief, would be to the collector came round they might be poor. He pressed the point that the tax might not be interfered with. This was a subject which Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Macon took under their peculiar care, and other gentlemen had since mounted the hobby, and literally rode it down. He could tell them, if they desired to preserve the compromise, they must leave the salt tax alone.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. Walker, Benton, Calhoun and Preston, when the question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and decided in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Buchanan, Clay, of Alabama, Cuthbert, Dalton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Mangum, Nicholson, Pierce, Prentiss, Preston, Smith, of Conn., Tappan, Walker, White, Woodbury, Wright, Young—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Berrien, Buchanan, Choate, Clay, of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Huntington, Kerr, Mangum, Merriick, Miller, Porter, Smith, of Ind. Southard, Sturgeon, Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—22.

Several other amendments, not important in themselves, were offered, but were voted down.

Mr. Walker moved to insert among the free articles "gunny bags."

He briefly explained the amendment. The manufacturers of the article in this country sometimes entered into a combination, and raised the price of this. When this was the case, he wished the foreign article to be admitted duty free.

Mr. Clay said no such combination had taken or could take place. The amendment went to violate the compromise act.

The amendment was further advocated by Messrs. Woodbury and King. It was then rejected: yeas 13, nays 33.

Mr. Clay moved an amendment, which he said would relieve the cotton interest: to add a proviso to the end of the second section, that no article of its provisions should be levied beyond 20 per cent ad valorem.

This was adopted without a division.

Mr. Buchanan renewed his motion to repeal the act of 1832, relating to the salt tax, and to subject it to a duty of twenty per cent, providing that all iron already imported should not be affected. To this Mr. Huntington had offered an amendment, which he now withdrew.

Mr. Berrien moved to amend it, so that it should not take effect until the 3d of March, 1843; but in the mean time a duty of 30 per cent. shall be levied on all rail road iron, except for rail roads the construction of which has already been commenced by states and corporations.

Mr. Buchanan thought this amendment ought immediately to take effect, but he was doubtful of the success of it, in its original form; and from necessity, for the sake of accomplishing some good, at least, by the amendment, he accepted the modification.

After brief remarks by Messrs. King, Calhoun and Cuthbert, agreeing to the amendment, as modified, it was adopted.

Mr. Preston moved an amendment, to exempt from duty, paintings and statuary, the productions of American artists abroad; which was adopted.

Mr. Evans moved to strike out "cloves" from the free articles; which was adopted.

Mr. Woodbury moved to strike out the 5th section of the bill; which was carried.

Mr. W. moved an amendment to levy a duty of twenty per cent. on low priced wools.

Mr. Clay said the article was made free by the law of 1832, and it would strike a most mortal wound on the woolen manufactures.

Mr. Huntington concurred in this view.

Mr. Tallmadge hoped the amendment would not prevail. This wool did not come in competition with American wool; the amendment would have done damage to the manufacturing interests. He sent to the secretary's table a letter on this subject, which was read, and exhibited the deadly influence a duty on this article would exercise on the manufacturers.

Mr. Huntington read a letter of the same effect. After further remarks by Messrs. Benton and Tappan, in opposition to the amendment, it was rejected without a division.

Mr. Woodbury offered an amendment providing that when wool of different qualities is imported in the same package, and any part is worth more than eight cents per pound, that part shall pay a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem.

An amendment was offered by Mr. Kerr, to the effect that circulating libraries not incorporated should have the power to import books.

This amendment was debated by Messrs. Kerr, Buchanan, Woodbury, and others. It was decided in the negative.

Mr. Tallmadge moved to exempt grease from duty, which occasioned some pleasant and playful remarks between Messrs. Preston, Clay and others; when the question was taken on its adoption, and decided in the negative: yeas 17, nays 29.

On motion of Mr. Mangum, the senate then, at a late hour, adjourned.

SEPTEMBER 7. Mr. Tallmadge presented a memorial from sundry brush makers, asking that no additional duty may be imposed upon bristles. Laid on the table.

Mr. Clay presented a preamble and resolutions of a meeting of the citizens of Pike, Jackson and Hocking counties, Ohio, expressive of their satisfaction with the course of the veto at the present session, and condemning the veto.

Mr. C. would only add, that more intelligent and patriotic men did not exist than those of the valley of Scioto who had done him the honor of making him the subject of their presentation of their views. He then moved that the paper be read and laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Benton,

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury inform the senate whether all the money due to the United States from the Pennsylvania bank of the United States has been paid into the treasury; and if not, the amounts and interest not paid and the reasons why not paid, and the actual state and condition of the moneys, &c.

The bill making appropriations for the outfit and arrears of the diplomatic agents of the government was taken up in committee of the whole.

Mr. Mangum moved to amend the bill by striking out the appropriation for the salary of a charge at Naples.

On this motion a debate ensued, which lasted until the morning hour had expired. Messrs. Kerr, Buchanan, King and others participating; when on motion of Mr. Clay, the senate proceeded to the discussion of the revenue bill.

Mr. Choate moved to amend the bill by adding to the 1st section, 19th line, after the word saltpetre, "gallow;" and in the 61st and 62d lines, the words "molair, marrow and other soap stocks, and palm oil."

Mr. C. then explained the object he had in view by the amendment, and advocated it in some brief remarks.

Mr. Clay opposed the amendment of the insertion of talow at the presents rate, which was adopted.

The question having been taken on the amendment, it was decided in the negative.

The question was then taken on the second branch of the amendment, and decided in the affirmative. Mr. Bates then moved to amend the bill by inserting in the 45th line of the 1st section, after the word berries "smaltz;" and after the word dying, "prunelle."

Mr. B. explained the object of the amendment; when the question was taken on the adoption of the amendment and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. Calhoun then moved to amend the bill by adding to the end of the 1st section the following proviso:

"Provided, That any change made by this act which, according to the provisions of the act of 24 March, 1837, commonly called the compromise act, cannot take effect prior to the 1st July, 1842 shall be postponed until that time."

After some remarks by Mr. Calhoun, in favor of the amendment, and Messrs. Clay and Huntington, against the same; the question was taken, and decided in the negative, yeas 11, nays 24.

Mr. Wright then moved to amend the bill by inserting at line 88 of the 1st section, after the word "wood," the following: "But this proviso shall not be so construed as to increase the duty now by law imposed upon the wood actually and lawfully imported from any port or place within the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada."

After a few remarks from Mr. Evans, the question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and decided in the negative; yeas 13, nays 24.

Mr. Miller moved to amend the bill by inserting in the 50th line of the first section, after the word "judic," "ground flint;" which motion was adopted. Mr. Benton then moved to amend the bill by inserting in the 22d line of the 1st section, after the words to wit: the following: "blankets costing not above 75 cents each, from and after the 30th day of July, 1842."

Mr. B. said the rates of duty on these blankets during the administration of Jackson and Van Buren were comparatively small not over five per cent.—quite a low rate of duty. He desired to have the article exempted because it was used generally by poor people.

Mr. Clay opposed the amendment on the ground that the revenue derived from this source was considerable, and that every dollar it would be wanted.

The debate was further continued by Messrs. Benton and Clay, when the question was taken on the amendment and decided in the negative; yeas 20, nays 25.

Mr. Benton said, if revenue was the object, he could devise a plan to put a million of dollars in the treasury at least. He would move to strike out from the 1st section the article of raw hides. On this motion quite an animated discussion took place, the amendment having been warmly supported by Mr. Benton and as warmly opposed by Mr. Evans.

Mr. Walker said he was not prepared to vote for the proposition of his friend from Missouri. Raw hides were an article which entered largely into the commerce of Mississippi in a manufactured state, and he would not agree to lay any additional burdens upon the people of that state.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment, and decided in the negative; yeas 14, nays 28.

Mr. Benton then moved to amend the bill by adding the following:

"Be it further enacted, That from and after the last day of December, one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, there shall be laid and collected throughout the United States, its territories, and all other parts of Cuba, a tax on bank notes and all other paper put into circulation as money, by corporations, individuals, or companies, as follows:

On notes, and other paper for circulation, of the denomination of twenty dollars and upwards, one per centum per annum on the amount of the circulation thereof.

On notes, and other circulating paper of less denomination than five dollars, four per centum per annum on the amount of the circulation thereof, with two per centum per annum in addition thereto, until the said tax amounts to twelve per centum per annum.

On notes, and other circulating paper of less denomination than five dollars, four per centum per annum on the amount of the circulation thereof, with two per centum per annum in addition thereto, until the said tax amounts to twelve per centum per annum.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That every description of paper put into circulation by corporations, companies or individuals, which shall be transferable by delivery, and without the endorsement of each passer thereof, and without being subject to the laws which apply to inland bills of exchange, shall be held and deemed to be circulating paper within the meaning of this act, and shall be subject to the tax hereby imposed.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every corporation, company, or individual, who shall issue or pay, or be the owner of, any promissory note, bill, or other writing, shall be subject to the tax aforesaid, and within thirty days after the last day of September in each and every year, shall make out and transmit to the secretary of the treasury and the marshal of the district in which the said issue was made, a statement, verified by affidavit, showing the average quarterly amount of the circulation of their notes or paper for the three first quarters of the year, and the estimated average circulation for the remaining quarter; the average of which four quarters shall be held and taken to be the annual circulation; the said statement to be made out according to a form to be obtained from the secretary of the treasury, through the marshal of the district; on failure to make which return, the said corporation, company, or individual shall be liable to a double tax, and to a fine of fifty thousand dollars.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That immediately on receiving said returns, the secretary of the treasury shall cause the tax accruing thereon to be collected by the marshal, and duly accounted for and paid over by him.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That a per centum shall be allowed to each marshal for his compensation in collecting and paying over said money.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That additional and separate security shall be required from each marshal for the faithful discharge of his duties under this act.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all double duty incurred under this act for a default in not making returns of the circulation, shall be computed by the marshal of the district and the secretary of the treasury according to the reputed capital employed, or circulation issued, by the delinquent party; and all fines under this act shall be recoverable by action of debt, and shall be paid by the delinquent to the use of the law officers of the United States prosecuting the same.

Mr. B. spoke for some time in support of the amendment, and in favor of taxing paper with pictures stamped on it, which has the effect to increase the nominal value of property the times beyond the value of the pictures. He said that the machines had no taxes to pay, to say nothing of other privileges, such as drawing interest for three dollars on one, and exemption from paying duties, to say nothing of putting the government at defiance whenever it suited their fancy. He said this paper circulated in England, and the course followed there was that indicated by his amendment.

The question having been taken on the adoption of this amendment, the vote stood; yeas 8, nays 28.

Mr. Benton then moved to amend the bill by striking out from the 1st section, in line 55, the words "raw hides of all kinds." This proposition was voted down by 25 to 18.

The bill was then reported to the senate; and, on the question of concurring with the committee in exempting tea and coffee from duties, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question being then on concurring with the committee in making watches, parts of watches, jewelry, &c. liable to a duty of 20 per cent.

A long discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Calhoun, Huntington, Clay, of Alabama, Bates, of Kentucky, Wright, Serier, Buchanan, King, Walker, of Kentucky, and others participated; when the vote was taken, and decided in the affirmative, as follows: yeas 30, nays 12.

Mr. Simmons said that it was at his suggestion that bleaching powder had been inserted in the bill, since which he had been fully satisfied that the article could be manufactured in this country in any quantity, and he should therefore move that the senate do not concur in the amendment.

This motion having prevailed, bleaching powder is now liable to a duty of 20 per cent.

Mr. Allen then moved to amend the bill by exempting salt from duty after 30th June, 1842, and on that motion he withdrew the amendment.

The question having been taken, the vote stood: yeas 30, nays 24.

An amendment was offered by Mr. Choate, in relation to an allowance of drawback on all spirits manufactured from foreign molasses according to the quantity of molasses used in their manufacture, which was put to the chair, which was read in explanation.

This amendment was opposed by Messrs. Clay and Benton, and on the question being taken it was disagreed to.

Mr. Clay then proposed to so amend the bill as that it should be made to take effect from and after the 30th of September. He was aware there was a great diversity of opinion in relation to the subject; but on the whole there was a great majority who concurred on some short day. Every disapproving merchant must have seen that the session would not terminate without some such law, and the only regret was that the bill should have been so long before congress—long enough, in fact, to have allowed orders to have been sent, and returns received, or other orders countermanded.

Mr. Wright said he felt it his duty to move an amendment to the amendment, by moving to insert the words "thirty days from and after the passage of this act"—a time in his opinion too short, but would allow of any orders being countermanded. He left it to the sense of the senate, and should content himself with asking the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. Clay said the bill had stood from the first September, ever since it was first introduced, and all had had time during the discussion to have taken what steps they might have deemed most conducive to their interests.

Mr. Woodbury was in favor of the time fixed by the senate of Kentucky, as well from the advantages that would result as the conveniences to the department. It was the time the commercial year commenced, and from which the accounts were made up.

The question having been taken on the amendment to the amendment, it was decided in the negative; yeas 11, nays 22.

Mr. Calhoun then said he felt it his duty to move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "from the 1st November next." He thought a shorter time than this would be an act of the grossest injustice that ever people were guilty of. You almost said, Mr. C. commit a robbery, when you allow one merchant to avail himself of the privilege of this bill, while others might sacrifice thousands from ignorance of it. All revenue bills should go into operation at a distant period of time.

Mr. Benton had voted for the proposition of the senate to amend the bill, and should vote with still more satisfaction for the amendment of the senator from South Carolina, because it extended still further the time. All revenue bills appeared to him to be drafted with reference to New York, while New Orleans, an important, though distant port, was never thought of.

Mr. Clay thought vast importations had already been made. Since this bill had been under consideration, there had been ample time to have gone to England and France and return with cargoes; and, if it were put off until the 1st November, orders would be sent and all the warehouses in Europe would be made to disgorge their contents, to the great injury of the revenue. To fix a short day would, in his opinion, be better for commerce, for the country and for the revenue.

Mr. Choate said: While on this side of the Cape it would do very well. Tea was nothing new, but he referred to the difficulties in the East. The difficulties in China had driven a large number of our vessels into the Manila trade, and not to make provision in such cases would be to make the burden fall on the importer; and he asked if it was right to break up a well-planned enterprise which the pirate and tempest had squandered.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. Calhoun to the amendment, and decided in the negative as follows: yeas 9, nays 28.

Mr. Bates then moved an amendment to extend the time beyond the Cape to the 1st of August next.

Mr. Calhoun moved to amend the amendment by allowing the trade to vessels on distant voyages this side the Cape; but the proposition was negatived.

The amendment of Mr. Bates was adopted, and the amendments ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill, from the house, making appropriations for fortifications in the State of New York, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the committee on military affairs.

The amended bill from the house of representatives making appropriations for the repairing the Potomac bridge was taken up; and on motion of Mr. Morrill the amendment was concurred in, and the bill passed.

The bill making appropriation for the payment of diplomatic agents, which had been discussed during the morning hour, was taken up; the question pending being the motion of Mr. Mangum to strike out the salary of the minister to Naples.

On this motion a debate ensued, in which Messrs. Bates, Clay, Walker, Clay, of Alabama, and Rives participated; when the question was taken and decided in the affirmative; yeas 23, nays 18.

Mr. Sevier then moved to reduce the salaries of the outfit of the ministers to Madrid and Brazil to that for charges.

On this motion a very interesting debate ensued, in which Messrs. Sevier, Buchanan, Archer and Rives participated; when the question was taken separately on Spain and Brazil, and severally decided in the negative.

Mr. Buchanan then moved to reduce the amount in the bill from sixty-three thousand dollars to fifty-eight; which motion was adopted.

Mr. Tallmadge then moved to amend the bill by adding to the same an allowance of three months' pay to the officers of the two houses of congress, to the messengers, pages, &c.; which motion was adopted; when the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill passed.

The amendment to the revenue bill having now been engrossed, the bill was read the third time, and on the question, shall this bill pass?

Mr. Wright rose and spoke against the bill, giving his reasons for the vote he was about to give.

Mr. Clay replied with much animation.

Messrs. Buchanan, Calhoun, Walker, Clay, Preston, Allen and King severally gave their opinions of the bill.

On the question of its passage the vote stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Barrow, Bates, Bayard, Berrien, Buchanan, Chute, Clay of Alabama, Clay of Kentucky, Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Fulton, Graham, Henderson, Johnston, King, Livingston, Merrick, Miller, Morehead, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Sevier, Simmons, Smith, of Ind. Southard, Sturgeon, Tallmadge, White, Young—23.

NOES—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Calhoun, Culbertson, Linn, Norton, Nicholson, Tappan, Walker, Woodbury, Wright—11.

And the senate adjourned, after being in session from ten in the morning until five in the evening.

SEPTEMBER 8. Mr. Preston, from the committee on the militia, reported the bill from the house making appropriations for the repair of forts at Staten Island, New York.

Mr. Evans, from the committee on finance, reported, with an amendment, the bill from the house to amend the fifth section of the act for the support of the military academy at West Point, Merrick, Miller, and to prohibit the investment of trust funds of the United States in the stocks of several states.

The joint resolution authorising the purchase by the secretary of the treasury of American water-power, for the use of the navy, and to extend in force for seven years, was taken up, with an amendment from the naval committee, that such purchase shall be made with regard to the price and quality of the article.

Mr. Mangum had learned from the secretary of the navy that he had been in the practice of the department for some years to contract for and give higher prices for domestic hemp than for the foreign article, when the quality was equal. The committee did not think, in reporting the amendment, that it was proper to give a great premium to domestic hemp. The amendment regarding the purchase according to the price and quality would make very little difference with the practice of the department, and he thought it ought to be adopted.

Mr. Calhoun moved to lay the resolution on the table till next session. He, however, at request, withdrew the motion.

Mr. Mangum thought the resolution, as amended, could do no harm, and might stimulate to the purchase of domestic hemp.

The amendment was then adopted.

Mr. Benton thought the resolution ought to be amended so as it would give a general stimulus to the production of hemp throughout the country.

Mr. King thought it was best to leave the matter to the sound discretion of the secretary. If domestic hemp could be as advantageously procured as here, the secretary would feel bound to purchase it. He proposed to leave the matter as it stood.

After further brief remarks by Mr. Woodbury in favor of, and Mr. Calhoun against the resolution—Mr. Calhoun renewed the motion to lay the resolution on the table. This was negatived.

The resolution was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The bill from the house making an appropriation of $33,300 for repairs of fortifications on Staten Island, New York, was taken up.

Mr. King hoped they would have some explanation on the subject. Did that island belong to the general government?

Mr. Clay said some doubt had existed, but it had been ascertained satisfactorily in the other house that it was the property of the United States. The sum of money was the result of estimates of the proper department, for the repair of forts which were owned property.

Mr. Wright and Huntington spoke of the question of the validity of the title of the United States to these forts, and as the matter had not been sufficiently examined, Mr. H. moved to lay the resolution on the table. He, however, at request, withdrew the motion, and Mr. Sevier expressed the hope that it would not be laid on the table. He wished to move an amendment, to appropriate $25,000 for repairs of Fort Gibson, Arkansas.

After a further conversation, Mr. Huntington renewed the motion to lay on the table, which was rejected; yeas 19, nays 21.

Mr. Wright offered an amendment, applying a part of this appropriation for the purchase of the sites of the forts, in case it should appear on examination by the attorney general that the title of the U. States to them was not valid.

After some conversation by various senators, the amendment of Mr. Wright was adopted; yeas 31, nays 17.

The amendment of Mr. Sevier was then adopted; yeas 28, nays 17.

Mr. Huntington moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to the first Monday in December next. This motion was carried; yeas 24, nays 21.

Thus the bill was postponed till next session.

Mr. Bayard, from the select committee on that subject, reported a resolution for the engagement of reporters by the senate. The resolution and report were ordered to be printed; and he gave notice that he should call them up, for consideration, to-morrow.

The resolution authorising the purchase of domestic tinned-rope for the use of the navy, was taken up, the amendment having been engrossed, and was adopted.

The bill from the house to repeal the 6th section of the act for the support of the military academy at West Point, and to prohibit the investment of trust funds of the United States in the stocks of the several states, was then taken up.

The amendment of the committee provided for the repeal of so much of the sixth section of the act of 1838 appropriating for the support of the military academy at West Point, as requires the secretary of the treasury to invest the annual interest accruing on the money arising from the bequest of the late of James Smithson, of the United States, in the stocks of the several states, and that the secretary be required to invest the accruing interest from such fund in any stock of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than five per centum per annum. Mr. Woodbury spoke briefly, after which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. Clay said the relation between the government and the states, of the latter being debtors to the former, ought always to be avoided; for what means could be used to coerce the states if they refused to pay? We had stocks of our own, in which this trust fund of the government could be invested. He should prefer the adoption of this principle, that in all cases of trust funds, an account should be opened with the government of the United States, and that the fund should be held in the treasury and it pay an annual interest on it, until its object was accomplished. He regarded this Smithsonian fund as a sacred trust, which the government would be bound to restore if it should ever be lost; and that being the case—the government being responsible for them, it would be better that they should remain in the treasury, under our charge.

Mr. Wright was understood to concur in this opinion; and after some further remarks by Messrs. Woodbury, Calhoun and Sevier, the amendment was engrossed, the bill read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Evans its title was amended so as to be in effect "an act to repeal a part of the sixth section of the act for the support of the military academy of the United States for 1838, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. Mangum the bill from the house "making appropriation for the purchase of naval ordnance, ordnance stores, and other purposes," was taken up.

Mr. Mangum offered an amendment, which he said had been recommended by the navy department, to add a section to the bill, providing that the president of the United States cause such increase to be made to the marine band, as he shall deem necessary and proper, not to exceed 500 men.

He said this had been proposed by the department, the increase would be about fifty per cent. on the whole expenses of the corps, and he did not know as the senate, considering the financial condition of the country, would be prepared at this time of a session to make such an increase in this session.

Mr. Woodbury opposed the amendment.

Mr. King thought it remarkable that the chairman of the committee should offer such an amendment, which he could not vote for himself. He opposed this increase of expenditure.

Mr. Mangum said there was no doubt but an increase in the corps was required; but with a thin se-late, at the heel of a session, and with a reduced treasury, he did not know as the senate would vote for it.

Mr. Clay suggested the propriety of his withdrawing the amendment, instead of having it voted down by the senate, so as not to prejudice its success in future, when it should be acted on.

Mr. Mangum withdrew the amendment.

Mr. Calhoun opposed the bill, at this late period of the session, when no notice had been given of it from the department, and when the state of the treasury was so reduced. It was the commencement of a permanent system, and it could do but little harm to have it lay on the table till next session, when they could be informed of the state of the navy, and its wants. He would move to lay it on the table, if the chairman had no objection.

Mr. Mangum hoped it would be passed now. It was a matter of indispensable necessity for the navy, and the appropriation was of much more urgent necessity than the lavish appropriations for fortifications that had been made, or than any other appropriation that could be made for the defence of the country.

Messrs. Calhoun, Woodbury and Benton further opposed, and Messrs. Mangum, Henderson and Allen advocated the bill.

Mr. Calhoun moved to postpone its further consideration to the 1st Monday in December next. This was negatived by yeas 23, nays 38—Messrs. Calhoun and Nicholson voting in the affirmative.

The bill was then read a third time and passed. It appropriates $600,000, a part of which is to be applied for the purpose of making experiments and improvements in the navy, by steam vessels and otherwise.

The president stated that there was no other business on the table of the senate; and it then went into executive session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 1. Mr. Stuart, of Illinois, introduced to the house his colleague, the hon. Zadok Casey, member elect from that state, who was qualified and took his seat.

Mr. Adams introduced again the subject of the investment of the Smithsonian bequest and other trust funds in state stocks, and introduced a series of four resolutions, commencing with the contract of the late administration in assuming state debts by those investments of trust funds. The resolutions further declared that the United States government were bound in honor and good faith to make good any losses to these trust funds while in their hands, and forbade any further investments of that character. As there was a general call for an immediate decision of the question, Mr. Adams expressed his willingness to have the resolutions pass without debate.

Mr. Underwood expressed his dissent from the principle that government was bound to make good the dilapidation of trust funds. The claim was not good in law, unless the investment had been made with intent to misapply or waste the trust fund. He was not prepared to vote for all the resolutions now, nor was he prepared to discuss them.

Mr. Adams, after a few remarks; withdrew the three first resolutions, and the last only was submitted to the house, being declaratory of the impropriety of any future use of trust funds. It passed without a division.

Mr. Wood asked leave to introduce a resolution to inquire of the secretary of the treasury as to the causes of the removal of the government money in New York to the Commercial bank in that city. Objected to.

Mr. W. O. Butler then called up the McLeod resolution, and spoke an hour on it.

The bill making appropriations to the post office department, having been returned from the senate with an amendment.

Mr. Briggs moved that the house now take it up and consider it.

Mr. J. L. White moved an adjournment, but was understood to withdraw for a moment.

Mr. Wise objected to adjourning till all the business on the table was disposed of. He was called to order.

Mr. Briggs urged immediate action on the amendments as it would require but a few moments.

Mr. Andrews inquired if the motion to adjourn were not now pending, and insisted that it be now put.

Mr. White said he had not withdrawn the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn; and the house then refused to adjourn—yeas 58, nays 98.

The senate amendment to the post office appropriation bill was then agreed to, without debate or division.

Mr. Proffit asked leave to introduce a resolution of inquiry demanding of the secretary of war the names of fraudulent contractors allied to by him in his report. The house refused to grant leave.

The house then adjourned at 12 o'clock.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 2. Mr. Cross, of Arkansas, introduced Mr. Dodge, delegate elected from the territory of Iowa, who was qualified and took his seat.

Mr. Gearty asked leave of absence until the end of the session for his colleague, Mr. C. H. Williams; which was granted.

The speaker laid before the house a letter from Mr. Shields, of Alabama, stating that he had been unavoidably called away, and requesting that another gentleman might be nominated in his stead as a member of the committee of elections. And it was ordered accordingly.

On leave given, Mr. McKay offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary of war be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this house, at the commencement of the next session, the number of small arms of various kinds, which have been purchased by and are in the several arsenals and depots, including those in the use of the army; stating the number lost or destroyed by fire per annum; the number which the states may severally possess, including those in the hands of the militia; giving the number that have been issued to each state under the laws of congress, and the number procured by the states themselves.

Resolved, further, That the secretary also report the number of arms manufactured annually at each of the national arsenals, and whether that number can be increased; to what extent and to what expense; the number of private arsenals in the United States, designating the states in which located; the number of arms manufactured by them, annually, accompanied with a comparative statement of the cost of the manufacture of each kind of small arms at the national and private arsenals respectively.

Resolved, further, That the secretary report the cost of transporting arms from each of the national arsenals to the several arsenals and depots; particularly those in the western states and territories; the number of militia in the United States, and any other information which may be useful in enabling congress to decide what further legislation may be necessary to provide for arming the militia.

On motion of Mr. Adams, the house took up, and without debate, adopted the following resolution heretofore offered by him:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to prepare and report to this house, at the commencement of the next session of congress, a statement showing the amount of stocks issued, and authorized by law to be issued, by the legislatures of the several states and territories of this union, including the District of Columbia, and constituting the existing debts of the said states, territories and District; specifying the amount of the stocks thus issued, and the rates and terms of interest payable by the holders of the same; the date of the maturity of each loan, the dates of the legislative acts by which they were severally authorized, the objects of internal improvement or otherwise for which the funds thus raised were to be applied; the stipulated times of reimbursement of each loan, the prospect of completion of the public works to the accomplishment of which the issue of the said stocks was authorized.

On leave given, Mr. McKay presented a joint resolution making it the duty of the attorney general to examine into the titles of the lands or sites for the purpose of erecting theron arsenaries and other public works and buildings, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and then, by general consent, was referred to a committee.

Mr. Fillmore, from the committee of ways and means, to whom resolutions of instruction had heretofore been referred, reported a bill to repeal the sixth section of the act entitled an act to provide for the support of the military academy of the United States, passed the 27th of March, 1820, and the act of the 27th of July, 1838, and to prohibit any investment of the funds of the United States in stocks of the several states; which was read twice.

Mr. Fillmore asked that, as the bill contained no appropriation, and need not, therefore, be committed, it put on its third reading now. And the bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Kenney, of Maryland, from the committee on commerce, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of eleven members, not more than one of which shall be from any one state, be appointed by the chair, for the purpose of taking evidence at the principal ports of entry and elsewhere, as to the operation of the existing system and rates of duties on imports upon the manufacturing, commercial, and agricultural interests of the country; and of procuring, generally, such information as may be useful to congress in any revision of the revenue laws which may be attempted at the next session.

On the reading of this said committee be authorized to sit during the recess, and to employ a clerk.

After some conversation, involving a point of order, Mr. Ingersoll moved to amend the resolution by striking out the words "sit during the recess and to."

Mr. Care Johnson asked the yeas and nays.

Mr. Dawson moved to lay the resolution and amendment on the table.

Mr. Ingersoll asked the yeas and nays on that motion, which were ordered, and, being taken, were yeas 57, noes 62. So the resolution and amendment was laid on the table.

A message was received from the senate informing the house that the senate had agreed to the conference asked by the house of the disagreeing votes being in favor of the amendment of the senate to the fortification bill.

And also, that the senate had passed the bill, (hereinafter referred to), in relation to the Choctaw reservations.

Mr. Randolph, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the act making appropriations for the post office department, and had found the sums to be correct. Whereupon the bill received the signature of the speaker.

The house resumed the consideration of the following resolution, heretofore offered by Mr. J. G. Floyd:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be directed to inform this house, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether any officer of the army, or the attorney general of the United States, has, since the 4th of March last, been directed to issue a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered.

Mr. Floyd addressed the house in answer to the arguments of members on the other side, and in about fifteen minutes was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour.

The speaker announced the unfinished business of yesterday to be the motion of Mr. Proffit to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the following resolution:

Whereas, the secretary of war, in his report of the 31st of March last, makes use of the following language:

"The attention of the department has been directed to the subject of Indian treaties, and particularly to the manner in which some of these recently made have been executed, and the manner in which some of the states of money for the emigration and subsistence of Indians."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

"The frauds that have been practised in the southwest have been, to some extent, inquired into, and a full and complete copy of the correspondence of the state of the Union, or of Alexander McLeod; and if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of such officer; and whether, by such communication, or otherwise, the British government has been given to understand that Mr. McLeod will be released or surrendered."

The question on the motion to suspend the rules was then taken and decided in the negative: yeas 71, nays 18. (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative), the rules were not suspended.

Mr. Garret Davis moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of taking up the following joint resolution heretofore offered by him:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States in congress assembled, That hereafter all printing by the order of the heads of the executive departments, or any other agent of the United States, shall, where the rates are now higher, be done and performed at the fixed rates established at the present session of congress by the two houses for printing done by their order; and all accounts for such printing shall be settled and paid in strict conformity to such rates by all officers of the United States.

Mr. Lewis Williams asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and, being taken, were: yeas 140, nays 3. So the rules were suspended.

And the question being on the engrossment of the resolution, Mr. Davis asked the previous question.

Mr. Wise asked Mr. D. to withdraw the motion, to enable him to offer an amendment instructing the clerks of the two houses to report at the next session on the best and most economical mode of separating the government from the public press, and to submit their views, &c.

Mr. Davis declined to withdraw the motion for the previous question, remarking that the gentleman could present his resolution as a distinct proposition.

And the question being taken on the demand for the previous question, there was a second.

And the main question, (being on engrossment), was ordered, and, being taken, the joint resolution was ordered and read.

Mr. Stout moved the previous question on the final passage of the resolution. And there was a second.

And the main question, (being on the passage of the resolution), was ordered, and, being taken, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Haldet, from the committee on elections, to whom had been referred the papers and documents in relation to the contested election from the territory of Florida, made a report concluding with the following resolution:

"Resolved, That David Levy, esq., is not a citizen of the United States, in pursuance of any law or treaty thereof; and that, therefore, said David Levy, esq., is not entitled to a seat in the house of representatives as a delegate from the territory of Florida, to the 27th congress."

(H. moved that the report be laid on the table, and, with all the accompanying papers and documents, be printed.)

Mr. Williams, of Maryland, a member of the committee on elections, rose and said he dissented from the report.

Mr. Stout expressed a hope that some of the members who voted for the previous question on the question of the contested election from New Jersey, would be prepared to act with equal promptitude on this report.

The report was then laid on the table, and, with all the accompanying papers and documents, was ordered to be printed.

And Mr. Haldet gave notice that he would call up the report in a day or two.

The bill from the senate entitled "an act to provide for the satisfaction of outstanding Choctaw reservations, under the 19th of March, 1838, and the act of the 27th of July, 1838, and to prohibit any investment of the funds of the United States in stocks of the several states," was taken up and read twice by its title.

The bill was referred to the committee on public lands.

A message was received from the president of the United States, by the hands of Mr. Tyler, esq., informing the house that the president had approved and signed the bill making appropriations for the funeral expenses of William Henry Harrison, deceased, late president of the U. States.

On motion of Mr. Fillmore, the house adjourned.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 3. On motion of Mr. Butges, the house took up a report from Mr. Tyler, esq., giving the frank privilege, during life, to the widow of the late president of the United States, Wm. Henry Harrison.

The resolution having been twice read—

Mr. Andrews moved so to amend it as to strike out the words "weighing two ounces and under;" which amendment was adopted.

Mr. Harving suggested that the resolution should be changed to an act, so as to conform to the precedent set in the case of Mrs. Madison.

And, by common consent, the form was changed by striking out the word "Resolved," &c., and inserting "That it was ordered."

Mr. Harren made the question that this subject did not come within the rule prescribing the action of the house during the present session.

Some conversation followed, and the point of order was overruled by the speaker.

On motion of Mr. Briggs, the bill was then read a third time and passed.

On leave, Mr. Fillmore offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary of state be required to prepare after the close of the commencement of the next session as practicable, a statement of the privileges and restrictions of the commercial intercourse of the United States with all foreign nations similar to that contained in the Senate Document 18, 1837, document 8, 1st session, 26th congress, only changing the denominations of the foreign money, weights and measures into those of the United States, according to the custom house entries of domestic goods, and adding columns showing the average amount and value of the articles exported to each country for the years 1838, 1839 and 1840, and of the duties on the same; together with a summary of the average agricultural values and exports to each country for those years, of articles the growth, produce or manufacture of the United States, with the average amount of duties thereon according to each country. The house resumed the consideration of the resolution in the McLeod case.

Mr. Floyd resumed his remarks from yesterday and concluded.

Mr. Everett took the floor with the intention, he said, of giving a general outline of his views on this subject, which he did not do.

Mr. Boardman moved to lay the resolution on the table. Mr. J. G. Floyd asked the yeas and nays.

A motion was made that the house do now adjourn, which prevailing the house adjourned.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 4. The speaker laid before the house the following resolutions:

A letter from the secretary of war, transmitting a contract entered into by his predecessor, Mr. Poinsett, with the agent of Jean B. and Pelagi Ferriault, for the purchase of the island or point of land at the junction of the St. Peter's and Mississippi rivers, as a part of the military reserve at Fort Snelling, together with various papers in relation to the subject. Referred to the committee on military affairs.

Also, a letter from the secretary of war, transmitting a report of Lieut. W. H. Emory, in relation to the situation and improvement of the harbor of New-Castle, of the river Delaware. Laid on the table.

On leave, Mr. Caldwell offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the president of the U. States be requested to cause to be communicated to this house whether any, and, if any, what regulations exist, by treaty stipulations, or by the laws of the United States, in relation to the rights of Texas, on the subject of the collection of debts, retaining the possession of property, and enforcing legal liabilities and rights by citizens of one government against those of another, and whether the same laws and treaty stipulations as have direct relation to the commercial intercourse between the said governments.

Mr. Goode, of Virginia, laid before the house the proceedings of two general public meetings of citizens of that state. The resolutions were received and laid on the table.

On leave given, Mr. Stearns submitted a motion that certain papers on the files of the house, having reference to the selection of sites upon the western waters for marine hospitals, (and not heretofore printed), be printed for the use of the house; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. Halsted, chairman of the committee on elections, reported from that committee the following resolution:

Resolved, That the case of David Levy, claiming a seat in this house as delegate from Florida, be postponed until Monday next, at 10 o'clock; and that he be heard at the bar of this house upon his case, if he shall so desire.

Mr. Briggs moved to lay the tables of the members; but as he did not hold to the doctrine that judges were called upon to decide a case before reading the evidence; nor that the rights of individuals were to be passed upon without giving them an opportunity to be heard; and, as he dissented from a decision to that effect made in a certain case which should be nameless, he had offered this resolution, which he hoped would be adopted.

Mr. Briggs suggested to Mr. H. so to modify the resolution as to provide that Mr. Levy should be heard "as a person or by counsel." This was the usual mode.

Mr. Halsted modified the resolution to read accordingly. And, as modified, the resolution was adopted.

The speaker announced the unfinished business of the evening hour to be the resolution, heretofore offered by Mr. G. P. Briggs of New York, in the case of Alexander McLeod, the immediate consideration of which being that of Mr. Boardman to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. B. withdrew the motion to lay on the table at the request of Mr. Adams, when Mr. Adams addressed the house for the first time in most earnest and eloquent speech upon the general merits of the resolutions, and the objects at which it aimed; in reply to the remarks of some other gentlemen who had preceded him; and in a masterly vindication of the course of Mr. Webster with reference to this point in our foreign negotiations.

At the close of his remarks, Mr. A. with great reluctance, renewed the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

After the question was taken and decided in the affirmative as follows: yeas 109, nays 70. So the resolution was laid on the table.

A message was received from the senate, by the hands of A. Dickens, esq. secretary, informing the house that the president of the United States, did on the bill to provide for taking the sixth census of enumeration of inhabitants of the United States, &c.

Also, the bill entitled "an act in addition to an act entitled an act to carry into effect a convention between the United States and the Mexican republic."

Also, the bill entitled "an act to provide for the distribution of the printed returns of the sixth census."

Also, that the senate had passed the following bills:

An act to provide for the better collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue by means of the corporation to be styled the fiscal corporation of the United States.

An act authorizing the transmission of letters and packets to and from Mrs. Harrison free of postage.

An act to provide for placing Greenough's statue of Washington in the rotundo of the capitol, and for expending thereon mentioned.

An act to provide for repairing the Potomac bridge, with an amendment.

Also, that the senate had agreed to the amendment of this house to the fourth amendment to the bill No. 8, entitled, "an act making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, &c."

Mr. Randolph from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the act "to provide for the better collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue by means of the corporation to be styled the fiscal corporation of the United States," and had found the same correct. Whereupon the bill received the signature of the speaker.

A message was received from the president of the U. States, by the hands of John Tyler, jr. esq. his private secretary, notifying the house that the president had signed the bill "to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the public lands and to grant pre-emption rights."

Mr. John C. Clark offered the following resolution: Resolved, That no purchase of paper for the use of the house be made until the committee appointed on that subject report to the house at the next session.

To which Mr. Briggs suggested a modification "that no further stationary should be purchased until after the meeting of the next session of congress, and not until after the select committee shall have reported, and it is conclusively stated on the journal," which was adopted, and the amendment passed.

Mr. Fillmore rose and said that the report of the committee on conference (heretofore appointed) on the bill making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, had been delayed to this time, in consequence of an accidental omission on the part of the senate to act upon one of the amendments.

Since that time the senate had concurred in the amendment of this house to their amendment; and the only remaining question now that prevented the vote being finally disposed of, was the disagreeing vote of Mr. Adams in relation to the appropriation of $30,000 for surveys for military purposes.

The committee of conference had had a meeting, and he had been instructed to make the following report:

The committee of conference appointed by this house and the senate on the disagreement of the two houses on the second amendment of the senate to the "bill making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities," have had a conference, and unanimously recommend that the house recede from its disagreement to said amendment and concur with the senate in the same.

The report having been read, Mr. Fillmore moved that the house concur therein.

A communication from the topographical bureau on the subject of these surveys was read.

Mr. Ward inquired of the speaker what would become of the bill if the house should now disagree to this report?

The speaker said the bill would be lost.

After a few remarks from Messrs. Fillmore, Dawson, Brown, of Pennsylvania, Wise and Tillingshast—

Mr. Lewis Williams moved the previous question. And there was a second.

And the main question (being on concurring in the report of the committee of conference) was ordered to be now taken.

Mr. Cere Johnson asked the yeas and nays on the main question, which were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Landolf W. Andrews, Sherlock J. Andrews, Arnold, Ayer, Baker, Brown, Barton, Bidlack, Birdseye, Black, Blair, Boardman, Burdick, Caldwell, Canby, Chandler, Clark, Clinton, Brown, Burnett, William Butler, Calhoun, Caruthers, Casey, John C. Clark, Cowen, Cranston, Cravens, Garrett, Davis, Wm. C. Dawson, John Edwards, Everett, Ferris, H. H. Foster, George Fox, Giddings, George H. Goode, Greig, Hershbach, Hall, Halsted, William S. Hastings, Henry, Howard, Hunt, Ingersoll, James Irvine, William W. Irwin, James Isaac D. Jones, King, Lane, Linn, Mallory, Alfred Marshall, Massachusetts, Johnson, Mattocks, Maxwell, Maynard, Moore, Morrison, Morris, Morrow, Osborne, Parmenter, Partridge, Peniston, Feltwell, Ramsay, Benjamin Randall, Alexander Randall, Randolph, Richard, Rawster, Salmonst, Sergeant, Simonton, Slade, Smith, Solers, Stanley, Stokely, Stratton, John T. Stuart, Summers, John B. Thompson, Tillingshast, Toland, Tompkinson, Triplett, Trumbull, Van Buren, J. V. Vane, Ward, Washington, Brooks, Edw. D. White, Thomas W. Williams, Lewis Williams, Winthrop, York, Augustus Young—104.

NAYS—Messrs. Arrington, Atherton, Banks, Beeson, Bowyer, Boyd, Child, V. Brown, Milton Brown, William B. Campbell, Thomas J. Campbell, Chapman, Clinton, Coles, Cross, Daniel, Richard D. Davis, Dean, Deberry, Doan, Doug, Eastman, John C. Edwards, Egbert, John G. Evans, George Fox, George H. Goode, William G. Goode, Gordon, Green, John Hastings, Hays, Hopkins, Houck, Houston, Hubbard, Cave John, John W. Jones, Keim, Lewis, Abraham McClellan, Robert McCall, McCall, McKim, Milton McKim, John Thompson Mason, Mathews, Mead, Newhard, Payne, Pope, Rayner, Rencher, Reynolds, Rich, Riggs, Shaw, Shepherd, Snyder, Stearns, Sweney, Talcott, Turpin, Underwood, Underwood, Wm. W. Williams, J. L. Williams, Wise, Wood—71.

So the house concurred in the report of the committee of conference; and thus the bill, after many delays and agonies, awaits only the signature of the president to become a law.

And, on motion of Mr. Yorks, the house adjourned.

MONDAY, SEPT. 6. Mr. Irwin, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the bill to provide for placing the statue of Washington by Greenough in the rotundo of the capitol, and had found the same correct.

Whereupon the bill received the signature of the speaker.

Mr. Jones, of Virginia, asked the consent of the house to be allowed to offer certain resolutions adopted by a large and respectable meeting of the democratic party of the county of Amelia, in the state of Virginia, expressive of opposition to the course of congress this session, and declaring their approval of the course now presented, vetoing the bank bill, for which they tender him their thanks, and their support. The resolutions were received and laid upon the table.

On motion of Mr. Dawson, certain papers relating to the case of Lieut. Murray were withdrawn from the files of the house.

Mr. Sumner, chairman of the select committee heretofore appointed on the contingent expenses of the house, reported the following resolution: Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the expenditures from the contingent fund of the house of representatives, be continued by report by bill or otherwise at the next session of congress.

Mr. S. said that he felt it due to the members of the committee to state, that immediately after the adoption of the resolution upon which they were appointed, they entered into the discharge of the duties assigned them. Communications were addressed to the several officers of the house having control, either directly or indirectly, of the contingent fund, and their answers to various interrogatories were received. The examination in the clerk's office were laborious and much time was necessarily to the preparation of the tabular information called for by the committee. When the clerk's report was received by the committee, the session of the house had so far progressed as to justify the belief of an adjournment, leaving to the committee not sufficient time for such an investigation of the matter submitted to them as would be satisfactory to themselves or the house. He himself had been constantly engaged on the committee of elections, and his colleagues on the committee of investigation had also been embarrassed by their labors on other committees. Had they, however, supposed that the session of congress would have continued to the present time, they would have endeavored to have reported fully on this important subject. The resolution now offered, he said, simply proposed the continuance over of the committee until the next session, in order that they might report. All the materials were in possession of the committee, and all which was time to fit it for the action of the house.

Mr. S. said the committee had found the field in which they had been engaged an ample one, imperiously requiring the hand of retrenchment and reform. The expenditures from the contingent fund had been in many respects wasteful and extravagant, and he hoped all would unite in correcting them. As to the stationery furnished for the use of the house, much of it had been of opinion existed in relation to the best mode of providing and distributing it among the members. Some were in favor of cutting it off altogether, and leaving the members of the house to furnish themselves. Others preferred supplying a fixed and limited quantity, while some proposed paying to each member a specific sum, in money, by way of commutation, in lieu of stationery. These various schemes would all be duly considered by the committee, should the present resolution be adopted, and some permanent and useful reform, as he hoped, be conceived in. That the house might see that in this department, no saving needed, he would, without going into details, call its attention to the following statement of expenditures from the contingent fund, as to the two articles of printing and stationery, for the last three congresses:

Twenty-fourth Congress, 1836 and 1837.

Printing, ... $148,288 39

Stationery, ... 24,127 47

Twenty-fifth Congress, 1838 and 1839.

Printing, ... $172,415 86

Stationery, ... 7,684 86

Twenty-sixth Congress, 1840, and to 31st May, 1841.

Printing, ... $99,664 40

Stationery, ... 35,966 75

Twenty-seventh Congress, 1841, and to 31st May, 1842.

Printing, ... $158,171 15

Stationery, ... 35,966 75

As a part of the stationery expenditures of the 25th congress, Mr. S. stated, the committee had found the following other items:

83,700 quills, ... $3,953 12

15 gross steel pens, ... 4,569 39

15 barrels of ink, ... 528 50

Making pens for members, ... 476 25

Mr. S. stated the estimate furnished by the clerk of the house to the committee of ways and means of the expenses for stationery for the next session, at $15,000, which was a great reduction, though he thought still too high. The resolution adopted on Saturday forbade the clerk to purchase any paper until after the commencement of the next session, and he hoped the committee would be able to make full report before any further purchase would be necessary.

Mr. Waterson moved to amend the resolution by adding thereto the following instructions:

"And that said committee be instructed to inquire into the propriety of directing the postmaster of the house to keep the stationery account of every member during each session of congress."

Mr. S. then accepted the instructions offered by Mr. Waterson, as a modification of his own resolution.

Some conversation followed, in which Messrs. Briggs, W. F. Irwin, and McKay participated.

When the question was taken, and the resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. Hatfield, chairman of the committee on elections, called up the report of that committee in the case of David Levy, delegate from the territory of Florida. He asked Mr. Levy if it was his wish to be heard by counsel.

Mr. Levy then took the floor to argue his case, in person. He urged a postponement to the next session, in order that he might collect evidence of his citizenship, which it had been impossible for him to do at this session. He made a very able and eloquent plea, displaying the peculiar hardship of his case in a very strong light. He complained of information in the table of evidence against him of want of due notice of the grounds on which his right was contested, and of the shortness of the time allowed for the collection of testimony in his favor. He deprecated also the allusion made by Mr. Stanley and others, on Saturday, to the New Jersey case of last congress, which was thought might be an attempt to array party feeling against him.

Mr. Hatfield, in presenting the case on behalf of the majority of the committee, made explanations of the remarks made by himself and Mr. Stanley in reference to the late New Jersey case. No party affect was intended. The rule being that the next decision on such a subject is the law, he (Mr. H.) was anxious to remove the precedent established in the last similar case, (which he did not name), by which the claimants were denied a hearing before the house, and for that reason, he introduced a resolution to allow Mr. Levy the privilege of being heard (by counsel or in person) by those who were to judge of his case. Mr. Hatfield then replied to the arguments by which Mr. Levy had urged a postponement.

Mr. McKon spoke in favor of allowing more time to Mr. Levy for collecting evidence of his citizenship.

Mr. Stanley disclaimed the motive imputed to him by Mr. Levy. He made a sportive remark on Saturday, with a view merely to call the attention of the world to the difference between the action designed on this case and that taken in the N. Jersey case. He never made any remark intended or calculated to express feeling unfavorable to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. Levy declared he had not intended to make such an imputation.

Mr. Gemble (being one of the committee on elections) made a statement of reasons for not allowing the postponement of a decision.

Mr. Levy replied to some of the objections of Mr. Gemble.

Mr. Wise advocated the postponement.

Mr. Levy replied, very briefly; and then, on motion of Mr. Pope, the house adjourned, at half past one o'clock.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 7. Mr. Harris presented the proceedings of a large meeting of the democratic party, recently held in Clarke county, in the state of Virginia, strongly disapprobatory of the general course of the whig party—inveighs against the necessity or propriety of this extra session; and is condemnatory of the measures which have been taken as the result of its labors; and expressing their joy and gratification in the honest and intrepid course of the president in vetoing the bank bill, and according to him their respect and confidence for preserving the constitution inviolate, and saving the country from the disastrous consequences of such a measure. Mr. H. moved they be received and laid on the table; which was agreed to.

On leave given, Mr. Russell presented the proceedings of a meeting of 150 delegates from the counties of Ross, Pike, Jackson and Hocking, in the state of Ohio, approving of all the leading measures of the present congress, and expressing their reprehending in strong terms the exercise of that kindly power called the veto. The resolutions were laid on the table.

On leave given, Mr. Calhoun offered the following resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee on public buildings make a report on the practicability of ventilating the hall of the representatives upon a plan recently adopted for the house of parliament in England; and if deemed practicable, to report how the same may be adapted to this hall.

On leave given Mr. Talliferro offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk of this house do pay to William Smith the same compensation per diem and mileage as is allowed to members of congress; computing the per diem allowance from the 9th day of July last, that being the period when the said Smith appeared before the committee on elections, to contest the right of Linn Banks to a seat in the house of representatives, of the 4th September, inclusive, that being the day when, at the instance of Linn Banks, the sitting member, the contest was postponed to the next session of congress, in order to enable the contestants to procure additional evidence to sustain a right to the seat he occupies; and that after the committee had progressed as far in the contest as, from the evidence before them, as far as the contestants could procure, would enable the majority of the legal votes cast in the election to have been given to the said Smith.

Some remarks were made by Messrs. Talliferro, Briggs, Appleton, Talbot and Briggs.

Mr. Talliferro then modified his resolution to read as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk of the house do pay to William Smith the same compensation per diem and mileage as is allowed to members of congress; computing the per diem allowance from the 9th day of July last, that being the period when the said Smith appeared before the committee on elections to contest the right of Linn Banks to a seat in the house of representatives, of the 4th of September, inclusive, that being the day when, at the instances of Linn Banks, the sitting member, the contest was postponed to the next session of congress, in order to enable the contestants to procure additional evidence to sustain a right to the seat he occupies.

When on motion of Mr. Fillmore, the resolution was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Hatfield, the house resumed the consideration of the following resolution, (with the report of the committee thereon.)

Resolved, That David Levy, the returned delegate from the territory of Florida, be allowed until the first Monday of December next to procure testimony to prove his right to the seat he now occupies, as delegate from the said territory."

"The distinguished statesman to the house of representatives that he has a well-grounded expectation of being able to maintain by sufficient proofs the right of Moses E. Levy to the benefit of the 6th article of the treaty between Spain and the United States, of the 23rd February, 1819, as an inhabitant of Florida; and of the right of citizenship, through his father, the said Moses E. Levy, to the enjoyment of the privileges of citizenship of the United States. He therefore desires a postponement of the consideration of his case, as proposed in the resolution submitted this morning; being well assured that the best mode of justice to the question before it is the present condition of the testimony. D. LEVY."

"September 6, 1841.

Mr. Pope moved the previous question.

But the speaker having decided that the previous question, if seconded, would cut off the motion to postpone, and leaving the house to direct on the report of the committee, Mr. F. withdrew the motion.

Mr. Sumners (a member of the committee of elections) addressed the house at length on the general facts and law of the case, in favor of the report of the committee, and in explanation and vindication of its course of the proceedings.

After a few remarks from Mr. Pope—

Mr. Ward asked the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution, which were ordered, and, being taken, were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arnold, Arrington, Atterton, Bancroft, Benton, Biddle, Bonaparte, Borden, Brown, Brown, Burke, Wm. Butler, Wm. O. Butler, John Campbell, Wm. B. Campbell, Thomas J. Campbell, Carothers, Chase, Chapman, Clinton, Coles, Cowen, Crampton, Cullen, Edwards, Egbert, Ferris, J. G. Floyd, Chas. A. Floyd, Forance, Gerry, Goggin, William O. Goode, Gordon, Graham, Green, Greig, Gustine, Habersham, Harris, J. Hastings, Hays, Henry, Holman, Hopkins, Houck, Houston, Howells, Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, James Irvine, W. W. Irwin, Jack, James, J. W. Jones, Keim, John P. Kennedy, Andrew Kennedy Lane, Lawrence, Lewis, Linn, A. McClellan, R. McCallister, McKay, McKoon, Marchant, A. Marshall, T. F. Marshall, J. T. Mason, Mathiot, Mathews, Maxwell, Medill, Morrow, Newhard, Owsley, Partridge, Payne, Pendleton, Plumer, Pope, Powell, Randall, Rayner, Rencher, Rogers, Rogers, Rogers, S. Shepherd, Shields, Simonton, Slide, Snyder, Sprigg, Stearns, Alexander H. H. Stuart, J. T. Stuart, Sweney, Tallington, Talbot, Triplett, Turney, Van Buren, Ward, Watson, Webb, Williams, Williams, Windrop, Wood—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, L. W. Andrews, S. J. Andrews, Ayres, Baker, Emory, Bonduras, Borden, Calhoun, John C. Clark, Cowen, Cranston, G. Davis, J. Edwards, Everett, Fillmore, A. Lawrence Foster, Hall, Halseid, Hudson, King, Samson Samson, Mattocks, Maynard, J. M. Morgan, C. B. Osborne, Ramsey, E. Randall, Ward, Watson, Webb, Williams, Williams, Windrop, Wood—123.

So the resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Underwood, the house took up the bill to provide for the repairing of the Potomac bridge, which had been returned from the senate with an amendment.

The amendment provides that the work shall be done by the government, without contract, instead of being done by contract, under the supervision of an officer of the engineer corps, as originally provided in the bill.

After a few remarks from Messrs. Underwood and Keim, Mr. Keim had been read to lay the bill and amendment on the table; which motion was rejected.

The amendment of the senate (under a slight verbal modification) was then concurred in.

Mr. Irwin, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the bill making appropriations for various fortifications, for paying and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, and had found the same to be correct.

Whereupon the bill received the signature of the speaker.

On leave given, Mr. Proffit offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to inform this house what amount has been expended in the purchase of furniture for the custom house at New York since the 4th of March, 1841; also, the items of furniture purchased by the authority of the treasury, and out of what particular funds payment has been or is contemplated to be made.

Mr. Dawson, from the committee on military affairs, to which he had recommended the bill making appropriations for the purchase of certain sites for fortifications, reported back a bill making an appropriation for a single item only, to wit, $33,000 for repairing the forts and batteries on Staten Island, New York.

The bill having been read twice, was referred, on motion of Mr. Dawson, of Georgia, to the committee of the whole on the state of the union.

And, on motion of Mr. D. the house resolved itself into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. East, of New York, in the chair), and took up the bill.

After some explanations between Messrs. Dawson and Fillmore—Mr. Charles Brown offered the following amendment:

That for the purchase of sites and commencing the erection of fortifications on the Delaware and New Jersey shores, opposite to the Pea Patch island, in the Delaware river, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Dawson rose to a point of order, the amendment being for new works.

Mr. Brown said he was sorry to hear the chairman of the military committee say the amendment was out of order, for he had waited patiently all the session for an opportunity to call the attention of the house to the subject; but he supposed it was, and would be always, out of order to ask for or obtain any appropriation for the defence of the Delaware, while it was, and would be, in the hands of the British; and make appropriations for the defence of other places, and particularly to that of New York, for this was the third bill during this session that had been brought in appropriating large sums in the defence of that state.

The amendment was decided out of order.

The committee then rose and reported the bill to the house.

And having been ordered to a third reading now, the bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Ferris, from the committee on foreign affairs, to whom was referred a message from the president of the United States, transmitting information, desired by the house, in relation to the American citizens now British prisoners of state in Van Dieman's Land, reported the following resolution for the consideration of the house:

Resolved by the house of representatives of the United States of America, That the president of the United States be requested to consider the propriety of entering into negotiations with the British government for the purpose of obtaining the release of the American citizens of the United States as may now be detained in Van Dieman's Land, or in any other part of the British dominions, for any alleged or actual participation in the late insurrection in the West Indies.

Mr. F. sustained the report in a few animated remarks.

Mr. Adams, after alluding to what he termed the sublime oration of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Ferris) in favor of those persons who were citizens of the United States, and who had thought proper to take a part in the late insurrection in Canada, against the direct proclamation of their own president of the United States, warning them against that sublime patriotism against the laws of their own country, against the laws of the country which they inhabited, and against the laws of God and of man, proceeded to say: Whilst we were of the point of civil war between the government of the United States and the most powerful government in this union, on account of a transaction that has occurred there, we were now in pursuit of that very same sort of patriotism that had produced the difficulty, and in consequence of which we were now in such a position, the government of one of the most powerful nations on the earth, that, by the last news received, it appeared that that government had ordered fifteen ships of the line to cruise along our coast, and give their opinion as regarded to Canadian patriotism, and of the right of the state of New York to hang McLeod. While the question was being agitated between the government of the United States and that of New York, as to the exercise of each other's power in order to save that man from destruction by popular passion, this time he had been chosen to call upon the president of the United States to negotiate with the British government in behalf of those unfortunate persons who had violated alike the laws of the country which they had invaded, and those of the country from which they went. Now, it did appear to him that there should be some sort of consistency in the course of proceeding on the part of this house. When we were asking Great Britain to forget all these little trespasses upon their laws, their constitution, their government; to forget the crime of treason, for which these men, according to their laws, had been tried and transported—transported by the mercy of the government—transported, instead of being hanged, drawn and quartered, as they had exposed themselves to be by the course of their patriotism: Mr. A. would say that, if we were to ask the president to negotiate with Great Britain on behalf of these persons for mere mercy, for mere forgiveness, and that they might return to their homes, and that as well first to say what was going to be done with McLeod?

There were two sides to this question, and before we undertook to interfere with the British government, in order to countenance and force an insurrection against them, by obtaining the immunity of our citizens from the punishment to which their conduct had subjected them, it would be as well to ascertain who they were, what they were, and the circumstances under which they were now in Van Dieman's Land. Mr. A. here referred to a resolution, adopted some time since, calling for information on this subject, and then he proceeded to ask what information this house had received since that time? Who knew what they were, and where they were? how they came there? what were the true facts? what was the proof against them? what they had done? what was to be said in excuse or mitigation of punishment for the crime of which they had been found guilty? Before they undertook to ask the president of the United States to negotiate on this subject, it seemed to him they ought to have some justification for the act; for looking to the present state of affairs with Great Britain, it was a very delicate matter to meddle with.

There was one point of view in which this report ought to have appeared to him objectionable, and that was, that it knew what then to the president of the United States, but it told him to take the subject into consideration. Now, that for the purpose of casting odium upon the president if he did not do it! He presumed the president would not do it unless he asked for something, and then the resolution ought to him. He asked if there had been any objection to the part of any citizen of the United States, upon this government to interpose in this matter. Now, in order to place in its proper point of view the position in which the president would be placed with the British government, in undertaking that which was recommended to him, he (Mr. A.) would suppose an insurrection of slaves in this country, and in consequence of that insurrection being suppressed and the transportation of those slaves to a foreign country—who would you say, what would southern gentlemen say, if the British queen should send a minister here, who asked to release that race back those slaves who have incurred the forfeiture of their lives and been transported afterwards by way of commutation of mercy? He would ask southern gentlemen what they would think of a foreign interposition of that kind in favor of those slaves—to restore to them all the rights which they had forfeited, and which they might be? It appeared to him that the British government might, with just as much propriety, interpose in this case, as we could in the other; for most assuredly, in the estimation of all impartial persons, if those people in Canada were fighting for their own rights and liberty, and against the law of the United States, in any other light. Indeed, it would be more proper interposition by one government with another than an insurrection in Canada.

Now, he would say, that this resolution must be considered with these references to what he should think of the government, but to this our own government, for expressing its opinion on this motion, and on account of their conduct; whether there was anything to show that they were entitled to that sort of commiseration; for we must go as suppliants in this case, whatever we might do in that of McLeod. We should go to the house of justice, of the sentence by which they were transported, and we must assume an authoritative tone in such a case as this. He knew of one American citizen, a native of New Hampshire, who was engaged in that insurrection, and he (Mr. A.) recollected having signed a paper of protest to the British government that his life might be spared. He was a young man, and perhaps was impelled by bad counsel, though probably having good intentions, to engage in the insurrection. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to execution, but his sentence was commuted to transportation; and he (Mr. A.) did not know but what this person might be now at Van Dieman's Land.

Mr. A. could not possibly consider this resolution in any other light than intended to interfere—no, he would not say intended, but a very dangerous interference; and its tendency would be toasperate and excite the passions of the people, and to lead them, instead of being in that conciliatory disposition in which some gentlemen might think it would be regarded. Mr. A. concluded by reiterating his hope that this resolution would not be adopted until all the information he had stated as necessary should first be obtained.

Mr. Holmes submitted a few observations in favor of the adoption of the resolution,

When Mr. Steady rose and said: It was a remark of Lorenzo Dow, I think, that an idle brain was the devil's workshop. We are about to prove the truth of it. We have nothing to do, and while waiting on the action of other departments of the government on our measures, we are in danger of engaging in debating one of the most exciting subjects which can be presented for consideration. I hope, sir, we shall avoid this by adjourning at once to-morrow.

The motion prevailed, and the house adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 8. The resolution relating to American prisoners transported to Van Dieman's Land being first taken up—

Mr. Everett moved to lay it on the table, on which motion the vote was: yeas 50, nays 51. So the house refused.

The resolution was discussed by Messrs. Wood and McKen until the expiration of the morning hour.

The house then took up certain bills returned from the senate, and referred them. The bill for diplomatic appropriations was referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the union. The bill relating to the Choctaw reservation was referred to some remarks from Messrs. Fillmore, L. William Chapman and J. Brown, referred to the committee on Indian affairs. The bill relating to duties on drawback was referred to the committee of the whole.

On this day, Mr. Fillmore, the house resolved itself into committee of the whole, and took up the revenue bill—Mr. Barnell in the chair.

The committee then proceeded to vote on the amendments of the senate. They agreed to the amendment changing the time of the commencement of the operation of the act, to that striking out watches, gold lace and jewelry from the free list; to that exempting paintings and sculptures by American artists residing abroad.

On the 4th amendment, adding "boracic acid" to the free list, Mr. Wise moved to amend the senate amendment, by adding "boracic acid" to the free list.

A long and desultory debate arose on a question of order. The chair decided that the amendment was, in order, and in conclusion the committee affirmed the decision: yeas 44.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected: yeas 21, nays 51.

Mr. Wise moved to amend, by exempting "iron" from duty.

Mr. Irvine moved to amend Mr. Wise's proposed amendment, by exempting also "sugar, cotton and tobacco."

Mr. Wise withdrew his proposed amendment.

The committee then agreed to all the other amendments to the first section.

On the question of concurring in the amendment adding to the second section a proviso that no duties shall exceed twenty per cent.—Mr. Fillmore opposed its concurrence. A discussion followed on the subject—Messrs. Wood and Barnell advocating the senate amendment, and Messrs. Fillmore, Cushing and Tillinghast opposing it. Mr. Fillmore moved to amend by striking out the senate amendment and inserting a proviso that nothing in the bill should interfere with the distribution act.

The amendment was thus amended accordingly, and the amended amendment was adopted—yeas 33 to 69.

The other amendments were then adopted with only slight verbal alterations.

All the amendments having been concurred in, the committee rose and reported the bill with amendments.

Mr. Wise moved to amend the amendments by adding "salt" to "tea and coffee."

Mr. Steady moved to amend that amendment by adding to "salt," "sugar, cotton, tobacco and iron," on the list of free articles.

Mr. Wise acquiesced, and demanded a division of the question so that each article might be voted on separately.

On exempting "salt," the vote was 94 yeas, to 83 nays—therefore adopted.

On "iron," 82 yeas to 100 nays—therefore rejected.

On "sugar," 105 yeas to 75 nays—therefore adopted.

On "cotton," 105 yeas to 75 nays—therefore adopted.

On "tobacco," 82 yeas to 96 nays—therefore rejected.

Mr. Underwood moved the house adjourn. On which the vote (by tellers) was yeas 80, nays 83.

Mr. Wise moved to reconsider the vote on "salt."

Mr. L. W. Judson moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. Judson moved to reconsider the vote on "iron."

Mr. Fillmore moved an adjournment; on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The house voted to adjourn: yeas 98, nays 88, and at a quarter past three they adjourned accordingly.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. Sydney Smith thus happily ridicules the blindness of English bigotry, in refusing to listen to the reasonable demands of the American colonies, and its result:

"There was a period when the slightest concession would have satisfied the Americans; but all the world was in heroics; one set of gentlemen met at the Lamb, another at the Lion; blood and treasure men, breathing war, vengeance and contempt; and in eight years afterward, an awkward looking gentleman in plain clothes walked up to the drawing room of St. James', and was introduced as the Ambassador from the United States of America."

AVAILANCES. About four weeks since nearly an acre of Ellis' cliffs, 12 miles below Natchez, on the east side of the Mississippi, slid into the river, making a tremendous agitation and throwing immense waves upon the Louisiana side. Hundreds of fish were left high and dry. Since then a large lot of ground in the town of Plaquemine plunged into the river—and the inhabitants fear that more will follow.

BANK OF THE U. S. OF PA. A number of suits were commenced against this institution last week; and, among them, one of formidable amount by the corporate authorities of Philadelphia, as trustees of the Gerard fund. On the 4th September the directors of the bank assigned over the whole concern to five trustees, viz.: James Robertson, president of the bank; J.S. Newbold, a director; Richard Bayard, of Delaware; Thomas S. Taylor, cashier; Herman Cope, assistant cashier.

This assignment does not interfere with the two special assignments heretofore made.

Samuel Jaudon, esq. agent for the United States bank, left Boston on Wednesday in the steamer Columbia for Liverpool.

BANKS. The Bank of the Metropolis has been selected as the depository of the public funds at the seat of government.

The North American Trust and Banking company, of New York, has had a receiver appointed by the chancellor of the state, and is ordered to wind up its affairs. Its stock is selling at $3- for $100 original. In 1839, Mr. Hoyt, by direction of president Van Buren, loaned $300,000 to this institution, but it has been repaid.

The New York branch of the Bank of the U. S. of Pa. has brought suit against the editors of the Journal of Commerce, for libel; damages claimed $100,000.

THE BOOK TRADE. The semi-annual sale of the trade commenced in this city on Monday morning, at the rooms of the Messrs. Messinger, Richards & Platt, in Broadway. These sales are conducted under the direction of a committee of booksellers, and are made up of contributions from the principle manufacturers and importers in the United States. We noticed in attendance publishers and booksellers from most of the cities in the union, and observed that the sales went off quite spiritedly, and at very low prices. The sale usually commences at 10 o'clock, and the amount sold is enormously large. The catalogue of the present sale contains upwards of 1600 titles.

[N. Y. Tribune.]

COCKROACH OIL. The French papers say that a chemist at Havre has obtained twenty quarts of good lamp oil from seventeen bushels of Cockroaches. We should like to make a contract with this philosopher for the supply of the material for the "essential oil" of Musquitoes; furnishing him half a bushel or so, for as much of their oil as would afford light enough to kill them by

N. Y. Courier.

THE CALIFORNIA FLOUR. The grain of this article was brought by a trader from Middle California, 33 degrees of latitude, and it has been found to be a superior article of flour. It was obtained and introduced by major Thomas P. Spier, who was in the north west, in the employ of the United States army, at a place called Fort Bidwell, in Mohave county, Ariz. This place is in the north west, in the 33rd degree of latitude, 112th degree of longitude, South Carolina, latitude 34 degrees 10' N. The crop of this year, 1941, is superior to that of last year, 1940, in the size of the heads, superior product, and the fact that it is a hard wheat. The following are the reasons seen the wheat grow, assert that on proper wheat land well prepared, early bushels can be raised on an acre of land, yielding from 100 to 150 bushels. The fact that it is a hard wheat, and each bushel can be a full head wheat contains from one hundred to two hundred grains. The best head of our common wheat will only shell out from 100 to 150 grains. The other advantage of this wheat is that it is not so subject to disease as other kinds of wheat and will withstand high winds and storms. It also grows and matures well westwardly in the 33rd degree of North latitude, and is a superior article of flour. It is a great acquisition to the agricultural community and we hope all that its most have a fair trial, when it will prove itself all that its most sanguine friends have said. Flourish it could be.

The above is the strong recommendation of this wheel by several gentlemen of Abbeyville, distinguished as farmers and for their respectability.

CINCINNATI RIOT. On Thursday night, the 2d inst. a quarrel took place on Columbia street, between a few negroes and whites, in which one of the whites was stabbed and so awfully cut that his life was despaired of. Two or three thousand persons thereupon collected nevertheless around the houses of the negroes, in Sixth east of Broadway. The negroes armed themselves with muskets and fired upon the crowd. Two whites and two negroes were killed, and from 15 to 20 wounded, mostly whites. A cannon was brought up, and loaded with slugs and fired several times, raking Sixth street.—The mayor, who was on the ground all night, called out two military companies, the Grays and Guards, and both squares from Fifth to Seventh, were guarded by, and under control of the military and a large body of armed volunteers, the negroes being all confined to their houses.

During Saturday meetings were held by the citizens and the city council, and measures taken to prevent further outbreaks; but without effect. Search was made by the police on the night of the 10th inst. for a place where a gambling establishment, as reported. In the afternoon the military escorted the negro men from about 300 in number, to the jail, and secured them from the appearance of the rioters. On the night of the 11th inst. Saturday night the rioters carried on their proceedings in different parts of the city. The houses on Sixth street were much injured and burned, and with difficulty prevented from spreading on the fire. On the 12th inst. a mob gathered on Fifth street, was completely turned inside out, and all his stock and fixtures destroyed—the proprietor himself having left the city in the morning for the purpose of procuring arms. On the 13th inst. the commencement of the disturbances, it having been reported he had furnished the negroes with ammunition. The office of the Philanthropic Society, on Broadway, was burned, and the furniture, books, and papers, broken and carried to the river and thrown in—some paper and some type were destroyed. Another party was at work at the corner of Western-row and Broadway, and the property of the same destroyed. The property in that quarter. Patrols of the military, infantry and horse traversed the streets in company with the police, but without being able to prevent the destruction of the property. On the 14th inst. the military, under the command of the sheriff, About fifty of the most active of the rioters were secured by the spirited exertions of the police officers, detained citizens, and especially by firemen, and taken to the jail. The rioting continued, and determined resolution throughout the whole night.

CANAL BOATS. In Dock street yesterday morning, we saw exhibited a specimen of the manner in which some of the energetic forwarding houses send their huge canal boats, freighted with merchandise, at the rate of twenty miles the hour over dry land. One of the largest portable canal boats, divided into three parts, passed over the Dock street railroad track. These portable cars are run directly into the locks, and without transhipment, the goods pass over railroads and through canals to Pittsburg and thence to the West.

burgh. [Nat. Amer.]

CHARLES DAVIES, LL. D. formerly professor of mathematics at West Point, has been appointed professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, in Washington college, Hartford, Conn.

COAL. Upwards of 130 vessels arrived at Schuylkill Philadelphia, last week to carry coal from thence. The Pottsville Journal says that nearly 25,000 tons were shipped last week from that region.

DEATHS. During the last week, in New York 191, of which 96 were under 2 years of age—and 18 were of consumption.

Another notable Joseph Nourse died at Georgetown on the last day in the 88th year of his age. Mr. Nourse was born in London in 1754, emigrated and settled in the lower part of Virginia in 1769; entered the American army in 1776, and continued during the war in service. Afterwards in various civil positions, until in 1789 he was appointed by President Washington as assistant to the United States treasury, in which station he ably assisted Hamilton in organizing that department, and continued at that station until 1829. From youth up he believed and lived as a Christian; and, when full of years, departed without even a struggle, to a brighter and better world. His remains were deposited in the family vault, and he is recorded by the press in the 89th year of his age.

Cyrus Wingate, esq. died on the 14th ult. at his late residence, Owen county, Ky. of which he was presiding judge, in the 54th year of his age. He had served twenty years in the legislature of Kentucky, and was deservedly esteemed.

True and Sons, N. B. St. John papers of the 27th ult. furnish accounts of a destructive fire at this place on the day previous. A large ship of 900 tons, belonging to Messrs. Owens & Duncan, was building at the yard, hoisted over and ignited. The fire communicated to the ships around, and before it was discovered it had increased to an alarming extent. The flames communicated to the wooden buildings in the vicinity, and their progress could not be stayed until about fifty houses in the parish were consumed. A large sum of money was expended in insurance, was effected, and the loss to many individuals would be very serious, particularly to the owners of the ship. The first loss was that of the ship, which was a fine vessel, while running to prevent a man from passing with his cart, captured a blood vessel, and died instantly, and a sailor, who was assisting, was smothered the effect of immediately raising the price of flour along our whole seaboard, varying from 50 cts. to $1 per barrel. Wheat did not feel the impulse so sensibly, millers being aware that in a few days we should more distinctly ascertain the real result of the British harvest, hesitate to adventure much beyond previous prices for the article. Farmers are awake too, and generally decline to sell at the present juncture, in hopes that the next arrival will bring accounts of the clearing of the grain, and the consequent reduction of duties. Except in cases where purchasers were in possession of the foreign news, and sellers not, no considerable quantities of either wheat or flour seems to have changed hands.

FLOUR. The accounts in relation to the appearance of the approaching harvest brought by the Britannia, ha-

JOHN JOSEPH GURNEY, the distinguished minister of the Friends society, who lately travelled extensively in this country and the West Indies, has, we understand, since his return to London, given weighty testimony of the attachment which he formed during his sojourn amongst us, and afforded another instance of the influence which American manners acquire over the hearts of London bankers, even of the most staid habits. It is understood that a fair Pennsylvanian is about to pass time with him in the true old orthodox style.

McLeod. A late London paper contained a statement that McLeod was confined in a dungeon, and laden with heavy irons, weightier than those placed upon murderers in Newgate. In relation to this statement the Union "Friend of Man" says: "McLeod is now in jail not a hundred rods from our office, in the quiet village of Whitesboro'. And we can assure the London Journal that so far from being in heavy irons, he is not even confined to a cell or room. He spends most of his time, and in every company, in the parlor of the jailer's house. On almost any pleasant morning he may be seen enjoying himself in a promenade upon the garden walk. Indeed he is spending his time among us as one of our first 'gentlemen of leisure.'"

METHODISTS. The Wesleyan conference was in session at Manchester, at the date of our last advices from England. The question of the ministers wearing silk gowns in the pulpit had been discussed, and it was decided that the gown should not be worn. The centenary fund had reached £190,000, and it is expected that the amount will eventually be made up to about one million of dollars.

NEW HAVEN, with a population of 15,000, has suffered but $2,478 loss by fire in two years.

NORWEGIANS. A detachment of 160 Norwegian passed up the lake in the Missouri this morning. They are a swarthy, robust people, and appear capable of enduring great fatigue. They were destined for Milwaukee and among other articles carry with them one of the native sleighs, constructed mostly of iron, and designed for a lady and gentleman. The formation of the vehicle was peculiar, being very narrow, so as to compel the bearer to sit astride a small saddle behind the lady, instead of on her side, as is the custom of this country. Barring this inconvenience, the Norwegian sleigh would be a rare vehicle on the lake in winter. [Buffalo Cong. Adv.

NEW ORLEANS. Twenty-three deaths occurred during the 24 hours ending 31st ult. of which 15 were by yellow fever.

PENNSYLVANIA CANAL. The Harrisburg Reporter states that the Pennsylvania canal from Dunsmuir's Island to Middletown is very short but the chain of transportation from east to west and north, is almost entirely devoid of its necessary element, water, owing to the drought which has so long prevailed on the Susquehanna and its tributaries. The dam on Dunsmuir's Island, Pennsylvania, it is, as a matter of fact, not only a dam, but means furnish the supply needed for that part of the canal it is intended to feed; especially during the month of August and September. It is added that about one hundred boats are now detained at Middletown, Pennsylvania, and it is with great difficulty that light boats are passed.

RATTLE SNAKES. Two men, Egbert Galusha and Reuben Davis, residing in the town of Dresden, on the east side of Lake George, recently killed in three days on the east side of Tongue Mountain, in the town of Bolton, in this county, eleven hundred and four rattlesnakes. They were confined to rocks and uninhabited places. Some of the reptiles were of an enormous size, carrying from six to twenty rattles. They were killed for their oil or grease, which is said to be very valuable. We will turn out Warren against the world for rattlesnakes. [Glenn's Fall's Clarion.]

RICE. The harvest on the Savannah river, (says the Savannah Republican of the 1st instant), has already considerably progressed, the fields are loaded with piles of its rich golden sheaves, and the product promises to be a full one.

STOCKS. Consols, for money, closed on the London exchange, 17th August, at 89½ to 90; reduced 89½.

Paris, Aug. 16. Three per cents. 77½. 65 to 77½. 70.
Closed at 77½. 60—fours 116½. 60 to 116½. 65.
New York, Sept. 9. A further decline in nearly all d scriptions to-day: U. S. bank 7½; New York 5's 86½; Indiana sterling bonds 51; dollar bonds 49½; Delaware and Hudson 103½; N. A. Trust 3; Vicksburg 7½; New Orleans 95; Canton 24.

WHEAT Last year Pennsylvania produced 13,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 40,000,000 bushels of coarse grain.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 3.—Vol. XI.]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 18, 1841.

[Vol. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,564.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 3, VOL. 11.

APPOINTMENTS by the President: Diplomatic items. Attorney general CRITTENDEN's letter of resignation. Secretary EWING's letter of resignation. Secretary WEBSTER's two notes.

CONGRESSIONAL: Wm. MERRISS and ADDRESS. Distribution under the land bill estimated; Award of the Mexican commissioners; Census, time for taking excepted; Northeastern boundary, United States troops; Weekly fishery, number of ships employed in; Sugar trade in the United States.

ARMY—General orders No. 53; General orders Eastern division No. 6; Genl. Gen. Wool, Fort Kent; Fort Fairfield; 2d Artillery; 4th Artillery; 1st Infantry; death of Lieut. Jones; Quartermasters department.

NAVY—Promotions and appointments; various items. Naval general court-martial. STATES OF THE UNION—Maryland, defenders of Baltimore, monument to gen. S. Smith; Illinois, election returns; Alabama, general ticket system rejected.

PUBLIC LAND DISTRIBUTION ACT. Votes of the U. S. senate on executive nominations. CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS—close of the session. LIST OF ACTS AND RESOLUTIONS. CHRONICLE.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

This number brings up the abstract of proceedings in both branches of congress to the end of the extra session, which closed on Monday evening last.

The great importance of the measures under consideration, and the deep anxiety felt all over the union in the progress of legislation upon those measures, is our excuse, if excuse be necessary, for appropriating so large a space as we have since the commencement of the session to congressional proceedings. It has been an eventful period, and will often be recurred to by the future historian, as well as by the people, and especially by partisan politicians.

A list of the ACTS and RESOLUTIONS passed during the session, is inserted on page 47.

Upon the leading topics of the session we shall select some of the principal speeches on each side, for insertion in future numbers of the REGISTER.

THE CABINET. All the members of the Harrison cabinet, except Mr. WEBSTER, having resigned, the names of their successors will be found in the list of appointments made by the president and confirmed by the senate.

The letters of resignation of Mr. CRITTENDEN and Mr. EWING—and the notes of Mr. WEBSTER assigning reasons for continuing in the cabinet are inserted in this number. The other resignations have not yet been published.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT, BY AND WITH THE ADVICE AND CONSENT OF THE SENATE.

Walter Forward, secretary of the treasury. John McLean, secretary of war.

J. P. Lynch, secretary of the navy. Charles J. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, postmaster general.

Hugh S. Legere, attorney general. Charles B. Penrose, solicitor of the treasury.

Edward Everett, to be minister to Great Britain. William Hunter, (now charge d'affaires), to be minister plenipotentiary to Rio de Janeiro.

Robert W. Walsh, secretary of legation to the same. William Bouthard, of Virginia, charge d'affaires to Naples.

John Lathrop Mudge, of Massachusetts, secretary of legation to Russia.

Brantz Ward, of Maryland, secretary of legation to Mexico.

James D. Doty, governor of Wisconsin. Major S. Churchill, to be inspector general of the army, in the place of General Wool, promoted.

Ed Collins Lee, attorney of the United States for the district of Maryland.

Vol. XI—Sic. 3.

LAND OFFICERS.

James Wilson, surveyor of the public lands for the territories of Wisconsin and Iowa.

George W. Smith, receiver of public moneys at Opelousas, Louisiana.

John Hogan, register of the land office at Dixon, Illinois.

OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS.

Edward Curtis, collector, New York.

Thomas Lord, naval officer, do.

William Taggard, surveyor, do.

Alfred D. Benjamin, Edward Taylor, Matthias B. Edgar, appraisers, New York.

POSTMASTERS.

John T. Werner, at Pottsville, Pennsylvania; William M. Porter, at Carlisle, Pennsylvania; Thos. W. Shepard, at Northampton, Massachusetts.

JUDGE UPSHUR has notified the president of his intention to accept the chair of the navy department so soon as he can make the necessary arrangement of his private affairs in Virginia. He visited the department on the 15th instant.

DIPLOMATIC. MINISTER TO RUSSIA. Colonel Todd United States minister plenipotentiary, sailed from New York on the 14th instant, in the splendid packet ship Stephen Whitney, for the court of St. Petersburg.

THE LETTERS OF RESIGNATION. The following letters of the secretary of the treasury and the attorney general, resigning their respective trusts, have been placed in our hands for publication:

[Nat. Int.]

Washington, September 11, 1841.

Sir: Circumstances have occurred in the course of your administration, and chiefly in the exercise by you of the veto power, which constrain me to believe that my long continuance in office as a member of your cabinet will be neither agreeable to you, useful to my country, nor honorable to myself.

Do me the justice, Mr. President, to believe that this conclusion has been adopted neither capriciously, nor in any spirit of party feeling or personal hostility, but from a sense of duty, which, mistaken though it may be, is yet so sincerely entertained, that I cheerfully sacrifice to it all the advantages and distinctions of office.

Be pleased, therefore, to accept this as my resignation of the office of attorney general of the United States. Very respectfully, yours, &c.

J. J. CRITTENDEN.

The President.

Treasury Department, Sept. 11, 1841.

Sir: After the most calm and careful consideration, and viewing the subject in all the aspects in which it presents itself to my mind, I have come to the conclusion that I ought no longer to remain a member of your cabinet. I therefore resign the office of secretary of the treasury, and beg you to accept this as my letter of resignation.

To avoid misunderstanding, I distinctly declare that I do not consider a difference of opinion as to the character of a national bank a sufficient reason for dissolving the ties which have existed between us.—I look upon that measure as one of vast importance to the prosperity of the country, and though I should have deeply deplored your inability or unwillingness to accord it to the wishes of the people and the states, so unequivocally expressed through their representatives, still, upon this and this alone, unconnected with other controlling circumstances, I should not have felt bound to resign the place which I hold in your administration. But these controlling circumstances do exist, and I will, in my own justification place them in connexion before you.

It is but just to you to say that the bill which first passed the two houses of congress, and which was returned by your objections on the 16th of August, did not, in its progress, as far as I know or believe, receive at any time, either your express or implied assent. So far as that bill was known to me, or as I was consulted upon it, I endeavored to bring its provisions as nearly as possible in accordance with what I understood to be your views, and rather hoped than expected your approval. I knew the extent to which you were committed on the question, I knew the pertinacity with which you adhered to your expressed opinions, and I dreaded from the first the most disastrous consequences, when the project of compromise which I presented at an early day was rejected.

It is equally a matter of justice to you and to myself to say that the bill which I reported to the two houses of congress at the commencement of the session, in obedience to their call, was modified so as to meet your approbation. You may not, it is true, have read the bill throughout, and examined every part of it: but the 10th fundamental article, which became the contested question of principle, was freely discussed between us, and it was understood and unequivocally sanctioned by yourself. The last clause in the bill, also, which contained a reservation of power in congress, was inserted on the 9th of June, in your presence, and with your approbation; though you on that time told me that, in giving your sanction to the bill, you would accompany it with an explanation of your understanding of that first clause.

In this condition of things, though I greatly regretted your veto on the bill as it passed the two houses of congress, and though I foresaw the excitement and agitation which it would produce among the people, and, considering the changes which the bill had undergone in its passage, and its variance from the one you had agreed to sanction, I could not find in that act enough to disturb the confidential relations which existed between us. I was disposed to attribute that act, fraught with mischief as it was, to pure and honorable motives, and to a conscientious conviction on your part that the bill, in some of its provisions, conflicted with the constitution. But that opinion of your course on the bill which has just been returned to congress with your second veto, I do not and cannot entertain. Recur to what has passed between us with respect to it, and you will at once perceive that such opinion is impossible.

On the morning of the 16th of August, I called at your chamber, and found you preparing the first veto message, to be delivered to the senate. The secretary of war came in also, and you read a portion of the message to us. He observed that, though the veto would create a great sensation in congress, yet he thought the minds of our friends better prepared for it than they were some days ago, and he hoped it should be calmly received, especially as it did not shut out all hope of a bank. To this you replied, that you really thought there ought to be no difficulty about it; that you had sufficiently indicated in your veto message what kind of a bank you would approve, and that congress might, if they saw fit, pass such a one in three days.

The 18th being the day for our regular cabinet meeting, we assembled, all except Messrs. CRITTENDEN and GRANGER, and you took part in a long conversation with Messrs. BURNETT and SEAGRAM, who professed to come in behalf of the whigs of the two houses to endeavor to strike out some measure which would be generally acceptable. That you had your doubts about the propriety of conversing with them yourself, and that you more properly thought you should commune with them through your constitutional advisers. You expressed a wish that the whole subject should be postponed till the next session of congress. You spoke of the delay in the senate of the consideration of your veto message, and pressed and dwelt on the tone and temper which the debate would assume.

Mr. BARNES said that on inquiry he was happy to find that the best temper prevailed in the two houses. He believed they were perfectly ready to take up the bill reported by the secretary of the treasury, and pass it at once. You replied "talk not to me of Mr. Ewing's bill; it contains that odious feature of local payments which I have so repeatedly denounced." I then said to you, "I have no doubt that you, sir, that house, having ascertained your views, will pass a bill in conformity to them, provided they can be satisfied that it would answer the purposes of the treasury, and relieve the country." You then said, "cannot stand by me in this emergency? Cannot you see that a bill passes congress such as I can approve without inconsistency?" I declared again my belief that such a bill might be passed. And you then said to me, "what do you understand to be my opinion?" I answered them: so that I may see that there is no misapprehension about them.

I then said that I understood you to be of opinion that congress might charter a bank in the District of Columbia, giving it its location here. To this you assented. That they might authorize such bank to establish offices of discount and deposit in the several states, with the assent of the states. I then replied, "don't name dishonorable corruptions, and are wholly unnecessary to enable the bank to discharge its duties to the country and the government."

I observed in reply that I was proposing nothing, but simply endeavoring to state what I had understood to be your opinion as to the powers which congress might constitutionally confer on a bank that you replied, "yes, if they be foreign bills, or bills drawn on the state and payable in another." That I am all the power necessary for transmitting the public funds and regulating exchanges and the currency."

Mr. WEBSTER then expressed, in strong terms, his opinion that such a charter would answer all just purposes of government and be satisfactory to the people; and declared his preference for it over any other plan he had proposed, especially that which I had suggested. He assented to the creation of an institution necessary for carrying on the fiscal operations of government. He examined it at some length, both as to its constitutionality and its influence on the currency and exchanges, in all which views I expressed your concurrence, desiring that a bill should be introduced, and expressed my belief that it should go into the hands of some of your friends. To my inquiry whether Mr. SERGEANT would be agreeable to you, you replied that he would. You especially requested Mr. WEBSTER and myself to communicate with Messrs. BERNIER and SERGEANT on the subject, to whom you said you had promised to address a note, but which you doubted not that a personal communication would be equally satisfactory. You desired us, also, in communicating with those gentlemen, not to commit us personally, lest, this being recognised as your measure, it might be made a subject of comparison to your prejudice in the course of the discussion. You and Mr. WEBSTER then conversed about the particular wording of the 16th fundamental article, containing the grant of power to deal in exchanges, and of the connexion in which that grant should be introduced; you also spoke of the name of the institution, desiring that that should be changed. To this I assented, as it would probably be made a subject of objection, as it would probably be made a subject of ridicule, and that institution ought not to be called a bank. Mr. WEBSTER undertook to adapt it in this particular to your wishes. Mr. BELL then observed to Mr. WEBSTER and myself that we had no time to lose; that if this were not immediately attended to another bill, less agreeable to you, might be got up and reported. We then said that we would lose no time.

Mr. WEBSTER accordingly called on Messrs. BERNIER and SERGEANT immediately, and I waited on them by his appointment at 5 o'clock on the same day, and agreed upon the principles of the bill in accordance with your expressed wishes. I then applied to Mr. BELL, the fact, though it did not occur in my presence, that after the bill was drawn up, and before it was reported, it was seen and examined by yourself; that your attention was specially called to the 16th fundamental article: that on full examination you concurred in its provisions; that at the same time its name was so modified as to be satisfactory to all; and the bill was reported and passed, in all essential particulars, as it was when it came through your hands.

You asked Mr. WEBSTER and myself each to prepare and present you an argument touching the constitutionality of the bill; and before those arguments could be prepared and read to you, you were called to the house, that you might put out your right hand rather than approve it. After this new resolution was taken, you asked and earnestly urged the members of your cabinet to postpone the bill; but you would neither give yourself, nor suffer them to give, any assurance of your future course, in case of such postponement. By some of us, and by myself one, the effort was made to gratify your wishes, in the only way in which it could be done with propriety; that is, by obtaining the general concurrence of the whig members of the two houses in the postponement. It failed, as I have reason to believe, because you would give no assurance that the delay was not sought as a means and occasion for hostile movements. During this season of deep feeling and earnest exertion upon our part, while we were zealously devoting our talents and influence to serve and to sustain you, the very secrets of our cabinet councils made their appearance in an infamous paper, printed in a neighboring city; the members of which were daily charged with flattery of yourself and foul abuse of your cabinet. All this I bore; for I felt that my services, so long as they could avail, were due to the nation—to that great and magnanimous people whose suffrages elevated your predecessor to the station which you now occupy. I was summoned up around him, to be his counsellors; and I felt that what was due to his memory, to the injunctions which he left us in his last dying words, and to the people, whose servants we were, had not all been performed until every means was tried, and every hope had failed of carrying out the true principles which he so highly mentioned was founded that elevated him and you to power.

This bill, framed and fashioned according to your own suggestions, in the initiation of which I and another member of your cabinet were made by you the agents and negotiators, was passed by a majority of the two houses of congress, and sent to you, and you rejected it. Important as was the part which I had taken, at your request, in the origination of this bill, and deeply as I was committed for your action upon it, you never consulted me on the subject of the veto message. You did not even refer to it in conversation, and the first notice I had of its contents was derived from rumor.

And to me, at least, you have done nothing to wipe away the personal indignity arising out of the act. I gathered, it is true, from your conversation, shortly after the bill had passed the house, that you had a strong purpose to reject it; but nothing was said like the policy to me, either in reference to myself or to those with whom I had communicated at your request, and who had acted themselves and induced the two houses to act upon the faith of that communication. And, strange as it may seem, the veto message attacks in an especial manner the very provisions which were inserted in your request, and give the name of the corporation, which was not only agreed to by you, but especially changed to meet your expressed wishes, is made the subject of your criticism. Different men might view this transaction in different points of light, but, under these circumstances, as a matter of personal honor, and of the right to remain in your counsel, to seal my lips and leave unexplained and undisclosed where lies in this transaction the departure from straightforwardness and candor. So far indeed from admitting the encouragement which you gave to this bill in its inception, and explaining and exusing your sudden change of position, you have sought to throw into your veto message an interrogatory equivalent to an assertion that it was such a bill as you had already declared could not receive your sanction. Such is the obvious effect of the first interrogatory clause on the second page. It has all the force of an assertion without its open fairness. It is a denial, and refutes this the necessary inference from your language, in my preceding statement, the correctness of which you I am sure will not call in question.

Your veto to the first bill you rested on constitutional ground and the high convictions of conscience; and no man, in my opinion, had a right to question your sincerity. I so said, and I so acted, for through all this I felt that I was in the right, and that you had my adherence and support. But how is it with respect to this? The subject of a bank is not new to you; it is more than twenty years that you have made it an object of consideration and of study, especially in its connexion with the constitutional powers of the general government. You were not, taken unprepared on this question. The bill which I reported to congress, with your approbation, at the commencement of the session, had the clause relating to agencies, and the power to deal in exchanges, as strongly developed as the one you have now rejected, and was equally ready to be approved by the members of your cabinet, and with approbation to that clause, many days after, in a conversation held in the department of state. You sanctioned it in this particular bill as detailed above. And no doubt was thrown out on the subject by you, in my hearing, or within my knowledge, until the letter of Mr. BERRILL was your last word. Soon after the reading of that letter, you threw out strong intimations that you would veto the bill if it were not postponed. That letter I did and do most unequivocally condemn, but it did not affect the constitutionality of the bill, or justify you in rejecting it on that ground; it could affect only the expediency of your action; and, whatever you may now believe as to the scruples existing in your mind, in this and in a kindred source there is strong ground to believe they have their origin.

If I be right in this, and I doubt not I am, here is a great public measure demanded by the country, passed upon and approved by the representatives of the states and the people, rejected by you as president on grounds having no origin in conscience, and no reference to the public good. The rejection of this measure, too, continues the purse with the sword in the hands of the executive, from which we strive to wrest it in the rejected bills which elevated your predecessor and you to power. I cannot conceal my opinion your course of policy. In or out of office my principles remain unchanged. I cannot abandon the principles for which, during all my political career, I have struggled; especially I cannot be one of the instruments by which the executive wishes these combined, accumulated and dangerous powers.

These, sir, are the reasons for the important step which I have felt it my duty to take, and I submit them as its justification. I am, very respectfully, yours,

T. EWING.

To the President.

Letter from the secretary of state to the editors of the National Intelligencer.

WASHINGTON, SEPTEMBER 13, 1841.

To Messrs. Gales & Son:

GENTLEMEN: Less any misapprehension should exist, as to the reasons which have led me to differ from the course pursued by my late colleagues, I deem it my duty to remain in my place, first, because I have seen no sufficient reasons for the dissolution of the late cabinet, by the voluntary act of its own members.

I am perfectly persuaded of the absolute necessity of an institution, under the authority of congress, to aid revenue and financial operations, and to give the country the blessings of a good currency and cheap exchanges.

Notwithstanding what has passed, I have confidence that the president will co-operate with the legislature in overcoming all difficulties in the attainment of these objects; and it is to the union of the whig party—with which I mean the whole party, the president, the whig congress, and the whig people—that I look for a realization of our wishes. I can look no where else.

In the second place, if I had seen reasons to resign my office, I should not have done so without giving the president reasonable notice, and affording him the opportunity of resigning, which he should consider the delicate and important affairs now pending in this department.

I am, gentlemen, respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

The following letter from the secretary of state, addressed to H. Ketchum, esq. appeared in the New York papers of Tuesday last:

WASHINGTON, SEPT. 11, 1841.

MY DEAR SIR,—I thank you for your kind and friendly letter.

You will have learned that Messrs. EWING, BELL, and BARR have all expressed having resigned their respective offices. Probably Mr. GRANGER will feel bound to follow the example. This occurrence can hardly cause you the same degree of regret which it has occasioned to me; as they are not only my friends, but persons with whom I have had, for some time, a daily official intercourse. I could not partake in this manner.

It is supposed to be justified, I presume, by the differences which have arisen between the president and congress, upon the means of establishing a proper fiscal agency, and restoring a sound state of the currency; and collateral matters, growing out of these differences. I regret these differences as deeply as any man; but I have not been able to see in what manner the resignation of the cabinet was likely either to remove or mitigate the evils produced by them. On the contrary, my only reliance for a remedy for those evils has been, and is, on the union, conciliation and perseverance of the whole whig party; and I by no means despair of seeing yet accomplished, by these means, all that we desire. It may render us more patient under disappointment in regard to one measure, to recollect, as is justly stated by the president in his last message, how great a number of important measures have become necessary to carry us safely through. I hardly know where such a mass of business has been despatched in a single session of congress.

The annual winter session is now near at hand; the same congress is again soon to assemble, and feeling as deeply as I ever did, the indispensable necessity of some suitable provision for the saving of the public money, for aid to the operations of the treasury, and to the high public interests of currency and exchange, I am not in haste to believe that the party, which has now the predominance, will not, in all these respects, yet fulfil the expectations of the country. If it shall not, then our condition is forlorn indeed. But for one, I will not give up the hope.

My particular connection with the administration, however, is in another department. I think very humbly—none can think more humbly—of the value of the services which I am able to render to the public in that post. But as there is, so far as I know, on all subjects affecting our foreign relations, a concurrence in opinion between the president and myself; and as there is no dissension in the harmony of our intercourse, I have not felt it consistent with the duty which I owe to the country, to run the risk, by any sudden or abrupt proceeding, of embarrassing the executive, in regard to subjects and questions now immediately pending, and which intimately affect the preservation of the peace of the country. I am, dear sir, with constant regard, yours, &c. &c.

(Signed) DAN'L WEBSTER.
H. KITCHEN, esq. New York.

CONGRESSIONAL WHIG MEETING.

At a meeting of the whig members of the SENATE and HOUSE of REPRESENTATIVES of the 27th congress of the United States, held in the city of Washington, on the 11th September, 1861.
The hon. N. S. SHAW, of Rhode Island, on the part of the senate, and the hon. JEREMIAH MORROW, of Ohio, on the part of the house, were called to the chair, and KENNETH RAYNER, of North Carolina, CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, of New York, and RICHARD W. THOMPSON, of Indiana, were appointed secretaries.

Mr. MANSON, of North Carolina, offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is expedient for the whigs of the senate and house of representatives of the United States to publish an address to the people of the U. States, containing a succinct exposition of the prominent proceedings of the extra session of congress, of the measures which have been adopted, and those in which they have failed, and the causes of such failure; together with such other matters as may exhibit truly the condition of the whig party and whig prospects.

Resolved, That a committee of three on the part of the senate, and five on the part of the house, be appointed to prepare such address, and submit it to a meeting of the whigs on Monday morning next, the 13th inst. at half past 8 o'clock.

And the question being taken on said resolutions, they were unanimously adopted.

Whereupon the following gentlemen were appointed said committee: Messrs. BARKLEY, of Georgia, TULLAMORE, of New York, and SMITH, of Indiana, on the part of the senate; and Messrs. EVERETT, of Vermont, MANSON, of Ohio, KENNEDY, of Maryland, JOHN C. CLARK, of New York, and RAYNER, of N. Carolina, on the part of the house.

When, on motion, the meeting adjourned, to meet again on Monday morning.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1861.

The meeting assembled, pursuant to adjournment. Mr. KENNEDY, of Maryland, from the committee appointed for that purpose, reported the following ADDRESS.

FELLOW-CITIZENS:—The extra session of congress has, at length, been brought to a close. The incidents which belong to this session, and especially those which have marked its termination, are of a nature to make so strong an impression upon the country, and to excite so much interest in the future action and relations of the whig party, that the whig representatives in both houses of congress have thought it their duty, before separating, to address their constituents with a brief exposition of the circumstances in which they conceived themselves to be placed by the events which have recently transpired.

This session of congress was called as almost the first measure of that illustrious and lamented citizen whose election to the presidency was no less significant than the general reprobation and condemnation of the acts of the preceding administration. It was expressive of a wish for an immediate and radical change in the public policy. The impvidence of those who had just been expelled from power had rendered it inevitable; and the country hailed the meeting of a new congress as the sure pledge of relief from all those evils which the disastrous incompetency of the men at the head of affairs had brought upon it.

The people desired the early adoption of the policy which had been promised them by the whig party. That policy had been brought to the consideration of the country throughout a contest of nearly twelve years' duration, maintained with unexampled devotion; and its principles were illustrated by the precepts and practice of the most eminent and patriotic of our citizens in every form by which they were able to add themselves to the intelligence of the people. No one misapprehended these principles; they were identified with the labors of that great party whose unparalleled success was both the token and the reward of the general confidence of the nation. They promised reform—

1st. In the restraint of executive power and patronage;

2d. In the wholesome regulation of the currency and the advancement of the interests of industry; and

3d. In the establishment of an economical administration of the finances.

They proposed to accomplish the first of these objects by limiting the service of the president to a single term; by forbidding all officers of the government from interfering in elections; and by a voluntary self-denial, on the part of the chief magistrate, in that excessive use of the veto power which had recently become so offensive to the country as an instrument of party supremacy.

They hoped to achieve their next object by the establishment of a national bank; by the adjustment of the system of duties upon a moderate and permanent scale, adopted as nearly as practicable to the interest, and conformable with the views of every portion of the union; by the establishment of a national land office, by which the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands amongst the states—a measure recommended not only by considerations of justice to the states themselves, but also by a sad experience of the embarrassment produced in the currency resulting from the administration of a fund of such variable amount as an element in the ordinary revenue of the government. The establishment of an economical administration of the finances they expected to attain by putting down all useless offices; by enforcing a strict accountability of the public agents; and more conspicuously, by making exact and adequate provision for the ascertaining and the orderly liquidation of that public debt which the past administration had created by permitting their expenditures to overrun their receipts, and which they had concealed from public observation by the easy device of repeated issues of government notes.

These were the prominent points to which the policy of the whig party had been directed, and which constituted the great issues before the country in the recent presidential election. We are aware that our adversaries in that contest now deny these issues, founding their denial chiefly upon the fact that no formal manifesto was put forth to declare the terms upon which we insisted. We chose rather to appeal to the widely diffused knowledge of our principles, which had been impressed upon every man's mind in that long struggle of years gone by; with which one party had been identified, and of which its very name was an exponent.

It need not be said that, in a representation spread over a territory of such extent as that comprehended by our union, and exhibiting interests so diversified, which might be called the characteristic principles of the whig party, throughout this wide sphere, should be subject to occasional modifications, dependent upon local influences; and that it was incumbent, therefore, upon the party to meet together in a spirit of mutual concession and accommodation of sectional difference of opinion. It need not be told that, in the system of measures which we have enumerated, conflicting views might naturally exist between the representatives of distant portions of our republic, and that only by the yielding of minor interests to the essential concession of general good, could unanimity be obtained in the action of congress. This was natural, and to be expected. But we felt a proud consciousness that in the patriotism of the party all such difficulties would vanish, and that the demands of an enlarged welfare would be met and fulfilled, through the virtue of that spirit of generous forbearance, that liberal and comprehensive sense of self-denial and concession, which rests at the heart of our confederacy, and which constitutes the living principle of our union. Before the appointed day arrived for the meeting of congress, and that at the expiration of but one short month from the date of our assembling, our beloved president was snatched from us by the grasp of death; too soon for the happiness of his country, but not too soon to awaken in our bosoms a deep and awful sense of the irreparable loss which we have sustained in the deprivation of a great and good man—not too soon to convince us of the long and how bitterly our country is doomed to deplore this heavy misfortune. In this our calamity, we hoped to find consolation in the character and principles of him whom the constitution had designated to fill the office of the departed chief. It is true, that towards that individual, even at the moment of the selection for the vice presidency, no very earnest public attention had been directed; and it is equally true, that his past career was bestowed upon the current of his previous life and opinions. We only knew him as one professing to be a member of the whig party, and as seeking to identify himself with those great leaders of that party whose opinions and principles were deeply engrained in the most conspicuous acts of our policy; and we were not surprised by the uncertainty of his position in the land. In this connection, where he had sought to be prominent, we discerned what we conceived, and what doubtless he meant, to be a pledge of faithful adherence to the cardinal doctrines for which we struggled, and with which the hopes of the country which we had conquered up. We hoped to find consolation also in the fact that his accession to the presidency brought him into communion and intimate political fellowship with the chosen vanguard of the whig party—the first selection made by general Harrison of a cabinet, distinguished for its paramount ability, integrity and fidelity to the glorious cause in which we had conquered up. A cabinet eminently crowned with the public confidence, in whom all men trusted as in the very embodiment of the principles of the party to which they belonged; who were inseparably associated with its glory, and in whose generous and honorable relation to the president we had the security of a cabinet of prosperous councils, and be the pledge of a co-operation which should enable him to accomplish all that the nation desired. These hopes were still further enlivened by the encouraging tone in which the president referred, in his first address to the nation, to the "ever glorious example" afforded him by the great and good republican school, and the declaration of his determination to walk in the path which they pointed out.

In the indulgence of these hopes, congress entered upon its labors. By adopting rules for the despatch of business conformable to the emergency of an extra session, and in view of the great amount of legislation which the times required, we have been enabled to achieve all, and even more than all, that our constituents could have demanded at our hands. The leading and great measures of this session, have been under discussion, in congress and out of it, for many years past, and little remained to be done but to carry them into effect. There was nothing in the circumstances or position of either party to Congress to require, or even to justify, protracted discussions; and the majority, therefore, felt themselves entitled to give to the extra session the character of a congress of action and decision, rather than one of debate; and we feel assured that in this effort we have done more than respond to the just expectations of the people.

First in urgency amongst the bills passed during the session, and that to which the public command most imperatively drew the notice of congress, was the repeal of the sub-treasury law. Our next care was the enactment of the land bill. This was followed by an act converting the debt which the preceding administration had entailed upon the country into a loan of twelve million of dollars, which is limited for its redemption to a period of three years. Associated with this measure was the revenue bill, rendered necessary not only as a provision towards the extinguishment of the loan, but also as an indispensable condition to the repeal of the ordinance and necessary appropriations of the year. The bankrupt act, so earnestly and so long solicited by a large and meritorious class of our citizens, has been passed under circumstances which cannot but reflect the highest honor upon the representatives of many sections of the national defence, suggested the measures of relief which perhaps have been destined to a further delay, but being brought, as it was, into that series of measures which were supposed to embrace the scheme of relief which the nation at large required, it met from a whig congress that support of which the chief argument and highest praise are derived from respect which every one felt to be due to a comprehensive policy, whose scope should include every interest in the nation. It is a trial for the benefit of the country, and remains to be altered or improved as the public wants may hereafter be found to require. The importance, in the present posture of our affairs, of attending to the national defence, suggested the measures of establishing a home squadron, of repairing and arming the fortifications, of providing for the defence of the lakes; and of bringing the nation at large into a state of readiness against hostile aggression—in regard to which measures, as great unanimity prevailed in congress, and as the whig party, in the course of its career, has received the undivided approbation of our constituents throughout the whole union.

This rapid review, fellow citizens, will exhibit what we have done. What we have failed to do remains to be told.

It is with profound and poignant regret that we find ourselves called upon to invoke your attention to this point. Upon the great and leading measure touching this question, our anxious endeavors to respond to the earnest prayer of our nation have been frustrated by an act as unlooked for as it is to be lamented. We grieve to say to you that by the exercise of that power in the constitution which has ever been regarded with suspicion, and often with odium, by the people—a power which we had hoped was never to be exhibited, on this subject, by a whig president—we have been debarred in two attempts to exercise a fiscal agency which the wants of the country had demonstrated to us, in the most absolute form of proof, to be eminently necessary and proper in the present emergency. Twice have we, with the utmost diligence and deliberation, matured a plan for the collection, safe-keeping and disbursing of the public money, and twice the agency of a corporation adapted to that end, and twice has it been our fate to encounter the opposition of the president, through the application of the veto power. The character of that veto in each case, the circumstances in which it was administered, and the grounds upon which it has been decided, render its application of your friends in congress sufficiently apparent in the public mind, and the debates relating to it. This subject has acquired a painful interest with us, and will doubtless acquire it with you, from the unhappy developments with which it is accompanied. We are constrained to say, that the president is wrong in his conviction that the veto of the president has been interposed on this question solely upon conscientious and well considered opinions of constitutional scruple as to his duty in the case presented. On the contrary, too many proofs have been forced upon our observation to leave us free from the apprehension, that the president has permitted himself to be beguiled into an opinion that, by this exhibition of his prerogative, he might be able to divert the policy of his administration into a channel which should lead to new political combinations, and accomplish results which must overthrow the present notions of party in the country, and finally produce a state of things, which those who elected him, at least have never contemplated. We have seen from an early period of the session, that the whig party did not enjoy the confidence of the president. With mortification we have observed that his associates more solidly sided with a free trader than with a protectionist, and have been thus to prostrate our purposes, rather than those whose principles seemed to be most identified with the power by which he was elected. We have reason to believe that he has permitted himself to be approached, counselled and influenced by those who have manifested a hostile interest in success of whig measures. What were represented by his opinions and designs have been freely and even insolently put forth in certain portions, and those not the most reputable, of the public press, in a manner that ought to be deemed offensive to his honor, as it certainly was to the feelings of those who were believed to be his friends. In reference to the assistance manifested by the members of the whig party in congress to ascertain specifically the president's notions in reference to the details of such a bill relating to a fiscal agent as would be likely to meet his approbation, the frequent changes of his opinion, and the singular want of consistency in his views, have baffled his efforts, and rendered the hope of adjustment with him impossible.

Congress, early in the session, called upon the secretary of the treasury for the plan of a fiscal agent: the result of this call was a bill which was reported in detail, with an argument in its favor, and it was, as we had a right to regard it, received by all as the bill of the president. In fact, it was so completely and so unhesitatingly received by the members of the whig party in congress to ascertain specifically the president's notions in reference to the details of such a bill relating to a fiscal agent as would be likely to meet his approbation, the frequent changes of his opinion, and the singular want of consistency in his views, have baffled his efforts, and rendered the hope of adjustment with him impossible.

trates by reference to the "dealings in the exchanges" of the bank of the United States in 1833, which the president affirms "amounted to upwards of one hundred millions of dollars." Yet this plan, when it was submitted to him, was objected to on a new ground. The last veto has narrowed the question of a bank down to the basis of the sub-treasury scheme, and it is obvious from the opinions of that message that the country is not to expect any thing better than the exploded sub-treasury, or some measure of the same character, from Mr. Taylor.

The subject of all these various opinions, an impenetrable mystery seemed to hang over the whole question. There was no such frank interchange of sentiment as ought to characterize the intercourse of a president and his friends, and the last persons in the government who would seem to have been intrusted with his confidence on these important topics were the constitutional advisers which the laws had provided for this view.

In his review of the position into which the late events have thrown the whig party, it is with profound sorrow we look to the course pursued by the president, and find that it has been a course of long and painful struggle, and the consummation of a glorious victory; he has even perhaps thrown us once more upon the field of political strife, not weakened in numbers, nor shorn of the support of the country, but stripped of the arms which success had given him, and left again to rely upon that high patriotism which for twelve years sustained us in a conflict of unequalled asperity, and which finally brought us to the fulfillment of those brilliant hopes which he has done so much to destroy.

In this state of things, the whigs will naturally look with anxiety to the future, and inquire what are the actual relations between the president and those who brought him into power; and what, in the opinion of their friends in congress, should be their course hereafter. On both of these questions we feel it to be our duty to address you in perfect frankness and without reserve, but, at the same time, with due respect to others.

In regard to the first, we are constrained to say, that the president, by the course he has adopted in respect to the application of the veto power to two successive bank charters, each of which there was just reason to believe would meet his approbation; by his withdrawal of confidence from his real friends in congress, and the substitution of those who are bestowal of it upon others notwithstanding their notorious opposition to leading measures of his administration, has voluntarily separated himself from those by whose exertions and suffrages he was elevated to that office, through which he reached his present exalted station. The existence of an unnatural relation is as extraordinary as the annihilation of a painful and mortifying. What are the consequences and duties which grow out of it?

The first consequence is, that those who brought the president into power can be no longer, in any manner or degree, justly held responsible or blamed for the course which he has pursued in the exercise of the government; and that the president and his advisers should be exclusively hereafter deemed accountable. But, as by the joint acts of Providence and the people he is constitutionally invested with the powers of chief magistrate, whilst he remains in office he should be treated with perfect respect by all. And it will be equally necessary, and no less imperative, to give to his official acts and measures full and full consideration, approving them and co-operating in their support where they can, and differing from and opposing any of them only from a high sense of public duty.

The more important question remains to be touched. What ought to be the future line of conduct of the whig party in the extraordinary emergency which now exists?

They came into power to accomplish great and patriotic objects. By the zeal and perseverance of the majorities in congress, some of the most important of these objects have been carried at the extra session of the year last past, and the result of the conduct of the president has occasioned bitter mortification and deep regret. Shall the party, therefore, yielding to sentiments of despair, abandon its duty, and submit to defeat and disgrace? Far from suffering such dishonorable consequences, the very disappointment which it has unfortunately experienced should serve only to result in its recovery, and inspire it with fresh courage to persevere with a spirit unshaken and a resolution unshaken, until the prosperity of the country is fully re-established, and its liberties firmly secured against all danger from the abuses, encroachments or usurpations of the executive department of the government.

At the head of the duties which remain for the whigs to perform towards their country stands conspicuously and pre-eminently above all others—

First. A reduction of the executive power, by a further limitation of the veto, so as to secure obedience to the public will, as that shall be expressed by the immediate representatives of the people and the states, with no other control than that which is indispensable to avert hasty or unconstitutional legislation.

By the adoption of a single term for the incumbent of the presidential office.

By a separation of the purse from the sword, and with that view to the re-appointment of the head of the treasury in congress and not by the president.

By subjecting the power of dismissal from office to just restrictions, so as to render the president amenable for its exercise.

Second. The establishment by congress of a fiscal agent, competent to collect, safely keep, and disburse the public moneys, to render the currency and to equalize the exchanges of the currency; and Third. The introduction of economy in the administration of the government, and the discontinuance of all superfluous and useless offices.

To the effectuation of these objects ought the exertions of the whig party to be directed. These only should be chosen members of congress who are willing cordially to co-operate in the accomplishment of them. Instead of striking our flag, let it be reared still higher, with a firmer hand, bearing upon its folds in conspicuous letters, THE WILL OF THE NATION ENFORCED BY THE WILL OF ONE MAN; ONE PRESIDENTIAL TERM; FISCAL GOVERNMENT; AND NO SUB-TREASURY, OPEN OR COVERT, IN SUBSTANCE OR IN FACT; NO GOVERNMENT BANK, BUT AN INSTITUTION CAPABLE OF GUARDING THE PEOPLE'S TREASURE AND ADMINISTERING TO THE PEOPLE'S WANTS."

Rallying under that banner, let us appeal to that people whose struggle exertions led to victory in the late glorious struggle. Let us invoke the action of the legislative councils of the sovereign states of this union. Instructed by their immediate constituents, let them ascertain and express the public will in relation to these great questions; and especially let them, within their respective constitutional spheres, exert themselves to give it effect.

Animated by these principles, and guided by Providence, defeat is impossible, and triumphant success inevitable. We may confidently hope that vast numbers of our fellow citizens, who have been hitherto separated from us, will unite with us under such a glorious standard, and that the majorities in both houses of congress sufficiently large may be secured to carry any measure demanded by the welfare of the nation, in spite of the interposition of the power with which any one man may have been accidentally invested. Disappointed in that if such should be our lot, we will still remain faithful to the amendment of the constitution curtailing the executive power. And if that should fail, we have only to recur to the noble example of our ancestors, to recollect the duty we owe to ourselves and posterity, and to bear with noble fortitude three years longer the sufferings inflicted during the last three years by the mal-administration of the executive department of the government. We shall have the consolation of reflecting that, in the mean time, if the president can prevent the attainment of all the good which congress is desirous to accomplish, congress may check or prevent some of the mischiefs which, under a different state of majorities it might have permitted the power to impose.

N. P. TALLMADGE,

O. H. SMITH,

Committee of the senate.

J. P. KENNEDY,

S. M. JOHNSON,

HORACE EVERETT,

J. C. CLARK,

K. RAYNER,

Committee of the house of representatives.

Whereupon the question was taken upon the adoption of said address, and it was unanimously adopted.

Ordered, That twenty thousand copies of said address be printed, and circulated among the people of the United States.

Ordered, That said address be signed by the members of the senate and approved by the president, and that the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the presidents, and countersigned by the secretaries.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned sine die.

NATHAN F. DIXON,

JEREMIAH MORROW, presidents.

K. RAYNER, secretaries.

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN,

R. W. THOMPSON,

LAND BILL. Mr. Rayner, of N. C. in his speech in the house of representatives, July 6, submitted the following statement, showing the amount which each state would receive under this bill, $3,300,000 to be distributed each year, and supposing the ratio of representation under the late census to be put at 60,000. If any other ratio should be agreed on, (he adds), the relative proportion will be the same. The sums are stated in round numbers:

Maine	$36,000	South Carolina	$84,000
New Hampshire	48,000	Alabama	108,000
Vermont	48,000	Mississippi	96,000
Massachusetts	144,000	Tennessee	48,000
Connecticut	60,000	Louisiana	48,000
Rhode Island	12,000	Kentucky	144,000
New York	480,000	Ohio	132,000
New Jersey	72,000	Indiana	300,000
Pennsylvania	336,000	Missouri	132,000
Delaware	12,000	Illinois	84,000
Maryland	72,000	Arkansas	60,000
Virginia	204,000	Michigan	12,000
North Carolina	120,000		36,000

AWARDS OF THE MEXICAN COMMISSIONERS. By a late act of congress, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the treasury is authorised to issue certificates to all persons entitled to receive the sums awarded by the commissioners for adjudging claims between the republic of Mexico and the United States, whenever such persons shall present certified copies of such awards. These certificates are to be in such form, and for such portions of the sums awarded as may be convenient for the claimants.

THE CENSUS. An act approved September 1st, extends the time allowed to the marshals of the states and territories for making their returns of the sixth census, until the 1st day of January, 1842. The time allowed to assistants for completing their enumeration is extended to 1st December next. Both marshals and their assistants continue subject to all penalties contained in previous acts, unless their returns are made in the time which this act prescribes. This act also authorises a new enumeration of the inhabitants of Montgomery county, Maryland, in consequence of the alleged incorrectness of the late returns.

NORTHEASTERN BOUNDARY. The Benchor Whig says: "The United States troops, ordered to occupy the post at the Aroostook and Fish river, in the disputed territory, started from Houlton on Tuesday last. The first detachment started with a heavy team of oxen and all the necessary implements for clearing the roads and for erecting suitable quarters and barracks. A good military road, supported at the expense of the general government, from Houlton to Fish river, may soon be expected, and a regular mail route, with a post office at Fish river and the Aroostook, will be established immediately. The general government is now fairly upon the territory, and there will be no backing out until a final settlement of the question, under the present efficient administration cannot be long delayed."

THE WHALE FISHERY. The representative in congress of the 11th congressional district of Massachusetts, has furnished a list of the vessels engaged in the whaling business. Their number and the ports to which they belong, are as follows:

Nantucket	- - - - -	84
New Bedford	- - - - -	189
Norhaven	- - - - -	48
Falmouth	- - - - -	10
Edgartown	- - - - -	12
Holmes' Hole	- - - - -	12
Province Town	- - - - -	12

Total, - - - - - 359

Of which 66 are barques, brigs, and schooners, and all the rest ships—many of them 800 or 900 tons. This single district, then, has 359 vessels—or, an aggregate of 125,650 tons—navigated by not less than 9,000 seamen, engaged in a single branch of enterprise.

SUGAR TRADE IN THE UNITED STATES. The Richmond Compiler, in reference to this subject says: "In 1830 the amount of sugar shipped from N. Orleans was trifling. In 1836 the sugar exports amounted to 6,161,500 lbs.; in 1840 it had increased to 47,005,500 lbs. besides the amount sent to the interior from the Mississippi valley, which must be large. This is more than one-fifth of the sugar, made from cane, consumed in the United States, as there was about 190,000,000 lbs. imported in 1839. If the home production of sugar increase the next five years as it has done the last five, we shall make all our own sugar. This will be an important consumption. We paid to foreigners for sugar, in 1839, $9,924,623, which exceeds in value any one article of our exports, except cotton, and except the exports of tobacco for only two years, viz: 1836 and 1839—the former it amounted to $10,494,104; the latter, $10,449,155. The shipments of molasses from New Orleans to our eastern cities have increased alike with those of sugar. In 1836, 419,358 gallons were shipped; in 1840, 3,850,400 gallons. In 1839 we imported 23,094,477 gallons, valued at $4,363,294.—Richmond carries on a considerable trade with New Orleans in sugar and molasses.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 52.

Head-quarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, Washington, September 11, 1841.

The following regulations for the government of officers of the subsistence department, directed by the department of war, are announced in orders for the information and government of all concerned.

"The assistant commissary general of subsistence and commissaries of subsistence shall have choice of positions according to rank; but no junior shall be removed from his station when selected by a senior, until he shall have served thereat one year.

All officers of the subsistence department shall be subject to duty on the field.

Assistant commissaries of subsistence, unless on very special occasions, when sanctioned by the major general commanding, shall served with their respective companies.

In addition to his other duties, the assistant commissary general of subsistence is charged with the duties of inspector of the subsistence department."

By order, L. THOMAS,

Assistant adjutant general.

ORDERS No. 6.—EASTERN DIVISION.

Head-quarters, eastern division, Troy, N. Y. Sept. 8, 1841.

Agreeable to general orders No. 51, the undersigned, brigadier general, assumes command of the eastern division of the army.

The head-quarters, until further orders, will be at Troy, N. Y. where all reports, returns and communications will be addressed to—the assistant adjutant general of the eastern division.

The staff of the general will be as follows: Captain R. Anderson, assistant adjutant general; captain Edmund Schriver, assistant adjutant general; ex-officio assistant inspector general; and first lieutenant J. A. Thomas, 3d artillery, aid-de-camp.

JOHN E. WOOL.

By command of the general:

ED. SCHRIVER, A. J. general.

Brigadier General Wool left his head-quarters at Troy, N. Y. on the 12th inst. on a visit to the U. S. military posts in Maine.

Fort Kent is the name given by Brig. Gen. Eustis to the fortification on Fish river, Maine. That on the Aroostook is already known by the name of Fort Fairfield.

2d artillery.—180 men, under the command of Col. Fanning, have arrived at Fort Monroe. The following officers are attached to the post: Lieuts. R. A. Luther, J. F. Roland, J. Sedgwick, W. A. Nichols, A. A. Gibson, W. Hays and asst. surg. E. Worrell.

3d artillery.—Major S. Churchill has been appointed inspector general, with the rank of colonel.

4th artillery.—The appointment of major Churchill makes room for the promotion of brevet major John Erving to the majority of the 3d artillery; and to 1st lieutenant J. B. Scott, captain and 3d lieutenant E. Bradford as 1st lieutenant in the 4th.

1st infantry.—The steamboat Macedonian arrived at Jefferson barracks, Aug. 31, with 210 men, destined to forts Crawford and Scelling. They will remain but a few days at the barracks.

DEATH OF LIEUT. WM. PAGE JONES. This very promising young officer, son of adjutant general R. Jones, of the city of Washington, and a universal favorite of those who knew him, having been attached to the flying artillery company now stationed at Fort McHenry, was riding rapidly towards the fort on the 11th inst. in company with lieutenant Ridgely, when both were thrown from their horses by coming in contact with a cow that suddenly crossed their road. The latter was not seriously injured, but the former received so severe a blow on the brain that in spite of the best medical assistance, he expired about four o'clock next morning. Every respect was paid to the remains and memory of the deceased. Gen. Jones, we learn was not with his family on the melancholy occasion, having resorted to the Virginia Springs for a few weeks for the improvement of his health. Sincerely do we sympathize with them in their bereavement.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Quartermaster general.
Thomas S. Jessup, major gen. bvt. in charge of department at Washington.
1st. quartermasters general with the rank of colonel.
Henry Stanton, N. York, inspector of the department. Trueman Cross, Washington.
Dep. quartermaster general with the rank of lieutenant.
Henry Whittier, Philadelphia, in charge of the operations of the department in Florida.
Thomas F. Hunt, absent from duty on account of bad health.

Quartermasters with the rank of major.

Isaac Clark, New Orleans.
Zeeb Mackay, New Orleans.
C. Thomas, acting insp. of the department in Florida.
Samuel McKee, St. Louis.

Assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

- 1 D. D. Tompkins, Philadelphia.
- 2 C. A. Waite, St. Augustine.
- 3 Thomas Swends, Fort Owenworth.
- 4 George H. Croxson, member of board for investigating Florida claims.
- 5 S. B. Dusenberry, Baltimore.
- 6 David H. Vinton, Detroit.
- 7 E. B. Alexander, Fort Smith.
- 8 Osborne Cook, New Orleans.
- 9 S. P. Heintzelman, member of board for investigating Florida claims.
- 11 James R. Irwin, Cincinnati, temporarily.
- 12 M. M. Clark, Savannah.
- 13 E. S. Shiley, Cedar Key, Florida.
- 14 E. B. Babbit, Trade's Hill, Geo.
- 15 John P. Davis, Fort Gibson.
- 16 R. E. Clary, Plattsburgh, N. Y.
- 17 Charles O. Collins, Houston.
- 18 A. R. Hetzel, Washington.
- 19 R. S. Dix, Boston.
- 20 E. A. O'Brien, Tampa Bay.
- 21 James M. Hill, Charleston.
- 22 Dixon S. Miles, Plaitka.
- 23 W. Scott Ketchum, Port Leon.
- 24 James H. Sykes, Buffalo, N. Y.
- 25 Abram C. Myers, Tampa Bay.
- 26 M. M. Plummer, on leave—bad health.
- 27 Wm. W. M. McKee, N. Y.
- 28 Wm. Wall, Fort Running. Army & Navy Co.

THE NAVY.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.

By and with the advice and consent of the senate.

COMMODORS.
Commanders to be Captains, from September 8, 1841.

- | | |
|------------------------|----------------------|
| 1. John Percival, | 8. Thomas Crabb, |
| 2. John H. Aulick, | 9. Thomas Payne, |
| 3. William V. Taylor, | 10. James Armstrong, |
| 4. Bladen Delany, | 11. Joseph Smoot, |
| 5. Silas H. Stringham, | 12. Samuel L. Erese, |
| 6. Isaac Mayo, | 13. Benjamin Page, |
| 7. William Shervine, | |

Lieutenants to be Commanders.

Frederick Varman, from the 8th March, 1841.
From September 8, 1841.

- | | |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Joseph R. Jarvis, | 29. Joseph Myers, |
| 2. Thomas W. Freelon, | 30. Wm. C. Wetmore, |
| 3. John W. Le Compte, | 31. Thomas R. Gedney, |
| 4. Charles T. Platt, | 32. John Babier, |
| 5. Wm. M. Armstrong, | 33. Victor M. Randolph, |
| 6. Wm. F. Shields, | 34. Jacob Crowninshield, |
| 7. G. P. Fendergrast, | 35. Frederick Engle, |
| 8. Wm. C. Nicholson, | 36. Alexander J. Dallas, |
| 9. James B. Cooper, | 37. John Ridd, |
| 10. E. A. Mendenhall, | 38. Robert Ritchie, |
| 11. John L. Saunders, | 39. Wm. W. McKee, |
| 12. Joseph B. Hull, | 40. Franklin Buchanan, |
| 13. John Stone Paine, | 41. Samuel Mereer, |
| 14. Joseph Moorehead, | 42. Charles Lowndes, |
| 15. Thomas Peligra, | 43. L. M. Goldsborough, |
| 16. John G. Claiborne, | 44. George N. Hollins, |
| 17. Irvine Shubrick, | 45. D. N. Ingraham, |
| 18. John Kelly, | 46. John Martson, jr., |
| 19. Edmund Byrne, | 47. Henry Bruce, |
| 20. Edward S. Johnson, | 48. Wm. D. Newman, |
| 21. Wm. H. Gardner, | 49. Henry A. Adams, |
| 22. David G. Farragut, | 50. Alex. R. Pinkham, |
| 23. Stephen B. Wilson, | 51. James D. Knight, |
| 24. Edward C. Rutledge, | 52. Joseph Mattison, |
| 25. William S. Harris, | 53. William S. Walker, |
| 26. Thomas A. Dorin, | 54. Alex. S. Mackenzie, |
| 27. R. B. Cunningham, | 55. George F. Pearson, |
| 28. James G. Thompson, | |

Passed Midshipmen to be Lieutenants.

John J. Alay, March 18, 1841.

Edward C. Bowers, April 26, 1841.

Nathaniel G. Bay, May 1, 1841.

From September 8, 1841.

- | | |
|-----------------------|---------------------|
| 1. Otway H. Beman, | 4. George J. Wyche, |
| 2. Thomas A. Budd, | 5. Edmund Jenkins, |
| 3. Andrew F. V. Gray, | 6. T. A. M. Craven, |

7. Dominick Lynch, jr. 31. Enoch G. Parrott,
8. Francis B. Renshaw, 32. John Carroll,
9. Horace N. Harrison, 33. James McCormick,
10. James H. North, 34. Richard S. Trapier,
11. Robert B. Pegram, 35. Richard Wainwright,
12. Edward C. Ward, 36. George M. Totten,
13. Richard P. Coddell, 37. William D. Hurst,
14. Edw. J. De Haven, 38. Wm. Ross Gardner,
15. Charles Thomas, 39. William B. Renshaw,
16. Add. R. Taliaferro, 40. Carter B. Poindeexter,
17. Rich'd L. Tigliam, 41. Henry T. Wingate,
18. James H. Strong, 42. Alonzo B. Davis,
19. J. Madison Pringle, 43. William Reynolds,
20. Charles P. Patterson, 44. William Reynolds,
21. Aug. S. Baldwin, 45. Woodhull S. Schenck,
22. Edm. T. Shubrick, 46. James L. Parker,
23. Stephen Dod, 47. Lewis C. Sartori,
24. Wm. B. Whiting, 48. William A. Jones,
25. Charles Hunter, 49. Edmund Lainer,
26. Benj. P. Shattuck, 50. John H. Sherburne,
27. Thomas M. Brasher, 51. Fabius Stanly,
28. George T. Sinclair, 52. Latham B. Avery,
29. John Moony, 53. James B. Lewis,
30. Samuel R. Knox, 54. James J. Forbes,

Passed Assistant Surgeons to be Surgeons.
Daniel C. McNeil, Sept. 23, 1841.
Lewis Wolley, July 29, 1841.
From September 8, 1841.
1. Lewis W. Minor, 6. M. G. Delaney,
2. William J. Powell, 7. Wm. P. McClenahan,
3. J. Frederick Sickness, 8. Wm. L. Van Home,
4. N. C. Barrabino, 9. Daniel S. Green.
5. Henry S. Remolds.

AFFIDAVITS.
To be Assistant Surgeons, September 8, 1841.
1. A. A. Henderson, Pa. 5. Ed. McKelley, Pa.
2. John Hastings, Pa. 6. A. F. J. Garnett, Va.
3. C. H. Broughton, Va. 7. Hugh Morson, Va.
4. R. T. Maxwell, Del.

To be Chaplains, September 8, 1841.
Nortimer K. Talbot, of Pennsylvania.
Moses B. Chase, of New Hampshire.
Cester Newell, of South Carolina.
Theodore Bartow, of Georgia.
Joseph Stockbridge, of Maine.
Samuel T. Gillet, of Indiana.
William McKenney, of Maryland.

Acting Midshipmen, September 9, 1841.
James Armstrong, Va. Alexander Mitchell, Ky.
Charles S. Bell, N. J. Wm. H. Murdaugh, Va.
Wash. F. Buckner, Ark. Oliver May, Va.
Oscar C. Bauger, Penn. Chas. V. McCauley, Pa.
John T. Bartlett, Maine. Thomas J. Miller, Ga.
Edward Crittenden, Ky. Arthur H. Otis, Mass.
Cornelius Comerys, Mas. Wingate Pillsbury, Maine.
Wm. Dekoven, N. Y. Robert Patton, Va.
Thomas C. Eaton, Maine. R. D. Price, Md.
James L. Ferguson, Va. John Rochelle, Va.
Samuel F. Griffin, Ga. Robert Seiden,
Thos. C. Harris, Penn. Robert W. Scott, Tenn.
M. P. Jones, John Stewart, N. C.
John Kell, Ga. Byrd W. Stevenson, Va.
Charles Latimer, D. C. William Sharp, Va.
Theodorick Lee, D. C. Stephen D. Spence, Md.

Acting Midshipmen, September 10, 1841.
Albert Allmand, Va. Thomas D. Mahon, Penn.
Simeon S. Bassett, D. C. John H. Russell,
F. P. Baldwin, D. C. James H. Somerville, Md.
Calvin Cowles, N. C. Elias Vanderhorst, N. C.
Geo. B. Douglass, Tenn. John G. Whitaker, N. Y.
Thomas Flournoy, Ga. James Waddell, N. C.
C. C. Hunter, Del. Henry Willis, Md.
Thomas Irvin, Ohio. Benj. B. Wright, Ky.
James Jewett, Ky. Thos. L. Walker, Tenn.
Henry H. Key, Md. John Wilkes, jr. N. Y.
Leonard H. Lyne, Ky.

Marine Corps.
Mathew R. Kintzing, of Pennsylvania, to be a second lieutenant, from September 8, 1841.

MARINE CORPS.
Colonel Commandant.

1. Archibald Henderson, head quarters.
Lieutenant Colonel.
1. R. D. Wainwright, superintending recruiting service, office in Washington, D. C.

Captains.
1. Samuel Miller, Philadelphia.
2. Samuel E. Watson, Portsmouth, N. H.
3. William H. Freeman, Charleston, Mass.
4. Levi Twiggs, head quarters.

Ensigns.
1. John Harris, Brooklyn, N. Y.
2. Thomas A. Linton, Washington city, lately returned from a cruise.
3. James Edelin, waiting orders in Washington city.
4. Parke G. Howle, adjutant and inspector, head quarters.
5. William Dulany, Baltimore rendezvous.

6. Thomas S. English, Brooklyn, N. Y.
7. George W. Walker, paymaster, head quarters.
8. Ward Marston, Charleston, Mass.
9. Aug. A. Nicholson, quartermaster, head quarters.
10. Benjamin Macomber, New York rendezvous.
11. A. N. Brevoort, Gosport, Va.
12. Richard Douglas, waiting orders in New York.
13. Job G. Williams, Pensacola, W. F.

First Lieutenants.
1. Alvin Edson, Delaware 74.
2. Henry B. Tyler, head quarters.
3. Joseph L. C. Hardy, head quarters, paymaster's department.
4. Geo. F. Lindsay, assistant quartermaster, Philadelphia.
5. Landon N. Carter, head quarters, quartermaster's department.
6. John G. Reynolds, frigate Constellation.
7. Francis C. Hall, Philadelphia.
8. Geo. H. Terrett, head quarters.
9. William E. Stark, Norfolk, Va. clothing store.
10. N. N. Waldron, Brooklyn, N. Y.
11. William Lang, head quarters, sick.
12. Jacob Zelin, head quarters, sick.
13. Geo. W. Robbins, Brooklyn, N. Y.
14. D. D. Baker, Portsmouth, N. H.
15. Arch'd H. Gillispie, Pensacola, W. F.
16. Benj. E. Brooke, Philadelphia.
17. Jabez C. Rich, frigate Constitution.
18. Thos. Theo. Jarman, Indian Key, E. F.
19. Addison Garland, frigate Bradywine.
20. Frederick B. McNeill, receiving ship North Carolina.

Second Lieutenants.
1. Edward L. West, head quarters.
2. Robt. C. Caldwell, frigate Macedonia.
3. Lafayette Searcy, on leave of absence.
4. William L. Young, head quarters, on leave of absence.
5. Asahel Watson, head quarters, on leave of absence.
6. Henry B. Watson, head quarters, on leave.
7. Thomas A. Brady, frigate Potomac.
8. Isaac T. Doughty, Brooklyn, N. Y.
9. W. A. T. Maudox, Delaware 74.
10. Wm. B. Shuck, Delaware 74.
11. John S. Devlin, Brooklyn, N. Y.
12. Alger S. Taylor, Philadelphia, on leave of absence.
13. William L. Shuttleworth, Brooklyn, N. Y.
14. James Maguire, under orders to Indian Key, E. F.
15. Robt. D. Taylor, Norfolk, Va.
16. Wm. W. Curtis, Charleston, Mass.
17. Robert Tansill, Brooklyn, N. Y.
18. John J. Berret, Gosport, Va.
19. John C. Grayson, Philadelphia.
Head Quarters of the Marine Corps, Adjutant and Inspector's office, Washington, Sept. 29, 1841.
Adjutant and Inspector.

The New York Star of the 9th inst. states that orders have been received at the navy yard at Brooklyn to fit out, with despatch, the Independence razee, and the sloop of war Falmouth.

The U. S. brig Dolphin, which has been lying at anchor for a few days past off the Battery, sailed on Tuesday, when she sailed under way from Washington. Her destination we understand to be Matanzas. We annex a list of the officers:

Lieut. commandant, Wm. W. McKean; 1st Lieut. James H. Ward; 2d do. Charly Steadman; purser, C. C. Rice; assistant surgeon, J. S. Messersmith; passed midshipman, E. A. Ward; midshipmen, James commanders
M. A. Longhish, William J. Truxton, John E. Hopsom; Adam Young, master's mate.

Captain James Armstrong has been detached from the command of the U. S. sloop of war Cyane, now lying off the naval hospital, Norfolk, and ready for sea. It is rumored that commander C. K. Stirling will be appointed to the command. (Patriot).
The frigate Macedonia, and sloop of war Warren, got under weigh yesterday morning, and with a light wind from the north, proceeded down the harbor, bound to Norfolk to reit, and from thence to the West Indies. But the wind hauling to the eastward, prevented their going to sea until today.

(Boston Mercantile Jour.)

A Naval General Court Martial was assembled in May last, on board the U. S. ship Pennsylvania, at Norfolk, Virginia, and continued in session until about the 6th of August.

The court was composed of commodore W. Bradford Shubrick, president. Captains Charles W. Skinner, Beverly Kennon, Philip E. Voorheses, J. Paul Zantzinger, Thomas T. Williams, commanders Rhaden Dufany and Isaac Maye, members—Henry S. Allmand, erq. judge advocate.

The following officers were tried, but their sentences have not yet been promulgated. They were all recently attached to the U. S. ship Cyane.

Commander W. K. Latimer—Lieutenants F. B. Ellison, S. W. Godon and B. M. Dove—surgeon L. B. Hunter and purser H. Bridge. [Army & Navy Chron.]

STATES OF THE UNION.

MARYLAND.
THE DEFENSE OF BATTLE OF THE 13TH SEPTEMBER, 1814. The anniversary of that memorable event occurring this year on Sunday, the commemoration was deferred to Monday the 13th. Twenty-seven years have left their impress upon the features of those that survive, and yet there was a formidable array of men and arms. Then met the men of the defenders of the city, the would again be amongst the foremost in the ranks, if occasion required their services. Others there were to whom the addition of so many years made it obvious that they had fulfilled their day of service in so arduous a field, but whose presence this day contributed the deepest touch of sensibility to the scene. The arrangements of the day were admirable, and the display imposing. Col. D. HARRIS was selected as chief marshal, general A. MILTENBERGER, assistant marshal, and general S. C. LEARN, general R. DUTTON, major Wm. RONEY, and adjutant T. BALZELL, aids; FRANCIS H. DAVINER, orator of the day. The oration was delivered under the shade of the battle monument—around and about which were seen waving many of the flags that were borne on the battle field in 1814.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL SAMUEL SMITH. At a meeting of citizens of Baltimore some a few days since, it was resolved to take measures for erecting a suitable monument to this revolutionary veteran—for which purpose an association was formed, of which col. JOSEPH JAMISON is president, col. BEAL RASPAHL, ex-president, and col. Tobias E. Stansbury, Joshua Taylor, col. B. W. Hall, Robert C. Galloway, Hugh Ely; William Fell Johnson, Charles Buchanan, Wm. S. Winder, Wm. G. Howard, Wm. Jenkins, J. T. H. Worthington, George Elliott, managers, and E. T. J. Woodward, secretary.

ILLINOIS.

ELECTION. The following are the official return of votes cast for congress at the late election:

First district.	1841.	1840.
Countries.	Reynolds.	Op	W. F. B. Har.
Alexander	248	262	424 293
Bond	212	426	551 519
Clinton	203	427	417 326
Franklin	452	00	542 71
Gallatin	320	272	1,286 500
Hardin	115	90	132 154
Hudson	276	150	337 210
Johnson	271	61	440 109
Macoupin	664	530	812 629
Madison	459	1,105	1,184 1,704
Monroe	382	325	563 370
Perry	294	103	331 174
Pope	80	100	268 391
Randolph	601	587	817 715
St. Clair	1,039	619	1,783 989
Union	88	434	512 73
Washington	411	120	493 139
Williamson	410	111	578 103
Total	8,004	5,267	11,594 7,487
Reynolds's majority	2,734.	Van Buren's do.	4,107.
Scattering	167 for S. R. Rowen, 7 for W. S. Gilman.

Second district. 1841. 1840. W. F. B. Har.

Countries.	Anderson.	Op.	W. F. B. Har.
Clark	130	275	338 218
Clark	309	653	611 667
Champaign	101	105	141 154
Coles	309	830	695 1,109
Crawford	309	94	396 421
Edgar	515	434	720 783
Eswards	77	168	212 311
Edingham	190	119	207 52
Fayette	450	434	645 442
Hamilton	407	146	557 126
Joepois	167	61	175 154
Ingraham	167	61	178 73
Jackson	550	264	727 210
Lawrence	472	528	597 676
Marion	371	236	573 174
Montgomery	340	275	530 311
Rickland	507	36	566 56
Shelby	376	619	587 1,044
Union	166	322	254 509
Wabash	361	209	500 205
Wayne	422	603	639 770
White
Total	6,872	7,071	10,019 8,892
Majority—Casey.	199.	Van Buren 1,197.

*Formerly a lieutenant in the United States navy.

Third district.	1841.
Countries.	Raidson, Op. Stuart, W.
Adams	1,421 1,557
Brown	360 208
Bureau	306 319
Cook	810 50
Carroll	60
Christian	34
Cass	452 312
De Kalb	318
Dupree	318 303
Pulton	1,110 1,009
Green	963 656
Hancock	523 1,201
Henderson	131 302
Jersey	69
Jo Davies	376 771
Kear	497 476
Knox	523 566
Lee	165 200
Lassalle	1,022 441
Logan	132 253
Mason	100 168
McLean	329 446
Macon	296 162
McDonough	421 430
Morgan	976 1,105
Marshall	148 165
Menard	252 334
McHenry	40
Ogle	275
Peoria	717 570
Pike	691 755
Pitman	139 100
Platt	46
Rock Island	251 327
Sangamon	988 1,563
Scott	470 556
Schuyler	358 584
Stark	16
Stephenson	110
Tazewell	361 744
Warren	235 377
Winnebago	223 493
Whitesides	50
Woodford	234 302
Will	619 389
Total	16,784 19,082

ALABAMA.

THE GENERAL TICKET SYSTEM FOR ELECTING CONGRESSMEN, was enacted by a previous legislature, and the experiment tried at their recent election of congressmen, the Van Buren ticket being elected by a considerable majority—but the law provided that at the election just terminated, the voters of the state should express their will whether the system should be permanent, or whether elections for representatives in future should be by districts, as it had formerly been.

The result is in favor of the district system—sixty-six of one hundred representatives, and all the senators have been instructed by their respective counties, to vote for the repeal of the general ticket system.

DISTRIBUTION BILL.

AN ACT

TO APPROPRIATE THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALES OF THE PUBLIC LANDS, AND TO GRANT PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS.

Ten per cent of proceeds derived from sales within, to be payable to certain states named, over and above their general proportion—Proviso relative to Cumberland road.

It is enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That from and after the thirty-first day of December, in forty-one of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, there be allowed and paid to each of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Michigan, over and above what each of the said states is entitled to by the terms of the compacts entered into between them and the United States, upon their admission into the union, the sum of ten per centum upon the nett proceeds of the sales of the public lands, which, subsequent to the day aforesaid, shall be made within the limits of each of said states respectively: Provided, That the sum so allowed to the said states, respectively shall be in no wise affected or diminished on account of any sums which have been heretofore, or shall be hereafter, applied to the construction or continuance of the Cumberland road; but that the disbursements for the said road shall remain, as heretofore, chargeable on the two per centum fund provided for by compacts with several of the said states.

The residue, after deducting therefrom enumerated expenses and five per cent. to new states, to be divided between all the states and territories according to representative population and to be applied by their several legislatures—That of the District of Columbia appropriated to purposes of education—The right reserved to regulate the price of, or to transfer public lands to states in which they lie.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That after deducting the said ten per centum, and what by the compacts aforesaid, has heretofore been allowed to the states aforesaid, the residue of the nett proceeds—which nett proceeds shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross proceeds all the expenditures of the year for the following objects: salaries and expenses on account of the general land office; expenses for surveying public lands; salaries and expenses in the surveyor general's office; salaries, commissions and allowances to the registers and receivers: the five per centum to new states—of all the public lands of the United States, wherever situated, which shall be sold subsequent to the said thirty-first day of December, shall be divided among the twenty-six states of the union and the District of Columbia, and the territories of Wisconsin, Iowa and Florida, according to their respective federal representative population as ascertained by the last census, to be applied by the legislature of the said states to such purposes as the said legislatures may direct: Provided, That the distributive share to which the District of Columbia shall be entitled, shall be applied to free schools, or education in some other form, as congress may direct: And provided, also, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to the prejudice of future applications for a reduction of the price of the public lands, or to the prejudice of applications for a transfer of the public lands, on reasonable terms, to the states within which they lie, or to make such future disposition of the public lands, or any part thereof, as congress may deem expedient.

Said portions to be paid over half yearly, in January and July.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several sums of money received by the treasury as the nett proceeds of the sale of the public lands shall be nett proceeds of the treasury half yearly, on the first day of January and July in each year, during the operation of this act, to such person or persons as the respective legislatures of the said states and territories, or the governors thereof in case the legislatures shall have made no such appointment, shall authorise and direct to receive the same.

Moneys so payable under this act, shall be first applied to the payment of debts due by such state or territory to the United States—Except the debts due under the distribution act of 1836.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That any sum of money, which at any time may become due and payable to any state of the union, or to the District of Columbia, by virtue of this act, as the portion of the sales of the public lands, shall be first applied to the payment of any debt, due and payable from the said state or district, to the United States: Provided, That this shall not be construed to extend to the sum deposited with the states under the act of congress of twenty-third June, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, entitled "an act to regulate the deposits of the public money," at any sums apparently due to the United States as balances of debts growing out of the transactions of the revolutionary war.

This act to be suspended on commencement of any foreign war, and so remain during such war—Provision in behalf of new states hereafter admitted.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force until otherwise provided by act any new state or states shall become involved in war with any foreign power, in which event, from the commencement of hostilities, this act shall be suspended during the continuance of such war: Provided, nevertheless, That if, prior to the expiration of any new state or states shall be admitted into the union, there be assigned to such new state or states, the proportion of the proceeds accruing after their admission into the union, to which such state or states may be entitled, upon the principles of this act, together with what such state or states may be entitled to by virtue of compacts to be made on their admission into the union.

Appropriation for surveying—Present minimum price of lands not to be increased, except of alternate sections upon canal routes—This act to be void in case of increase of said price, and to be suspended in case of an imposition of more than twenty per cent. duty on importations, and remain so suspended during the continuance of such higher duty, and then to be resumed.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be annually appropriated for completing the surveys of said lands a sum not less than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the minimum price of the public lands, are now sold at private sale shall not be increased, unless congress shall think proper to grant alternate sections along the line of any canal or other internal improvement, and at the same time to increase the minimum price of the sections reserved; and in case the same shall be contrary by law, except as aforesaid, at this act during the operation of this act, then so much of this act as provides that the nett proceeds of the sales of the public lands shall be distributed among the several states shall from and after the increase of the minimum price thereof, cease and become utterly null and of no effect, any thing in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That if, at any time during the existence of this act, there shall be an imposition of duties on imports inconsistent with the provisions of the act of March second, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, entitled "an act to modify the act of the fourth of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, and all other acts imposing duties on imports," and beyond the rate of duty fixed by that act, to wit: twenty per cent. on the value of such imports, or any of them, then the distribution provided in this act shall be suspended, and shall so continue until such time as its suspension shall be resumed, and unless renewed, if not previously shall be resumed by the provisions of this act created by other provisions of this act, such distribution shall be resumed.

Relative to the continuance of certain land offices.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the secretaries of the treasury may continue any land district in which is situated the seat of government of any one of the states, and may continue the land office in such district, notwithstanding the quantity of land unsold in such district may not amount to one hundred thousand acres, when, in his opinion, such continuance may be required by public convenience, or to preserve the land system in such state at a convenient point, under the provisions of the act on that subject, approved twelfth June, one thousand eight hundred and forty.

Five hundred thousand acres granted for internal improvements to each state named in the first section, including what has been received by them respectively, of land within their limit—Regulations relative to location thereof—A similar provision for each new state hereafter.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That there shall be granted to each state specified in the first section of this act five hundred thousand acres of land for purposes of internal improvement: Provided, That to each of the said states which has already received grants for said purposes there is hereby granted no more than a quantity of land which shall, together with the amount such state has already received as aforesaid, make five hundred thousand acres; the selections in all of the said states to be made within their limits respectively in such manner as the legislatures thereof shall direct; and lands so granted, conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions, of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in one location, on any public land except such as is or may be reserved from sale by any law of congress or proclamation of the president of the United States, which said locations may be made at any time after the lands of the United States in said states respectively shall have been surveyed, according to existing laws: And there shall be and hereby is granted to each new state that shall be hereafter admitted into the union, upon such admission, so much land as, including such quantity as may have been granted to such state before its admission, is as aforesaid, and while under a territorial government, for purposes of internal improvement as aforesaid, shall make five hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected and located as aforesaid.

Price thereof limited—and purposes to which proceeds shall be applied, defined—U. States transportation on roads constructed thereby to be free.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the lands herein granted to the states above named shall not be disposed of at a price less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, until otherwise authorised by a law of the United States; and the nett proceeds of money, separated from banks and the independent treasury, to which he was earnestly devoted, and which he believed would return at last.

Mr. Walker was sorry to hear the opinions of the senator from South Carolina (Mr. Preston), and expressed his uncompromising hostility to the system of state banks.

Mr. Bayard was in favor of adjournment by Monday, but thought the resolution, as there was now business pending between the two houses which must be accomplished before a time for adjournment was fixed, should not be adopted.

He would, therefore, move to lay the resolution on the table till to-morrow, when he had no doubt it might be taken up and adopted. This motion was carried by a vote of 20 to 16.

Mr. Clay, from the joint committee of conference on the revenue bill, reported a substitute agreed on by the committee for the amendments of both houses, which provides, that if in virtue of this (the 20th) section any duty exceeding the rate of 30 per centum ad valorem, shall be levied prior to the 30th June, 1842, the same shall not, in any case, affect the disposition of the public lands, as provided for by the act passed at this session of congress; and, further, that no duty higher than 30 per centum ad valorem shall be levied and paid in virtue of said section on any unmanufactured articles.

This, on motion of Mr. Clay, was adopted; and the senate proceeded to executive business, in which they were engaged during the day.

SEPTEMBER 11. The president of the senate laid before the body a communication from the treasury department, in compliance with a resolution calling for the amount of money belonging to the United States in the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. The report was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. Clayton, from the committee on the library, reported without amendment the joint resolution from the house, relating to the joint resolution from the house, relating to the executive departments which be executed at a rate not higher than that paid for congressional printing, as established by the two houses of congress, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

This report led to some remarks from Messrs. Clay, Calhoun, and Clay, of Ala. Woodbury and others; when it appeared that there was a law now in force directing the departments to issue proposals and contract for the printing to the lowest bidder. The report of the committee was concurred in.

The joint resolution for the adjournment of two houses on Friday the 13th instant, at 11 o'clock, A. M. was then taken up.

Mr. Clay did not know that he should oppose any obstacle to the resolution, as the two bills he desired to see disposed of before any day was fixed for the adjournment had never been disposed of. It might be inquired, however, whether it would require a little more time, taking place it might be necessary to require a little more time.

He would suggest a slight amendment of the resolution, to strike out the words "11 o'clock," which would then leave the whole of that day at their discretion.

Mr. Wright thought it better to pass the resolution at once, in its present form, though he had no material objection to the suggestion of the senator from Kentucky.

Mr. Preston moved to amend the resolution by inserting that which he had offered yesterday, "declaring that it inexpedient to adjourn until some law was passed for placing the public money under the control of law," &c. His thought of the passage of 1836, which some slight modification would effect the objection raised in view. He was aware of the disinclination which gentlemen felt to remain any longer at this hot and exhausting season. With regard to himself, however, individually, he would make any personal sacrifice to attain so desirable an end.

Mr. Clay asked for a question could not be decided, for why he should have no objection to the assertion of the inefficiency of the act of 1789 for the safe-keeping of the public money, yet the other branch of the proposition might be attended with some difficulty. He had no objection to say that the purse and the sword should not be in the hands of the president, but to remain until some plan was devised by which the public money could be placed under the control of law might not be so convenient. The president had signed the bill for the repeal of the sub-treasury and the pet bank system, and in his (Mr. C's) opinion very properly, but then he had refused to sign the very measure, yet only that he regretted it say very improperly, but only that he regretted it say very improperly. What other system then could be devised likely to meet the views of the president? If the honorable senator from South Carolina will say what sort of a system can be proposed, which would be sub-treasury, pet bank and national bank, neither be without the approval of the president and at that would meet the approval of the president and at the same time effect the object which all so much desired, he (Mr. C.) would like to be informed of it, and then he might be disposed to remain until it could be brought to maturity. He very much doubted if the wit of man could devise a plan unaccounted for by these systems, he believed that he had some, but certainly not enough to effect this object. Painful as was the alternative of leaving the sword and the purse in the hands of the executive, (true it was an empty purse), he feared it must be yielded to for the present. The president had said that he would prepare a plan which he would submit at the next congress. What plan that he would be remained to be seen. It had been said that it was an institution to act as a fiscal agent, free from all constitutional objections.

Mr. Wright expressed the hope that these old grounds would not be travelled over again, but that gentlemen would confine themselves to the question before them, which was fixing the time of adjournment.

Mr. King objected to the senator from South Carolina (Mr. Preston) appending to a resolution to adjourn congress a matter with which it had no proper connection. He would not be disposed to support the resolution either adopted or modified. He hoped the resolution would not be embarrassed with this addition.

It seemed to be kept out of view that the repeal of the independent treasury and the deposit bank system was pressed upon the president and again, but that gentlemen would confine themselves to the question before them, which was fixing the time of adjournment. But the gentleman opposite did not offer him one of such a character. Why did they sweep away the law which protected the treasury? Why were they in such imprudent haste to sweep away what they called the "frubish." It was their own fault if they did not see the union of the purse and the treasury was not now under the control of law. Because they could not get a United States bank, they are forced to leave the treasury, as it was left for many a year, under the control of the law of 1789. That law would be found as efficient now as it ever was. As to the one enabling the union of the purse and the sword, that was well understood by the country, and might go for what it was worth. It did well enough on the stump, for electioneering purposes, but the day was gone by when American statesmen could make use of it, with any effect, in the councils of the nation.

Mr. Clay said the senator from Alabama was mistaken in supposing that any approach had been offered or intended to be offered against the president, but reproaches from that side had been made against them for repealing the sub-treasury, a measure which had been recommended by the president, as well as some substitute for it at the same time, which very truly they understood to have meant a bank of the U. States. The measures were taken up pretty much in the order they were suggested, and both were before the president at the same time, and he signed the one and rejected the other. The bills were placed before him, in order that he might, in the event of not signing the bank bill, have refused to sign the other. When he (Mr. C.) was pressing the bill for the repeal of the sub-treasury, gentlemen on the other side protested against it, and said it was treating the president with indelicacy; that it was embarrassing him, and the like, to bring this measure before him at a time when the bank bill was pending in the senate. He placed before the executive, so that he could act on his discretion.

After some further remarks from Messrs. Preston, Walker, Calhoun, Tappan, Henderson and Woodbury, Mr. Preston withdrew his amendment, not seeming to have any objection to the bill of the senate.

Mr. Clay then moved to strike out the words "eleven o'clock;" which motion was agreed to.

And then the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after some time spent therein, adjourned.

SEPTEMBER 13. Mr. Benton desired to submit a resolution. It would be reconsidered, he said, that some days since a senator from Delaware (Mr. Beeson) had submitted a resolution, which he gave notice he should call up for consideration at the next session.

Mr. Bayard's resolution is in the following words: "Whereas the senate of the United States, on the 28th of March, 1834, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the revenue, has assumed upon himself the exercise of a power conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both."

"And whereas afterwards, to wit: on the 16th day of January, 1837, the senate, in reference to the above resolution, adopted the following resolution: 'Resolved, That the said resolution be expunged from the journal; and for that purpose, that the secretary of the senate, at such time as the senate may appoint, shall bring the manuscript journal of the session of 1837-41 into the senate chamber, and the presence of the senate, draw black lines round the said resolve, and write across the face thereof, in strong letters, the words following: Expunged by order of the senate this 16th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1837.'"

"And whereas the constitution of the United States expressly requires that each house of congress shall keep a journal of its proceedings, meaning thereby to preserve a faithful and permanent record of the proceedings."

"And while the senate of the United States, independently of its legislative, executive and judicial functions, has the inherent right, as a deliberative assembly, to express its opinions, which can be done only by a report of its proceedings, of which the constitution provides that a permanent record shall be kept."

"And whereas the secretary of the senate in January, 1837, and the act of the secretary of the senate in compliance with it, in legal contemplation destroyed, and in fact defaced the record of the proceeding to which it refers; therefore

"Resolved, That the resolution of the 16th of January, 1837, commonly called the expunging resolution, be, and the same is hereby rescinded, and shall be forever hereafter held as naught; and that in all future publications of that periodical which contains the resolution of 1837-41, and in all copies which may hereafter be made of the same for any official or legal purpose, the said resolution of 1837-41 shall be published sans expungement, and no notice or notice on said publication without any notice whatever of the superscription which was erroneously made, in pursuance of the resolution of the 16th of January, 1837."

Mr. Benton said he did not desire to have his measure acted on by the president, but simply to ask that it might be presented and placed on the journal as an amendment to that offered by the senator from Delaware. His motion was to strike out all after the word resolved, and insert:

"That the resolution expunging from the senate journal the sentence of censure pronounced against President Jackson for removing the public deposits from the Bank of the United States, commonly called the 'expunging resolution,' was an act done by the senate in conformity to the will of the people, authoritative expressions of the popular elections, and in the instructions from the general assemblies of the states, after a full and fair submission of the question to the people in the states for their consideration; and that the same, in accordance with such expressed will and instructions, it is incompatible with the principles of representative government, and inconsistent with the respect due to the people, in submitting the senate to act upon a proposition for rescinding the said expunging resolution; while the said instructions of the states and the said expressed will of the people remain unexecuted and unacted upon by any subsequent instruction or expression of the public will."

Mr. B. moved that the amendment be printed, and laid on the table to next session; which was carried.

Mr. Huntington, from the committee on commerce, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of a bill introduced by him heretofore reported on; which was agreed to.

Mr. Clay, from the committee on finance, Mr. Smith, from the committee on public lands, and Mr. Morehead, from the committee on Indian affairs, severally asked to be discharged from the matters referred to said committees and not reported on.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, moved to proceed to the consideration of the expunging resolution. Messrs. Bayard and Archer contended for the third reading and passage of the resolution relating to reporters.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, moved to lay it on the table. Mr. Walker demanded the yeas and nays; when the question stood thus:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Chase, Clay, of Ky., Clayton, Dixon, Evans, Graham, Henderson, Huntington, Mangum, Merriam, Miller, Phelps, Porter, Prentiss, Simmons, Smith, of Conn. Tallmadge, White, Woodbridge—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Archer, Berrien, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, of Ala., Fulton, King, Lind, McRoberts, Morehead, Monton, Sturgeon, Tappan, Walker Woodbury—10.

Mr. Smith, of Indiana, then moved to go into executive session.

Which motion having been agreed to, the senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and remained engaged until 11 o'clock at night, when they adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 9. The house being very thin, Mr. Fillmore moved a call of the house.

Mr. Fillmore moved that the house adjourn, and asked the yeas and nays on that motion, which were ordered, and, being taken, were: yeas 0, nays 150.

The house resumed the consideration of the bill in relation to duties and drawbacks, and the amendments thereto.

The first question pending being on the motion of Mr. Birdseye, to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which article of salt had been released from duty; Mr. Hopkins asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and, being taken, were yeas 95, nays 79. So the vote was reconsidered.

The next question being on the motion of Mr. Morgan, to reconsider the vote determining not to export from duty the article of "iron"—Mr. McKean withdrew the motion.

The next question being on the motion of Mr. Wise to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the article of sugar had been released from duty, Mr. Welles asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and being taken, were yeas 101, nays 80. So the vote was reconsidered.

The next question was on the motion of Mr. Wise, to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the article of cotton had been exempted from duty.

The yeas and nays were asked and ordered, and being taken, were yeas 119, nays 60. So the vote was reconsidered.

The question then recurring on the original motion of Mr. Wise to insert these several articles as duty free; Mr. Wise said that as he saw the vote of yesterday had been reversed, he would submit to the reversal, and would withdraw his motion.

Mr. Stenard supposed then, he said, that the withdrawal of the motion carried with it his (Mr. S's) motion also.

The speaker replied in the affirmative. So the motion to insert as free "salt, sugar and cotton," was withdrawn.

And the question recurring on concurring in the amendments of the senate, as amended by the committee of the whole on the state of the union—

By general consent, the question was taken on all the said amendments, except as hereinafter mentioned, and they were concurred in.

Mr. Bots called for a separate question on the amendment of the senate to alter the articles of tea and coffee on the free list; and it was ordered.

Mr. Shepperd asked the yeas and nays on concurring in the said amendment; which were ordered, and being taken, were yeas 178, nays 7. So the amendment of the senate was concurred in.

Mr. Stenard then called for a separate amendment of the committee of the whole on the state of the union, to the amendment of the senate to the second section.

The amendment of the senate introduces a proviso that no duty that may be levied or collected in virtue of the said second section shall exceed 20 per cent. ad valorem.

This amendment was amended in committee of the whole on the state of the union, on motion of Mr. Fillmore, by striking out all after the word "provided," and inserting, that nothing herein contained shall in any way affect the distribution of the proceeds of the public land, as provided for by an act passed at the present session.

Mr. Campbell, of S. C. asked the yeas and nays on concurring with the committee of the whole in its amendment to the amendment of the senate, which were ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows: yeas 103, nays 93.

So the amendment of the committee to the amendment of the senate was concurred in. And the amendment of the senate as amended by the house was concurred in.

The bill was then sent to the senate.

On motion of Mr. Fillmore, the house resolved itself into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Mason, of Ohio, in the chair), and took up the bill making appropriations for the salaries and emoluments of agents, which had been returned from the senate with an amendment striking out the Neapolitan mission, and consequently reducing the amount appropriated in the bill from the sum of $63,000 to the sum of $58,500—and the question being on concurring with the senate in their amendment—

Cushing chairman of the committee on foreign relations, who hoped the house would not concur in the amendment proposed by the senate, and which went to abolish the mission to Naples altogether.—He was of opinion that that mission ought to be retained. As he had already, on a former occasion, presented, to a certain extent, his views on this subject, he should not enter on it now, unless some opposition should be made.

Mr. McKean was in favor of concurring with the amendment. He had moved a call some time since on the state department for information touching the duties of the minister at Naples, and how he occupied his time; but no report had yet been received in relation thereto. It was said, indeed, that there existed some prospect of effecting a treaty with the Neapolitan court, but as nothing had been done for years past, he believed nothing would be done for years to come. He observed in the bill an item of $4,500 for the outfit of a new charger, and why not continue the individual already there? Was there any charge of negligence or violation of duty preferred against him? All that Mr. McK. had heard was that he had nothing to do. But how could gentlemen that were so loud in favor of retrenchment and reform come forward and advocate an appropriation like this?

[The president's secretary having now made his appearance, and there being great anxiety in expectation of a veto message, Mr. McK. was interrupted by frequent cries of "question! question!"]

On the motion of Mr. Cushing, the committee here rose to receive a message from the president of the United States, transmitted by the hands of Robert Tyler, esq. his secretary.

The president informed the house that he had approved and signed the following bills:

The bill making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities;

The bill granting the franchise privilege during life to Mrs. Harrison, widow of the late president of the United States;

The bill in relation to Greenough's statue of Washington;

The bill making appropriations for the post office department.

The president also transmitted to the house a message in writing, giving his reasons for withholding his signature from the fiscal corporation bill. [For which message see last Register, page 15.]

The message having been read, Mr. Morroe rose and moved that the message be entered on the journal, and be printed for the use of the house; and that the house to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, proceed "to reconsider the bill." This, he said, was the language of the constitution; and the foundation of investigation that this course was in accordance with the practice in former cases.

The motion was immediately agreed to.

The house again resolved itself into committee of the whole on the state of the union, Mr. Mason, of Ohio, in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the salaries and outfits of diplomatic agents.

Mr. McKean continued and concluded his speech in favor of concurring with the senate's amendment striking out the item for a mission to Naples.

Mr. Cushing entered into a brief reply, and insisted that it was of all points of time the most unsuitable to break up the mission.

Mr. Stenard pressed for the question, expressing some desire to speak upon it, but being willing to waive the floor if the question could be had.

Mr. Wise addressed the committee, and took substantially the same ground that Mr. Cushing had, going more fully into the details as to the extent and consequences of our commerce with Naples, the value and importance of a commercial treaty to the interests of every part of the union, and the necessity, in the present aspect of our affairs, of having the eye of a diplomatic agent kept on the movements of European powers.

Mr. Adams followed in favor of the appropriation in the bill, and in disagreeing in the senate's amendment.

Mr. Ingersoll, spoke in favor of the appropriation and expressed the mission, changing his former views in consequence of reasons given by the chairman of the committee of foreign relations, (Mr. Cushing).

Mr. Stenly congratulated the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) on the very proper and patriotic course he had pursued on this occasion in favor of the Neapolitan mission; but must be malicious enough to remind him of the very different course he had pursued, last session, in reference to the mission to Mexico, when he had moved to strike the appropriation for a minister to that government, or to reduce it, and Mr. S. had opposed the motion.

Mr. Wise here turned round and addressed to Mr. Stenly a reply in explanation of his course the last session, saying that he was sure his name must be right because the gentleman from Mass. (Mr. Adams) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) were both opposed to it: the same remark might now be turned the other way, and it might be said that this mission to Naples could not be right, since both these gentlemen were in its favor. Mr. S. should vote for this appropriation because it was recommended by the executive; although he did not know whether he should hereafter support President Tyler's administration or not; he thought it not improbable he should be against it. Mr. S. said he would not move to strike this item from the bill when both the gentlemen from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Virginia told him it was right. His position was now, for the first time in his life, somewhat equivocal; but as long as he remained in it, he would not vote against appropriating the money for the mission to Naples, and by the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, who was perfectly familiar with all these matters, (and he might almost say with every thing else in the world).

The gentleman from New York—he meant the gentleman from the city of New York—who went away for two or three weeks, and as soon as he got back talked on every subject before the house—that one (Mr. McKean) had brought up the subject of Mr. Enos T. Throop—a subject in regard to which a gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Jones, had said that Mr. S. had refused to sit last session at least twenty-five times. Well, it was true, Mr. S. had held it up repeatedly as a reproach to the administration of Martin Van Buren; and he had so represented it at home to his constituents. And that very case of rewarding a man who had so grossly betrayed his trust, was of itself enough politically to damn Martin Van Buren and his administration to all eternity. He wanted more to prove that, than the report of the investigating committee which had been made by the gentleman near him, Mr. Dawson. [Mr. S. here quoted the report in reference to Mr. Throop's conduct, stating that for a period of nine years he had utterly disregarded the law prescribing the duties of his office and the orders of the treasury department, and had considered the very object of his appointment nugatory; and that through his neglect Mr. Swartwout's defalcation had gone on accumulating for years.] Nor let it be said that this was a mere ex parte statement; created by party spirit, for it had received the sanction of all the great newspapers of New York, and stood high in the same political party with Mr. Throop himself, and with the gentleman from New York, Mr. McKean.

Mr. S. here quoted Mr. Hopkins's endorsement of the report. Yet, with this report, the truth of every word of which the gentleman from New York would not after this deny, staring him in the face, Mr. Van Buren suffered this man to revel in luxury at Naples, and for two years to draw his $4,500 out of the treasury.

Mr. S. observed, in conclusion, that if John Tyler should veto a hundred rank bills, he would excuse him on the ground of obeying his conscience; but if he could so far forget his duty, if he could so far listen to the whisperings of a depraved ambition, as to keep an officer like this in an honorable and lucrative station, he would deserve the contempt and execration of every honest and honorable man. He rejoiced to learn that this Enos T. Throop was to be recalled.

Mr. Fillmore said he was informed that Mr. Throop had been recalled, and was on his way home.

Something like order having been restored—

Whilst Mr. Fillmore was in the midst of a sentence, Mr. Wise crossed over to the seat of Mr. Stenly, and had observed those two gentlemen in conversation apparently of a very excited character, saw Mr. Wise raise his hand violently and aim a blow at Mr. Stenly who as instantaneously met or returned it. A violent fight followed, and, in less time than it can be described in this report, a scene of mingled uproar and fight, such as the reporter in many years experience has never witnessed on the floor of the house, ensued.

Messrs. Wise and Stenly were lost to the sight of the reporter in the general rush, whilst Mr. Jnoch, of Tennessee, and Mr. Butler, of Kentucky, were noticed in a violent personal struggle, striking at and grappling with each other. Mr. Dixon, H. Lewis, and Mr. Gilmer, and others, were in the midst, endeavoring to quell the disturbance, which had now reached a point at which it seemed impossible to arrest its progress. The members had rushed from all parts of the hall, some rushing over and others standing upon the tables, literally piling themselves one on the other, and several of them were seen by the reporter raised up as if in the act of striking. At length, however, this time had resumed the chair, informally, but no one paid the least regard to his voice, and he called in vain on the officers, none of whom were observed by the reporter, with the exception of the door keepers, who was endeavoring to close the doors and windows against the angry mob without, who attempted to rush within the halls.

The general merriment continued from two and a half to three minutes. It then subsided. It appeared as if they would direct process could not be understood; but the voice of Mr. Wise, who had returned to his seat, was heard addressing the chair.

Mr. Wise said he had risen, perfectly cool, for the purpose of apologising to the house in the most humble manner, and of asking its pardon, as he most sincerely did. He had in its presence, notwithstanding the manner of the speaker and his order—an excited feeling which he could not repress. The house had witnessed what had passed between the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Stanly) and himself, in the course of the debate, and had heard the language used by that gentleman towards him. He (Mr. W.) had passed over all that took place, but he repeated to me what he had said, and I gave him warning that he had not met me in the spirit in which I

Mr. W., at the close of the sentence which was thus lost, was interrupted by

Mr. Judreus, of Kentucky, who said that he objected to the gentleman going into the facts, which he hoped would be ascertained by a committee of persons wholly uninterested.

Mr. Wise. I have but a few words to say. (Cries of "go on—go on.") In the warmth of my excitement I used harsh language, and the gentleman returned to me a word which I could not brook, either here or elsewhere. Never, whatever may be the consequences, will I brook that word. I thank him. I have offended against the house, gentlemen, as its president has said, and I submit myself to any penalty which it may please to impose.

Mr. Stanly then took the floor, and said he had not risen to ask pardon of the house. If he had offended against it—if he had been guilty of any violation of its rules, he would submit to any penalty the house might impose, even to be expelled, or to be asked to resign. But (continuing, Mr. S.) I believe I have done what any other man on this floor would have done under similar circumstances.

The honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise), whose insolence I will not say is notorious, came round to my seat, not, as he says, to remonstrate, no, not to remonstrate—but to scold, to lecture, to browbeat me, as he does very often, and to presume to differ with such a big fellow from Virginia as he is. I could not tolerate it. I told him what I understood him to have said, and what I had said in reply. He then said, "I want to warn you." To which I replied, "No, I will not take your warning." He then said, "Come out of the hall with me," and started towards me, and I said, "You take your own course; I have nothing more to say." He then said, "You deserve my contempt;" and I said, "Sir, you are a liar."

Mr. Wise. That is not a fact.

Mr. Stanly. That is the state of facts. I assert it before my constituents, before this house, and before the world.

The gentleman then raised his hand and struck me; and if the members of the house had not intervened, I would have given him the severe punishment which he deserves for his insolence.

Mr. Ingersoll rose and offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a special committee be appointed to inquire into the circumstances of the recent assault upon the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Stanly), members of this house, and to report thereon to the house.

Mr. Judreus, of Kentucky, said that at the last congress a committee had been appointed on a similar subject when a similar assault had taken place. How the investigation ended every body knows. He was opposed to the appointment of a committee. He considered the former occurrence disgraceful to the house, as he considered this. He thought that the two members engaged deserved to be expelled, and he believed they should be expelled now, upon the spot, and without further delay.

[Cries in many parts of the house, "Agreed—agreed!"]

There was no other way in which the house could vindicate its character and its dignity. The committee appointed in a similar case at the last congress had done nothing—had recommended nothing—and the indignity which had been offered to the house and the country went unpunished and unrebuked. It was for no committee—it would be a mere whitewash.

affair—a mere humbug, such as we had before us.

Mr. Judreus moved the previous question.

Mr. Hopkins moved to lay the resolution of Mr. Ingersoll on the table, with a view, he said, if that motion prevailed, to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the hon. Henry A. Wise, a member of the house, having this day, by his own confessions on the floor of the house, while in session in committee of the whole on the state of the union, committed an assault on the hon. Edward Stanly, be therefore expelled from the house.

Mr. Judreus moved to lay the resolution on the table, for the reasons above stated by him.

Which motion was rejected.

The previous question being ordered, the resolution by ayes 124 votes not counted, was adopted. The committee was ordered to consist of seven members.

Mr. Lewis Williams said, if there was no other motion, he would move that the house adjourn, but he withdrew the motion.

Mr. Yorke asked leave to offer a joint resolution providing for the adjournment of congress on Saturday next.

The house again resolved itself into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Pope, of Kentucky, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the outfit and salaries of diplomatic agents.

The question was then taken on the pending motion, and the house disagreed to the amendment of the second striking out the Neapolitan mission, and of consequence, to the reduction of the amount appropriated by the bill, (the one following the other).

The second amendment of the senate, providing for extra compensation to officers of both houses on account of services rendered during this special session, gave rise to a debate, in which Messrs. McKim, Warren, Judreus, of Kentucky, Fillmore, Prentiss, Hopkins, Adams, and Bidlack participated.

Mr. Tillamoth offered an amendment to the amendment of the senate, appropriating a sum not exceeding $273 for completing the contract for printing and binding the catalogue of the library; which was adopted.

The amendment of the senate, as thus amended, was agreed to.

The committee then rose and reported the bill to the house.

And the question being on concurring in the amendments of the senate as amended, Mr. Arnold moved the previous question, and there was a second; and the bill was passed.

The house then concurred with the committee in its disagreement to the amendment of the senate in relation to the Neapolitan mission.

And on the second amendment of the senate (in relation to compensation to officers) as amended by the house, the vote was, yeas 58, yeas 65.

So the second amendment, as amended, was concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be sent to the senate.

On motion of Mr. Adams, the house took up the bill, heretofore passed, providing for the repeal of so much of the 6th section of the act of 1838 (in relation to the West Point academy) as provides for the investigation of the Smithsonian and the University of the District of Columbia. This bill had been returned from the senate with amendments. The amendments of the senate were, on motion of Mr. Adams, amended in several respects, and the bill was returned to the senate.

And then the house adjourned.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 10. The speaker announced the select committee on the personal reconnoiter between Messrs. Wise and Stanly, as follows: Messrs. Ingersoll, Merceur, Everett, Caruthers, Saltonstall, Holmes and Ferris.

The revenue bill, which was yesterday sent to the senate with an amendment by the house to the proviso added by the senate to the second section, having been returned by the senate with notice that they adhere to their own original amendment, was taken up. A short debate arose on the question of the two amendments, and the character of each. Mr. Fillmore moved that the house insist on their amendment with a view to the appointment of a committee of conference. Messrs. Shields, Dawson, Hopkins and Warren, urged the propriety of receding and Messrs. Ingersoll, Tillamoth, Arnold and G. Davis expressed their views in favor of insisting.

The house voted to insist: yeas 59, yeas 76.

Mr. Gilmer, on leave given, presented certain resolutions adopted by a meeting of the people of Albemarle county, Virginia, on Monday, the 5th of September.

The purport of the resolutions was not stated, but Mr. McKim moved that they be laid on the table and printed.

The speaker said the motion to print had been uniformly objected to in such cases, and could only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. Gilmer did not press the motion to print, and the resolutions were laid on the table.

Mr. Hopkins, from the committee on the post office and post roads, presented a communication from Col. Gardner, late auditor of the treasury for the post office department, remonstrating against the tendency of certain passages in the recent communication of the present auditor, (Mr. Whittlesey), which seemed to reflect on his conduct in that office.

After some remarks from Messrs. Underwood and Judreus, to the communication as contrary to usage, it was laid aside.

Mr. Yorke's resolution for an adjournment of congress at eleven o'clock on Monday, was taken up, and after an ineffectual attempt to amend it by fixing the time at 11 o'clock to-morrow, it was passed unanimously.

Mr. Dawson, with the general consent of the house, made a statement in relation to the affray of yesterday between Messrs. Wise and Stanly, as follows:

"It is with much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, I rise to state that the sudden, unpremeditated, and deeply regrettable occurrence which occurred in this house yesterday, between the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise), and the gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Stanly), both members of this body, has been adjusted through the interference of friends, in a manner honorable to themselves. To say that both gentlemen were deeply and sincerely grieved at the causes leading to this explanation, I am sure, would be but a weak expression of their regret. Each gentleman retracts any remarks which have been deemed offensive by the other—in the order in which they were spoken—and are restored to their pre-existing relations."

Mr. McKim then called up the joint resolution relating to water-rotted hemp, and on his motion the house resolved itself into committee of the whole, Mr. Barnard in the chair, when, no amendments being offered, the committee rose without debate, immediately, and reported the bill, which was accordingly passed.

Some conversation then took place between Messrs. Barnard and Cushing as to the proposed renewal of the act to prevent breaches of the neutrality laws.

Mr. Cushing stated that the act had not been referred to the committee on foreign affairs.

Mr. McKim presented a resolution calling on the post office general for information as to the amount of postage received on letters, and also upon papers, &c. Passed.

Mr. Oursley's resolutions for the amendment of the constitution, limiting the eligibility of a president to one term, and restricting the veto power, were taken up.

Mr. Prentiss objected to their being acted on.

Mr. Oursley moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. A. Brown asked for a division of the motion to suspend. Many might be willing to vote to receive the first part, who would object to the second part.

The speaker decided that a decision of the question would be in order until after the motion of suspension were disposed of.

The rules were then suspended; less than two-thirds voting for it—87 to 81.

Mr. A. Brown then moved to suspend the rules to take up the resolution offered by him at the beginning of the session, to amend the constitution as to the re-eligibility of the president.

On the motion to suspend, the vote was yeas 99, yeas 58; and as two-thirds did not vote in the affirmative, the motion to suspend was lost.

Mr. Bots moved the house proceed to the orders of the day. The bill for the fiscal corporation, as amended, was taken up. The bill was passed, yeas 100, yeas 58, yeas 58.

Mr. Bots began by referring to his own peculiar position in reference to the president and the country—but for which he should have been content to let the subject pass without any remarks from him. But that peculiar position compelled him to place himself right with the country. He had been charged by the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Cushing), and others, a few days since, with having applied harsh and unjust epithets to the president, and on that occasion he had pledged himself to make good his words whenever that second time he should rise with the country. He had no more charges against the president, if not out of by the "one hour rule."

He would take all the alumn attaching to the failure, and if any disinterested friend would say that the proof was not complete, he would take back every word.

He had, on the occasion referred to, prophesied this veto, but he was then at a loss for the reasons which the president would assign for such an act.

there was a beginning, a pleading that congress would put off this matter. How was the president to speak? He had been complained of for decided language in the other. Would not the country understand this matter, and see that the president was charged with one thing and then with another, whatever course he took?

[Here Mr. Proffit was cut off by the expiration of his hour.]

Messrs. Laue, of Indiana, Samson Mason, of Ohio, and Thompson, of Indiana, followed against the veto, and Mr. Jones, of Maryland, in favor of the veto.

Mr. Gamble, at 6 o'clock, moved the previous question, which was ordered, by a very large vote.

After numerous motions to adjourn, by Mr. S. W. Andrews, and others, which were all promptly negatived by large votes, the main question on the passage of the bill was put; and the vote resulted as follows:

[illegible]

NAYS.—Messrs. Arrington, Brown, Clark, Brooks, Bidwell, Eddy, Lusk, Ayres, Vinton, Henson, Charles Brown, Wm. O. Butler, P. C. Caldwell, J. Campbell, Chapman, Clinton, Coles, Richard D. Davis, John B. Dawson, Dean, Daig, Eastman, John C. Edwards, Ebert, Ferris, George F. Floyd, Charles A. Floyd, Fornay, George Fox, G. H. French, J. M. French, Geo. S. French, John French, Hays, Holmes, Hopkins, Hauke, Hunston, Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, William W. Irwin, Jack Cave Johnson, John W. Jones, Keim, Andrew Kennedy, Lewis, Abraham Lincoln, John Little, James Little, John Little, Madison Little, Malbury, Marchand, John Thompson Mason, Matthews, McMill, Miller, Newland, Perimeter, Partridge, Payne, Plumer, Pratt, Reynolds, Rhet, Rogers, Ross, Shaw, Shields, Snyder, Stedmond, Sweney, Turney, Van Hook, W. Williams, Wyder, Westbrook, Jamison.

W. Williams, Wyder—50.

Before the adjournment Mr. Filbore, from the committee of conference with the senate on the amendment to the second section of the revenue bill reported a substitute for the original amendment which was adopted by the house.

The house then adjourned at twenty minutes before seven.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 11. Mr. Jones, of Va. rose and said that in the absence of his colleague (Mr. Carey) who was detained from his seat by indisposition, he would ask the consent of the house to be allowed to offer certain resolutions adopted by a large and respectable meeting of the people of Sussex county, in the state of Virginia, condemning in strong and forcible terms, most of the important measures which had engaged the attention of congress at its present session; and approving the first veto of the bank bill by the president. The resolutions were received and laid upon the table.

The house, on motion of Mr. McKee, resumed the consideration of the following resolution, heretofore reported by Mr. Ferris, from the committee on foreign affairs:

Resolved, by the house of representatives of the United States of America, That the president of the United States be requested to consider the propriety of entering into negotiations with the British government for the purpose of obtaining the release of such citizens of the U. States as may now be detained at Van Dieman's Land, or any other part of the British dominions, for any alleged or actual participation in the late insurrection in the Canadas.

Mr. McKee (who, when the resolution was last under discussion, was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour) resumed the floor, and continued his remarks for some time, when he gave way to Mr. Ingersoll, from the select committee appointed on the breach of privilege, in the case of Messrs. Stantley and Wise, who made the following report:

The special committee, appointed to inquire into the circumstances and report to the house, on the rencontre between Mr. Wise and Mr. Stantley, on the floor of the house, respectfully submit:

That they notified those gentlemen of their meeting in committee, where Mr. Wise and Mr. Stant might attend if they thought proper, and that their respective written statements would be received by the committee.

With commendable promptitude and candor, both those gentlemen presented written statements, not materially differing in their several accounts.

The committee, therefore, deemed it superfluous to take further testimony; and without delay, as the session is drawing to a close, present the following outline of this transaction:

During debate in the committee of the whole on the 9th day of this month, Mr. Standy having said what Mr. Wise considered improper or unkind, left his seat, after Mr. Standy had resumed his, and went to it. Some exciting private conversation took place between them of an angry but not insulting character, till Mr. Wise warned Mr. Standy not to speak of him again as he said he had done; that he told him that he (Mr. Wise), but for their past relations, would seale Mr. Standy on the floor for the first beforementioned atack in debate. Mr. Standy replied that he would not take Mr. Wise's warning. Mr. Wise proposed to Mr. Standy, as Mr. Wise states, for explanation, that they should not go to the house of the adulteress, but that they should go to the house of the adulterers. No, sir, you have heard what I have said; you can take your own course; I have nothing more to say. Mr. Wise then applied contemptuous language to Mr. Standy, which he cast back on Mr. Wise, saying, "You are a liar, and you are a scoundrel." In terms of indignity being exchanged, Mr. Wise says that he applied to Mr. Standy terms of extreme insult, which Mr. Standy repelled by calling Mr. Wise a liar; whereupon, Mr. Wise says he struck Mr. Standy, who says Mr. Wise struck at him. It follows necessarily that Mr. Wise was the aggressor in this conflict, which was put end to by adjacent members forcibly separating the combatants.

The proceedings of the house were entirely suspended by the tumult and confusion which ensued. Persons from without rushed into the scene of action; the speaker, without form, resumed the chair, and for some time tried in vain to restore order.

The committee consider it useless to dwell in mere terms of condemnation on an outrage so detrimental to the dignity of the house of representatives, and derogatory to the character of the country. Every member must feel, as every citizen has declared, that it is high time to put an end to such destructive occurrences.

They therefore submit the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That this report be inserted in full in the journal of the house, as a reprimand.

2. Resolved, That it be henceforth among the rules of this house, that for any insulting word, applied by one member to another in committee of the whole, it shall be the duty of any member to rise immediately to report the same; the speaker on his resuming the chair; whereupon the speaker shall inflict a fine of not less than one hundred dollars on the offending member, to be deducted from his compensation; and that for any insulting words applied by any member to another, in the house, the speaker shall fine him as before mentioned, as on reports of the committee. All such reports shall be subject to an appeal to the house.

Resolved, further, That it be henceforth among the rules of the house, that for any blow or assault inflicted by a member of this house on another, in committee of the whole, the same shall be reported by the chairman of said committee to the speaker; and for any blow or assault inflicted by a member of this house on another, in the house, it shall be the duty of the speaker in all such cases aforesaid forthwith to submit to the house a motion for the expulsion of such offending member; which motion the house shall immediately, in priority of all other business, proceed, on the speaker's said motion, to determine.

Mr. I. moved the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. Adams asked who was reprimanded?
Mr. Ingersoll said he could tell the gentleman, but as the previous question had been called, he did not think it would be in order.

Mr. Adams moved to lay the report upon the table. A call of the house was now ordered; but before the absentees were called through—Mr. Chapman, of Alabama, moved that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with. The house so ordered it without a count.

The question was then taken on the motion for the previous question; and was decided in the negative. So there was not a second.

A very long and exciting debate, running through the space of four hours, and assuming at times a very personal aspect, ensued; in which Messrs. Adams, Rogers, Ingersoll, Everett, Caruthers, Warren, Botts, Saltonstall, Proffit, Hopkins, Marshall, Arnold, Underwood and Stuart, participated. The proceedings were as follows:

The clerk to inform the governor of Virginia thereof. It was subsequently withdrawn. And, in explanation of his reasons for offering this resolution, Mr. Warren remarked that almost all the affidavits which had taken place in the house had been between the whites and the southern negroes, and that the negroes coming from the northern and eastern parts of the union were very much opposed to them, as all should be; so that he felt himself bound to send the proposition he had already done to the table, with a view of preventing the recurrence of such a scene as had occurred on Thursday. Having done this, whatever might be the fate of it, he should wash his hands of the whole matter. He said that his confidence in the high and indignant at the enactment of these disgraceful measures, and desired the existence of a better state of things in congress. If he were to give his assent to them, he would come in for his share of the defamation which attached to this house. He agreed with the gentleman from Tennessee that, when one member struck another, the list was bound to retaliate, and that the government was bound in reference to the disturbance on Thursday, he believed they were indebted to the resolution and strength of some members, and to the position of the stable and chairs on that occasion, for the prevention of one of the bloodiest riots that had ever taken place in the civilized world. Were they, he asked, to go on and countenance these riots until they should see fit to do so, he would not countenance them, and therefore he had drawn up this resolution in anticipation of this report being made, and which he had intended to offer as a privileged question.

Mr. Botts proposed to strike out the first and second resolutions, and to adopt the report with the third resolution.

Mr. Caruthers moved to amend the first resolution by adding at the end thereof the words "Henry A. Wise."

Mr. Boyd moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

On which motion the yeas and nays were asked and ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 72, nays 93. So the house refused to lay the whole subject on the table.

And the question recurring on the amendment of Mr. Caruthers—Mr. Moore, of La. suggested an amendment going to dispense with all further proceedings, (in view of the apology made by Mr. Wise), but had not an opportunity to offer it formally.

Mr. Arnold offered an amendment which, as subsequently modified by him on the suggestion of Mr. Pope, read as follows:

Resolved, therefore, That the hon. Henry A. Wise, the aggressor, in the above mentioned assault, has acknowledged his offence and asked pardon of the house, all further proceedings in regard to the subject be discontinued.

Mr. Calhoun (chairman of the select committee on the rules) was understood to suggest that that committee had reported a provision to meet cases of breach of privilege for the time to come.

Mr. Proffit moved to recommit the report, in order to enable the committee to make such a one as would better meet the views of the house.

Mr. Stuart moved to amend the motion of Mr. P. by adding thereto the following instructions:

That, as the hon. Richy W. H. H., who was the assistant of the hon. E. Stansby on the floor of the house of representatives on the 9th instant, has made the proper acknowledgments to the house, and as the controversy between the parties has been amicably and honorably adjusted:

Resolved, therefore, That all further proceedings on the part of the house, in regard to said assault, be discontinued.

Mr. Arnold asked the yeas and nays; which were

In the course of the debate, Mr. Wise in a few brief sentences repeated the expressions of apology.

brief sentences, repeated the expressions of apology heretofore tendered by him to the house, and expressed his earnest desire that no censure should fall on the gentleman from N. C. (Mr. Stanly).

Mr. Stanty said: Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to say a word. And now, sir, after what has been said by the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise), I am at liberty to say more than I hitherto stated.

In the remarks I made which gave offence to the gentleman from Virginia, nothing was further from my thoughts than any design to give offence. I have never in the course of my life, in public or in private spoken more sportively than I did in the remarks I made, which seemed, most unconsciously to me, to offend the gentleman. I was never in a better humor. Sir, there are circumstances in connection with this affair which I do not feel willing to reveal. Let it pass.

Mr. Speaker, I have uniformly in public and in private, spoken of the gentleman from Virginia in the terms of commendation which his services justified and required. My public speeches show it. Yes, sir, I have defended him while some now seeking favor have vilified him. The harshest remarks I ever made of that gentleman were in his own chamber, when he and I were alone, face to face, as gentlemen ought to speak. I will say no more on this part of the subject.

I most deeply and sincerely regret, Mr. Speaker, that my name should be associated with the recollection of such an occurrence. But I cannot help it.

I do, however, object, if the house will pardon me for saying so, that there should be any appearance of a disposition on the part of this house to censure in the report. I have asked the chairman of the committee, (Mr. Ingersoll), if the report reprimanded me. He answered me, "I do not know." I asked if the committee intended to reprimand me. He said he could not tell: each man who reads must judge for himself." This I understood the chairman to say. Now, sir, my constituents will not know whether they are reprimanded or not. This will place me in the most painful situation.

I am accountable to my constituents, from whom I have received greater honors and more favors than I can adequately thank them for. I am, above all things, anxious to secure their good opinion. If all report goes to them, it will support me, and reprimand me, no location in saying, Mr. Speaker, that my mind is made up. If I am reprimanded by this house, my resignation of a seat on this floor is immediately placed in your hands. I would not sit here one hour after such a vote. I should return home, to the honest men by whose authority I have been asked to seek a reelection, a purification at their hands, before I took my seat again. No, Mr. Speaker, if I thought there was one member on that committee with whom I have been associated for years past who thought I deserved to be reprimanded, I would not hold my seat here. I attained the distinction of being here by honorable means, at the hands of honorable men. I came in the ardent hope of being able to serve my country and promote the interests of North Carolina. I intended, at every hazard, at all risks that I am able to encounter, to give up the high trust confided to my hands without just cause for censure or reproach. I am beyond express since anxious that no man of mine should be a blurb on the cheek of any North Carolinian. I had rather perish than cast a reproach on the name of my native state. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have an honest name of my own, which was transmitted to me pure and unsullied, and which shall pass from me untarnished. Let not the house, therefore, by passing this strange report, appear to reprimand me. Such, I am aware, cannot be their design. I am not beseeching favor of the house—I have none to ask. I demand justice for my constituents—for my state.

Afterwards when several gentlemen had spoken, Mr. Stantley said he desired to say that he hoped his friends from Tennessee, (Mr. Johnson), had been urged upon the house the propriety of adopting rigorous measures towards the gentleman from Virginia. Mr. Stantley said he was satisfied that the house did not approve the report of the committee. No one seemed to think, or had said, that he, (Mr. S.) ought to be reprimanded, or that any expression of good feeling which had been used by the gentleman from Virginia. He did not wish the house to punish the gentleman from Virginia; he had made ample apologies to the house, which Mr. S. hoped would be satisfactory. Mr. Stantley had intended to say this when up before, but under the excitement of the moment forgot it. He, (Mr. Stantley), would be satisfied to have the report recommitted, as proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Stuart), as the house had refused to concur in it. All, (said Mr. Stantley), that I have to ask of the house is, let me return to my constituents with my shield, or my no shield. The previous question was moved and seconded. The main question, (being on recommitment with instructions), was ordered, and, being taken, was decided in the affirmative: yeas 104, yeas 56. So the report was recommitted with the instructions.

Mr. Cathoun, from the select committee on the rules, made a long report, (not read), which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

A message was received from the senate, by Asbury Dickens, esq. secretary, stating that that body had passed the resolution of this house for the final adjournment of congress, with an amendment.

This amendment simply strikes out the hour leaving the day as fixed, and with Monday the 21st of August. The house took up and considered the amendment, and concurred in it.

Mr. Randolph, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported that the committee had examined the bill repealing the 6th section of the act of 1838, making appropriations for the military academy, and also the bill in relation to duties and drawbacks, and had found the same to be correct.

Whereupon the said bills received the signature of the speaker.

A message was received from the president of the United States by the hands of John Tyler, jr. esq. his private secretary, informing the house that the president had signed the following bills:

A bill providing for repairing the Potomac bridge.

A bill making appropriations for the salaries and outfits of diplomatic agents.

A bill making appropriations for the purchase of ordnance and ordnance stores.

A bill in relation to duties on drawbacks.

A bill relating the sixth section of the act of 1838, making appropriations for the military academy.

And, at a little before three o'clock the house adjourned.

MONDAY, SEPT. 13. Mr. Stantley offered a resolution providing that the messenger of the house should furnish the vehicles required for the service of the house.

After some remarks from Messrs. Floyd, Hopkins and Stantley, the resolution, being objected to by Mr. Hopkins, was not received.

Mr. Miller, of Missouri, asked leave to present a resolution calling on the secretary of war for information as to fortifications intended for the defence of our western frontier.

Mr. Morgan objected. "The resolution calls on the secretary of war. We have no secretary of war now."

Mr. Graham moved a call of the house, on which the yeas and nays were ordered. The call was ordered. Yeas 52, yeas 23.

Before the calling of the roll was completed, Mr. Fillmore moved that further proceedings in the call be suspended. Agreed to, so the call was suspended.

Mr. Errett offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed on the part of this house, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the senate, to wait on the president of the United States, and notify him that, unless he may have other communications to submit to the two houses of congress, he is ready to adjourn.

And the speaker announced Messrs. Errett, Ward, and Lewis Williams, as the committee on the part of this house.

Various resolutions were offered, which were not received.

Mr. John C. Clark suggested that the house should take a recess until 5 o'clock, having no business before it.

Mr. Adams said that when the joint committee appointed to wait on the president had returned and should inform this house that there was no further objection to its legislative action, the house could adjourn without waiting for the senate. This had been done heretofore.

On motion of Mr. Lewis Williams, the house took a recess until twelve o'clock, M.

At twelve o'clock the house (or the skeleton thereof which was left) was again called to order by the speaker. And the following was read, a message from the senate, by Asbury Dickens, esq. secretary, stating that the senate had postponed indefinitely the joint resolution of this house in relation to the prices of public printing in the departments.

Also, that the president of the United States had informed the senate that he had approved and signed the joint resolution in relation to the purchase of water-tight hump.

And then, on motion of Mr. Errett, the house took a further recess until 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The speaker resumed the chair at half past five o'clock.

A message was received from the senate, by Lewis H. Dickens, esq. clerk, informing the house that the senate had concurred in the resolution of the house, providing for the appointment of a joint committee to wait on the president of the United States and notify him that, unless he had other communications to submit to the two houses were ready to adjourn, and that the senate had appointed a committee on their part.

The speaker remained in the chair, and the house unoccupied for about an hour.

When Mr. Marshall rose and inquired of the speaker whether it was in order at this time to submit a proposition of any kind?

The answer of the speaker did not reach the ear of the reporter, but the members with great unanimity, called upon Mr. Marshall to proceed.

Mr. M. then moved that 5,000 extra copies of the second vote message be printed.

In presenting this motion, Mr. M. addressed the house for an hour and fifteen minutes in a severe review of the political course of the president of the United States, especially with reference to the second bank bill; and on the general condition and prospects of the whig party.

Having concluded his remarks, Mr. M. withdrew the motion to print.

After which Mr. Errett rose and said that the joint committee appointed to wait on the president of the United States and inform him that the two houses were ready to adjourn, if he had no further communication to make, had performed their duty, and had been requested by the president to say that he had no further legislative communication to make to congress.

Whereupon, at a quarter before 8 o'clock, on motion of Mr. Ward, the house adjourned sine die.

COMPLETE LIST OF ACTS

PASSED AT THE 1st SESSION OF THE 27TH CONGRESS.

An act making appropriations for the present session of congress.

An act authorising a loan not exceeding the sum of twelve millions of dollars.

An act for the relief of Mrs. Harrison, widow of the late president of the United States.

An act making appropriation for the pay, subsistence, &c. of a home squadron.

An act making further provision for the maintenance of pauper lunatics in the District of Columbia.

An act to amend an act entitled "an act to incorporate an act entitled 'an act to incorporate the Mechanic Relief society of Alexandria.'"

An act to repeal the act entitled "an act to provide for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer and disbursement of the public revenue," and to provide for the punishment of embezzlers of public money, and for other purposes.

An act to provide for the payment of navy pensions.

An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

An act further to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the general land office.

An act to authorise the recovery of fines and forfeitures incurred under the charter, laws and ordinances of Georgetown, before justices of the peace.

An act to revive and extend the charters of certain banks in the District of Columbia.

An act in addition to an act entitled "an act to carry into effect a resolution passed by the United States and the Mexican republic."

An act to amend the act entitled "an act to provide for taking the sixth census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," approved March third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, and no amendment the same.

An act making an appropriation for the funeral expenses of William Henry Harrison, deceased, late president of the United States.

An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights.

An act making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities.

An act to provide for placing Greengrass statute of Washington in the rotundo of the capitol, and for expenses therein mentioned.

An act authorizing the transmission of letters and packages to and from Mrs. Harrison free of postage.

An act to make appropriations for the post office department.

An act making an appropriation for the purchase of naval ordnance and ordnance stores, and for other purposes.

An act making appropriations for outfits and salaries of diplomatic agents, and for other purposes.

An act to provide for repairing the Potomac bridge.

An act relating to duties and drawbacks.

An act to repeal a part of the sixth section of the act entitled "an act to provide for the support of the military academy of the United States for the year 1838, and for other purposes," passed July 7, 1838.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

A resolution relating to the lights now stationed at Sandy Hook and Bartlett's Reef.

A resolution for the distribution of seven hundred copies of the Digest of Patents.

A resolution to provide for the distribution of the printed returns of the sixth census.

A resolution in relation to the purchase of domestic water-rotted hemp for the use of the United States navy.

Joint resolution making it the duty of the attorney general to examine into the titles of the lands or sites for the purpose of erecting thereon armories and other public works and buildings, and for other purposes.

POSTSCRIPT—FOREIGN NEWS.

The Great Western reached New York on Thursday, in 15 days and 8 hours, bringing 110 passengers and London dates to the 31st ult. The weather had proved very fine—crops improved of course—free wheat was 6d. a bushel cheaper—harvest was fairly progressing in southern countries. Harvest in France very promising.

Parliament was in session. After four nights debate the majority against the whig ministry was 72 in the house of lords, and 91 in the commons, and they of course resigned. Sir Robert Peel was forming the new ministry, in which it is said the duke of Wellington will be included. Resolutions had been offered in parliament in relation to the McLeod affair, which induced Lord Palmerston to announce that the positions assumed by Mr. Webster in that case was entirely satisfactory to the British government, which was received with loud cheers.

CHRONICLE.

BANK ITEMS. The Western bank of Georgia, at Columbus, has been closed, the teller having run off with $75,000 of its funds.

U. S. B. OF PA. On the 10th inst, 1,020 shares of this bank were sold on the New York exchange at from 86 1/2 to 87. At Philadelphia sales were made the same day at 87 1/2. Sales since have been made at the same rates.

BROWN UNIVERSITY. The Bro. John Brown Francis has been elected chancellor of Brown university, in place of Samuel Brodhead, deceased. Rev. Barnes Sears, of Newton, was chosen a member of the board of fellows, and the rev. Edward B. Hall, a member of the board of trustees.

CROCK. The Tallahassee Floridian represents the crop, in this State, in danger, to be very fine in the present. Prices continue to rise in the Baltimore market at 64 1/2 cents. It is quoted in the late Charleston, S. C. papers at about the same rates.

COTTON. 5,100 bales sold at New York last week at prices 1/2 cent lower than before the arrival of the steamer. At Charleston we notice a decline of 1/2 to 1 cent for the crop. In Florida is represented to be very promising.

"THE DUER-SLAYER, or the First War Path," a new novel by Cooper, has been published by Lee and Blanchard, Philadelphia. It represents Leatherstocking in his young days.

DEATHS. Amongst the obituary notices that have reached us during the week is J. B. Bechewell, the principal clerk of the Mannu nation, who died on the 13th ult, at his residence on the St. Mary's river, near Fort Wayne, Indiana. He was about 50 years of age. He left about $20,000 in specie, besides immense quantities of very valuable real estate, which by will he has left to be divided among his relations.

At West Point, on the 9th inst. in the 16th year of his age, Cadet Thomson F. Mason, son of the late Judge Thomson F. Mason, of Alexandria, a highly promising and estimable youth.

"Is this pil'd art thou being's passless mound?
Toll me, cold grave! death with poppies crown'd?"
On the 11th inst. at Washington, Thomashead Dade, late a Captain of U. S. Dragoons.

At New York on the 12th inst. general Robert Rogers, of that city—an old and eminent citizen, who has filled offices of trust and distinction.

ELECTIONS. We have at length received a full list of the senators and representatives elected in the state of Indiana. The following are the names of the electors: Van Buren and 4 whigs—and the house 53 whigs and 47 Van Buren—giving the whigs a majority of one on joint ballot.

St. John's Island has returned a large majority of whigs to both branches of the legislature.

From Vermont sufficient returns have been received to render it probable that no election has been effected of either governor, lieutenant-governor, or treasurer, there being three regularly nominated tickets—viz. Van Buren and abolition. The legislative houses divided are whigs in both branches. So far as heard from for the senate 19 whigs, 7 Van Buren and 4 doubtful; for the house 11 whigs, 71 Van Buren, and 6 no choice; the vote for governor stands FAINE 15,571; SMITH 15,343; HITCHCOCK, abolition, 2,189.

From Missouri sufficient returns are received to render it certain that the present whig governor Kent, is defeated, and that there will be Van Buren majorities in both houses.

An election for three members of the state legislature, from the city of New Orleans, to fill vacancies, has been held in the choice of Manuel Duques, George K. Rodgers and E. A. Canon. The first two whigs, and the last a V. B. There were five other candidates.

At New York on the 12th inst. at New York, on the 7th inst. There were two candidates for mayor, viz. Jacob J. Mintz and Henry L. Pinckney. The former was chosen, and all the members of the old council who were candidates are re-elected.

EXCHANGE. At New York bills on London $1 a 95; on France 5120a23 1/2 domestic exchange continues, with very slight variations, as last quoted in the Register.

FLOUR in the New York market $6 57 1/2—but the transactions are light, buyers and sellers both waiting for a favorable change. The market for the wheat delivered from the Erie canal, during the first week in September, at the places named below, is as follows, viz:

	brls. flour.	bush. wheat.
Schenectady,	316	34
West Troy,	15,724	15,620
Albany,	31,205	29,332

Total, 47,215 29,332
The amount of toll received at the canal collector's office in this city, for the last week Sept. was $12,460 38
Last year, $4,500 22

Increase, $4,160 16
At Baltimore inspections last week 19,675 brls. and 537 half brls.—Prices rose from 86 1/2 to 87, on receiving the news by the telegraph, that 100,000 bushels of wheat, by the end of the week. This week it has received and may now be quoted at from 86 50 to 86 75, according to quality. Lafayette. The news just received by the Great Western will depress prices very considerably.

GRAIN IN PENNSYLVANIA. Pennsylvania last year produced 1,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 40,000,000 bushels of coarser grain.

IMPRISONMENT OF MR. CROSS AT MONTANA. Our public journals have inserted under the caption of "OUR RAGE," an account of the imprisonment of an American, erroneously represented to be a United States consul, by the Indians at Montana. We learn from the Monticlerian, that Mr. Cross is neither a consul nor vice consul of the U. States though some time since he was on an occasion selected by Mr. COVETS, the U. States consul to be for him, during an absence from his station, but Mr. Cross is neither recognized by the Spanish nor American government as filling any official station, and therefore is not entitled to other protection than as an American citizen, which would by no doubt be promptly exercised to him.

BENJAMIN LITTLE the notorious desperado who created so much disturbance on the Canada frontier, and for whom the governor of New York had offered a reward of $2000, having been sentenced for seven years to the penitentiary. He was taken at Buffalo on the 6th inst. after a stout resistance. The Evening Journal says, he is a man of indomitable enterprise and daring. Having embarked with Mackenzie in the contemplated voyage to the North Pacific, and when his brother was shot, and his sister outraged by soldiers. This was enough to make a man desperate—he determined to live henceforth for revenge. After his escape from the rail road car on his way to prison, he returned to Canada, where he held up the Welland and Brock's mail trains. On the Saturday night before he was arrested in Buffalo, he was in Canada, maturing a plan to blow up a war steamer.

THE GEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE IN BOSTON. The directors among other measures to fulfill the wishes of the testator, have resolved to employ a learned and able geologist, to give courses of lectures there. Mr. Lyell, the celebrated geologist, who arrived a month or two since, came upon this mission, and is to deliver twelve lectures on geology at the new institution. The liberal sum of $300 is to be paid him; the same sum is offered to professor Faraday and Owen to undertake the voyage and task. Mr. Faraday declined, and Owen has not fully determined.

GOLD MINES. The Charlotte (North Carolina) Journal says, that persons engaged in mining have discovered a vein on the lands of Thomas Flow, on Clear creek, about 14 miles east of this place, which is very rich. The vein is about one foot wide. Some of the ore taken out will weigh between two and three thousand dollars per bushel.

MCLEOD. A variety of rumors were about a few days since, to the effect, that Mr. For had received instructions to urge once more the release of McLeod, and in case of his being subjected to trial, to demand his passport.

There has been some excitement in the state of New York, produced by a different rumor. The Utica Democrat says: "On the 27th, letters were received by the principal judges of the common law, the governor and the secretary of this state, informing them that authentic information had been received at the seat of government that a body of about three hundred men from Canada were at rendezvous on the evening of the 27th, and were about to march on the river shore of the state, to the town of Marcy, adjoining Wisconsin, and upon the north side of the Niagara, and would make an attempt to rescue McLeod and conduct him to Canada. The sheriff of the county called on the militiamen, mustered all the volunteers in the place, shot the guns, and then placed a guard around the jail. He also sent to Utica, and procured more arms and ammunition, and the armory, but the attempt was made to be expected, and no trace of the invaders has been discovered."

NEW ORLEANS. Deaths on the 1st instant, 11, of which 11 by yellow fever. On the 2d, there were 35 deaths, of which 20 by yellow fever. On the 3d there were 28 deaths, 19 of which by yellow fever. On the 4th, 16 deaths, of which 9 by yellow fever. On the 5th and 6th, there were 20 deaths, of which 28 were by yellow fever. 26 patients reported in the Charity hospital. On the 7th instant, 25 deaths occurred, of which 22 were of yellow fever.

SPECIAL. The packet ship Montreal sailed, from New York on the 11th instant, with $136,712 in specie, for Liverpool.

The amount of specie exported from New York to Europe during the first two weeks of the present month of September, according to a statement in the N. York American, was $718,143—of which $267,739 went to Havre, and $150,704 to London.

MR. STEVENSON American minister at London, expects to sail for the United States on the 4th October.

STEAM SHIP. A large steamship, called the Precursor, upwards of 1,500 tons burthen, and with two engines of 500 horse power, is advertised to leave Southampton (Eng.) on the 1st October, for Calcutta. She is expected to make the passage, including stoppages, in 70 days. This ship is intended for a packet between Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon and Suez.

The Builder Hub Aurora, Boston, says that Mr. Chas. Keuten is now in that city, acting as agent of the "Brethren and United States Steamship Company," in connection with steamships between Bremen and the United States touching at the Isle of Wight, or perhaps some port in England. They have already obtained the necessary funds, and are ready to commence the construction of the first ship. Mr. K. has been in New York, with a view to ascertain what accommodations he can obtain there, and is now pursuing similar investigation at Boston.

STEAMSHIP ITEMS. The steamer Acadon on her way from St. Louis to Genoa, struck a rock, and was driven off Geneva Island on the 30th ult. and sunk instantly. It has been stated that twenty passengers were found but later intelligence renders it questionable whether any lives were lost.

The steamer William Paria, from New Orleans, with a full cargo, struck a snag at Grand Chain, and is a wreck.

The new steamer Chief Magistrate, on her first trip from New Orleans to Genoa, was totally lost at Island 65, having struck a log at 12 o'clock, on the night of the 28th ult. She had on board a full cargo of freight, and only a small part of the engine and cabin furniture will be saved.

The Germ, Lieut. Hunter's experimental steamboat, having passed up the Hudson and through the New York canals to the lakes, and back again, to the admiration of all who witnessed the performance of her new method of propelling, reached Baltimore by way of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, in thirteen hours from Philadelphia. We met her on Wednesday "n thing of it" upon the brand Chesapeake, steering for Norfolk.

TEA. 6,995 packages of tea were offered and 5,509 of them sold at New York, on the 15th inst. super. Prices ranged from 10 to 17 for hyson; young hyson 71a8 1/2, 70, 40a12; hyson skin 46a1a5; black 50a56 1/2; superior Oolong 81 1/2.

TABACCO. The inspections of the last week in Baltimore consisted of 1,265 hogsheads Maryland; 322 Ohio and 10 Virginia, total 1,587 hogs. So large an influx effected the market slightly. The principal sales were at 83 to 6 25. Common Maryland 83 50 to 1 30; middling to good 55 to 7 50 good 83 to 5 50; fine 89 to 13. Ohio tobacco is neglected at present—prices as in our last quotations.

The Philadelphia Ledger says: Charles Eschenwien a tobacco merchant, well known in this city and New York, has recently absconded or gone to Europe, with all the funds of two commercial houses—one in this city and one in New York—amounting to $100,000. It is stated, it is stated, will not fall short of one million of dollars. The principal losses will fall upon the partners. The principle cause of Eschenwien's rascality is said to be an enormous debt of $100,000, which he had contracted, which had led him into extravagances that squandered his own and the means of others.

VINTAGE IN FRANCE. The grapes in France generally, are this year more than usually abundant. Scarcely have the vines been more heavily laden, but there is little hope that they will ripen in good season.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE. (Harford) has received a legacy of $2,000 from the estate of J. Marks.

WHEAT. Sales were effected for a day or two, in Baltimore last week at 81 38 to 1 49—but all again to $1 30 a 1 48 at Baltimore, Ohio 81 12.

WOLLS. Prices in Baltimore range from 35 to 42 for middling grades; prime Saxony fleece 50 cents at 42 months.

Wool in Australia. In 1807 the whole quantity of wool produced was 245 pounds—in 1820, 10,428 7/8 lbs. equal to 40,460 bales. The wool of the present season, bringing a return to British subjects of nearly 41,000,000 sterling, which otherwise would have gone to foreigners.

YELLOW FEVER is severely visiting Lafayette, Louisiana. The number of interments during the week ending 2d instant is 28, of which 17 by the fever. In one spot containing seventeen houses eleven deaths occurred.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 4.—VOL. XL]

BALTIMORE, SEPTEMBER 25, 1841.

[VOL. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,563.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 4, VOL. XL.

EDITORIAL.—free trade for free trade, and restriction for restriction.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.—G. Britain, Queen Victoria's speech, debate in parliament on the reply, Defeat and resignation of the wing ministers, Debate on the McLeod case, New ministers installed, State of affairs, Irens from France, Spain, Germany, Austria, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, Candia, Canada.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.—Appointments by the president, The departments, Diplomatic items.

MR. SECRETARY BALDWIN'S letter relative to resignation. MR. SECRETARY BELLS' letter and statement do.

MR. SECRETARY WEBSTER'S explanatory letter.

REVISION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.—Item relative to the new revenue bill, French comments thereon, Loans, Importations, Northern boundary, Border troubles, Indian treaties, Beacon light, Sub-treasury robbery, Expedition to Liberia. ARMY.—Items. NAVY.—Items.

STATES OF THE UNION.—Trade of the Upper Lakes, Maine, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Missouri, Georgia, Florida.

MR. RIVES' second speech on the veto message.

J. Q. ADAMS' speech on the McLeod case.

U. S. LAWS.—Act relative to duties and drawbacks.

APPROPRIATIONS.—Made at 1st session 37th congress.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

We were not a little astonished a few days since, upon opening a letter from one of our oldest subscribers, of the interior of the state of New York, to find, as a reason assigned by the writer for discontinuing to receive the Register in numbers, and preferring to have it hereafter in volume, that "the Register having ceased to be the champion of American interests and industry, and become the advocate of fallacious free trade doctrines, which if carried out, would involve the better part of the confederacy in irretrievable ruin—it has lost its interest and value to me, except for historical reference."

The difficulties incident to the period which has transpired since we have had charge of this publication, and those which we had to encounter in bringing into order an establishment that in all its ramifications had become exceedingly deranged, has prevented our attempting to indulge much in editorial remarks—but certainly, such as we have adventured, have generally been in relation to what we consider one of the most interesting topics that is likely soon to occupy the attention of the people of this country—THAT OF THE FREE CONDITION AND PROSPECTS OF FOREIGN TRADE; for the maintenance of a fair share of which, we apprehend there is about to be a very ardent struggle between this country and both England and France, and we have considered it a duty frequently to call attention to the subject; and by selections of official and interesting articles, to furnish our readers with the best data wherewith to form opinions. How any reader of the Register could have reached the conclusion that the publication had ceased to be "the champion of American interests and industry, and become the advocate of fallacious free trade doctrines?" we are utterly at a loss to imagine; and can only account for a continuance of such an impression, by the avowal that the numbers, instead of being read, had been laid by, as they came to hand.

True it is, that as an abstract proposition, the United States has a right to claim to be considered the foremost and warmest friends of "free trade"—having, from the days when BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, the first diplomatic representative of this country in Europe, proposed an equitable intercourse with the various governments of that quarter of the world, up to the formation of the present government, when THOMAS JEFFERSON, the first secretary of state, took the attitude that it comporting alike with our honor and our interest as a nation to extend "free trade for free trade," and to "meet restriction by restriction," with every country with whom we had intercourse; and from thence up to the day of the date hereof, been the first to propose, and the last to adhere to an intercourse with one and all, which, according to the tenets of the strictest sect of "free trade" professors, should open the widest latitude between man and man, and least obstruct the transfer of any thing whatever, from those who have to those who want. The people of the United States have resources ample—abundant resources, that not only enable them to be as liberal in this direction as any people upon earth, but which, if others would fairly allow us the use of the under the sanction of a "free trade" within their dominions, we would trust to keeping the balance of trade just where it ought to be; but after having for years and years practised upon the mistaken maxim of allowing free trade to those from whom we meet with interdiction, until the system has brought ruin, wide spread and almost universal, over the land; surely, with all these proofs, if any may boast of being friends to free trade, "we more," as Paul said to the Jews. Let any other government adduce equal pretensions, and we still maintain that it comports alike with our character, our practice and our interests, to go as far as those who go the furthest for "free trade." But we mean by "free trade"—"free trade" for ourselves, with others, as well as free trade to others, with us. And if it be not accorded, we are for meeting "restriction with restriction," measure for measure, with the proudest of them. And we believe this to be the only certain method of maintaining our fair share of the commerce of the world—of equalizing the balance of trade, which our mistaken indulgence to foreign powers has so long operated to keep against us—or of insuring domestic prosperity, which has so severely suffered from the contrary course.

VOL. XL—SEC. 4.

Such, in brief, are our notions as to "free trade." Let England, or let France, give us "free trade" for our products—and here goes for "free trade" with them, or either of them. But we are tired to death of travelling that road "solitary and alone," and have severely and sufficiently paid the price of generous support to the abstract principle for the present. If self-interest is to be the rule with others, as the Tories and voters of England have recently decided it shall be on their part, we are for trying how it will work for our country, and are now and always have been the advocates of "restriction for restriction" in practice, as well as of "free trade" in theory.

Since the above remarks were placed in type, we have received, from the interior of Pennsylvania, a letter from another of our subscribers, whose view of our editorial course is certainly in striking contrast with that of our friend noticed above. After a very complimentary introduction, speeded, too, with a substantial evidence of his kindness, the writer proceeds:

"I have the REGISTER from 1811 to 1836—including all the numbers published by the elder Mr. Niles—neatly bound in volumes, and would like to have the residue from that to the present time, in the same convenient form. Now, I have a request to make:—Will you be so obliging as to inform me—if I send on all the numbers I have, including those published by William Ogden Niles, (and some of both series are missing, having never come to hand, but not many)—whether you will make them complete and have them bound for me, and at what charge? In doing which, you will greatly oblige a friend and well-wisher to the cause you sustain—your country's cause, and every man's cause. But the blind cannot see, and the deaf cannot hear—but a crisis is near at hand, and woe be to him who cannot feel!!!

* We insert this inquiry, having received several such lately for the purpose of notifying all our subscribers, that we can complete their sets of the new series, having surplus numbers of every volume on hand, from vol. 31 up, and we earnestly urge all our subscribers to complete their files. To such as wish us to favor sets bound for them, we tender our services; the charge will be what the binders charge us—75 cents per volume in boards, leather back and double lettered; one dollar full bound.

"I think the publication of Sir R. Peel's speech, on the British system of policy towards other nations, and particularly America, was very reasonable, and may do a great deal of good. The speech was a very candid one, and may serve to wipe the scales from the eyes of some of our politicians who have made so much noise, and appear to be quite bewildered in their schemes to regulate the currency. Regulate the currency! What folly—talk of regulating the currency of the country. Men cannot think, or they would see their error—their infatuation would vanish, and they would begin to do, to act upon, something real, and give us a strong protective tariff as the ground-work of any sound and permanent currency that we ever will or can have—the produce of our own labor, not material whether we have bank notes or the precious metals, or both, so that we have our own markets at home and a market abroad wherever we can find it, for the surplus. Honest men might then, under the blessing of Heaven, live in some security and comfort, instead of being jostled to and fro by every adverse breeze that crosses the ocean.—And I must repeat that I think it utterly impossible for congress to adopt any scheme that will permanently regulate the currency, whether by banks, fiscal corporations, or even gold and silver—alone or altogether—while all the nations of the world are left free to flood us with their cheap goods, and sweep every dollar from our board at their pleasure. What other nation or people under Heaven could so long withstand such impolicy as this? We have been wont to boast of being the most enlightened people of the age! When this shall be realized, I think we shall justly claim the honor of having been the most placid and most enduring, in swallowing the humbugs of modern England."

Another of our subscribers, residing very near the latitude and longitude of the one whose letter is first noticed above, and who writes by the last mail for some missing numbers to complete his file, adds—

"I consider the Register invaluable. It makes a book without which no intelligent man's library is full, and I am exceeding anxious to obtain it all perfect to this time, and continue it so while it maintains its present truly elevated character. * * * My anxiety for these numbers is increased from the fact that I have at considerable expense purchased the Register bound, perfect from 1821, and I never could feel reconciled to the loss of these numbers."

DUTY AND EXCHANGE. A friend writes us from Pennsylvania, 20th inst. "I observe in your paper of the 4th inst. the calculation of duties on flour, &c. in England, is upon the basis of $4 44 to the £ sterling. If I am correct, there should be 10 per cent. added to the amount there given, since the actual worth of the pound sterling is about 70-100 above the nominal price as taken by the brokers, or there is about 9-100 difference between the rate of $4 44 of the broker's and $4 80 as established by congress, a few years since."

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

In a postscript in the last REGISTER we gave the outlines of the information brought by the Great Western—since which, by the arrival of the Calcutnia, at Boston, London dates to the 4th instant have been received. The weather continued favorable for harvesting and the price of breadstuffs was still declining. Cotton remained unchanged, notwithstanding heavy failures had occurred in both Liverpool and Manchester. Business was exceedingly dull.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Parliament met pro forma, on the 19th ult. when the queen's speech was delivered, by commission, but business did not commence until the 24th.

HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

"My lords and gentlemen. We are commanded by her majesty to acquaint you that her majesty has availed herself of the earliest opportunity of resorting to your advice and assistance after the dissolution of the last parliament.

"Her majesty continues to receive from foreign powers gratifying assurances of their desire to maintain with her majesty the most friendly relations.

"Her majesty has the satisfaction of informing you that, the objects for which the treaty of the 15th of July, 1840, was concluded between her majesty, the emperor of Austria, the king of Prussia, the emperor of Russia, and the emperor of the Netherlands, have been fully accomplished, and it is gratifying to her majesty to be enabled to state that, the temporary separation which the measures taken in the execution of that treaty created between the contracting parties and France has now ceased.

"Her majesty trusts that the union of the principal powers upon all matters affecting the great interests of Europe, will afford a firm security for the maintenance of peace.

"Her majesty is glad to be able to inform you that, in consequence of the evacuation of Ghoriban by the Persian troops, her majesty has ordered her minister to the court of Persia, to return to Teheran.

"Her majesty regrets that the negotiations between her plenipotentiaries in China and the Chinese government, have not yet been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and that it has been necessary to call into action the forces which her majesty has sent to the China seas; but her majesty still trusts that the emperor of China will see the justice of the demands made by her majesty's plenipotentiaries have been inclined to make.

"Her majesty is happy to inform you that the differences which had arisen between Spain and Portugal, about the execution of a treaty concluded by those powers in 1830, for regulating the navigation of the Douro, have been adjusted amicably, and with honor to both parties, by the aid of her majesty's mediation.

"The debt incurred by the legislature of Upper Canada, for the purposes of public works, is a serious obstacle to further improvements, which are essential to the prosperity of the united province. Her majesty has authorized the governor general to make a communication on the subject to the legislative assembly of the United Provinces, which will direct the aid to be laid before you, and trusts that your earnest attention will be directed to matters so materially affecting the welfare of Canada and the strength of the empire.

"Gentlemen of the house of commons: We have to assure you that her majesty relies with entire confidence on you loyalty and zeal to make adequate provision for the public service, as well as all the furtherance of sums granted by the last parliament.

"My lords and gentlemen: We are more especially commanded to declare to you that the extraordinary expenses which the events in Canada, China and the Mediterranean have occasioned, and the necessity of maintaining a force adequate to the protection of our extensive possessions, have made it necessary to continue the means of increasing the public revenue.—Her majesty is anxious that this object should be effected in the manner least burdensome to her people; and it has appeared to her majesty, after full deliberation, that you may, at this juncture, properly direct your attention to the revision of the duties affecting the productions of foreign countries. It will be for you to consider whether some of these duties are not too taxing in amount as to be unproductive to the revenue, while they are vexatious to commerce. You may further examine whether the principle of protection, upon which some of these duties are founded, has not carried to an extent injurious alike to the income of the state and the interests of the people.

"Her majesty is desirous that you should consider the laws which regulate the trade in corn. It will be for you to determine whether these laws do not aggravate the natural fluctuations of supply; whether they do not embarrass trade, derange the currency, and by their operation diminish the comfort and increase the privations of the great body of the community.

"Her majesty, feeling the deepest sympathy with those of her subjects who are now suffering from distress and want of employment, it is her earnest prayer that all your deliberations may be guided by wisdom, and may conduce to the happiness of her beloved people.

It will be perceived that no mention is made, in the speech, of the United States. The revenue of the kingdom is inadequate to the expenses of government, and further exactions are required. The corn laws are mentioned as being oppressive.

Upon assembling next day, the speech was again read in the house of lords. Earl Spencer spoke ably in defence of his views, and moved the address which was a mere echo of the sentiments of the speech. The marquis of Clanricarde followed in its support.

The earl of Ripon rose in reply. In concluding he moved an amendment to the address, of which the following is the pith:

"That we feel it to be our duty humbly to submit to her majesty that it is essential to the satisfactory results of our deliberations upon these and other matters of public concern, that her majesty's government should be enabled to command the confidence of the house of commons, and respectfully to represent to her majesty that that confidence is not reposed in the present advisers of her majesty."

The debate was continued with spirit by Earl Fitzwilliam, Lord Lyttleton, Viscount Melbourne, Lord Brougham, Lord John Russell, Lord Lansdowne, and by the dukes of Wellington and Richmond, and the earl of Coventry, for the amendment. Lord Brougham closed the debate in a powerful argument for a revision of the corn laws, criticising the past course of ministers, but supporting the address. The vote was then taken and declared.

For the address

For the amendment

96

168

Majority for the Tories

72

The lords then adjourned to Friday.

On the house of commons, the address in echo to the queen's speech was moved by Mr. Mark Phillips in a strong speech, briefly seconded by Mr. John Dumas. Mr. S. Wortley (the new tory member from the great West Riding of Yorkshire, who turned out Lord Morpeth), rose in opposition, and spoke powerfully in favor of the confidence of the house of commons in the ministers. He concluded by moving the following amendment:

"That the house begged most humbly to represent to her majesty that they observed, with great concern, that the public expenditure of the country for several successive years had exceeded the annual income, and begged to assure her majesty that they agreed to the necessity of adopting some measures for the purpose of remedying so great an evil; but, in deciding upon the course which it would be advisable to pursue, especially with respect to the laws relating to trade and commerce, it would be their purpose to desire to promote the welfare and to protect the interests of all classes of her majesty's subjects. That they deem it their duty, however, to state to her majesty that it was essential to the satisfactory result of their deliberations in this and in all other concerns, that her majesty's government should possess the confidence of the house of commons, and humbly to represent that that confidence is not reposed in her majesty's present advisers. To assure her majesty that in the gracious expression of her majesty's sympathy with the distresses of the suffering poor, which that house recognised as an additional proof of her tenderness, with which her majesty was distinguished, and that the house cordially joined in her majesty's prayer that all their deliberations might tend to the happiness of the people."

Lord Bruce seconded the amendment in a brief speech. Mr. Labouchere followed in a brilliant admirable defence of the whig ministry. Sir Charles Napier spoke on the same side; Mr. D'Israeli and Lord Pillington in favor of the amendment. Mr. Roebuck made a strong radical speech, blaming the ministers some, the tories more, and justifying the conduct of this country in the case of McLeod. The debate was adjourned.

On Wednesday the debate was continued through the day by Messrs. Ewart, Ward, P. M. Stewart, S. Crawford, Cobden, Brotherton, H. Gratton, Hastie, Dr. Bowring and Lord Wortley for the address, and by Captain Hamilton and Mr. Bailly for the amendment. At midnight, the discussion was again adjourned.

On Thursday the debaters were Messrs. Gibson, S. O'Brien, Powell, Turner, C. E. Bearing and Wokley, (whigs), and Lord Sandon, Colonel Sibthorp, Messrs. Bortwick, Escot, and Goulburn, (tories).

No question was put.

On Friday the debaters were Messrs. G. Rennie, Wallace, Hindley, Wigges, Howes, M. J. O'Connell, Niliers, D. O'Connell and Lord John Russell for the address, and by Mr. R. M. Milnes, (the poet), Capt. Folkliff, Lord F. Egerton and Sir Robert Peel for the amendment. O'Connell was dreadfully severe on the tories, and Sir Robert Peel replied with equal pungency, remarking that the agitator had abused the whigs even more than he now abused the tories. Lord John Russell closed the debate in a brief and manly speech, defending the policy of his government, condemning the slights made to the whigs, approving the vote of "no confidence" as a proper means of turning out a defeated ministry, and appealing to the party about to come into power to use it for the interest of liberty and the good of the millions of mankind.

The lords then at 2½ o'clock, A. M. divided, and the result was:

For the address
" amendment

269

360

Majority for the Tories

91

Absent, 5 conservatives and 14 whigs.

So the triumph of the tories is complete.

On Saturday, few whigs and only one of the ministers appeared. Mr. S. Crawford moved a further amendment to the address in favor of an extension of the right of suffrage. Rejected: 283 to 39. Sir Robert Peel then moved an adjournment to Monday, which was agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTERS. On Monday, on the opening of the house of lords, Lord Melbourne rose, amid profound silence, and said—

"My lords, it now becomes my duty to acquaint your lordships, that in consequence of the vote come to by the other house of parliament on Saturday evening, which was precisely the same in terms as that come to by your lordships at an earlier period of the week, I, on the part of my colleagues and myself have tendered to her majesty the resignation of the offices we hold, and which resignation her majesty has been graciously pleased to accept; and we now continue to hold those offices only until our successors are appointed."

In the house of commons, Lord John Russell spoke as follows:

Lord John Russell rose amid the most profound silence to address the house. Sir, said the noble lord, I have now to state to the house, that after the division of Friday night, your majesty's ministers thought it their duty at once to advise her majesty to send the answer to the address adopted by the house, which they have just heard read, and humbly to tender their resignations to her majesty, with a view to the immediate formation of a new administration. Her majesty has been graciously pleased to accept our resignations, and I have to inform the house that we only hold office until our successors have been appointed. Perhaps, sir, the house will allow me on this occasion, and before I make the motion with which I mean to conclude, to state for its information some considerations which I deem it my duty to bring before the house, and which I shall endeavor to make possible to avoid all topics likely to lead to matters of controversy.

We conceived our duty to propose to the last parliament measures in reference to the trade and commerce of the country which we thought essential to its welfare; and obstructions having taken place to the furtherance of these measures, we advised her majesty—as soon as the business of the session would admit of it—to resort to the measure of a dissolution of parliament. That dissolution having taken place, we advised that the new parliament should be summoned to meet on the same day, and on this occasion we have advised her majesty to submit measures of the same nature, and ask the opinion of this parliament respecting them. It has pleased the house of commons, by a large majority, to address her majesty, stating that her majesty's ministers did not enjoy its confidence. Sir, this declaration we have not the least part to perform, but to resign the offices we had the honor to hold.

I will not now advert to any thing likely to prolong discussion on the past occurrences, further than to say, that in all we have done we acted from our conviction of our duty to our sovereign, and in the full belief of the utility and necessity of the measures which we have thus propounded, as well as from the feeling we entertained of our duty to the people of these countries. These convictions and persuasions have made it incumbent upon us to continue the struggle for these measures up to the present moment. (Loud cheers from the liberal benches.) Sir, I have on former occasions justified the course in which we have acted, and I shall be equally ready, in any future debate which may afford the opportunity, to take the same course. It has been our fate now to have held office for a considerable number of years. I will not say that as long as we could use the power we have obtained for the promotion of the cause in which we are engaged, we continued in office. But, this, sir, I will say, that the possession of power in this country is not attended with satisfaction unless it gives ministers the power to carry such measures as they deem to be of essential importance to the welfare of the crown and the people. (Loud cheering.)

I do not mean to allude to particular measures of minor importance, but to those which they deem of greater and transcendent consequence. With regard to such measures, sir, we commenced with the reform act of Lord Grey, and we ended with measures for the freedom of commerce. (Cheers for some time.) With large and important measures we commenced our career as ministers for the crown; and with large and important measures do we conclude. (Renewed cheering.) In pursuance of great objects we have triumphed; so in pursuance of great objects we have been defeated. (Renewed cheering.)

Sir, there are some other objects, with reference to the administration of Lord Grey and Lord Melbourne, on which I should like to address a few observations to the house. Lord Grey enjoyed, in common with his colleagues, great and unexampled popularity; and Lord Melbourne, it occurred, that having been the first minister of the crown to William IV. on his death, he became the responsible adviser of a princess who attained the monarchy of these kingdoms at the earliest opportunity in point of years which the laws of the country declared legal, and it became his duty to give that advice to the crown, which, I may be allowed to say, was always received with the confidence and reliance which, so well became the frank and generous nature of the royal personage on the throne. (Cheers.)

But, sir, neither the great popularity of Lord Grey and his ministers, nor the power and favor enjoyed by Lord Melbourne—neither was in any instance abused. While fault has been found with us in some places, for not proposing measures for the greater security of the crown, that have been proposed, so as to secure our power, it was our invariable desire to preserve entire and untouched the constitution of the country and the prerogatives of the crown. (Cheers.) Sir, having said thus much with regard to the two ministers under whom I have had the honor to serve, I may add, with pride and gratification, I may, perhaps, be allowed to add a few words with regard to the person who has now the honor of addressing you. (Hear and cheers.)

I will not pretend to say that there will not be other persons holding office who will possess larger capacity for the administration of public affairs, and who will bring to that administration more competent intelligence on these subjects—all I venture to say is, that while I was placed in the situation which I have had the honor to hold, no considerations have diverted my attention from the public duties of the office which was entrusted to me, nor from the discharge of those duties, which devolved upon me in connection with this house. I have endeavored, sir, to give every moment I could spare to the discharge of those duties. (Loud cheering from both sides of the house.) With respect to the merits of the measures which I carried into effect, I will not now enter upon any dispute; I wish to assert, is, that I have endeavored to the best of my power, to exercise any abilities which I possessed to serve the country while I have had the honor of hold office. (Cheers.)

Sir, this house has decided at the very commencement of its sitting, that it will take measures for directing the attention of the executive to the measures which I have here specified. I can only say, that I have no objection to the course which you have taken, that although that decision may call upon me for our opposition to measures to which we cannot give our approval, I am sure that in all the future consultations of the house I shall ever be ready to give that advice to the house which I shall deem it my duty to do. (Cheers.) In order to secure to the welfare of the United Kingdom, and to conduce to the well fare and prosperity of the great empire of which this house is the centre. (Hear, hear.) I shall always, whether in or out of office, express to the house my conscientious convictions, whether they agree with the course which is pursued by the ministers of the day, or in any way tend to the improvement of our institutions; never, on the one hand, defending abuses as if they were institutions, nor, on the other hand, ever sacrificing institutions because of the abuses which may have crept into them. (Loud cheers from both sides of the house.)

Sir, I have only to add, in regard to all with whom for so many years I have had to transact public business in this house whether supporters or opponents, that it is my wish personally to express the hope that in all our future relations no feelings of personal bitterness may be allowed to mingle. (Cheering.) And, sir, if our resignation of office tends to the welfare of the state, I shall be glad to resign. My proposal, I shall look back to the proceedings of this day with satisfaction. The noble lord having moved the adjournment of the house at its rising till Monday, sat down amid loud and long continued cheers.

The great clerical convention at Manchester, for uniting the state of the corn laws, had been held, and is differently judged by different parties. It numbered about 650 clergymen from all parts of the kingdom. To us, it seems a questionable proceeding for clergymen to meet as such, except for the promotion of moral and religious objects—the domain of politics, finances and political economy, belong not to them, for action.

CASE OF McLEOD. The McLeod affair was the subject of debate in the house of commons on the 26th of August.

Mr. Roebuck said he had five questions to propose to Lord Palmerston, secretary of foreign affairs, on the statement of the substance of his proposal, prepared to our hands in the New York Times.—Having expressed his strong desire for the maintenance of peace between Great Britain and the United States, he gave a sketch of the negotiations upon which he went up to the time of Gen. Harrison's induction to the office of the president of the U. S. then said he wanted to ask the noble lord.

First. Whether there had been any change in the language of the United States' government since the accession of the new government to power.

Second. Whether by any formal declaration her majesty's government had assumed the whole responsibility of the attack upon the Caroline?

Third. Whether the government of the U. States had admitted that responsibility, and had demanded reparation for the outrage and injury done and inflicted upon the United States?

Fourth. He begged to ask if the British government, since the accession of the United States, whether after such declaration, it was able, and at the same time, willing, to guarantee the safety and liberation of Mr. McLeod, notwithstanding the determination of the state of New York to go on with the proceedings now pending against that gentleman in the courts of that state.

And fifth, he asked if the government of the United States admitted the validity of such authority as a protection over Mr. McLeod, and if, having so admitted it, the noble lord the secretary for foreign affairs could state any circumstances which justified the detention of Mr. McLeod by the authority of the state of New York?

Mr. Roebuck said that the answer which the noble lord at the head of foreign affairs might be able to give to these questions, might ease the minds of the people of Great Britain, and prevent heat on all sides of the house. It was with that view he proposed these questions.

Lord Palmerston rose and said he should be the last man in that house who would interpose between, or who would curtail any information which might be given on any subject; but he at the same time felt bound to remark that the proceedings of the British government for Great Britain were somewhat irregular, because he was sure the house would be of opinion, if questions upon matters of the greatest difficulty and delicacy were to be prefaced by honorable members with a sort of narrative, it became extremely difficult for the individual whose duty it might be to give an answer to refrain from going at length into the subject to which those questions related, and thus, under the form of asking a question, a debate might be brought on without notice upon a matter of the greatest national importance. (Hear, hear.)

Lord Palmerston, however, should be happy to give the honorable and learned member for Bath the information he asked, and he had no doubt the statement he was about to make would tend to relieve the minds of many persons who think that the present state of the question with regard to Mr. McLeod, was likely to bring on a serious contest between the two countries. The advice of the honorable and learned gentleman was, he believed, substantially correct, and upon it he, (Lord Palmerston), had no particular remark to make. It was quite true as the honorable and learned gentleman stated, that upon the first demand made by her majesty's government for the return of Mr. McLeod an answer had been returned by the late secretary of state of the United States which was by no means satisfactory; and he, (Lord Palmerston), was quite ready to admit as a doctrine of international law that no one country had a right to state in reply to a demand for redress for a wrong done either to another country or to the subject of another country, that it had peculiar institutions within itself. [Hear.]

Nations dealt with each other as aggregate communities—they knew nothing of the internal institutions of each other; if a wrong were done, redress must be obtained, and redress for a wrong done by the country did not enable it to give that redress that nation must either alter its laws or submit to the alternative which in such a case became necessary. [Cheers.] Now, although the first reply of the American government had been, as he thought, in reply to a demand for redress, for a wrong done by the country—although he considered that reply to be unsatisfactory—yet he had now the satisfaction of being able to inform the honorable and learned member for Bath and the house, that from the present government of the United States a communication had been received, containing a formal instruction given to the attorney general, and to the secretary of state, reference to this question, which contained doctrines just and consistent with the law of nations, and perfectly in accordance with the principles upon which her majesty's government had demanded the release and liberation of Mr. McLeod.

The paragraph which he should read from these instructions would, he believed, answer more than two of the questions which had been put to him by the honorable and learned member for Bath, for it would show that her majesty's government had avowed its responsibility for the attack made upon the Caroline, and that the American government regarded the affair as one to be dealt with as between the two governments, and totally unconnected with the question affecting McLeod. (Hear, hear.) This instruction which was dated the 16th of March in the present year, was from Mr. Webster, the secretary of state, to the United States' attorney general, and the United States, who was then about to proceed to New York on the business of the state. It recited in the first place the grounds upon which Mr. McLeod had been arrested, and then proceeded to state: "I have now to inform you, that Mr. Fox has addressed a message to the British government, on the 12th instant, at which, under the immediate instruction and direction of his government, he demands, formally, and officially, McLeod's immediate release, on the ground that the transaction on account of which he has been arrested is to be put upon the same basis as the case of the Caroline, and is to be decided by persons duly empowered, planned and executed by the British government, and that the British authorities to take any steps and to do any acts which might be necessary for the defence of her majesty's territories and for the protection of her majesty's subjects, and that consequently those subjects of her majesty who engaged in that transaction were performing an act of public duty, for which they cannot be personally and individually answerable to the laws and tribunals of any foreign country; and that her majesty's government has further directed Mr. Fox to make known to the government of the United States, that her majesty's government entirely approves of the course pursued by Mr. Fox, and the language adopted by him in the correspondence above mentioned." (Cheers.)

Mr. Webster then went on to say—"There is now, therefore, an authentic declaration on the part of the British government, that the attack on the Caroline was an act of public duty, done by military men under the order of their superiors, and is to be decided by such by the queen's government. The importance of this declaration is not to be doubted, and the president is of opinion that it calls upon him for the performance of a high duty. That an individual forming part of a public duty, and acting under the authority of his government, is to be held answerable as a private trespasser or malefactor, is a principle of public law, sanctioned by the usages of all civilized nations, and which the government of the U. States has no inclination to dispute. This had no connexion with the question whether in the attacks on the Caroline was an act of public duty, or not. The British government, in its statement, might think it a justifiable employment of force for the purpose of defending the British territory from unprovoked attack, or whether it was a most unjustifiable invasion, in time of peace, of the territory of the United States, as this government has regarded it. The British government, in its statement, might, while acknowledging that an individual may claim immunity from the consequences of acts done by him, by showing that he acted under national authority, this government is not to be understood as changing the opinions which it has heretofore expressed in regard to the real character of the attack on the Caroline, and the result in the destruction of the Caroline, which I reject it is not necessary for any purpose connected with the communication to discuss. All that is intended to be said at present is, that since the attack on the Caroline is avowed as a national act, which may justify reprisals or even general war, if the government of the United States in the judgment which it shall form of the transaction and of the injury should see fit to decide, yet it raises a question entirely public and political—a question between independent nations, and that individuals concerned in it cannot be arrested and tried before the ordinary tribunals as for the violation of municipal law. If the attack upon the Caroline were unjustifiable, as this government has asserted, the law which has been violated is the law of nations; and the redress which is to be sought is the redress, authorised in such cases by the provisions of that code. You are well aware that the president has no power to arrest the proceedings in the civil and criminal courts of New York. If this indictment were pending in one of the courts of the United States, I am directed to say, that the president upon the receipt of Mr. Fox's last communication would have immediately directed a writ prosequi to be entered. (Loud cheers.)

Now, nothing could be more favourable to the government of the United States, or more satisfactory to that of this country than this declaration of principles. (Cheers.) He thought he had now answered all the questions put to him by the honorable and learned member for Bath, except one—namely, whether the United States had made a demand upon the United Kingdom, in consequence of the injuries done to the United States at large, and not for the state of New York especially. Unquestionably the first demand had been made on that ground, and in the course of last session he (Lord Palmerston) had stated that fact as the ground for his opinion, that it was impossible the United States could turn round, and say it was a question between Great Britain and one state only. (Hear, hear.)

The constitution of the United States placed all these matters in the hands of the federal government, and the tenth section of the first article of their constitution provided that "no state shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, or grant any marks and reprisals. No state shall, without the consent of congress, pay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or with a foreign power, to engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay." (Hear, hear.) Therefore, it is perfectly true that this question could no more be said to be between Great Britain and the state of New York than (if America had felt herself aggrieved by Great Britain) it could be said that the question was between America and the county of Rutland. (Hear.)

But the honorable and learned member for Bath, in a former evening speaking, that her majesty's government ought, on the outset of this affair, to have sent out a special envoy to the authorities in the state of New York. Now he (Lord Palmerston) was of opinion that such a proceeding would have amounted to a nullification or denial on the part of Great Britain of the fundamental principles of the constitution of the United States, and that they would have treated it as an affront upon the federal government. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, it was not from any neglect on the part of her majesty's government that this course had been avoided, or that the responsibility is bound to rest on the constitution of the United States. (Hear.) He (Lord Palmerston) trusted he had now given answers to the questions put to him. He should be sorry to anticipate the course which the government of the United States might think proper to follow, in order to carry out the principles of international law, and he thought the best of the honorable and learned gentleman would be best answered if he (Lord Palmerston) abstained from entering further into the matter. (Cheers.)

In his remarks on the queen's speech, Sir Robert Peel said in relation to the state of affairs with the United States:

"I did see with regret the omission of any notice of our relations with the United States of America.—Not that I entirely blame that omission. I am sure it was not a casual—I am sure it was not an accidental one. Why I regret it is, that I fear you were making satisfactory to some quarters. Questions were asked of the noble lord the secretary for foreign affairs by the honorable and learned gentleman the member for Bath, to which the noble lord made a reply. The reply which the noble lord made might well have suggested other questions. When the noble lord said it down, the principle that we had no more to do with the municipal institutions of other countries, apart from the general law that a demand must be made on the public organs of the country, and that their own internal laws and regulations could not be appealed to for an answer to the question—when the noble lord read the despatch from

Mr. Webster, recognizing, as I understand it, the principle for which he contended, and which despatch was dated in March last—if the occasion had been an ordinary one, some questions must necessarily have been put. I understood the noble lord to deprecate the putting of these questions. I understood the noble lord to say that he thought it might be conducive to the great interests of peace, and more consistent with the national honor, that these questions should not be pressed; and drawing the inference from what I conceive to be the opinions of the noble lord. I for one, shall abstain from pressing questions, or asking any further explanation from him; but the noble lord will permit me to say, that the explanation which he gave was any thing but full and satisfactory.

The new ministry had been agreed upon and were to be sworn in on the 4th.

Sir Robert Peel, first lord of the treasury.
Right hon. H. Goulburn, chancellor of the exchequer.

Lord Varnell, president of the council.
Lord Lyndhurst, lord high chancellor.
Duke of Buckingham, privy seal.
Lord of Aberdeen, foreign secretary.
Lord Stanley, colonial secretary.
Sir James Graham, home secretary.
The duke of Wellington, in the cabinet, without office.

Lord Ellenborough, president of the board of control.

The earl of Haddington, first lord of the admiralty.
The earl of Ripon, president of the board of trade.

Sir F. Pollock, attorney general.
Sir W. Follett, solicitor general.
Lord Lowther, postmaster general.
Sir H. Hardinge, secretary at war.
Sir E. Knatchbull, paymaster general.
Earl de Gray, lord lieutenant of Ireland.

Lord John Russell, secretary for Ireland.
W. E. Gladstone, vice president of the board of trade.

The remaining appointments are not yet finally arranged, but there is no doubt that the following noblemen and gentlemen will hold office in the ministry: Lord Mahon, lord Liverpool, lord G. Somerset, earl of Chesterfield, lord F. Egerton, sir G. Clerk, sir C. C. St. John, &c.

The Times says—"It affords us much gratification to hear that his royal highness Prince Albert, in conjunction with her majesty, manifested an earnest desire to act in strict accordance with the spirit of the constitution, and to afford to Sir R. Peel every facility for the formation of his government. The reception which the right hon. baronet met with from her majesty was most gracious and kind. Her majesty expressed her determination to extend to Sir R. Peel's government her most implicit confidence and support, under the firm belief that no measures would be suggested, which she would not tend to maintain the dignity of the crown, to conserve the institutions of the country, and promote the happiness and prosperity of the people."

From a second edition of the Standard of Sept. 2.

The following appointments have been mentioned this evening, we believe upon good authority, though we cannot say the best; at all events there is little doubt that the lower noblemen and gentlemen may determine, the offices named have been tendered as follows:

Master general of the ordnance—Sir George Murray (Lord Beresford having declined).

Woods and forests—lord Granville Somerset.
Admiral of the navy—lord John Russell.

Admiralty lords—Sir George Cockburn (unless Sir George prefer the command in the Mediterranean) and Lord Ingestre.

Treasury secretary—Thomas Fremantle.
Governor of Canada—Sir Howard Douglas.

Sir John Denham has resigned the office of governor general of the American provinces, and asked permission to devolve the office on the officer next in command, to enable him to leave Canada early in the autumn. Lord Sydenham speaks in a tone of great satisfaction of the success of his mission in Canada.

The queen, in consideration of Lord S.'s services, has granted him the grand cross of the Bath.

Sir Howard Douglas is to be his successor as governor of Canada.

The dutiness of Bedford and Lady Normanby had relinquished their situations as ladies in waiting to the queen. This saves the new premier the necessity of having a lady-in-waiting, for the Lady Normanby was the person who stood before in his way.

There was much stagnation in business. The fine state of the weather, and better harvests, had rendered the corn markets dull; and the failures at Liverpool and Manchester paralyzed, in a degree, the cotton market.

STATE OF TRADE—MANUFACTURING DISTRICTS.—The statement of the week is the same that we have now so often repeated. The manufacturing interest is suffering severely through the depression of the times, which is at present shaking the industry of the nation from one end of the kingdom to the other. With one or two exceptions, the mills at Manchester are all working short time, and notice has been given at several of them that they will soon stop altogether.

(London Examiner of August 28.
FRANCE.)

The principal fact announced in the Paris journals is the actual discharge of that portion of the French army, which would have finished its term of service on the 31st of December next.

This measure was carried into effect in Paris and its environs on Monday last. It was reported that the soldiers whose term of service would expire on the 31st December next year, will be provisionally discharged the moment when the conscripts of the present year shall have passed through their first drills. Each of these contingents may be estimated at 60,000 men.

The Courier Francais stated that M. Humann the minister of finance, insists on the budget reduced to 330,000,000, and the fleet to 10 ships of the line.

The Toulonnais of the 29th ult. partly confirms this last assertion.

The weather continued to be brilliant and very warm in Paris.

Mr. St. John Welles, long and favorably known to his American countrymen as one of the leading bankers of Paris, died there on 30th August leaving behind him a good name and a large fortune, which did not always go together.

We find very little news of interest in the French papers.

The journals are still writing about the census. Resistance to the fiscal measures of M. Humann had commenced in the north of France. In Lille the people congregated in large numbers to oppose their execution. The troops arrested several of the rioters. In the south the census was proceeding without any assistance.

The report of the foreign ministry was received by telegraph in Paris on Sunday night. It afforded general satisfaction to the court organ.

The speech of Sir Robert Peel which arrived next morning, confirmed that feeling, and the small rise which took place in the funds, is a striking evidence of the confidence which the public are feeling, henceforth to subsist between the English and the French governments.

FRANCE. The policy of Abdel-Kader is represented as on the decline; great preparations were making for a fresh campaign against him. It was said he had fled from Algiers, and that he had prepared for his answer that the first condition of the treaty must be his being embarked for France.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid to August 24, state, that Espartero was ill, and would not close the session in person. On the 25th the minister for foreign affairs withdrew the bill for the proposition to Great Britain of the islands of Annabon and Fernando Po.

GERMANY.

Accounts from Hamburg state that Mecklenburg will shortly join the German, or rather Prussian commercial league; and that sooner or later the whole of the Hanseatic towns will be included in it.

AUSTRIA.

The Stutgard Gazette states, under date Vienna, that the finances of Austria were in a most embarrassed situation, and that all commercial enterprise was completely paralysed.

The Austriac Observer announces, that the insurrectionary movements at Braila had been suppressed by the Wallachian troops.

GREECE.

Accounts from Greece state that four of the ministers had tendered their resignations, finding they could do no more being thwarted by the king in every measure. Otho, however, has induced them to stay, promising to conform to their views.

TURKEY, EGYPT AND SYRIA.

The arrival in London of the Levant mail brings accounts from Constantinople and Egypt to the 7th ult. and from Smyrna to the 9th, with news from Candia and Syria.

It is much to be regretted that the pasha of Egypt was recovering in peace, and by his gold, a great share of the influence and advantage which he had lost by provoking war. The port had lowered its demand of tribute with Mehmet to thirty millions of piastres.—An Syria is represented to be in a state of complete anarchy.

CANDIA.

The "Courier Grec," Athens journal, of the 12th ult. contains a letter from the chief of the last insurrection in Candia, stating that having been betrayed by Rousses Bourdonn Bain, they had sought refuge on board the English vessels, that their intention was not to abandon the Candiot, but that the English had carried them to the Picurus, after having circulated the report of the failure of the insurrection along the coast, and thereby ruined their cause.

CANADA.

DEATH OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL. Lord Sydenham, governor general of the British provinces in North America, died at his residence in Kingston, Upper Canada, on the morning of the 9th instant, of the lock jaw, or facial palsy, which he had, a short time since, suffered from in his horse.

THE NEW GOVERNOR. Sir Howard Douglas is spoken of as the future governor general of Canada. The New York Commercial says that his accession to this office, if it takes place, will have no good effect upon the adjustment of the boundary question, Sir Howard being the present governor of Nova Scotia, and afterward of New Brunswick. Pending the arbitrament of the question before the king of Holland, Sir Howard was recalled to manage the question on the part of the English government—the conduct on the American side of the case having been questioned by Mr. Freble, of Maine, appointed upon that mission by General Jackson. Mr. Freble made a sad business of it, and Sir Douglas was so far successful as to prevent a reward in our favor.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT,

BY AND WITH THE ADVISE AND CONSENT OF THE SENATE.

Daniel M. Mitchell, Missouri, superintendent of Indian affairs, at St. Louis, Missouri.

Robert Stuart, of Michigan, agent for the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians.

Pierce M. Butler, of South Carolina, Indian agent for the Cherokee Indians.

Algeron Sydney Robertson, marshal for the eastern district of Louisiana.

Vincent Browne, navy agent for the port of Boston, vice Leonard Jarvis, removed.

LAND OFFICERS.

Levi W. Lenzler, receiver of public monies at Marshville, Alabama.

Hardy Holmes, receiver, Ouachita, Louisiana.

Henry O'Meara, receiver, do. do.

OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS.

William H. Ware, collector at St. Marks, Florida.

William P. Briggs, collector, Vermont.

Alexander Ferguson, naval officer, Philadelphia.

POSTMASTERS.

Benjamin W. Hale, at Newburyport, Mass.; Jacob Robbins, at Lowell, Mass.; Wm. C. Beardsley, at Auburn, N. Y.

THE DEPARTMENTS. Mr. FORWARD, secretary of the treasury, has entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office; and JAMES N. BAKER, (formerly comptroller, and nominated to the senate again, but that office, not acted on,) is acting as comptroller of the treasury. Vice Mr. Forward, late comptroller.

ROBERT M. LEA, esq., chief clerk of the department of war, has been appointed by the president acting secretary of war until the arrival of the hon. JOHN McLEAN.

Mr. SIMMS, chief clerk of the navy department, in like manner officiates in that department, and JOHN LAMBE, assistant postmaster general, in the post office department.

ATTORNEY GENERAL. The National Intelligencer of the 20th says:—"We have pleasure in stating that Mr. LEAGUE, having accepted the office of attorney general, vacated by the resignation of Mr. CRITTENDEN, has arrived in this city and entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office."

DIPLOMATIC. CHRISTOPHER HUGHES, The Baltimore American, of the 23d says:—"We are pleased to hear of the return to this country of our distinguished and estimable townsman, Mr. CHRISTOPHER HUGHES. Mr. H. is coming home on leave to visit his friends. He was expected in London early this month, and would take passage from Liverpool in the beginning of October."

Our readers will find this able diplomatist mentioned with no more than due encomium, in the speech of J. Q. ADAMS, esq., on the McLeod case, which is inserted in this number of the REGISTER.

Mr. CAMERLUNG, our late minister to Russia, arrived at New York, in the Great Western, on Tuesday evening, after an absence of two years in Europe.

MEXICAN COMMISSIONER. Mr. HENRY M. BRACKENRIDGE, appointed a commissioner under the treaty with Mexico, in the place of Mr. ROWAN, resigned, has arrived at Washington, and is ready upon the discharge of the duties of the commission.

DEPARTMENTS for the British minister were brought out by the Calcutta. A special message to Lord Sydenham also came in here.

RESIGNATION OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY. Messrs. Gales & Seaton: I deem it proper to offer a public explanation of some of the reasons which have induced my resignation on the 17th instant, of the office of secretary of the navy, and, for that purpose, ask a small space in the National Intelligencer.

At the cabinet meeting held on the 15th of August last, (the attorney general and the postmaster general being absent), the subject of an Exchange Bank, or institution, was brought forward by the president himself, and was fully considered. Into the particulars of what passed I do not propose now to enter.—It will be sufficient to say that it was then distinctly stated and understood that such an institution met the approbation of the president, and was deemed by him to be constitutional. It was then decided that if congress should deem it necessary to act upon the subject during the session) that such an institution should be adopted by that body, and that the members of his cabinet should aid in bringing about that result; and Messrs. WALKER and EWING were specially directed by the president to have a communication upon the subject with certain members of congress. The institution then spoken of was to be located in the District of Columbia; to be authorized to establish agencies in the states and territories with local banks, and to do business with the United States and foreign countries, and in bills of exchange drawn in one state or territory and payable in another state or territory; and the exercise of this power was not to depend on any assent, expressed or implied, of the states within which such agencies might be established.

As a consequence of what passed at this meeting, I saw such friends in congress as I deemed it proper to approach, and urged upon them the passage of a bill to establish such an institution, assuring them that I did not doubt it would receive the approbation of the president. The bill was passed, as the public know, and was met by the veto. Now, if the president, after the meeting of the 18th August, had changed his mind as to the constitutional power of congress, and had come to doubt or deny what he had admitted at this meeting, (which is the most favorable interpretation that can be put upon his conduct,) it was my opinion a plain duty on his part to have made known to the gentlemen concerned this change of sentiment—to have offered them an apology for the unpleasant situation in which they were placed by his agency—or, at least, to have softened, by a full explanation of his motives, his intended veto of a measure in promoting the success of which they, at his request, had rendered their assistance. But this the president did not do. Never, from the moment of my leaving his house on the 18th, did he open his lips to me on the subject. It was only from the newspapers, from rumors, and from hints, that I learned the measure and the constitutionality of the proposed institution, and had made the most solemn assertions that he would never approve a measure which I knew was suggested by himself, and which had been, at his own instance, introduced into congress. It was still in the president's power, by a proper statement, to have suggested his objections to the bill, but he was silent. His silence containing his objections to the bill, to have supplied these omissions, and in some degree at least to have repaired his former neglect; but when that paper came to be read, it was found that so far from saying frankly that he once favored and had been misled by the bill, he was silent, and that the measure was the fact) by subsequent reflection to adopt different views upon the subject, he treated the measure as one evidently inconsistent with his previously expressed opinions, and which it ought not to have been supposed for a moment he could approve.

Whether this conduct of the president is susceptible of more or less excuse, is a question not necessary now to inquire. I have not heard, nor do I imagine any ground for either. Whether an explanation of it has been offered to any one of the gentlemen concerned I know not, but none was at any time offered to me; and while I forbear to make the remarks, obvious and painful, which are which the transaction suggests, I declare the conviction that this conduct of the president, standing without known defence, excuse or explanation, constituted (if I do not other reasons had existed) ample ground for a withdrawal from his cabinet without delay.

It is clearly necessary to say that I have not supposed, and do not now suppose, that a difference merely between the president and his cabinet, either as to the constitutionality or the expediency of a bank, necessarily interposes any obstacles to a full and cordial co-operation between them in the general conduct of his administration; and therefore deeply as I regretted the veto of the first bill, I did not feel myself at liberty to retire on that account from my situation. But the facts attending the initiation and disapproval of the last bill made a case totally different from that—one it is believed without a parallel in the history of our cabinets: presenting, to say nothing more, a measure embraced and then repudiated—efforts prompted and then discontinued—services rendered and then disavowed from neglect. Such a case required, in my judgment, upon considerations, private and public, that the official relations subsisting between the president and myself should be immediately dissolved. GEO. E. BADGER.

Washington, Sept. 18, 1840.

RESIGNATION OF MR. SECRETARY BELL.

Washington, September 30, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: Doubts have been attempted to be cast upon the correctness of Mr. EWING's statement in relation to the part taken by the president in getting up the bill of coinage, by arguing that there was an impropriety in making it which ought to deprive it of credit. There are circumstances in this case distinguishing it from all others that I recollect of the kind. It grows out of a matter of official business, transacted between high public functionaries, one of public and general concern. The public and open conduct of one of these high functionaries is in direct opposition to what the other had, by his express direction and authority, affirmed as to his intentions and purposes. There can, I humbly submit, be no serious question in the mind as to the propriety of the president's action in calling upon the point of personal propriety when the injured party seeks to vindicate his honor by disclosing the truth. The obligations arising out of confidential relations, in private or public affairs, are founded in mutual trust. He that disregards his own confidential pledges and engagements cannot allege the obligation of the same to others. The same transaction, against the natural right of self-defence belonging to the injured party. For any thing that can ever be known to the contrary, it may have been the object of the original pledge or engagement to sacrifice those who trusted and were misled by it. For these reasons, I do not hesitate to furnish, for publication, the accompanying statement, which contains all the facts and circumstances within my knowledge, that occur to me as being material, connected with the subject of difference. I do this as an act of justice not only to Mr. EWING, who requested it, but to myself.

I avail myself of this occasion to say that I have, at no time, regarded a difference of opinion between the president and myself in relation to a bank, however important the subject, as sufficient of itself to justify a resignation of the office which I lately held in the executive administration of the government. Nor was it because the president thought proper to trifle with or mislead his cabinet, as there is but too much reason to believe he intended to do, in the affair of the last fiscal bank bill, that I resigned my place. There were other, and some of them pre-existing causes, for such a course, and the president was not the efficient of themselves; and which could not have been overlooked. But it was possible to explain or remove them, and therefore they were not promptly acted upon. The last act of the president, however, was conclusive of the true character of all the other occurrences, and was sufficient to have previously awakened curiosity or excited distrust.

I shall, at my leisure, state the reasons more at large which impelled me to the course I have thought proper to adopt, and at the same time furnish a narrative of all the causes, so far as they fell under my observation, and which have resulted in the separation of Mr. TYLER from the party which brought him into power, and the breaking up of the whig administration. I am, respectfully, your obedient servant, JOHN BELL.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton.

STATEMENT.

I called to see the president on official business on the morning, (Monday, 16th August), before the first veto message was sent in. I found him reading the message to the secretary of the treasury. He did me the honor to read the material passages to me.—Upon reading that part of it which treats of the superior importance and value of the business done by the late bank of the United States in furnishing exchanges between the different states and sections of the union, I was so strongly impressed with the idea that he meant to intimate that he would have no objection to my withdrawing to visit my family in making in exchanges, that I interrupted him in the reading, and asked if I was to understand, by what he had just read, that he was prepared to give his assent to a bank in the District of Columbia, with offices or agencies in the states, having the privilege, without their assent, to deal in exchanges between them, and in foreign bills. He promptly replied that he thought experience had shown the necessity of such a power in the government. I could not restrain the immediate expression of my gratification upon hearing this avowal. I said to the president at once, that what I had feared would lead to fatal divisions among our friends, I now regarded as rather fortunate than otherwise; that his veto of the bill then before him would lead to the adoption of a much better one. I also congratulated him upon the happy circumstance of the delay which had taken place in sending in his veto message. The heat and violence which might have been expected if the veto had been sent in immediately upon the passage of the bill, would now be avoided. Time had been given for cool reflection, and as the message did not exclude the idea of a bank in some form, no unpleasant consequences would be likely to follow. He expressed a great surprise that there should be so much excitement upon the subject; said that he had had his mind made up on the bill before him from the first, but had delayed his message that there should be time for the excitement to wear off; that message would be easy enough to pass, and he would answer it as soon as possible, but that it could be done in three days. The next day, having occasion to see the president again, he requested me to furnish him with such information as the war department afforded of the embarrassments attending the difficulties of the currency, and the several important points on the frontier, in Florida, &c. He the same time requested me to draw up a brief statement of my views upon the subject, showing the practical advantages and necessity of such a fiscal institution as he had thought of proposing. Such information I could readily collect from the heads of the principal disbursing bureaus of the department. I handed to him on the evening of the same day, knowing that time was of the utmost importance in the state in which the question then was. He received the statements I gave him with manifest interest, and alarmed me by remarking that he began to doubt whether he would give his assent, (as I understood him), to any bank.

The next day (Wednesday, 18th August) was the stated time for the weekly meeting of the cabinet with the president. Mr. WEBSTER, Mr. EWING, and myself, went at ten o'clock in the morning, and were seated at the table at the president's table. Mr. Messrs. BARKER, SERGEANT, and, I think, Mr. DAWSON, of Georgia. We waited until they retired, and the president made his appearance about three quarters of an hour afterwards. Mr. BARKER came in soon after the president joined us. Messrs. CARRINGTON and Alexander did not attend. The exercise which ensued was a long one—lasting two hours at least, according to my recollection. I cannot pretend to detail all that was said; neither can I undertake to give the language employed by the president upon every point, nor of the members of the cabinet. I can only state the substance of what was said upon those points which most attracted my attention.

The president commenced by stating that he had been waited upon that morning by a committee of members of congress, who desired to know his views upon the subject of a bank—such a one as he could sanction. He had given them no satisfaction upon the subject, but had informed them that he would first start all with the president, and then with the cabinet—through whom he thought it most regular that his views should be communicated. He asked the opinion of his cabinet upon the correctness of the ground he had taken; remarking at the same time, that the habit of expressing his views to members of congress upon matters of such importance, was owing to him to great embarrassment and much misrepresentation. That question being disposed of, the president adverted briefly, but without much connexion, to the relation in which he stood to the bank question, and his disposition to go as far as he could to comply with the wishes of his friends, and to the relation that existed between him and his cabinet, and how necessary it was that he should have their support. Would they stand by him? He much preferred that the whole subject should be postponed until the next session, but if it was necessary to do so now, he thought a plan might be devised which, with their co-operation, might be carried through. He wondered why the senate continued to postpone nothing upon his veto message, which was yet to be disposed of. He supposed it might be to hold it as a relic of his brief, and that some doubts whether it was proper that he should consider turning the subject until the senate had decided what they would do with the bill then before them. Some one present assured him that the postponement of the question pending in the senate was intended to give time for the president to make an immoderate debate. The president then gave the outline of his plan, or fiscal institution as he thought he could sanction.

It was to be in the District of Columbia, to have the privilege of issuing its own notes, receive moneys on deposit, and to deal in bills of exchange between the states and between the United States and foreign states. But he wished to have the opinion of his cabinet upon it. His own consistency and reputation would be looked to. He considered his cabinet his friends, who must stand by and defend whatever he did upon the subject. He appealed particularly to Mr. WEBSTER for his opinion upon the point of consistency; and whether there was not a clear distinction between the old Bank of the United States—a bank of discount and deposit—and the one he now thought of proposing; and whether the constitutional question was not different. He reminded us that, in all his former speeches and reports, he had taken the ground that congress had no constitutional power to charter a bank which had the power of local discount.

Mr. WEBSTER pointed out the distinction between the two plans in a manner which appeared to be satisfactory to him. The substance of what he said was, as I understood him, as follows: He had a decided preference for a bank upon the plan then proposed over either of those which had been previously spoken of. He reminded the president that he had expressed his preference for a bank which should be restricted in its dealings to bills of exchange, when certain gentlemen from the city of New York were present several weeks before. He then thought, as he did now, that it would answer all useful purposes. He thought the preference was, and it had great weight with him, that the plan did not contemplate the consent of the states as, in any way or at any time, necessary to its existence or efficiency. He thought the plan proposed at the commencement of the session, generally known as Mr. EWING's bill, as incongruous and objectionable on this ground. His general objection to the bill was, that it seemed to prefer that, whatever power this government asserted, or was authorised to assert, should be exercised independently of state authority, and of the interference of the states. He thought there could be no doubt of the constitutional power to charter such a bank. He understood, however, that the president's own mode of thinking upon that subject, if he understood them. Certainly there was a clear distinction between such a bank and the late Bank of the United States. The one now proposed was to be limited in its operations to such objects as were mentioned in the general provisions of the constitution, and the exercise of the power was in the execution of others. The privilege of issuing its own notes, of dealing in exchanges, and of receiving moneys on deposit, all appeared to have immediate reference to or connexion with the power given in the constitution over commerce between the states, over the currency, and the necessary fiscal operations of the government in the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue. These were all subjects of national, and not local or state concern. The distinction between this plan and the late Bank of the United States, in this privilege enjoyed by the old bank, of dealing in local bills, and of discounting notes having no circulation, as it might be, but between the different streets or commercial points of the same city, had no connexion with the trade or commerce between the states and remote sections of the union, and with the transfer of the public money from one point to another; and the exercise of the necessary connexion with any of the great national objects for which the bank was chartered; nor could it be claimed as an incident to any of the powers given to congress by the constitution. The privilege, he apprehended, was conferred upon the late bank from a mistaken view of the nature of the power, and could not be made profitable; and it was therefore considered as a necessary incident to an institution which was itself but the offspring of an incidental power. Experience, he thought, had shown clearly that such a privilege was no longer important or necessary. By confining the discounting privilege of the proposed bank to bills of exchange between this country and foreign states, and between the several states of the union, this objection would not lie against it.

The president expressed his regret that he had not used the words "bank of discount and deposit" in his late message, and that the distinction he now made might be clearly inferred from that message, and he could not then be charged with inconsistency. Mr. BARKER said he thought nothing would have been gained by the use of the terms "bank of discount and deposit" in his message; for, as to the charge of inconsistency, he thought it would be equally applicable against him for party effect, if he sanctioned the bill then proposed by him, inasmuch as dealing in or buying bills of exchange would be discounting, and to that extent make it a bank of discount.

When all the material points appeared to be disposed of, and the members of the cabinet present had expressed their decided approbation of the plan the president had suggested, he said that, after all, he would not sanction a bank in the form just agreed upon, if he supposed that it would be made the ground-work or basis of a bank with all the powers of the late bank of the United States. He never would give his sanction to the power of local discount. He feared that, at the next or succeeding sessions of congress, the whigs would be bringing forward amendments engraving this power upon any charter he might now approve; and he appealed to his cabinet to know if they would stand by him, and use their influence in preventing any such movements while his administration lasted. Mr. WEBSTER and others gave him all proper assurances upon this point.

The president thought a capital of fifteen millions of dollars would be sufficient.

A name, he said, was important. What should it be? Fiscal Institute would do. It was objected to, and the name of fiscal bank preferred by a number of the cabinet. He replied that there was a great deal in name, and he did not wish the word bank to appear in the bill.

The president then inquired if he was understood. He said there must be no misunderstanding of what he proposed to do. Addressing himself to Mr. EWING, he asked him if he thought he understood his views fully. Mr. EWING undertook to recapitulate. He understood the president to have no objection to a bank in the District of Columbia, with offices of discount and deposit in the states, with their assent. The president interrupted him abruptly, by saying he did not understand him at all; he was not willing to sanction any such bank. I understood his objection to be to the power of local discount. I supposed Mr. EWING intended to say that he understood the president had no constitutional objection to such a bank. The president, however, without explaining, went on to say, that he now understood the president to have no objection to a bank in the District of Columbia, with the power to issue its own notes, receive moneys on deposit, with offices or agencies in the states having the privilege, without their assent, of dealing in bills of exchange drawn in one state or territory and made payable in another state or territory of the union, and in bills between the United States and foreign states or nations.

The president said he was then understood. He requested Mr. WEBSTER to immediately go to communicate with the gentlemen who had waited upon him that morning, and to let them know the conclusions to which he had come. He also requested Mr. EWING to aid in getting the subject properly before congress. He requested that they would take care not to commit him by what they said, and that members of congress to any intention to dictate to congress. They might express their confidence and belief that such a bill as had just been agreed upon would receive his sanction; but it should be as matter of inference from his veto message and his general views. He thought he might request some friend of his own upon whom he could rely. Mr. SERGEANT was named, and he expressed himself satisfied that he should have charge of it. He also expressed a wish to see the bill before it was presented to the house, if it could be so managed.

I then said, addressing myself to Messrs. WEBSTER and EWING, that no time was to be lost in communicating the substance of the president's views to the danger that Mr. EWING's bill would be taken up and reported to the senate immediately after the bill sent back to the senate with the president's objections was disposed of.

As the members of the cabinet rose to depart, or just before the president retired Messrs. WEBSTER and EWING, as they had turned their attention more particularly to the subject, to furnish him with written arguments upon the points they had been discussing. He wanted them to fortify his own opinion, and to lay up for future reference. JOHN BELL.
Washington, Sept. 20, 1841.

MR. WEBSTER'S LETTER. In compliance to a written request of T. Allen, editor of the Madisonian, Mr. WEBSTER, on the 22d instant, furnished him with a copy of the following note, which he addressed on the 25th August, to the two senators from Massachusetts.

August 25th, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: As you spoke last evening of the general policy of the whigs, under the present position of affairs, relative to the bank bill, I am willing to place you in full possession of my opinion on that subject.

It is not necessary to go further back, into the history of the past, than the introduction of the present measure into the house of representatives.

That introduction took place, within two or three days, after the president's disapproval of the former select men to a council to make laws for their own government.

Three forts are to be established within the district, to preserve peace among them, and to protect them from foreign invasion. Probably as much of the purchase as falls within the state of Iowa will be sold to be settled by the whites; but that portion of it which lies north of the state, will be occupied as above described.

The governor has discovered bituminous coal and copper on the St. Peters, to which steamboats can ascend, specimens of which are now at Prairie du Chien.

This arrangement, (adds the Galena Gazette), will throw a large body of Indians upon our immediate frontier; but the effort that will be made to civilize them, is deemed a sufficient guarantee for their peaceable deportment. [Balt. American.]

BEACON LIGHT. A notification from the department of state says, an ordinance has been published by the administration of the marine of Sweden, notifying mariners that the light house at Winga, at the entrance of Gottenburg, and the beacon fires leading up to the port, will be lighted up for the first time on the first of next November; that the Winga light will burn the whole year round; but the beacon fires which are situated on Buskaret and Botto will burn only during the dark season: that is, from the 15th of August to the 15th of April in each and every year.

SUB-TREASURY ROBBED. By a hand bill signed E. S. Prescott, receiver, dated last office, Chicago, September 13, 1841, we learn that the office of the receiver of public moneys in Chicago was entered on Saturday or Sunday night the 11th or 12th instant, the sub-treasury safe opened by false keys, and the following amounts stolen, viz: $16,825 in gold, $400 in silver, $400 in treasury notes, $100 in military land scrip, and one $30 note, Bank of North Adams, Massachusetts. The receiver offers a reward of $1,000 for the recovery of the money, and $500 for the arrest of the robber. [Clev. Herald.]

EXPEDITION FOR LIBERIA. The next expedition for Liberia will sail from Norfolk, Virginia, on or near the 10th of October next. This will probably be the last expedition sent out this year.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL SCOTT was at Lewistown last week, and superintended the mounting of the cannon on Fort Niagara. He reached the city of New York on Tuesday.

COL. CHURCHILL, inspector-general U. S. army, is on his way from Florida on a visit to his family at Burlington, Vt.

CAPT. BREWSTER, U. S. A. returned from Europe in the Great Western, with improved health.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Colonel.
1 George Bomford, in charge of department, Washington.

Lieutenant Colonel.
1 George Talcott, inspector of armories, arsenals and depots; station, Washington, D. C.

Major.
1 H. K. Craig, commanding Allegheny arsenal, at present in temporary command of armory at Harper's Ferry.

1 R. L. Baker, commanding Watervliet arsenal.
3 Mann Page Lomax, do. Watervliet do.
4 James W. Ripley, do. Kennebec do. and inspector of ordnance at present in temporary command of armory at Springfield, Mass.

Captains.
1 John Symington, commanding Washington arsenal.
2 William H. Bell, do. St. Louis do.
3 Edward Harding, do. Augusta, Ga. do.
4 Alfred Morsehead, Washington, assistant to chief of the department.

5 Benjamin Huger, com'dg Fort Monroe arsenal.
6 J. A. J. Bradford, Pilatka, Florida.
7 George D. Ramsay, commanding Frankford, Pa. arsenal.

8 Wm. Mayminder, commanding Pikeville, Md. arsenal, and assistant inspector of ordnance.
9 Wm. A. Thornton, commanding N. York depot.

10 John Williamson, com'dg Appalachicola arsenal.

First Lieutenants.
1 R. H. K. White, com'dg Baton Rouge arsenal.
2 George H. Talcott, Augusta, Ga. arsenal.
3 John F. Lee, com'dg arsenal, Little Rock, Ark.
4 James M. Morgan, Allegheny arsenal.

5 L. A. W. Walbach, Fayetteville, N. C. arsenal.

6 Peter V. Hagler, Fort Monroe do.

Second Lieutenants.

1 R. A. Wainwright, Watervliet arsenal, N. Y.

2 Alex. B. Dyer, under orders to Washington.

3 A. H. Dearborn, West Point foundry, Cold Springs, New York.

4 F. D. Callender, Tampa Bay depot.

5 T. L. Ringgold, Washington arsenal.

6 John P. Kingsbury, Watervliet arsenal.

Brevet Second Lieutenants.

1 C. M. Dearborn, St. Louis arsenal.

2 Smith Stansbury, Fort Monroe arsenal.

3 Josiah Gough, Watervliet arsenal.

4 T. J. Rodman, Allegheny arsenal.

Medical Staff. Assistant surgeon S. R. Arnold, ordered to Fort Brady, to relieve assistant surgeon M. Mills, who will proceed to Madison barracks. Assistant surgeon J. H. Bailey, to temporary duty in New York harbor.

Topographical Engineers. Lieut. Seamon, military academy.

1st artillery. Lieut. McDowell, to military academy.

2d artillery. Lieut. L. H. Allen, to military academy.

3d artillery. Major J. Erving, temporarily assigned as superintendent of the recruiting service at N. York.

Lieut. J. A. Thomas, relieved from duty at the military academy, having been appointed A. D. C. to Brig. Gen. Wm. L. Lewis, W. Illinois and S. Van Vleet, to duty at the military academy.

4th artillery. Lieut. F. N. Clarke, to military academy.

1st infantry. Capt. W. Jonett, relieved from command of depot at Newport, Ky. on the 1st Oct.

2d infantry. Capt. J. B. Kingsbury, Lieut. E. R. Lett, to command depot at New York harbor.

3d infantry. Lieut. Col. Vose, relieved as superintendent of the recruiting service at New York, on the 1st Sept. and ordered to join his regiment on the 1st Nov.

Capt. N. C. Macrae to command of depot at Newport, Ky. on the 1st Oct.

7th infantry. Lieut. F. B. Arden, relieved from duty at the military academy.

Lieut. P. D. Geisse, to temporary duty in New York harbor.

8th infantry. Capt. G. Wright, to temporary duty in New York harbor. [Army & Navy Chronicle.]

NORTHERN FRONTIER. A correspondent of the N. York Commercial Advertiser writes from Rome, N. Y. 18th Sept. "Our peaceful and quiet village was to-day animated and excited too, by the arrival of a company of troops under the command of Lieut. Brookes of the 2d regt. artillery. They are stationed at the United States arsenal, in our village. In the present feverish state of the public mind and the excitements on the frontier, such a measure of precaution is well timed. There is in the arsenal here a large quantity of arms, ammunition and cannon, that would be of very great use to the "patriots" could they be obtained. There have been no troops stationed here for some time past—and danger was to be apprehended—though the commanding officer at the arsenal, capt. Abel, a very vigilant and faithful officer, would have given a good account of himself, if any attempt had been made here.

17—Brigadier General Wool arrived this morning, and gave directions to the officer in command of the troops, and returned in the down train of cars. The guard at Whitesburg, patrolling the streets every night, and the arrival of these troops, are producing much excitement in the public mind. Our court is now in session at Whitesboro, and people from all parts of the county being present, inquiries are making as to all this array; and I think that an impression is deepening in the public mind that it is high time to take a decided stand against these movements of the patriots and Canadian refugees, which are likely to lead to the most alarming results.

The article in the Evening Journal in relation to the miscreant Lett has astonished every body. That the leading paper at Albany should throw in a palladium for the outrages committed by this fellow is truly a matter of wonder; and if passing strange that he has thus long been permitted to roam at large, when it is confidently believed that a suitable reward would, months ago, have caused his arrest.

Extract of a letter from an officer in Florida. "In my last hurried note to you I mentioned having witnessed a scene here a few days before, which, in my humble judgment, put the famed story of Damon and Pythias in the shade. I will now give you some of the particulars.

A party of Indians was recently discovered by some of our troops, who succeeded in capturing three of their warriors; the rest of the party, consisting of three men, and women and children, numbering in all about twenty. The captives were brought to this place, where they were interrogated by the colonel, (Colonel WORTH), during which it was discovered that two of them had been concerned in killing and burning a mail rider some time in March last. They were told that, for this cruel act of theirs, they would be hung in fifteen days, unless within that time the rest of their people should come in. They were then placed in chains, and were permitted to send out the third man of their party, with a talk, to bring in the rest of their people, while they were committed to the guard. The man thus sent out returned in due season, bringing with him a warrior by the name of Holate Ficoxo, and some women and children, among whom were the mother and sister of one of the prisoners, whose name is Talof Hadjo. The scene which followed may be dramatized thus:

Scene, an open court in front of the commanding officer's quarters—Indians are discovered seated under the trees, among them Holate Ficoxo, (Pythias), on the grass, in the Indian posture—Talof Hadjo, (Damon), in chains, on a bench, his head resting against the trunk of a tree, looking towards the heavens, with a countenance indicative of resignation—his mother and sister by his side, on the grass at his feet, the mother weeping at the fate which awaits her son—the colonel and other officers are discovered at a distance from the group of Indians.

Colonel to Holate Ficoxo.—Where are the rest of the people sent for?

Holate.—They have separated and cannot be found. Your troops have scattered them, and they have taken different paths.

Colonel.—Know you not that, unless they are brought in, these men (pointing to the prisoners) will be hung? (A pause. The Indians disconsolate, but apparently resolved.) I see, you are not, my people, will you bring them in, in time to save their lives?

Holate.—They have gone off, and I know not where to look for them. Like the frightened deer, they have fled at the presence of your troops.

Colonel.—Indian son and Indian. If they are not here in ten days, these men will surely die.

Holate.—The tract of the Indian is covered; his path is hidden; and cannot be found in ten suns.

Colonel to Talof.—Have you a wife?

Talof.—My wife and child are with the people. I wish them here, that I may take leave of them before.

Colonel.—Do you love your wife and child?

Talof.—They are fond of its kind; and I love my own blood.

Colonel.—Could you find the people that are out of Holate?—They are scattered, and may not be found.

Colonel.—Do you desire your freedom?

Talof.—I see the people going to and fro, and wish to be with him. I am tired of my chains.

Colonel.—If I release you, will you bring in the people within the time fixed?

Talof.—You will not let me go. Yet I would try.

Colonel.—If Holate Ficoxo will consent to take your chains and be hung in your place if you should not return, you may go. (A long pause. Talof continues throughout the scene with his eyes fixed on the heavens—his mother and sister now cast imploring looks towards Holate, who, during the last few questions, had struggled to maintain his composure, evincing, by the heaving of his breast and his gaspings, as though the rope were already about his neck, that he is ill at ease—all eyes are turned towards him—he recovers, and, with the utmost composure and firmness, replies.)

Holate.—I have no wife, or child, or mother. It is more fit that he should live than I. I consent to take his chains, and abide his fate. Let him go.

Colonel.—Be it so. But do not deceive yourselves. So sure as Talof Hadjo brings not in the people within ten days Holate dies the death of a dog. With the utmost solemnity the two Indians were then marched to the armory, where the chains were transferred, and in fifteen minutes after Talof was on his journey. Yesterday a messenger arrived bringing intelligence that Talof Hadjo was on his way in, with his people, and might be expected here to-morrow.

There is more truth than poetry in the foregoing. And what makes it more remarkable, when compared with the story of Damon and Pythias, is that in the one case a strong and devoted friendship existed between the parties, while in the other there appears no such feeling, but the sacrifice offered by Holate arose from a purely national and distinguished motive.

A sacrifice to save the life of one whom he considered of more consequence than himself. Pythias placed the utmost faith in the promise of his friend to return at the appointed time. The noble Holate had no such assurance given him. On the contrary, he well knew it was nearly probable that Talof would return with his people in time to save his life."

[Int. Int.]

THE NAVY.

MARINE CORPS. Matthew R. Kintzing, of Pennsylvania, to be a second lieutenant, from 8th September, 1841.

The following appointments were confirmed at a late hour on the last night of the session.

To be pursers from the 13th September, 1841.

1. Andrew D. Crosby, of Louisiana.
2. James S. Flattley, of Pennsylvania.
3. Lewis Warrington, jr., of the District of Columbia.
4. Frederick Stevens, of South Carolina.
5. Robert S. Moore, of North Carolina.
6. George H. White, of Pennsylvania.
7. Henry M. Heiskell, of Pennsylvania.
8. W. William A. Cerrillon, of Alabama.
9. Littleton Tazewell Walker, of Virginia.

[Army & Navy Chronicle.]

The Norfolk Herald of the 18th September, says, "The U. States frigate MACEDONIAN, Commodore Wilkinson, and sloop of war WARREN, commander Jameson, came up this forenoon from Hampton Roads to the anchorage abreast of the naval hospital, where they have anchored. As the Macedonian approached the Pennsylvania, Com. Shubrick's flag ship, the latter fired a salute, and ran up the red in place of the blue pendant, Commodore Wilkinson being the senior. The Macedonian then passed the Pennsylvania, and gracefully rounding to under her stern, returned the Pennsylvania's salute. At a later hour, the Macedonian ran up the French ensign to the fore, and fired a salute, which was promptly returned by the French admiral with the American ensign at the fore.

There are now seven ships of war anchored in a line extending about a mile down the river from the Hospital point, and they present quite a formidable appearance, such indeed, as was never before seen in our harbor.

First rides the French corvette Bison, Captain Aguilleteau, of 20 guns; 2d, the U. States corvette Cyane, Commander Stribling, of 20 guns; 3d, the Macedonian, Commodore Wilkinson, a warm 44; 4th, the majestic Pennsylvania, Com. Shubrick, a nammoth three decker of 130 guns; 5th, the U. S. sloop of war Warren, Commander Jameson, 20 guns; 6th, the French frigate Armide, Captain Louvet, flag ship of Admiral Armand, of 36 guns; 7th and lastly, the French corvette L'Aurier, Captain Garnier, of 16 guns. Total 276.

Our harbor below the town exhibits a rare and picturesque appearance from Town Point; the men of war with their towering masts fill the foreground, tapering off with more than a hundred smaller craft beyond them (windbound), anchored on either side of the channel, as low as the bite of Cranesy Island, filling a space of three miles in extent.

The French frigate LA BELLE POULE, under the command of the Prince de Joinville, with the French brig of war LA CASSARD, arrived at New York on the 19th inst. in 4 days from Halifax.

OUR NAVY. The favorable mention of our navy, its officers and men, by Lady Blessington, will be heard with pride and pleasure by many who have not read her "Idler in Italy."

"An American fleet has arrived in the bay, [of Naples], and we were yesterday on board to see the ship of the commodore, the Crichton. Nothing could exceed the good order and cleanliness of the vessel, nor the elegance of the cabin of the commodore. The sailors are fine-looking men, and the commodore and his officers are exceedingly gentlemanly, well-informed and intelligent. We were received with great politeness and refreshments were served in the cabin, and the band, a very good one, played several national airs. It was very gratifying to witness the rapid march of intellect evinced by all that we beheld on board the American ship, and precluded and unjust, indeed, must those be who, after seeing its details and ensemble, could deny that our transatlantic brethren have made a wonderful progress as a nation. A Mr. Livingston, a passenger in the commodore's ship, is an excellent specimen of an American, being well-bred and thoroughly well-informed."

This candid, liberal writer says, in another place: "Commodore Crichton and four or five of his officers dined with us yesterday; they are sensible and agreeable men. One, a Captain Deacon, has his son on board, a very fine and interesting child, eight or ten years of age. It was pleasant to see the kindness and affection displayed towards this boy by the messmates of his father. It was almost feminine. But there is, I think, a peculiar benevolence in the breasts of sailors, that disposes them to protect the less strong. There is a great gravity in these American seamen, yet it is wholly distinct from dullness, and seems to be the result of reflection. It sits well on them—better, in my opinion, than gaiety would.

It was gratifying to me to hear the regret expressed by the Americans for Byron. He would have been pleased at this homage, rendered to him by the individuals of a nation he respected; for he was kindly sensible to kindness, and had experienced too little of it from his compatriots not to appreciate it from others."

The United States ships BOSTON, LOXO and CONSTELLATION, Kearney, for China, were in Saldanha bay, C. G. H. 29th July.

The United States sloop of war DECATUR arrived at Montevideo previous to the 27th July, in 14 days from Rio Janeiro.

STATES OF THE UNION.

BUSINESS AND PRODUCTS OF THE UPPER LAKE COUNTRY.

A gentleman who has for a great number of years been largely engaged in the forwarding business on the canal and lakes, had occasion a short time since to go to Chicago. On the steamboat he fell in with a Chicago man, who appeared by no means inclined to disparage the business and prospects of his town.—Among other things, he said that between the close of navigating the season, and its opening next spring, no less than three hundred thousand bushels of wheat would be received and stored at Chicago alone. This seemed so incredible that it was received with a strong expression of disbelief, and the conversation at last ended in the making a bet of $500 that the Chicago man's statement would not prove true. On arriving at that port, our forwarding friend narrated the matter to his agents and correspondents there; who assured him that, according to their best information, the amount of wheat in store at Chicago thousand bushels; and the upshot of the matter was, he backed straight out of his bet.

We learn that wheat is brought into Chicago from a distance of 150 miles, and the procession of teams as they come in, to an eastern man, is a very novel and interesting sight. The freight is carried in large wagons, called "Prairie schooners." Each caravan—for, from the various sections of country, they go in numbers sufficiently large to entitle them to that appellation—has its captain.

They camp out nights, and each man carries food for himself and team, so that a fortnight's journey is made at little or no expense, save that of time. On arriving at the suburbs of the town, the captain goes in with a sample of his grain. A bargain is made for the whole brought by the caravan, and the next day, with the money in his pockets, or in goods for his family, each countryman is wending his way homeward.

At Michigan city and other principal towns on Lake Michigan, the same scene is daily exhibited. An immense amount of surplus produce is already accumulated at ports on that lake, but a bushel, comparatively, will reach the eastern market this season. The price of flour there will be ruled by the supply furnished by the eastern states and Ohio. Are not the eastern people deeply interested in so improving the harbors of Lake Michigan, that the products of the upper lake country shall not, as now, be necessarily kept back from market. [Buffalo Com. Adl.

MAINE.

THE GENERAL ELECTION. We have not yet received full returns—Fairfield (V. B.) has in 351 towns 45,673 and Kent (W.) 33,725 votes—scattering 1,800 to 2,000. The legislature will have a large Van Buren majority.

AMENDMENTS OF THE CONSTITUTION. Several amendments to the constitution were submitted to the choice of the people of the state at the late election, and all of them were adopted. The eastern people deeply interested in so improving the harbors of Lake Michigan, that the products of the upper lake country shall not, as now, be necessarily kept back from market. [Buffalo Com. Adl.

CONNECTICUT.

"TYLER CONVENTION." The Hartford Patriot says it is proposed to hold a mass convention in Connecticut, composed of the friends and supporters of John Tyler and his administration, some time in the month of October or November.

HISTORY. No. 133 of Harper's Family Library, just published, is a history of Connecticut from its settlement to the present time, by Theodore Dwight, jr.

NEW YORK.

WHIG STATE CONVENTION. To the Whig Editors of the State of New York. An eventual crisis has occurred in our political affairs. The individual elected to the second office in the general government, by the votes of the democratic whig party, and by an inscrutable dispensation of Providence called to fill the place for which the lamented HARRISON was designated, is declared by the representatives in congress of our party, to have forfeited their confidence, and to have "voluntarily separated himself from those by whose exertions and suffrages he was elevated to that office through which he has reached his present exalted station." He is represented to have withdrawn his confidence from his real friends, and to have been from the members of the cabinet selected by his predecessor, approved by the unanimous voice of the democratic whigs of the union, and invited by him to continue his chosen counselors; and to have trusted and been deceived by the false promises of a man distinguished by a faithless opposition to every measure in which we have so long contended, and which have received his own sanction.

We are informed from the same source that he has capriciously exercised that last remnant of kingly power left in our constitution, of public opinion against the undoubted expressions of public opinion through the legislative body, and in violation of his own previous assurances. And we now learn that what may be deemed the first step of conciliation towards his and our political antagonists has been taken by the appointment to one of the most important posts in the treasury department, of a decided adherent to Mr. Van Buren, and who, for that cause only, had but been removed from the same post.

Although much has been accomplished by our indefatigable, zealous and patriotic members of congress, by the passage of laws rendered equally by the necessities and the will of the country, and an indication has thus been given, of what an administration of the government conducted upon whig principles may accomplish, yet it is not to be disguised, that still, under the present administration, we cannot expect that cordial cooperation between the legislative and executive departments, which is so essential to the successful discharge of the duties devolving upon them.

In this emergency, the spirit of our institutions provides a means of relief, by an appeal to the public sentiment. The great principle of our government was composed of so large a majority of the citizens of the union at the last contest, has important and patriotic objects yet to accomplish. Its principles are identical with those of the fathers of the republic, and are, as we religiously believe, essential to the continuance of the free government, to the happiness and prosperity of the people. Temporary appointments and transient misfortune can neither subvert nor dispirit such a party. But to enable it to rally upon its principles, there must be unity of object and concert of action. These can be secured only by a full, free and dispassionate interchange of opinion among its members, and the determination, unanimously and unitedly to carry out and fully sustain the will of the party. Representatives fresh from the people, will be able to communicate and concentrate public opinion, and thus furnish the landmarks and guides for future action.

For this purpose, the central executive state committee appointed by the last whig state convention, with the advice of many distinguished political friends, invite the several counties of this state to appoint as many delegates as they are entitled to members in the house of assembly, to represent them in a STATE CONVENTION to be held at Syracuse on Wednesday, the 6th day of October next, at 10 o'clock A. M. to deliberate on the condition of our public affairs, and to adopt such measures as may be deemed expedient to maintain the integrity of the whig party—to give success to its principles and objects—and to prevent a return to power of those from whom the whole country, and this state in particular, have suffered so much and so long.

LEWIS BENEDICT,
JOHN TOWNSEND,
SAMUEL STEVENS,
J. L. SCHOOLCRAFT,
JAMES HUNTER,
ROBERT THOMPSON,
SANDFORD COBB.

State Central Committee.

Albany, September 17, 1841.

GOVERNOR SEWARD has offered a reward of $250 for information which will result in the conviction of any individual engaged in stealing the two field pieces from Cayuga county, or the gunpowder from Lockport.

NEW YORK AND ERIE RAIL ROAD. We learn from the New York Commercial Advertiser, that there are at this time about three thousand men at work on the line of the New York and Erie rail road. The disbursements of the company for labor are now be-

The senator has indulged his fancy in regard to a certain cabal, which he says it is alleged by rumor (an authority he seems prone to quote of late) has been formed for the wicked purpose of breaking up the regular cabinet and dissolving the whig party. Though the senator is pleased to acquit me of being a member of this supposed cabal, I shall show myself inferior, from this circumstance, to the attitude with which I have been forward to defend the motives and conduct of the president, that I was at least a member of his privy council! I thank God, Mr. President, that in his gracious goodness he has been pleased to give me a heart to repel injustice and to defend the innocent, without being laid under any special engagement, as a privy councillor or otherwise, to do justice to my fellow-man; and if there be any gentleman who cannot find in the consciousness of his own bosom a satisfactory explanation of so natural an impulse, I, for one, envy him neither his temperament nor his philosophy. If Mr. Tyler, instead of being a distinguished citizen of my own state, and filling, at this moment, the station of chief magistracy, responsibility, which entitles him to a candid interpretation of his official acts at the hands of all his countrymen, had been a total stranger, unknown to me in the relations of private or political friendship, I should yet have felt myself irresistibly impelled by the common sympathies of humanity to assist him in his defence to the best of my power. And now I have seen him this day so powerfully assailed for an act, as I verily believe, of conscientious devotion to the constitution of his country and the sacred obligation of his high trust.

The honorable senator complains that, in my reply to him, I unjustly represented him as censuring and arraigning the conduct of the chief magistrate. He asks if he used any such language as perfidy. I did not say that he used the word perfidy, but that his allegations resolved themselves substantially into the charge of perfidy against the president. And is not this true? I appeal to those who heard him, if I would appeal to the honorable senator himself, in his own remarks, if two-thirds of his speech did not consist of imputations, more or less direct, on the president, for violation of his faith, express or implied, to his party and the country? Did he not begin his speech with reading and dwelling upon a passage in the inaugural address of the president, which he contended amounted to an engagement on the part of the nation to sign such a bill as had been presented to him? If so, what is his veto message, now before us, but a violation of that engagement, or, in other words, a breach of faith, an act of perfidy to the nation? Again, did not the honorable senator say, if the course which the president had taken in the matter had been anticipated, either by the Harrisburg convention or by the people at the polls, he would not have received an individual vote in the former or a single electoral vote from the latter? Does not this imply a disingenuous suppression, something like a fraudulent concealment, of the vote of the president, but, which, if true, would, under the circumstances, have been grossly inconsistent with the principles of good faith? How little foundation there is for any such imputation, I flatter myself I must have fully demonstrated to the satisfaction of the senate in the remarks I had the honor to make in my reply to the first speech of the senator from Kentucky.

The honorable senator also insisted with great earnestness, that the veto of this bill, under the circumstances in which the president stood, was so exceptionally a proceeding that, rather than to have resorted to it, it would have been better for him to have declined the responsibility of his high station, by permitting the change which he had been asked to make on the measure, or otherwise to have resigned his office and left the government without an elective head! Could any thing convey a stronger or more pointed condemnation of the president's conduct than to hold up either or both of these extreme and inadmissible alternatives, as preferable to the course he actually adopted. But the senator alleges that he did not say the president ought to have resigned. Did he not, however, argue most zealously to show that consistency with the president's own conduct and principles on a former occasion, when he held a seat in the senate, would require him to resign, if he had not already resigned on the present? What was this but to urge the senator's resignation by the strongest appeal, personal to himself, and derived from his own example? Is it not mere special pleading, then, for the senator now to allege that he did not say the president ought to have resigned? When the whole tenor of the senator's speech was characterized by such pointed and significant reprobations of the president's conduct, could the lavish and ostentatious professions of personal regard and respect, to which the senator now appeals as evidence of the spirit of his speech, be viewed in any other light than as a bitter mockery?

The honorable senator still insists that the question of a bank was an issue solemnly decided in the presidential election. I thought I had shown, by irrefragable proofs from the record, when I first addressed the senate, that this issue was not made in the presidential election, and that the candidates of the president and of the senate, who were elected, had no declared opinions of the candidates selected both for the presidency and the vice presidency, could not have been intended to have been made. But the honorable senator tells me this is all a sheer delusion on my part, and arises from the idea he is pleased to say is the common notion of us Virginians, that the sentiment prevailing in Virginia as the sentiment of the whole union.

[MR. CLAY. I spoke of some peculiar opinions existing and in operation among the people of Virginia.]

The peculiar opinions of the people of Virginia, (continued Mr. Rives), I had hoped would never be considered a reproach by any native son of Virginia; and the taunt, coming from the honorable senator from Kentucky, himself a native son of our ancient commonwealth, of the most modest character, and with all possible respect for the honorable senator, I will tell him, if he will allow me, what is an error that he himself seems very prone to fall into. It is, to think that his own personal opinions must, of necessity, be the opinions of the country; and because the senator is a native son of the state, he is, therefore, and he says, vital issue in his own mind, he concludes that it ought to have been, and was, the prominent and vital issue in the minds of the people also.

I beg leave to say that my horizon in the presidential canvass was not quite so limited as the senator seems to suppose—not confined exclusively to Virginia, "either above or below the water;" to admit his political geography of our state, visited other and leading states, during the progress of the canvass, and sought information from them all. I would remind the honorable senator of what passed on this floor, a few weeks since, in his own hearing, as to the Kentucky election in the presidential canvass, and the importance of all the states in the late election. When the honorable senator from New York who sits behind me (Mr. WADSWORTH) appealed to my honorable friend, his colleague, who sits near me, and inquired of him if any thing was said by himself, or the opponents of the administration, generally, to the presidential canvass in that state, about a bank of the United States? My honorable friend replied, "no; we were so much occupied with the sub-treasury that I could say nothing about a bank of the United States." I would appeal to my honorable friend now on this point.

[MR. TALLMAGE. I attended altogether to the sub-treasury.]

Mr. Rives. That, so far as the financial question was concerned, was every where, within the limits of my observation, the course of political discussion by my friends, who thought the interests of the country demanded a change of administration. "Sub-treasury or no sub-treasury" was the issue, and not bank or no bank. So odious was the sub-treasury to the friends of the United States government, that it terminated was the opposition of a republican people to it, that they resolved to put it down at all hazards, willing to leave to the future, and to the wisdom and deliberations it would bring along with it to decide which of the various plans that had been or might be suggested should be substituted in the place of it.

[MR. TALLMAGE. Although I did not discuss the matter myself, still the newspaper organs of the late administration displayed at their head "independent treasury, and no national bank."]

Mr. Rives continued. I know full well that our adversaries were eager and anxious to force the issue of a national bank upon us. But we declined it. I had the honor myself of being in the empire state, in the very crisis of that great political contest which had broken up the fountains of that mighty deep, so long swayed by the leaden sceptre of party discipline. I met my honorable friend there in a noble assemblage of his countrymen, embracing ten thousand enlightened and gallant freemen, collected from every quarter of that great and glorious republic, and they were for our common country; and, while all voices were raised in unanimous reprobation of the odious sub-treasury system, not a solitary word was uttered pleading the merits of a national bank. If the history of the late canvass could be impartially and faithfully written from contemporaneous materials, such, I am convinced, would be found to have been its actual course, in at least, three-fourths of the states of this union.

The senator from Kentucky has remained me—rather ungraciously, I think, considering how long he has been a spectator of the scene under the shade of the humble half-way house, (the state bank), for which he supposes me still to retain a preference. For four long years did the honorable senator himself inhabit this half-way house, valiantly defending it with all the vigor of his powers and eloquence against the fierce assaults of the enemies of the late administration; and, if I am not greatly mistaken, even late as the celebrated Hanover speech last summer, he recognised it to be a fair competitor of his own preferred expediency (a national bank) for the public favor, declaring that the choice between them should be left to the people, and not to the deliberation of the people.

[MR. CLAY. You are mistaken. I recognised it only as a pis aller.]

Mr. Rives. A pis aller is about as much as is left to us. Not having the speech of the honorable senator before me, I will not now contest the matter with him, though I may take occasion hereafter to refresh the recollection of the senator. What, sir, was the bill of the senator which was sent to the president but a pis aller? According to the senator's own statement it was a very different thing from what he would have made it. In its location, in its name and character, it was not a pis aller, nor a pis aller section, which the senator tells us he introduced in a spirit of the extreme concession, he agreed to make it a very different thing from an old-fashioned bank of the United States, the beau ideal of currency and finance in the eyes of the senator. The senator's own bill, I think, was but a pis aller to the pis aller be much choice, I presume, between one pis aller and another.

The senator from Kentucky says he found me several years ago in this half-way house, which, after the thorough riddling the roof had received in the breaking up of the pet bank system, he had supposed I could have inhabited no longer. I could I find it in my heart, Mr. President, to abandon it when I found the honorable senator from Kentucky (even after what he calls the riddling of the roof) so anxious to take refuge in it from the ruins of his own condemned and repudiated system, and where he actually took refuge for four long years, to have offered assistance. When I first had the honor to meet the honorable senator in this body, I found him not occupying the humble but comfortable half-way house, which has given him shelter from the storm for the last four years, but a more lovely mansion, gaily to look upon, but altogether unsuited to inhabit, old, decayed, rat-cann, which has since tumbled to the ground, with its own rottenness, devoted to destruction alike by the indignation of man and the wrath of Heaven. Yet the honorable senator, unamiable of the past and heedless of the warnings of the present, which are still ringing in his ears, will do nothing but the instant re-construction of this decayed edifice. And, in the teeth of my explicit declaration that I was for regulating the custody of the public money by law before our adjournment, he says I am for going home, leaving the treasury and the country in a lawless condition.

I owe it to myself, Mr. President, before I close, to say one or two words in regard to this gorgon of a cabal, which the senator tells us, upon the authority of dame Ruwor, has been formed to break up the cabinet, to dissolve the whig party, and to form a new or third party. Although the senator was pleased to acquit me of being guilty of this supposed calumny, he yet seemed to have some lurking jealousies and suspicions in his mind on the subject. I will tell the honorable senator, then, that I know of no such cabal, and I should really think that I was the last man that ought to be suspected of any wish or design to form a new or third party. I have been shown nearly at all times reside under a party influence, and under control from any quarter. All my humble judgment, tends, in its modern degeneracy, to tyrannical, and is attended with serious hazard of sacrificing an honest sense of duty, and the great interests of the country, to an arbitrary law, directed by other aims. I desire, therefore, to take upon myself no new party bonds, while I am anxious to fulfil, to the fullest extent that a sense of duty to the country will permit, every honorable engagement implied in existing ones. In regard to the breaking up of the cabinet, I have hoped that I was far above the suspicion of having any other ulterior intention than to do good to man. I have never sought office, but have often declined it; and will now give the honorable senator from Kentucky a full quit-claim and release of all cabinet pretensions now and forever. He may rest satisfied that he will never see me in an cabinet, under this or any other administration. During the brief remnant of my public life, the measure of my ambition will be filled by the humble, but honest, part I may be permitted to take on this floor in consultations for the common good.

Having disposed of this rumor of a cabal, to the satisfaction, I trust, of the honorable senator, I will tell

"Mr. Rives' version of the Hanover speech seems to be abundantly sustained by the following extracts from it:—"Whether these ends," said Mr. CLAY, "indispensable to the well-being both of the people and the government, are to be attained by sound and safe state banks, carefully selected and properly regulated, or by the establishment of United States banks, under such limitations, conditions, and restrictions as have been indicated by experience, should be left to the arbitration of enlightened public opinion."

And again he says: "It is to secure certain objects, without which the government cannot exist, and to which by my apprehensions, these objects can be accomplished by dispensing with the agency of a bank of the United States and employing that of state banks, all ought to rejoice and heartily acquiesce, and none would more than I should."

him of another rumor I have heard, which, I trust, may be equally destitute of foundation. Rumor is busy in alleging that there is an organized dictatorship, in permanent session in this capital, seeking to control the whole action of the government, in both the legislative and executive branches, and sending deputation after deputation to the president of the United States, in order to get things done in his terms. I do not vouch for the correctness of this rumor. I humbly hope it may not be true; but if it should unfortunately be so, I will say that it is fraught with far more danger to the regular and salutary action of our balanced constitution, and to the liberties of our people, than the secret cabal that ever has existed or ever will exist.

THE McLEOD CASE.

SPEECH OF MR. ADAMS, OF MASS.

ON THE RESOLUTION CALLING FOR INFORMATION IN RELATION TO THE McLEOD CASE.

House of Representatives, September 1, 1841.

Mr. BOARDMAN, of Connecticut, after a call of the house to which I had responded, called for the yeas and nays on a motion yesterday made by him to lay on the table the following resolution:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to inform this house, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether any officer of the army or the attorney general of the United States has, since the 4th of March last, been directed to visit the state of New York for any purpose connected with the imprisonment or trial of Alexander McLeod; and, if so, to communicate to this house copies of the instructions to, and report of, such officer; and that, by any executive order, or by any ordinance, the British government has been given to understand, the British government will be released or surrendered.

Mr. ADAMS requested Mr. BOARDMAN to withdraw his motion. He (Mr. A.) had not expected to address the house on the resolution, but as it appeared that the house had nothing else to do just now, if he could have an opportunity, he would submit his views upon some of the topics which had been introduced into the discussion. He therefore asked his friend from Connecticut to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BOARDMAN said he had yesterday made the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, because it had occupied the morning hour from the commencement of the session. His opinion that the discussion had been continued as long as was profitable for the house or country. But since he found that the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. ADAMS) desired to address the house, he had changed that opinion, and he would with great pleasure withdraw his motion, upon the expectation, however, that the honorable gentleman would, upon concluding his remarks, renew the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ADAMS was understood to make a conditional promise so to do, if no gentleman desired to reply to remarks which he (Mr. A.) might make.

The motion to lay the resolution on the table was at length withdrawn.

Mr. ADAMS said: Mr. SPEAKER: I have been of opinion that this resolution has occupied far more of the time of the people in this house than it ought, and had fully determined not to add to this superfluity of discussion one word of my own. But after coming into the house this morning and finding a nation pending to lay the resolution on the table, and the yeas and nays taken on that question, I thought also that the house had nothing else to do, a sudden impulse urges me, all unprepared, to ask the indulgence of the house to present some of my views upon the subject, and if they should prove desultory and disconnected, to overlook that infirmity without holding me to a regular course, and without offering itself, but allowing me to touch occasionally, at least upon topics collaterally connected with it.

And first, I observe, that we have one great and most formidable issue, of peace and war pending between us and Great Britain; and the first question which occurs to me is, what is the object of this resolution? for we have before us the question of what purpose has the house been agitated with it from the very commencement of the session to this day? The gentleman who offered the resolution disclaimed all party purposes—he breathed in a lofty atmosphere, elevated high above that of party; but what sort of complexion were both the friends and the opponents of the resolution put upon it? No party complexion! Oh no! [Laughter.] No! was patriotism—pure patriotism—patriotism pure and unfeigned! [Renewed laughter.] Well! he was disposed to give gentlemen, on all sides of the house, credit for whatever patriotism they professed; but sure it was that patriotism was a coat of many colors, and suited to very different complexions; [laughter]; and if it had not been for that universal complexion of patriotism, and no party which had rung through this house from every gentleman who had supported this resolution, he should have felt bound to believe it the rankest party measure that ever was introduced into the halls of Congress! For what is this resolution? The United States are at war with Great Britain; in their relations of peace and war, with the most powerful nation on the face of the globe—a nation as, by the gentleman aimed at by this resolution, was most strikingly said, the tap of whose revolved drum, beginning with the rising sun, travels with his lightnings over the whole world.

This nation we have already one great and formidable question festering to an issue, and in which we are clearly right, and she is clearly wrong. Now I, for one, am not disposed to multiply issues with her, and most especially not for tending to her abuse, and upon which she is clearly wrong; and upon which she is far better prepared for immediate aggression or defence than we are or can be. For upon that very border where this resolution tends to provoke hostile invasion, she is armed upon the extreme side, and the most powerful. She has stationed there in military array an army nearly double in number to the whole army of the United States—an army well appointed and ready to strike at a word. And you have a line of states and a populous border, with nothing but a river between a European and British army, who, at a signal from their commander, can sweep through a thousand miles of your country with fire and sword and desolation, and fall back into their strong holds beyond the river, almost before the knowledge of their incursion could reach this metropolis of your country.

Now, with regard to the northeastern boundary, the line of our side, and the border of the United States of Great Britain. We can concede nothing. Our right must be maintained—peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must. For I say to this house, that from the bottom of my soul I believe we ought, if called upon and required, to put forth our whole strength, and sacrifice the blood of our country in this nation to maintain our rights upon that issue. With regard to the other question, I would say that I am not disposed to make unnecessary additional issues upon matters which have no immediate connexion with that; for I believe that the award of impartial justice to the case against the United States of this resolution? It is to make an issue with Great Britain—an issue of right or wrong upon the affair of the burning of the Caroline. No, sir; never shall my voice be for going to war upon that issue. I hold it, in the first place, as a maxim, that American blood should never be engaged in the contest of a war with Great Britain, to be extremely careful not to multiply issues with that country. We have now one which is full enough to exercise us for years to come, and the cost is much more than I am willing to speak of at this time, and that issue must come, as I have said, and certainly would not avoid it by any sacrifice of any kind. But while I say that, I will not multiply the issues; and more especially I will not add to that issue other issues, upon which, when we go to a third power to arbitrate upon it, they will say we are wrong. Go to war, and the fair fields of the state of New York may be deluged in blood. The state of New York may be the theatre of our enemies, and irreparable injury will be done to its people. And if the issue must be terminated with peace, as it must be, either by negotiation between the parties themselves, or through a third power, the issue will be decided against us. We shall be told by the other nation that it is not the thing for us to quarrel about.

I have not the time, if I were possessed of the information, to give a history of the affair of the Caroline; and it is known as much to every member of the house as it is to me. We have heard a great deal of talk about territorial rights, and independence, and rights. But rights, the rights of the United States, and other nations do not look much to your state rights, nor to your independence questions. They will not talk of your independence; but they will say who is right and who wrong. Who struck the first blow, I take it, will be the main question with them. I take it that the heart of the Caroline there was no act of war committed. Nor do I subscribe to it that every nation goes to war only on issuing a declaration or proclamation of war. This is not the fact. Nations often wage war for years, without issuing any declaration of war. The question is not here upon a declaration of war, but acts of war. And I say, that in the judgment of all impartial men of other nations, we are held as a nation responsible; that the Caroline, there, was in a state of war against Great Britain; for purposes of war, and the worst kind of war—to sustain an insurrection; I will not say rebellion, because rebellion is a crime, and because I heard them talk of as a "warrior." Yes. But what was your steamboat doing there? If we were to discuss the matter, if we were to do it, we would be bound to do it avowedly and above board; but we disclaimed all intention of taking any part in it. And yet there was very little disguise about this expedition; and that this vessel was there for the purposes of hostility against the Canadian government. Therefore, the first blow, and we struck the first blow; and if, instead of pressing this matter to a war, we were to refer it to a third power, even if it should be to a European republic, if any such thing is remaining, and should say there has been an invasion of our territory, we would be held as a question something like that which was put to a character in a play of Moliere—Que diable allait il faire dans cette galère?—What the d—l had he to do that gallery?

[Great laughter.]

Now, I think the arbitrator would say, "What the d—l had he to do with that steamboat?" The d—l had that we struck the first blow. Now admit that—and none of your state rights men can deny it—admit that, and all the rest follows of course. They will say it was wrong—abstractly, if you please. Talking of abstractions, it was wrong for an expedition to come over and burn the steamboat, and send her and the crew to the bottom of the sea. What had she been doing? What was she to do next morning? And what ought you to do? You have reparations to make for all the men and for all the arms and implements of war which we were transporting and going to transport to the other side, to foment and instigate rebellion in Canada. There is what the third party would say to us. And it would come, in the end, after all the blood and treasure had been wasted by a war between the two countries, to this, that we must shake hands and drink champagne together, after having made a mutual apology for mutual bloodshed. This is the way in which we are settled between individuals. As I said so, why I said so; and thus the dispute is amicably settled. So we should have to do with this national matter; for there is not any great difference, in the essentials of quarrelling and making up, between nations and individuals. See a fight on the street between two boys, who give each other bloody noses; and, when the question comes to be settled between them, the basis of the settlement is, who gave the first blow? And the award of any honest umpire is, after suffering the parties to fight it out, that he who struck the first blow is in the wrong, and the other is in the right. Why, then, are you talking of state rights and of independence in connexion with this question? It has nothing to do with it.

There is, sir, another point of view in which I object to this resolution. I have seen here, in another part of this building, to which it would not be in order to refer except indirectly, although I did hear, that a gentleman had taken the stand, and had said, "I have a body that I thought I almost had a right to get up and protest against it. But I will not refer to the matter except in terms which come within the rules of order." I have heard there, and seen in the newspapers out of doors, a prodigious affair made of this resolution, and the trial of Alexander McLeod. It outraged the state of New York—because the great empire state of New York had undertaken to say that she would hang McLeod, whatever Great Britain or the general government might do. Yes! whatever they might do, the great empire state of New York would hang him. I have heard there, and seen in the newspapers, "What, sir, I ask, is the object of this resolution?" To inquire of the president of the United States whether any officer of the army, or the attorney general of the United States, since the 4th of March last, has visited the state of New York for any purpose connected with the trial of Alexander McLeod.

I believe that question was answered before it was asked. I think the information was contained in a document communicated by the president of the United States, which stated not only that a general was sent, but that instructions were given to the attorney general, and the attorney general was communicated to congress, with the president's message, at the very commencement of the session.

Why, then, should this house be occupied hour after hour in discussing whether the attorney general was sent to New York, and what he said there, and when the president himself has told you that he was sent and the object of his mission.

Every body knew it before the question was asked. What then? Had you a right to send the attorney general to New York on any other subject? Where is the constitutional provision prohibiting him from sending the attorney general to New York on that or any other of the subjects which are before the judicial courts of that state? Yes, the constitution will not permit with this, and so to his instructions. And I have heard here, on the part of some of my forty friends from New York, a great deal about the conscious dignity and honor of this empire state of New York. Now, I am not very fond of that term "empire state," in the language of this country, and I say so, because it is a distinction not recognised in the constitution of the United States. They are all, as members of this union, equal; and the state of Delaware has as good a right to be called the "empire state" as New York. Now, if my forty friends from New York choose to call it the empire state, I will not quarrel with them. It is only as to consequences that I enter my caveat against the too frequent use of those terms on this floor; for there is meaning in those words "empire state" when used among co-states, more than meets the ear. Suppose it is in Delaware that such an error has been committed, do you suppose my friend here, Mr. ROBERTS, from Delaware, would have offered such a resolution as this? And, by the terms of the resolution, I should presume that my friends from New York think there is a little more dignity and power in having forty representatives than only one.

And now, let me give you the view in which I ask the attention of the house to this resolution. At the very time when we have this great issue upon another point with the British nation, and when this resolution, and every thing connected with it, is blowing the coals to make another issue, there is behind it another and another issue between this government and the state of New York. What is the object of that? Are you going to war with a foreign nation? And is that a time to split hairs in questions of jurisdiction between the government of the United States and that of one of the separate states? And are you to be split up by the question "which of you two has the right, the precious right, to hang McLeod?" Are you going to make an issue between the state of New York and the government of the United States upon such an exercise of power as that? Are you going to show your weakness at the present moment when you are beating the air with this dog that the time to make an issue between the government which represents the whole country, and the state as to its power? God forbid that I should question its power; but I inquire, is it politic or wise to make a quarrel between that government and this, about the most insignificant of all questions, as to which of you shall release McLeod? For, while some gentlemen talk about hanging McLeod, others, more merciful, talk as if it should turn out that this man was concerned in the affair of the Caroline, yet that there was a power in the state of New York that might prevent his execution;—that the governor of New York has a power of pardon, as well as the general government; and that the attribute of mercy would be exercised with as much discretion by the governor of New York as it would be by the president of the United States. But I see nothing in the correspondence which has been laid before us that would justify this question. It is not the law in New York would not be carried out, according to all its rights, and all its dignities, and the man be released without the necessity of a resort to the authority of the general government.

I am perfectly satisfied, for my own part, if it should so happen that the evidence is strong enough to satisfy the governor of New York, that he will exercise the pardoning power, and send him on with an admonition to go and sin no more. That can be done without any entrenchment on the honor and dignity of the state of New York. From the first moment to the last, the question which has struck me is, whether you will or will not let him name. Then is there only question in issue between Great Britain and the United States. Great Britain will not go to war to settle a question of jurisdiction between the general government and the state of New York. They will not go to war with you if the man is sent home—then you will let him name. Then has been used on two floors, it ultimately comes to this; which of the two governments shall release McLeod? Now, I say, what is all that for? Why is it that the government of the United States must be arraigned by the government of the state of New York, and this made a question of war between us and Great Britain? Why should not the matter have been allowed to go on according to the correspondence between the two governments? No, sir, we have had long discussions about war, declared and not declared, lawful and unlawful, by a judge of the supreme court of the state of New York, and here and elsewhere; long discussions in relation to the maintenance of state rights, according to the correspondence between the two governments; your state rights into execution; suppose you have the man, then the people of New York will exclaim: "There is our independence; there are our state rights; you see that we have hung the man." Now, what next, I would ask the constituents of the general government? Will you have the representatives of the counties he represents are ravaged by the enemy, and when thousands and tens of thousands have been slaughtered, wives have been made widows and their children fatherless, I would then ask of him if he would have the thanks of his constituents? And the question of ask him. I also ask of the representatives of the state of New York; of the representatives of the state of Pennsylvania; of the representatives of the state of Ohio; and of the whole line of those states which are more liable to the incursions which would take place by the enemy without any declaration of war, who would come and butcher your people, and burn and destroy your property, and return immediately and take their places in their defences before you could raise and organize a force to save them. What would you do? Would you offer a resolution to inquire whether the officer of the army had been there, or whether the attorney general had been sent there, or whether any concession had been made to the British government? No such question would be asked. I have, indeed, no doubt that after the country had been ravaged, there would be vigor and bravery enough in it to raise and defend the country, who would come and butcher your country, and burn their property and destroy their wives and children too, and what satisfaction would that be to you.

If gentlemen would look into the history of Scotland and England, they would there find numerous examples of the kind, and I do not think that the wars were carried on between the Scotch and the English. Gentlemen would there see what might be the consequences here if this resolution were carried into effect.

It is but a few days since I heard a gentleman from New Hampshire, (MR. EASTMAN,) say, with some pain and sadness, that if the present secretary of the United States should have been a man of peace, war with England; and there was a great deal meant by that remark. And the gentleman seemed to think this a lamentable condition of affairs. I firmly believe it to be true; but I had a very different feeling from that gentleman, and I say, would be praiseworthy, to preserve peace between the two countries. And, however long or short the gentleman's career may be, he will not see any improper concession to Great Britain sanctioned by the present secretary of state, whether in peace or war. With respect to the present question, I have no doubt the gentleman alluded to would show as much firmness as any member of this house. And one of my reasons for troubling the house at this last expiring moment of the session is, that I might vindicate the conduct of that gentleman, and do him justice; for great injustice has been done him in regard to his remarks and correspondence. I have a report of a recent article in his part of that correspondence but what I would endorse. And I say, if it is conciliatory, if it has any tendency to soften the asperities and rancor that may exist between the two countries, so much the better; and I know it has had that effect. What did you say, sir, when you were making a report of a recent article? Why, your minister at the court of St. James was panic struck, and sent a message to your squadron in the Mediterranean to run away—to fly as fast as the winds could blow them—for John Bull was at their heels! [Laughter.] It is very much the same story, and I have seen it in the newspapers. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, (MR. INGRAM,) spoke of this transaction, the other day, just as I would speak of it in general terms; but he did not at all question the propriety of the conduct of that gentleman. I say not so. I say that he has disgraced the name of the United States, and has been disgraced since the affair of the Chesapeake frigate. What will the Germans, what will the Italians, what, in short, will all the great nations of Europe say of the people of the United States? That, upon a panic terror of their minister at London, they showed the white flag, and that the off-boat-sailer in the Mediterranean was warned to seek refuge by flight from the thunders of Britain!

And there is another point of view in which I do not approve his conduct. The gentleman has been at London four or five years. I do not believe there was at London a charge from any country in Europe but knew better what was done and doing in the privacy of council. I was a business of a foreign minister abroad, but to find out what is doing in the privacy of council. I speak from experience when I say that Mr. Hughes would have been informed of such orders in council, had they been issued, and of course would not have been frightened by every newspaper explosion of popular wrath into a belief that the grave and responsible minister of this nation had resorted to such an extremity at such a moment.

There was one memorable case of the address of Mr. Hughes in procuring documents of the profoundest secrecy. Mr. Stratford Canning came to me one day, and said that he had permission to read to me a paper of great importance, emanating from his government in their negotiations with the European alliance. He read the paper, and then, when I asked him if he had finished, I asked him if he would let me have it for half an hour, that I might lay it before the president, Mr. Monroe, for his perusal. He said he was forbidden to let it go out of his own hands; but that, if I desired, he would go with me to the president's house, and read it to him. This I did not do. I contented myself with making, from memory, a verbal statement of its contents to Mr. Monroe, and within three days after I received a copy of that same paper from Christopher Hughes. The next time Mr. Canning came to me, I said to him that he had needed not to have been so often interrupted, and that I despatch which he would not allow me to take for half an hour to the president for his perusal, for we now had a copy of it. He was amazed. A copy of it said he. He clapped his hands on his two waistcoat pockets, took the key of his desk out of one of them, held it up, and said: "That is the key to a good lock; and that paper has been under that lock and key every moment since I received it, except when in my own hands. I said, do not suspect any one about you. We are not in the habit of purchasing secret papers from domestics or secretaries. We have got it from a great distance."

Yes, I had a copy of that document, perhaps the most secret as well as the most efficient of the diplomatic papers of the United States, in the hands of the holy alliance, and it was procured without any aid by Mr. Hughes, by no improper arts and at no cost of secret service money, but by the art of making friends by his social qualities wherever he goes. I mention this to show what ought to be the qualities of a public minister, and to show that he ought to be a man of friendly, social intercourse with the other members of the diplomatic corps at the same court, with an ordinary portion of sagacity, he has the key to all their secrets. I say it from long knowledge and experience. How was it when this panic letter was written to the commodore of the American squadron? What did the American minister know of the system of policy, foreign or domestic, of the British cabinet? The letter itself proves that he was as blind to it as a beetle; that he was ignorant of the first letters of their alphabet. If he had known any thing of it he would not have disgraced himself and his country by the exposure of his ignorance. If he had known from any personal feeling towards that gentleman, although I have not been an admirer of some of his diplomatic exhibitions heretofore, as the journals of this house may show; but I have looked to this transaction entirely upon its merits alone, and I say that those letters were a disgrace to the United States, and a reproach in the Mediterranean, and their consequences have been disgraceful to the nation; and I, for one, hold the man responsible for it, and say he was not doing his duty, or that he neglected some of the most important parts of his duty as a public minister. But this is somewhat of a digression, and I am intimately connected with the McLeod question of peace or war; for what must the privy council and her majesty queen Victoria herself, who, I dare say, all woman as she is, has more fire in her heart than ever to have sitten down and written a letter like that—which must have been a private communication, and not a matter of it? They would say, God grant that this man may remain here as Jonathan's minister till the end of time; we may be sure he never will know any thing of our real intentions, and will always have a becoming reverence for the terrors of the beak and lightning of the eagle, and the British eagle, and blundering rashness enough to put out the eyes of the man who

To return to the subject of this resolution, and as to whether the British government have been given to understand that McLeod will be released or surrendered. What, I ask again, is the purpose of this

Secs. 3, And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the drawbacks payable on exported refined sugars, manufactured from foreign molasses, and on exported rum, distilled from foreign molasses, shall be reduced in proportion to the reduction which shall have been made by law (after the passage of the acts of congress of the twenty-first of January, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, and twenty-ninth of May, eighteen hundred and thirty, allowing said drawbacks), in the case of the imported sugars and molasses, out of which the same shall have been manufactured or distilled, and in no case shall the drawbacks exceed the amount of import duty paid on either of those articles.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That prior to the second day of February next the wines of France shall not be subjected, under the provisions of this act, or any existing law, to the payment of higher rates of duty than the following, namely: on red wines in cases six cents a gallon; white wines in cases ten cents a gallon, and French wines of all sorts in bottles, twenty-two cents per gallon: Provided, That no higher duty shall be charged under this act, or any existing law, on the red wines of Austria, than are now or may be by this act, levied upon the red wines of Spain, when the said wines are imported in casks.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "an act to release from duty, iron prepared for, and actually laid on railways or inclined planes," approved fourteenth of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, be, and the same is hereby repealed; and there shall be, laid, collected and paid on, such iron hereafter imported a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem: Provided, That such repeal shall not operate, nor shall such duties be imposed on any rail road iron which shall be imported under the provisions of the said act prior to the third day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-three, and laid down on any rail road or inclined plane, of which the construction has been already commenced, and which shall be necessary to complete the same.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to goods shipped in a vessel bound to any port of the United States, actually having left her last port of lading eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, or beyond Cape Horn, prior to the first day of August, eighteen hundred and forty-one.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

JOHN WHITE,

Speaker of the house of representatives.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD,

President of the senate pro tempore.

Approved, September 11, 1841.

JOHN TYLER.

APPROPRIATIONS.

REPORT

OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
In compliance with "an act to authorise the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836.

Office of the clerk of House of Reps. of the U. S.
September 13, 1841.

In obedience to the sixth section of the "act to authorise the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," passed July 4, 1836, which requires "the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives, as soon as may be after the close of each session of congress, to publish a statement of all appropriations made during the session; and, also, a statement of the new officers created, and the salaries of each, and also a statement of the offices the salaries of which are increased, and the amount of such increase;" the clerk of the house of representatives submits the accompanying statement.

MW. ST. C. CLARKE,

Clerk of the house of representatives.

Statement of appropriations made during the 1st session of the 37th congress of the United States of America, specifying the amount and object of each.

FIRST SESSION TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

H. R. No. 1. For carrying into effect an "act for the relief of Mrs. Harrison, widow of the late president of the U. States	$25,000 00
H. R. No. 2. An act making appropriations for the present session of congress
For the pay and mileage of the members of the senate for the present session	68,541 60
For the pay of the chaplain of the senate	500 00
For printing, stationery and all other contingent expenses of the senate for the present session	30,000 00
For the pay and mileage of the members of the house of representatives, including five hundred dollars to the chaplain, for the present session of congress	256,600 00
For the printing, stationery and all other contingent expenses of the house of representatives for the present session	30,836 00
For the supply of stationery for the house of representatives for the second session of the twenty-seventh congress	15,000 00
H. R. No. 5. For carrying into effect an act authorising a loan not exceeding the sum of twelve million of dollars	12,000 00

H. R. No. 6. For carrying into effect an act to provide for the payment of navy pensions	139,666 06
H. R. No. 7. For carrying into effect an act making further provision for the maintenance of pauper lunatics in the District of Columbia	3,500 00
H. R. No. 8. An act making appropriations for various fortifications, for ordnance, and for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities.
For repairs of West-head battery, Governor's Island, Boston harbor	5,000 00
For repairs of Southeast battery, Governor's Island, Boston harbor	5,000 00
For repairs of Fort Independence and sea-wall of Castle Island, Boston harbor	63,000 00
For repairs of Fort Warren, Boston harbor	105,000 00
For repairs of old fort at New Bedford harbor	5,000 00
For Fort Adams, Newport harbor	45,000 00
For fortifications in New London harbor, rebuilding of Fort Trumbull, Conn.	35,000 00
For repairs of old Fort Griswold, New London harbor, Connecticut	10,000 00
For completing repairs of Fort Niagara, and erecting and repairing necessary buildings therein, New York	20,000 00
For completing repairs of Fort Ontario, Oswego, New York, and erecting necessary buildings therein	15,000 00
For Fort Schuyler, New York harbor	70,000 00
For repairs of Fort Wood and sea-wall, Bellows Island, New York harbor	50,000 00
For permanent walls for Fort Columbus, New York, and South battery, Governor's Island, New York harbor	12,000 00
For repairs of sea-wall of Castle William and other parts of Governor's Island	7,000 00
For Fort Delaware, Delaware river, provided the title to the Pea Patch Island shall be decided to be in the United States, including twenty-two thousand seven hundred and seventy dollars carried to the surplus fund January one, eighteen hundred and forty-one	50,000 00
For repairing forts at Annapolis harbor, Maryland	5,000 00
For repairs of Fort Washington, Potomac river	35,000 00
For Fort Monroe, Old Point Comfort, Va.	115,000 00
For repairs of forts Gaswell and Johnson, and preservation of the site of the former, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, New Carolina	5,000 00
For Fort Sumter, Charleston harbor, S. Carolina	15,000 00
For commencing dyke to Drunken Dick shoal, for preservation of Sullivan's Island, and site of Fort Moultrie, Charleston, South Carolina	30,000 00
For Fort Pulaski, Savannah river, Georgia	35,000 00
For repairs of Fort Marion, St. Augustine, Florida	20,000 00
For continuing sea-wall at St. Augustine, Florida	5,000 00
For Fort Pickens, Pensacola harbor, Florida	20,000 00
For Fort Barrancas, Pensacola, Florida	45,000 00
For Fort Morgan, Mobile Point, Alabama	40,000 00
For Fort Livingston, Barrataria bay, Louisiana	30,000 00
For repairs of other forts on the approaches to New Orleans, Louisiana	50,000 00
For defensive works, and barracks, and purchase of site at or near Detroit, Michigan	50,000 00
For purchase of site, and for barracks and defensive works at or near Buffalo, New York	50,000 00
For fortifications at the outlet of Lake Champlain, and purchase of site	75,000 00
For defensive works, barracks and other necessary buildings, and purchase of site for a depot at or near the junction of the Matawanekung and Penobscot rivers, Maine	25,000 00
For contingencies of fortifications	15,000 00
For incidental expenses attending repairs of fortifications	55,000 00
For current expenses of ordnance service	25,000 00
For purchase of ordnance and ordnance stores	75,000 00
For armament of fortifications	100,000 00
For purchase of saltpetre and brimstone	20,000 00
For preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, viz:
For balance required, in addition to the sum applicable out of the amount appropriated at the last session of congress, for arrearages of pay due Florida militia called into service by the governor of the territory in eighteen hundred and forty	19,388 02

For arrearages of pay due Florida militia, commanded by Brigadier Gen. Read, for six months in the service of the U. States, commencing November, eighteen hundred and forty, and terminating April, eighteen hundred and forty-one	297,213 92
For arrearages of pay due to a battalion of Georgia militia for service on the frontiers of Georgia and Florida, in eighteen hundred and forty and eighteen hundred and forty-one	78,495 92
For the quartermaster's department, the sum of	440,040 00
For surveys in reference to the military defences of the frontier, inland and Atlantic	30,000 00
For arrearages due for roads, harbors and rivers, where public works and improvements have hitherto been made, and for the protection of public property now on hand at these places, and for arrearages for surveys and completing maps authorised by the act of March third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine	40,000 00
For defraying the expenses of selecting a suitable site on the western waters for the establishment of a national armory, a sum not exceeding	5,000 00
For the construction or armament of such armed steamers or other vessels for the defence on the northwestern lakes as the president may think most proper, and as may be authorised by the existing stipulations between this and the British government	100,000 00
H. R. No. 9. An act making an appropriation for the purchase of naval ordnance and ordnance stores, and for other purposes.
For the purpose of purchasing ordnance and ordnance stores for the use of the navy of the United States	600,000 00
H. R. No. 10. For carrying into effect an act making appropriation for the pay, subsistence, &c. of home squadron	789,310 00
H. R. No. 11. An act making appropriations for outfits and salaries of diplomatic agents, and for other purposes.
For outfits of ministers to Russia, Spain, Mexico and Brazil, and of charges d'affaires to Portugal, Denmark, Sardinia, Naples, Chili and Texas	63,000 00
For salaries of ministers to Spain and Brazil, for the residue of the current year	8,000 00
For salaries of the secretaries of legation to the same places	1,800 00
Also, so much as may be necessary to pay, for compensation, to the clerks and other officers in the service of the two houses, the librarian and assistant librarians of congress, the gate-keeper and lamp-lighter, for the services rendered by them during the present extra session, three months' additional pay; and to the messengers, assistant messengers, pages and laborers of the two houses and library of congress, and to the hostler of the house of representatives, the usual allowances made at the close of each session; and to each of the police of the capital, the same as to the messengers, to be paid under the direction of the committee on the contingent fund of each house. And the regular pay of the messenger of the office of the secretary of the senate and of the clerk of the house of representatives shall be equal to the pay of any other permanent messenger employed in the capital	26,477 50
For completing the contract for printing and binding the catalogue of the library	273 00
H. R. No. 22. For carrying into effect an act to provide for repairing the Potomac bridge	15,806 00
H. R. No. 23. For carrying into effect an act to provide for placing Greenough's statue of Washington in the rotunda of the capitol, and for expenses therein mentioned	20,100 00
H. R. No. 30. For carrying into effect an act making provision for the post office department	497,657 00

$5,043,705 02

NEWS' NATIONAL REGISTER.

THIRD SERIES.—No. 5.—Vol. XL.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 2, 1841.

[Vol. LXL—Whole No. 1,566.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 5, VOL. 11.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.—Great Britain, Census item, an election scene; France, Taking the census; Canton, item from; Palestine, a project; Turkey, a firman relative to the Israelites; Germany, New conquests; Russia, religious intolerance; the islands; West India, coal in Cuba; Mexico and Yucatan, revolution, Santa Ana in the field; Texas, public debt, important; to emigrants, Indian war. NATIONAL AFFAIRS.—President's proclamation relative to associations on the frontier, President's instructions relative to postmasters, appointments by the president.

THE CABINET.—Items, relative to the secretary of state, Henry Clay's reply to the wing invitation from Baltimore.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.—"Free duties," trade with the Sandwich Islands and North West Coast.

DARING OUTRAGE.—Col. Grogan kidnapped and taken to Canada, executioner executed thereon, Montreal account, item from the Madisonian.

ARMED FORCES ON THE LAKE.

SANTA FE EXPLORATION.

SMITHSONIAN BEQUEST.

FOREIGN CRIMINALS.

THE ARMY.—Gen. Wool, Northern frontier, fortification at New Bedford, survey, suicides, reminiscence of Capt. Thomas Hays.

WILD CAT.—Con-cochee, the Indian chief.

NAVY.—Temperance reform, Navy pensions, removal of the remains of Capt. Perry, singular mode of obtaining evidence in the navy.

STATES OF THE UNION.—Comparative statement of the agricultural industry of the several states; New York, congressional resignations, items; Pennsylvania, candidates, Girard land; Maryland, her position and resources; North Carolina, slavery, draining lands; South Carolina, bank statistics; Illinois, election returns, items; Missouri, trial at Polk's Florida, items of the war; Iowa, election.

MR. POTTS'S speech on the second vote message.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE CENSUS. Crutshank's amusing "Omnibus" makes the following remarks upon the late English census, in which the ages are returned for the periods of five years:

"Ladies of a very certain age brided up at being obliged to tell the number of summers that had passed over their heads, notwithstanding the loophole of the 'five years' which the gallantry of the commissioners allowed them. Elderly gentlemen also, who wore dark wigs that like those auricular tail tales of the ci-devant jeune homme the ears, inwardly execrated the system of exposure to which the census paper gave rise, and willingly ran the risk of a fine 'not more than five pounds, nor less than forty shillings,' rather than be classed as old bachelors. From returns into which the commissioners have allowed us to peep, it appears that of the middle aged population of these kingdoms, one in three has grown five years younger since the date of the last census; one in seven two years younger; one in twelve remains of the same age; one in thirty-eight is five years older than at the period referred to; and one in five hundred, and sixty has attained the full age that might have been anticipated from the lapse of years. We believe it has been extremely seldom before, that returns, that the highest age among the unmarried ladies in this country is 29, the average is 21 7/8. The widows willing to marry again are quite juvenile; and it is a remarkable fact, that many are younger now, as widows, than they appear to be in the present return as wives. Indeed, the effect of the whole calculation is to show, perhaps, a complement to our young queen, that her subjects are the most decidedly juvenile people in Christendom."

AN ELECTION SCENE.—D'ISRAELI AT SHREWSBURY. The Chronicle gives the following passages from the gentlemanly harangue of Mr. B. D'Israeli, the orator, novelist and legislator: Ironical laughter now rose to such pitch, that the speaker quite lost his temper, and he exclaimed, "You young whippersnappers, you are very young and very silly. I hope your mother knows you are out. ("You go to Maidstone.") I suppose you come from Marshall's factory school. A second squib exploded, upon which he exclaimed, "your squibs don't go off, you young white factory monkeys! (Renewed riot and a shower of missiles.) Oh the idea of seeing a gentleman's friends so out! (Here, to show how highly finished he was a "gentleman," Mr. D'I. placed his one arm akimbo, and applied the thumb of his right hand to his proboscis, and in this graceful attitude received several volleys of hisses, grunts and yells.) He continued—'notwithstanding our squib of the factory infant school, won't you stand up, I hope they'll let off some squib to celebrate our triumph, and I hope they will explode. (Here a rotten egg whizzed past his head.) Ah! ah! that's a shot from Shrewsbury. I hope you'll have better manners before going to the polls, which I much doubt and so good night. Having concluded this elegant harangue, he disappeared with the utmost celerity.

Vol. XL—St. 5.

FRANCE.

TAKING THE CENSUS. France is now in a singular situation owing to the obnoxious fiscal census. The foreign tourist can scarcely take any direction in which he may not get into the midst of all-popular riots. Sanguinary scenes occur in the north, at Lille, for instance, as well as in the other divisions of the realm. The army—horse, foot and artillery—may be said to be chiefly employed in supporting the registers and assessors, who, after all, can accomplish the dangerous task in a very imperfect manner and limited extent. Every kind of deception and trick has been practised by revolutionary emissaries on the poorer and more ignorant classes in the south and west, particularly to produce the impression, which the government cannot soon efface, that they are to be mercilessly taxed in every article of furniture, food, apparel, household, whatever by any possibility susceptible of valuation and seizure.

CANTON.

THE BARQUE FLORIDA. Capt. Foucon, from Canton for New York, with a full cargo of silks, tea, silver, China ware, &c. went ashore on the Brigantine shoals near Abascoe beach on the 23d inst. and is said to be a total loss, vessel and cargo. The latter is valued at $20,000, mostly insured in New York and Philadelphia.

The Florida sailed from Canton on the 19th May. Rather more excitement prevailed, and preparations for hostility were progressing. The destruction of Canton by Captain Elliot was apprehended, and business men were lessened there.

PALESTINE.

A PROJECT. The Paris correspondence of the National Intelligencer states in one of his letters, that Prince Metternich (the intelligent premier of Austria), has determined if possible, to constitute a Christian kingdom out of Palestine; of which Jerusalem is, of course, to be the seat of government. Such an idea, observes the Cincinnati Chronicle, will cause a thrill through every true Christian's heart throughout the world. What memories and what associations gather round that Holy Land! City of David and of Solomon! There are the tombs of the prophets. There are the birth-places of the purest of the poets and the wisest of legislators. There are the battle fields of the Assyrians and Babylonians, of Persian and of Medes, of Jew and Gentile. There is Pishgal, and Sinai, and Lebanon. There is Bethelhem and Calvary—scenes of history, of suffering and glory! Time has long since reduced its palaces to ruins. Rude and profane usurpers have had the holy places, but not the devotion that dwells in every Jew's heart, once fountain of light, once tomb of the Saviour!

INTERESTING TO ISRAELITES. At the request of a large body of Israelites we give place to the following translation of the firman granted by his imperial majesty, the sultan Abdul Medjid, to the Israelites in his empire, at the request of Sir Moses Montefiore, F. R. S. and delivered to him at Constantinople, by his excellency, Redschid pasha, minister of foreign affairs, on the 10th of Chislevan month, 1256, 12th Ramadan, 1256—corresponding to November 6, 1840. [Philadelphia Chronicle.]

A firman addressed to the chief judge at Constantinople, at the head of which his imperial majesty, the sultan, has written with his own hand the following words: "Let that be executed which is prescribed in this firman."

"An ancient prejudice prevailed against the Jews. The ignorant believed that the Jews were accustomed to sacrifice a human being, to make use of his blood at their feast of the passover.

"In consequence of this opinion, the Jews of Damascus, Rhodes, and other subjects of our empire, have been persecuted by other nations. The calumnies which have been uttered against the Jews, and the vexations to which they have been subjected have at last reached our imperial throne.

"But a short time has elapsed since some Jews, dwelling in the Isle of Rhodes, have been brought thence to Constantinople, where they have been tried and judged according to the new regulations, and their innocence of the accusations made against them fully proved. That, therefore, which justice and equity required has been done in their behalf.

"Besides which, the religious books of the Hebrews have been examined by learned men, well versed in their theological literature, the result of which examination is, that it is found that the Jews are strongly prohibited not only from using human blood, but even that of animals. It therefore follows that the charges made against them and their religion are nothing but pure calumnies.

"For this reason, and for the love we bear to our subjects, we cannot permit the Jewish nation, (whose innocence of the crime alleged against them is evident), to be vexed and tormented upon accusations which have not the least foundation in truth, but that, in conformity to the hatt-i sherif which has been proclaimed at Gullah, the Jewish nation shall possess the same advantages and enjoy the same privileges as are granted to the numerous other nations who submit to our authority.

"The Jewish nation shall be protected and defend-

"To accomplish this object we have given the most positive orders that the Jewish nation dwelling in all parts of our empire, shall be perfectly protected as well as all other subjects of the sublime porte, and that no person shall molest them in any manner whatever, (except for a just cause,) and that they shall exercise their religion in that which concerns their safety and tranquillity. In consequence, the present firman, which is ornamented at the head with our hoomaiah, (sign manual), and emanates from our imperial chancellery, has been delivered to the Israelitish nation.

"Thus, you, the above mentioned judge, when you know the contents of this firman, will endeavor to act with great care in the manner therein prescribed. And in order that nothing may be done in opposition to this firman at any time hereafter, you will register it in the archives of the tribunal; you will afterwards deliver it to the Israelitish nation; and you will take great care to execute our orders and this our sovereign will."

"Given at Constantinople, the 12th Ramadan, 1256, 6th of November, 1840."

GERMANY.

NEW GERMAN COINAGE. Every traveller in Germany has experienced great inconvenience from the multiplicity of small sovereign states each exercising the power of coining money, and the consequent difficulty of determining the comparative value of their separate coins. These several states have recently entered into an arrangement which obviates all difficulty. On the face of each new coin is the medalion profile of the sovereign prince by whom it is issued, and on the reverse surrounded by a wreath, is a shield containing in separate compartments the armorial bearings of the several states, parties to the confederation. We have before us a Prussian silver piece of the new coinage. It is of the value of two thalers or $1 45; but passes we believe for $1 50, and in beauty of execution it fully equals the silver coinage of England or France.

RUSSIA.

THE RELIGIOUS OF RUSSIA. We learn from one of the foreign quarters, that according to the late official returns, the Catholics of Russia amount to 227,528. They possess 61 convents, containing 1,894 monks; 51 numeraries, containing 660 nuns; 1,231 churches and 1,176 chapels. The Armenians possess 619 churches and 310 chapels, to which are attached 1,307 monks, 46 convents, containing 133 monks and 31 nuns. The Lutherans have 902 churches, to which 484 priests are attached. The Jews have 586 synagogues and 2,377 temples to which 955 rabbis and 2,097 elders are attached. The Mahomedans have 5,296 mosques, and 14,517 priests. The Calmaes have 46 convents, containing 133 monks. There are no less than 45,354,000 of the Russians, who profess the religion of the Greek church, which is in fact the established religion of the empire.

BUENOS AYRES.

The bark Suyra, captain Day, brings dates from Buenos Ayres to July 4th. The news of the president's death arrived there on the 26th June, and appropriate measures were taken by the Americans to testify their respect for his character, and regret for his death.

An engagement was daily expected between the squadrons of Admiral Brown and Commodore Coe, in fact, Capt. Day heard a heavy cannonading the day after he left port, from which he concluded that the engagement had taken place.

The accounts from the interior state that the anticipated engagement between Lavalle and La Madrid, is not likely to be realized, great defections taking place in the forces of the former. Of other news there is nothing of importance.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

AFFRAY. By a late arrival accounts have been received at Boston of an outrage committed by the British consul, at Honolulu, on the editor of the Poly-nesian. Mr. Jarvis, a Bostonian. The cause of the attack was the publication of certain correspondence between the governor of the island and the consul, in order to punish the editor, the consul, accompanied by a man named Starkey, went to his house to wrong him; but it happened that a friend of Mr. Jarvis, just arrived from the United States, was at his house, and he, being almost as stout and strong as Mr. Charlton, immediately grappled with the latter, while Starkey attacked Mr. Jarvis. Mrs. J. brought her husband his cane, with which he punished his assailant handsomely; and the consul, finding no better in his way out of the house, made the best of his, and left the house, leaving Starkey to his fate.

Both were subsequently brought before the civil authorities, and fined for the assault.

The outrage produced the greatest excitement among all classes and complexions. A public meeting of all the foreigners was called, at which several Englishmen took a part, and resolutions were passed expressing the indignation of the meeting and the foreign community, at the conduct of the consul and his associate, in the outrage, and the doings were published in the Poly-nesian.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE ISLANDS. Forty men and forty women are now added to the mission from abroad, and employed in the missionary labor.

Ten thousand copies of the Bible are printed in their own language, and distributed among the natives of the island. Marriage ceremonies are introduced—intemperance checked, and laws promulgated—schools and churches are established, and agriculture and the mechanic arts flourish.

The distilleries are all stopped. The government is modified from an absolute despotism to a limited monarchy. The laws are published and read, and the rights of the people understood and protected—vicious and distasteful amusements are abandoned, and the Christian Sabbath is more fully observed in this, than any other country.

Fertility has given place to riches, and the open pastures give place to fields with fatness. Two thousand head of sugar have been produced, and silk, to which the climate is peculiarly adapted, will soon become a staple of the island.

The present monarch is a gentleman, but not a Christian. He plays billiards and drinks moderately—converses well, and is intelligent. One of the churches is 196 feet long and 62 broad; and on the Sabbath, may be seen filled with Sandwich Islanders, who are well dressed, reading the scriptures in their own native language—taking notes from the sermon, and singing hymns and spiritual songs, in tunes imported from the United States.

The language is sweet, soft and musical—"tis the language of love. Thirty thousand of the inhabitants can read. Fifteen thousand attend schools, of which there are boarding schools and high schools, and schools for the children of the chiefs, where they are taught in English and their native language. There is a literary seminary where the arts and sciences are taught.

There are nineteen churches, in which 20,000 persons assemble weekly for divine service.

WEST INDIES.

CEBA COAL. The coal raised from the mine discovered about a year ago, about six miles from Havana, has been tried by the Spanish steam frigates, and pronounced by the engineers to be excellent in quality—superior to the best English.—Analysis shows the coal to consist of the following parts:—

Carbon,	71.74
Oxygen,	6.32
Hydrogen,	9.44
Ashes,	13.50
	100.00

The rail road from the port to the mine is in rapid progress towards completion. As the bed is believed to be very extensive, the enterprising proprietors anticipate handsome profits on their outlay whenever the West India steamers shall regularly call at Havana for a supply of fuel.

MEXICO AND YUCATAN.

ANOTHER REVOLUTION has broken out, and Santa Ana is again in the field.

The New York Herald of the 29th contains Mexican dates to the 27th August, and Yucatan to the 31st September.

On the 18th August Guadalupe, in Mexico, under the command of Gen. Paredes, proclaimed for the abolition of the 15 per cent. duty, which had been recently levied by government, and in favor of a congress to be elected by the people. This created a great deal of excitement. The news of this outbreak reached Vera Cruz on the 24th ult., and Santa Ana immediately proclaimed in favor of the same measures. He despatched troops on the 25th to occupy the principal castles and forts between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico.

On the 26th Vera Cruz also declared for the revolution. On the afternoon Santa Ana, who had about 2,000 troops under his command, sent out a sufficient number to take possession of Perote, a castle which commands the communication between the city of Mexico and Vera Cruz. They reached there on the 27th, just as the English mail was leaving. As soon as the general of Puebla heard of what had happened he despatched three hundred horse to the assistance of Perote, but Santa Ana had possession before these troops arrived within six leagues of the place.

On the 1st instant the congress of Yucatan met, and no doubt, declared that province entirely free, independent, and a distinct country from Mexico, as all the members of the congress elected, belong to the place.

Colonel Paraza was sent by the Yucatan government on the 28th ult., as commissioner to Texas, relative to the mutual defence of the two republics against the fleet which Mexico is now preparing for the blockade of their coast. Of this fleet two iron steamers are building in England, to be ready next January, and two schooners at Brown & Bell's yard, New York, to be ready in sixty days. And that government recently purchased a fine Spanish brig at Vera Cruz, which is now ready for service. How long will this fleet remain in the hands of the Mexicans?

TEXAS.

PUBLIC DEBT.—The whole amount of the national liabilities of Texas, independent of the bonds sold by the loan commissioners, is, as far as the Austin City Gazette can glean from the records of the different offices, in item and amount as follows:—

Audited funds funded,	$79,531 68
Promissory notes funded, previous to the 1st of July, 1841	78,173 39
Land scrip funded,	80,348 32
Eight per cent. bonds,	89,500 00
Promissory notes,	2,944,988 62
Navy drafts,	115,000 00
Interest on 10 per cent. funded debt to 1st November, 1841,	188,658 00
Interest on 8 per cent. bonds to 1st November, 1841,	71,392 00

A pretty heavy debt for a population of 150,000 inhabitants.

IMPORTANT TO EMIGRANTS. We have been favored by a friend with a copy of the "Austin City Gazette," containing "an act for the better regulation of the land grant for the family of the late General, and a short abstract of the provisions of which, may not be unimportant to our readers, especially those preparing to emigrate to that country:—

S. c. 1. provides that each head of a family, (being a free white person) who has emigrated to Texas since January 1, 1840, or may do so previous to January 1, 1842, shall be entitled to a grant of 100 acres of land—provided, he settle and actually reside on the same for three years—cultivate not less than ten acres—and have it surveyed, and plainly marked so as to include his improvements.

S. c. 2. grants to each single man over seventeen years of age, 320 acres of land on the same conditions.

S. c. 3. provides that a patent shall not issue, until the settler has shown by the certificate of the chief justice of the county in which he resides, that he has proved by two good witnesses, that he has complied with this act, made oath to the same himself, and also taken the oath of allegiance to the republic.

Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, authorize the president to make a contract with certain individuals named in the act, for the purpose of colonizing and settling a portion of the vacant and unappropriated land of the republic, and prescribe the manner in which the contract shall be carried into effect. The first three sections contain all that is of interest to the general reader, and emigrants who go on their own account. Those who go under the protection and care of contractors will learn of them the various conditions required.

INDIAN WAR. The following is from the Ozark Eagle, printed at Springfield, Green county, Mo.

By a gentleman just from the Osage nation, we are put in possession of the following letter from Mr. Calloway, sub-agent for the Osages. The letter is addressed to the editors of the Houston (Texas) Telegraph, and is published in this paper at the request of the writer, thinking that by that means the information contained therein would reach the frontiers of Texas sooner than through the medium of the papers of that country, and thus warn them of their dangers:—

Ozark Nation, Aug. 23.

To the editors of the Houston Telegraph:

GENTLEMEN: The Osage people have long since returned from their summer's hunt on the southwestern part of the Grand Prairie, bringing with them two white persons which they purchased from the Cumanches. Indians residing on the Grand Prairie woman, the other a girl of nine or ten years old, said to have been taken from the people of Texas. The Osages says these people have many white prisoners among them. They say further that the Cumanches are only waiting for the leaves to fall from the trees, to make a general attack upon the whole frontier of Texas. Proprietors of the Osage nation made for the Osages to send them four hundred warriors, which the Osages refused on account of their friendship for white people. A pipe has been sent to many, if not all the tribes on this side of the mountains. How far they may succeed time will show alone. We have had applicants for the Osage nation, and some of them are not far from you, but of what precise place, I am unable to learn from the Osages.

The fall season is close at hand, and fearing you might not be apprised of these movements, has induced me to give you this statement, which I now have from the Osage people. I am, with much respect,

Yours, &c. Sub-agent for Osages.

Another gentleman from the same place informs me that he conversed with an Osage chief on this subject, who informed him that there was no doubt about the intentions of the Cumanches. They had sent a pipe to all the adjoining tribes and solicited their co-operation; many of whom had acceded to the proposition. He also said that the Cumanches had already procured the aid of a tribe or band of men who were not Indians, amounting to several hundred. From the description given, our informant supposes them to be either Spaniards or Mexicans. The Cumanches are reported to have some 75 or 100 white men with them, of whom they make servants.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

OFFICIAL.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS it has come to the knowledge of the government of the United States that sundry secret societies, or combinations exist on the northern frontier; that the members of these lodges are bound together by secret oaths; that they have collected fire-arms and other military materials, and secreted them in sundry places; and that it is their purpose to violate the laws of their country by making military expeditions into the territories of the United States; and whereas it is known that the United States are at peace; and whereas it is known that travelling agitators, from both sides of the line, visit these lodges, and harangue the members in secret meeting, stimulating them to illegal acts; and whereas the same persons are known to levy contributions on the ignorant and credulous for their own benefit, thus supporting and enriching themselves by the basest means; and whereas the unlawful intentions of the members of these lodges have already been manifested in an attempt to destroy the lives and property of the inhabitants of Chipewyan, in Canada; and whereas the public property of the British government there being now, therefore, in J. B. TYLER, president of the United States, do issue this my proclamation, admonishing all such evil-minded persons of the condemnation which is certain to overtake them; assuring them that the laws of the United States will be rigidly enforced against their illegal acts; and that if in any lawless incursion into Canada they fall into the hands of the British authorities they will not be reclaimed as American citizens, nor any interference made by this government in their behalf.

And I exhort all well-meaning but deluded persons who may have joined these pledges, immediately to abandon them, and to have nothing more to do with their secret meetings, or unlawful oaths, as they would avoid serious consequences to themselves.— And I respect the intelligent and well-disposed members of the community, from all these unlawful combinations and illegal proceedings, and to assist the government in maintaining the peace of the country against the mischievous consequences of the acts of these violators of the law.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the twenty-fifth day of September, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and of [L. S.] the independence of the United States the sixty-sixth. JOHN TYLER.

By the president:
DANIEL WEBSTER, secretary of state.

PRESIDENT'S INSTRUCTIONS TO THE ACTING POSTMASTER GENERAL.

To the Hon. S. R. HOBBS,

Sir: Information having been received in a form entitled to attention that the postmasters at ~~~~ Pennsylvania, and ~~~~ Ohio, have so far violated the obligations which they implicitly assumed on taking office under my administration, of abstaining from any active participation, or in any way connecting their offices with party politics, or using them for party purposes, I have to request that inquiries shall be instantly instituted into their conduct, and that if the charges against them be found to be true, they be immediately turned out of office, and citizens appointed in their places who will otherwise conduct themselves. The post office department, in all its operations, should be conducted for the single purpose of accomplishing the important objects for which it was established. It should, in an especial manner, so far as practicable, be disconnected from party politics. It was established for specified purposes of equal importance to every citizen. To convert it into an engine of party, to be used for party purposes, is to make it the fruitful source of the most alarming evils. Ransomed as it is, and extended to every neighborhood, into the party of administration, and necessarily of its agents, should be particularly guarded. For a deputy postmaster to use his franking privilege (a privilege bestowed upon him for the sole purpose of exonerating him from oppressive charges in the necessary correspondence of his office) in scattering over the country pamphlets, newspapers and periodicals, in the name of the postmaster, is an abuse of all property, and must not for a day be tolerated. Let this be left to the politicians. I should be happy if one or two examples shall be found sufficient to correct an evil which has so extensively prevailed.

I will take this occasion, also, to add for your instruction, that the appointment to, and continuance in the office of postmaster of any one editing a political newspaper is in the highest degree objectionable. It involves most of the consequences above stated—introduces politics into the post office—diminishes the revenue—and confers privileges on one editor which all cannot enjoy. In a word, it is my fixed purpose, as far as in me lies, to separate the post office department from politics, and bring about that reform which the country has so loudly demanded. JOHN TYLER.

September 28, 1841.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT, OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS.

Collectors.

William Walsten, at Folly Landing, Virginia.
Elias H. Haines, re-appointed at Sandusky, Ohio.

POSTMASTERS.

Littberry H. Mobay, at Louisville, Kentucky, in place of George L. Douglass, resigned; Ezra Duggitt, at Milledgeville, Ga. re-appointed.

THE CABINET. JENCKE McLEAN, we learn from the Cincinnati Chronicle, declines the appointment of secretary of war, conferred upon him by the president.

A Madisonian contains a letter from Lexington, Ky. of Sept. 24, which says: "Gov. WICKLIFFE is now in this city. He will accept the seat in the cabinet tendered him by the president, and will depart for Washington in a fortnight."

THE SECRETARY OF STATE. "Andi alterum patrem." [The attention of the American people is earnestly invited to the following letter. It comes from a distinguished source. We need not say it is written by an able hand—that fact is evident from the force of it. It is a calm statement of facts, defining the position of Mr. Webster, and his conduct in the executive council during the recent trying scenes at the capital, and illustrating the propriety of his present position. We trust that it will receive that grave consideration from the public to which the importance of the subject, and the character of the facts and circumstances it discloses are entitled.]

Washington, September 14.

Your friendship for Mr. Webster, and your solicitude for his fame, induce me, who share with you both these sentiments, to communicate some particulars of his conduct during the recent session just terminated, which evince his patriotism, judgment and devotion at once to the true interests of his party and of the country. I shall tell you nothing which you do not know already; but it may not be unreasonable nor useless, at such a moment as this, to have in your view, and from any wise man, important familiar facts. I confess a desire to see it kept constantly in the public mind, that his counsels and his wishes would have preserved unimpaired, the integrity of the whig party; would have prevented a dissolution of the cabinet, have maintained our official relations to the president, and have carried us through this transaction and the organization of another, undistracted, unalienated and full of reasonable hope.

At the commencement of the session, as before, Mr. Webster desired to see the country provided with a useful bank. This, of course, was to be expected from his whole public life and opinions. Ascertaining the existence of constitutional difficulties in the mind of the president, he assisted to have the bill which the secretary of the treasury was directed to send to the senate as a project, made as perfect as possible, consistent with those difficulties; he endeavored to secure the passage of a personal bill, in order to pass that bill, imperfect though he thought it, and though it was his discomfitedness the introduction of another and different one, which were the best reasons for fear the president would not approve; he favored the attempt of Mr. Rives to restore, by an amendment, the substance of the treasury bill, and the bill of Mr. Ewing, and the bill containing the compromise provision was sent to the executive, he sought to secure his official approval. In all this he manifested that fidelity to the party, delicacy to the president, consideration of unfortunate and unanticipated circumstances, and course pursued of practical politics and good, which this country expected, indeed, from him, but could scarcely expect from any other man.

When the purpose of introducing another bill, after the veto of the first was adopted in congress, Mr. Webster no doubt sought to have it so framed as to avoid the objections of the president; and probably he would have succeeded, had it not been until the appearance of Mr. Bots' letter. From that moment, as you collect from Mr. Ewing's letter, the president manifested great and not unnatural uneasiness and anxiety, and a very strong wish that the whole matter might be laid over until the next session. Mr. Webster, however, was not to be dissuaded, under the circumstances, as did Mr. Ewing, if I understand his letter; and he communicated his opinion and his desire to his friends in congress.—The bill was passed and sent to the president, and then, as Mr. Ewing tells the public, and as I believe the truth to be, Mr. Webster submitted a written or oral argument to the president to persuade him to give it his sanction.

You see, therefore, that if, in this matter, there had been on both sides, or on either side, faults or errors, Mr. Webster did all that he could do—faults that man could do—in the succession of events, to prevent them. Down to the moment when he withdrew and declared his determination not to retire from office, there was no one within or without the whig party who did not appreciate his sound judgment, his perfect fidelity and his admirable counsels. I have not a doubt that the sober second thought of the country will do justice to his conduct. His colleagues have retired, from the same conviction that influenced that portion of the whigs in congress who have persecuted an address to the public to wit—that there no longer exists any hope of a satisfactory arrangement of the question of the bank, under Mr. Tyler's administration. Mr. Webster thinks that the same day will be the day of his trial; and in another sense than they would expect—

No, eede nihil, sed contra auditorio iis.

He thinks there is yet a reasonable chance that the president and his new cabinet, all whigs, selected by a whig, may present such a scheme as shall receive the approval of the whig congress. You see, from his recent letter, that he deems a bank, as he always has done, in some useful form, to be wholly indispensable; and for so great a good he does not think the country ought to be required to wait four years longer. In this hope, and with these opinions, he remains in the cabinet. He remains, perhaps, in which the good president intended to him, and at which Mr. Tyler desires him to remain. He sees, I have reason to believe, no cause to doubt that the president is influenced by a constant regard to the public interests; and to the duties of his great office;—although it is true that schemes of a bank have struck his mind differently at different times, as being within, or not within the constitutional principle he had adopted and avowed. In the considerations suggested in the concluding language of the last veto message, there may perhaps be found for this an explanation and an excuse.

You have, then, in a word, Mr. Webster's whole course on this subject. He thought, as did the entire cabinet, that the project of a bill first sent by Mr. Ewing to the senate, on its call, ought to have been passed in the concluding language of the last veto message, to sign the somewhat different one which, instead of that, congress first sent to him. When the second bill was introduced, he thought it was in such a shape that it would receive the executive approbation; but after the explosion created by Mr. Bots' letter, he strongly advised, as did Mr. Ewing too, that the whole subject should be laid over for three months, to afford time for mature thought, and for collecting the true sense of the country.

Under these circumstances, you will concern with me that Mr. Webster ought to sign whig bills. His personal honor permits and his party duties require it. The measure of doing so—of preserving peace—of quieting the public mind agitated by apprehension of war—of assisting the administration by his wisdom, his experience, his unrivalled ability and his hold on the confidence of the country—these all are in his hands; and they impose a responsibility which he would not evade if he could, and which, if he would not do it, I verily believe that his retirement from the cabinet at such a moment as this would produce such an impression on the north and east of the uncertainty of our foreign relations, as greatly to diminish the chances of obtaining the restoration of the republic to the whig party in the country, then, if not for himself, let him remain. "In all exertions of duty something must be hazarded."

[New York Commercial Advertiser.

HENRY CLAY. The whigs of Baltimore sent a committee to Washington, with a written invitation to this distinguished senator, to accept of some public demonstration of regard on his arrival in the Monumental city, to which Mr. Clay made the following reply:

Washington, 14th Sept. 1841.

GENTLEMEN: In the midst of preparations for my departure from my home, I have been invited by the gentlemen who have done me the honor to wait upon me, your obliging communication bearing date this day, transmitting a resolution adopted at a public meeting held in Baltimore yesterday, by which it is proposed to distinguish my expected arrival in the city, by a series of public demonstrations, to pray you gentlemen, and those who coalesce with them, to accept my grateful and respectful acknowledgments for this new and gratifying proof of attachment and confidence. I should embrace, with pleasure, the opportunity of visiting your city at this time, but jaded as I am, by the arduous labors of the session of congress just concluded, and sharing, with the companions of my journey, an eager anxiety to terminate it, without delay, I regret that I must postpone a visit to your city to some future day.

If gentlemen, all, has not been accomplished at this late season, or, much more has been effected than I anticipated at its commencement. If we have been greatly disappointed in the failure of repeated attempts to establish a sound currency, regulate exchanges, and separate the purse from the sword, of American citizens, who will say, on that account, surrender himself to the violence of an ignominious despair? Who will say that we will persevere, with redoubled courage, until every remaining object of the glorious revolution of November last shall be completely consummated? Shall we be discouraged because one man presumes to set up his individual views, and to oppose the views of the nation, in the contrary, let us superadd to the previous duties which we lie under to our country, that of pluckiness from the constitution this sign of arbitrary power, this odious but obsolete vestige of royal prerogative. Let us, by a suitable amendment to that instrument, declare that the veto, that power and that source of all our public ills—shall itself be overruled by majorities in the two houses of congress. They would persuade us that it is harmless, because its office is preventive or conservative! As if a nation might not be as much injured by the arrest of the enactment of good laws as by the promulgation of bad ones!

I am, gentlemen, greatly deceived, notwithstanding the astounding developments recently made, if the whig cause is not stronger than it ever was.—

Resting, as it does, upon truth, sound policy and enlightened views, its votaries need be false and faithless, if it does not gloriously triumph, notwithstanding any temporary disappointment.

Accept, gentlemen, assurances of the high regard and esteem of your friend and obedient servant,

H. CLAY.

Messrs. Robert Gilmer, &c.

FREE DUTIES. Table of the articles imported in 1839 free of duty, to be continued free under the revenue bill.

	For the use of the U. States	459	—
For societies, &c.	60,423	—	—
Specimens of botany	5,087	—	—
Anatomical preparations	1,356	—	—
Antimony	13,667	—	—
Splinter	136,965	—	—
Burr stones, wrought	46,417	563	—
Brimstone	101,164	1,320	—
Block of cork tree	6,544	—	—
Clay, unworked	6,737	—	—
Rags	558,318	495	—
Undressed furs	881,735	37,422	—
Hides and skins raw	1,158,629	80,183	—
Plaster of Paris	197,714	—	—
Barilla	150,637	—	—
Dye wood	586,450	769,841	—
Animals for breed	60,824	—	—
Old pewter	44	—	—
Tin, in pigs, &c.	1,447,255	33,298	—
Brass	2,406	—	—
Copper	1,818,893	552,538	—
Cold and silver	5,555,179	5,865,603	—
Tea	2,421,864	64,277	—
Coffee	9,743,103	737,618	—
Wool, at 8 cents	507,620	721	—
Quicksilver	215,600	217,292	—
Crude saltpetre	369,152	6,301	—

These tables show very nearly what will be the operations of the tariff, in regard to articles heretofore free. The whole imports in 1840 were near 70,000,000 less than in 1839 and having the estimate of the imports of 1840, the department computed the revenue to be derived from the new bills at $3,783,382. The imports have, however, scarcely ever been so low as during the past year; probably a medium would be nearer the truth say, $5,719,602. This is more than sufficient to meet the wants of an economical government, and will undoubtedly fall so far below the views of the present congress, that fresh burdens will be imposed, and the foreign commerce become as fluctuating as a paper currency.

[Herald.]

DARING OUTRAGE! Our territory invaded, and an American citizen kidnapped by British armed soldiers. The New Hampshire Patriot of Sept. 21st says, "Since the announcement in our last paper of the gross outrage committed upon our rights as a nation, and upon the lives and liberty of individuals, in the forcible seizure and abduction of Col. James W. Grogan, we have been able to gather further testimony in relation to the affair, which we less no time in presenting to our readers. As might have been anticipated, such an outrage could not but be followed by the exasperation and excitement of the people, and it is highly creditable to our fellow townsmen that immediately upon the arrival of the news of Col. Grogan's seizure, they made due preparations for the procurement of indisputable facts which they might lay before the governor of Vermont and the proper authorities at Washington. At a large and respectable meeting at the court house, on the 21st and 22d ultimo, the public sentiment was manifested and facts and resolutions were presented for the consideration of the people generally.

The committee appointed to collect testimony relative to this illegal transaction, reported on Wednesday evening, and read to a very large audience sundry affidavits, the substance of which we are about to communicate to our readers. These affidavits indicate plainly that rumor had not magnified the atrocity of the act.

It appears from one of the affidavits that on the 19th inst. there were present at the tavern of J. M. Sowles, at Alburch, a short distance this side of the line sundry persons from Canada, in company with James W. Grogan, among them a man in a dragoon uniform, Grogan to drink, and was particularly attentive to him, so much so that his countenance became suspicious. The suspicious were communicated to Grogan, and he was advised that a plan was about to kidnap him, and to transport him to Canada. Grogan finally following the lead of the man in dragoon uniform, went to Alburch city, so called, and afterwards went to pass the night at the house of Wm. Brown, his brother-in-law, who resides about three miles from the boundary line.

From the affidavit of another, it appears that Wm. Brown and his wife were awakened about 2 o'clock in the morning of Monday, the 20th September, by a noise occasioned by the breaking open, and forcible entrance of a gang of armed men, who were calling to him, "Come, come, fifteen or more, were in the uniform of British soldiers, and, as could be seen by the lantern they carried, fully armed. Mr. Brown sprang from the bed upon perceiving the intruders, and was met at the door of his sleeping room by a British ruffian, who presented his gun and bayonet, and ordered him to remain quiet. Mr. Brown called aloud to his sons, who were sleeping above, and was threatened by the soldier that he would certainly be shot unless he desisted speaking. The remainder of the night rushed into the adjoining room, where Col. Grogan was sleeping, crying out as they entered, "Here he is—here he is! Shoot him—blow him—blow his brains out." They seized him and dragged him from his bed, and carried him by force through the house, and conveyed him to the road, where there were vehicles in readiness to take him across the line. Mr. Brown testifies that he was apparently strangled, so that he could neither speak, or make even a show of resistance.

It appears from another affidavit, that the son of Mr. Wm. Brown came down at his father's call as soon as he could put on his clothes, and was met by one of the British dragoons—an Irishman, as he thought—who cocked his gun and ordered him to get up, or he would shoot him. Soon after they had got up with Grogan, young Mr. Brown discovered a drab-colored hat, a British bayonet, and a cotton handkerchief, which they dropped in the hurry of their proceedings. Soon after daylight a British dragoon was seen riding through the house of Mr. Brown, apparently in search of the articles which he had lost, and accidentally lost. As soon as he saw he was discovered, he ran his horse back to her majesty's dominions.

From another affidavit, it appears that a gentleman going from Clarencetown to Missisquoi Bay overtook a wagon, in which was James W. Grogan, 4 armed soldiers and a driver, and 4 mounted dragoons riding and keeping guard by the wagon. When they arrived at the mouth of the river, they ordered the wagon to the Bay, Grogan remained in the wagon, surrounded by a strong guard in front of the guard house, for about a quarter of an hour, after which he was ordered into the guard house, and from thence was taken to Montreal. Grogan appeared badly wounded, and was confined to his room very many days, and was with great difficulty he could walk or step. The party that brought him to the guard house from Alburch was formally dismissed in true military style, by Sergeant Reed, who belongs to Captain Jones' company of light dragoons in her majesty's service. It is reported at Missisquoi Bay, that the provisions of the transaction above detailed, Captain Jones had been heard to say, that he had despatched a squad of men after Col. Grogan, and that Grogan would, without fail, be taken that night.

The substance of the above affidavits (save one) was read aloud at the meeting held at St. Albans, on the evening of the 22d, and upon the correctness of the facts no doubt need be entertained. They are proof indisputable that an armed force of her majesty's service—acting by command of superior officers in the service of her majesty—entered upon our territory, and committed a gross outrage upon James W. Grogan, a natural born American citizen, who was the innocent of all the rights of a citizen of the United States. The affidavits establish, beyond a cavil, that this outrage was premeditated and brutal beyond comparison—that our territory has been invaded and all law and right been ruthlessly disregarded and trampled upon. This being the fact, it was obligatory upon us to search out testimony to establish the assertion, and to transmit it to the proper authorities, with a full and proper representation of the time, and place, and nature of the outrage. This has been promptly done, and we anticipate such a notice of it as its extreme heinousness demands. The facts have been forwarded to Washington, and to our governor; and we doubt not measures will be taken to demand redress for this insult, and to rescue us from a repetition of an offence which debases even those British soldiers who disgraced humanity by their barbarity and cruelty in the late Canadian insurrection.

Of the state of excitement, which the above transaction was so well calculated to inflame, we may judge by the tenor of the following, from a correspondent of the Boston Mail:

SWANTON, FALLS, (Vt.) Sept. 24.

Great excitement in this northern town, in consequence of the abduction of Colonel Grogan—Public meeting and retaliatory measures. I have just returned from a boat excursion to the Isle of Motte, and I find that the excitement among the people of Grand Isle county in consequence of the recent abduction of Colonel Grogan from Alburch, is of the most intense description. Public meetings have been held at St. Albans, Alburch, and several other places, at which strong resolutions were passed, with great unanimity, ensuring that the act referred to, and pledging the members to be ready at a moment's warning to repel any further incursions of the British troops.

The feeling in this section of the country against her majesty's government in Canada is very strong, and has been kept alive for the last few years by the patriot movements and the outrages which have been committed upon our people, with great unanimity, more than they seem willing peaceably to withstand. There are a great many private depositories of arms and ammunition in this section, and I have no doubt that an army of five thousand volunteers for the invasion of Canada could be raised in a fortnight, if it was thought the general and state governments would not interfere.

It is said that papers have been circulated among those known to be opposed to the British government in Canada, pledging them to some hostile movement or other; and I have no doubt that a rescue of Col. Grogan is contemplated, though it may be carried out. We have as good a right to march to Montreal as the British have had to march to Alburch.

I think you will be interested in the movement in this quarter shortly. The old sleep Gleaner recently left St. Albans in the night for North Hero or the Vineyard, and it is whispered that she was loaded with arms, &c. A secret society, the object of which is supposed to be another attempt at revolution in Canada, has existed for some time all along the frontier, from the "Indian Stream" in New Hampshire to Detroit, and unless our state and national governments take strong measures to curb the factious spirit, the most fearful consequences may ensue.

The Montreal Herald without noticing the manner of the arrest of Grogan, says: "We are happy to learn that a man, Grogan, notorious during the border disturbances, is in Canada, has been arrested and lodged in jail. But from a series of papers drawn up in consequence of the trial of West, (which we will publish as soon as possible) we fear that this man also will, by the grossest perjury, be able to evade justice."

The Madisonian significantly remarks, that "the state of facts upon which the president's timely proclamation is predicated, would astonish the people of the United States, were the details spread before them. To say the least, they indicate the necessity of great prudence and judgment to preserve the peace of the country."

ARMED FORCES ON THE LAKES. A treaty or arrangement was made in 1817 between the two countries, by which it was stipulated that the naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes by the respective parties, should thereafter be confined to the following vessels on each side: "On Lake Ontario, one vessel not exceeding one hundred tons burden, and armed with an eighteen pound cannon.

"On the Upper Lakes, two vessels not exceeding like burden, and armed with like force.

"On the waters of Lake Champlain, one vessel not exceeding like force, and armed with like force."

It was further agreed that if either party should thereafter be desirous of annulling the agreement, and should give six months' notice to that effect, the agreement should cease to be binding after the expiration of the six months. The British government gave notice of a large armament of American ships in November 1838, that that government had found it necessary to increase their armament on the lakes.

OUR TRADE WITH THE SANDWICH ISLAND AND NORTH WEST COAST. The Boston Mercantile Journal says the fur trade on the north west coast, afforded for many years a profitable trade for a large number of American ships. But the Hudson Bay company have proved themselves too powerful for American traders to contend with, and they have completely driven the American trade from the coast; not an American vessel has made a voyage there in the fur trade for several years, and our government has called for a large number of American ships to be sent to that coast as a nation, to that important part of our domain, and protect our trade. Plans are laid, and means are now in operation, for destroying our greatly diminishing trade at the Sandwich Islands, which may be successful.

The following extracts of letters dated in March last from a respectable mercantile house at the Sandwich Islands, show the state and prospect of trade there, and the means used by the British consul, by the agent of the Hudson Bay company, and others to effect their object:

"The English make their boast, that they will destroy the Yankee trade here by underselling them. The English briggs, Trimble, from Liverpool, and Wave, from London, with full and well selected cargoes, arrived here the 23d and 26th ult. This country is inundated with goods of all sorts, and prices have very much fallen. Do not make any further shipments until a more favorable change."

"Never, since my acquaintance here, has there been so many goods in store here, California, and all the Russian ports are well supplied, and there is a panic among purchasers here; (the retailers are all well supplied). The ship Morea arrived here the 26th ult. and brig Luna, 7th inst. There is enough goods here to supply the market for a year and a half or more."

"Beside the ship Gloucester, and another ship from Boston, ship Europa, and barque Don Quixote, from Valparaiso, and brig Joseph Peabody, from China are all expected soon. In fact the market is completely glutted, and bad prospects in view."

"The Sandwich Islands are likely to be well supplied in addition to the above vessels expected there at that time, three ships have sailed for those Islands this season, already with full cargoes, and three or four others are expected to leave here this fall, if they can get cargoes, for the same place."

[N. Y. Times.]

THE SANTA FE EXPEDITION. The San Antonio City Gazette states that a letter has been received there from an American resident at Santa Fe, which says that the citizens were anxiously expecting the expedition. The writer further adds—"We have been looking for some news from Texas, because every American and more than two-thirds of the Mexicans, and all the Pueblo Indians are with us heart and soul, and whenever they have heard of your sending troops there has been a rejoicing; and, indeed, I have talked many times with the governor, and he says he would be glad to see the day of our arrival in this country, as he feels well assured that no aid will be sent from below, as they have no means and he himself will offer no resistance."

The Gazette urges the Texian merchants to make an effort to secure the Santa Fe trade, and estimates the amount annually paid to the United States or its agents for goods at about a million dollars. The Gazette insists, naturally belongs to Texas. Some valuable gold mines have been discovered at Santa Fe which yielded, for the six months ending March 1st, over $300,000. The Santa Fe expedition had not succeeded in meeting the Indians, though they proceeded to the place where they were represented to be assembled in force. They found the crops gathered and the village deserted.

The different parties had also returned to Austin without meeting any Indians, although they heard of them every where.

THE SMITHSONIAN BEQUEST. One of the most reprehensible movements of the late administration of the United States treasury, and the more to be complained of from the fact that it was in opposition to the professed principles of the party then in power, is the investment in state bonds of the Smithsonian bequest, that magnificent fund bequeathed to the city of Washington for purposes of education, instead of its being held in trust by the government. The following are the amounts loaned to the states, and the premium paid by each, to which we have also added the loss by the depreciation of the credit of the states and the contraction of the currency, as shown by the market rates of the stocks of those states:

	Premium.	Amount of loan.	Loss by depreciation.
Arkansas, ...	$500	$500,000	$25,000
" " " " " " " "	4,500	10,000	4,500
" " " " " " " "	162	13,000	162
" " " " " " " "	4,445	15,000	6,750
Illinois, ...	7,020	26,000	13,000
" " " " " " " "	1,777	6,000	3,000
" " " " " " " "	4,800	24,000	12,000
Michigan, ...		5,000	3,300
Ohio, ...	1,020	15,000	3,600

*For this loan a premium was paid by the government of 270

From which deduct premiums received,

$77,270

19,724

And the total loss to the fund is $257,546

Another matter highly important in this question is that, in case it should be requisite to call in this fund, or the remnant that is left of it, here are four large states interested to use their votes and influence against its return to the treasury. The policy of looking upon the states as creditors, we have ever looked upon as but little, if any better than a gift, and as a system studiously to be avoided.

[Phil. Ledger.]

FOREIGN CRIMINALS. It is well known that every arrival here from Europe, brings to our city many foreigners who have been compelled to fly from their country on account of crimes committed at home. These criminals mix with the honest and industrious emigrants, and it is difficult to find them out, notwithstanding accurate descriptions of the persons of these criminals have been forwarded by the police officers of Europe.

It has been the great surprise to our police, that these criminals, on their landing go as direct "as the carrier pigeon" to the haunts of rogues and thieves in this city: which clearly and conclusively proves they have been in correspondence with thieves already settled here, and probably come over by invitation, aware of the indifference of our police establishment. Several English police officers, at different periods, have visited the United States on business, and have recognized the runaways by the dozen, in New York and Philadelphia. An intelligent officer is shortly expected here from London—and if the police of this city are disposed, they may derive much useful information from him, as he has been an active agent at "Bow street," and a travelling officer of the Peel police for thirteen years. The writer will inform the police on the arrival of the officer, that they may realise the advantages referred to. [N. Y. Times.]

THE ARMY.

GEN. WOOL, the successor of Gen. Scott, was appointed inspector general in 1816, and since that time he has discharged the duties with distinguished honor to himself and his country. The office is oftentimes beset with hardships and perils. Gen. Wool has encountered many while on official duty, but he has never been deterred from his friendly aid or the physician's skill. It is in that lone region, where the services of an inspector are most needed, that this gallant officer has often periled his life in the vigilant discharge of his duties. Gen. Wool resides at Troy, N. Y., where he sustains all the relations of an excellent citizen as well as those of a general officer.

[Phil. A. American.]

THE NORTHERN FRONTIER. The Madison states that the United States troops recently sent to New York, were not intended for Utica but were ordered to Rome to protect the property of the United States, consisting of several thousand stand of arms, &c. a measure judged to be necessary on information and advice received by the government. The same paper says that the federal government has no desire to assume a position that bayonet warfare is necessary to enforce a due administration of justice.

FORTIFICATION AT NEW BEDFORD. The New Bedford Register informs us that Lieut. Stevens of the engineer corps, arrived at that place on Saturday, and that, under his direction, operations are to be commenced immediately upon the old fort in that harbor.

SURVEY. We learn that Major Bahe, of the topographical engineers, with his party, will commence a survey of the Patuxet river in a few days. This we presume is the preliminary step to the location for a fort on Sallards' date, or wherever the board of engineers may deem the most important to be.

[Baltimore American.]

SCENES. A correspondent of the Savannah Georgian writes—"Lieut. Thayer, 2d dragoons, a very promising young officer, committed suicide at Pilatka on the afternoon of the 16th ultimo, by blowing his brains out with a carbine. There is something, says our correspondent, in the nature of this war calculated to produce despondency and the suicidal idea. From my remembrance, says he, four have committed self-murder, viz. Capt. Lane, Lieutenants Wheelock, Hughes and Thayer. A list of those of our army who have died or been killed during this Florida war, will astonish you and the country."

WILD CAT. We take from the New Orleans Crescent City, of the 29th, the following description of Coa-coo-chee, or Wild Cat, the celebrated Indian chief, recently captured in Florida, and at last taken to New Orleans. [Cleveland Tr.] His dress consisted of a red cloth tunic, richly ornamented with parti colored beads, open at the neck so as to display his insignia of superiority, which is nothing more than a silver medal, bearing on one side a full length bust of the celebrated king Philip, harranguing a circle of his warriors, and upon the reverse a chief of the Narragansetts calmly surveying the lightning as it flashes around him, while his foot is placed upon the neck of a Moha-cie. This medal is suspended from a circle of eagle's talons, curiously interwoven with the skin of a spotted snake, upon a ground of dark blue cloth. Large silver ornaments are in his ears, and a fillet of the same metal set with red and black beads, encircles his head almost as a tiara. On the back of the scalp three large black ostrich plumes are sewed into a band going round underneath the fillet. The belt to which his quiver is attached, and that going round his body, are both made of wampum. A pouch hangs at his side, made of the skin of a young panther. His legs up to now are encased in leggings of tanned deer skin, and his feet encased in moccasins of the same material. In height he is about five feet ten, and from appearance one would take him for a Peruvian Adonis, rather than a cold-blooded murderer. He has a most pleasing expression of countenance, and is perfectly symmetrical in proportions. A dark, mellow eye, with the organ of language very large, a handsome nose, and a mouth expressing strong determination, completes his appearance.

When we were presented to him he scarcely looked up; but upon offering him our hand, he nodded his head, uttered a low "ugh!" and returned the grasp with a cordial pressure. He then rose up, and stepped over to some one upon a deer skin, and appeared totally unconscious of there being any one in the room besides himself. Seventeen of his followers, among them his brother and two of his negroes, are confined in the room with him. One of them, a gigantic fellow of about six feet and six inches, Tagin-nah-see, or "the black back," has a "black back blood," was the ugliest looking fellow that we ever saw. A pair of sleepy black eyes, denoting ferocity of disposition, a bull-dog neck, and a thick pair of brutal lips, put us in mind of the adage, "familiarity breeds contempt;" so we thought best not to feel his pulse, and we didn't either.

We were informed by one of the soldiers who captured him, that he was attached to the guard on board the Walter Ann, that Wild Cat is a most humane, generous man, and withal a brave and determined warrior. As for the murders which the newspapers said he "had exulted in," we believe it is all moonshine, as our informant tells us there is not a chief in eastern Florida who has shed more blood than Wild Cat. He is represented as living in style in his own country, and has a number of negro slaves; forty or fifty horses; and, to cap the climax, is married to a lovely Indian girl! An anecdote is related of him by one of the soldiers, while on board the vessel. It was a beautiful moonlight night, and our informant was standing upon the clear floor of the gulf, making it appear as though the gallant vessel was ploughing her way over a carpet of blue and gold. Coa-coo-chee was standing upon the deck with his arms folded, and his noble countenance turned toward the sky. A soldier approached and asked him what he was thinking on. He replied, in his native tongue—"My eyes look at the dim light hung where Manito rules—my body goes to rot in the dungeon of the white man, but my heart is in the bosom of my bride! Ca-lu-hoe!" continued he, while his chest heaved with the deep feelings of his soul, "Ca-lu-hoe! may the flowers on thy grave grow where the pale flowers of the sun have faded! Ca-lu-hoe! the name of a former wife, which, being interpreted means "Music of the Snow."

REMINISCENCES. CAPT. THOMAS HARRISON, A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, who signs himself "A visitor at Washington," says—

"Among the pleasing incidents which often occur to those who visit the city of Washington, is the one not uncommon, of meeting those gallant men who, in times that tried the nation's souls, have given evidence of their devotion to their country."

"A few days since, I fell in with a person of this description, in capt. THOMAS HARRISON, of Boston. As he raised his hand, I perceived it had been shattered by the fire of our enemies; as he stepped on one side, I saw that a cannon ball had executed its mischievous office, and that the noble man was ready to fall for life. As I had forgotten the circumstances under which these mutilations occurred, I made some inquiry, and found that the post of danger and of honor had been more usually the lot of Capt. Harrison. His company, distinguished in general orders by General Scott, was the first to reach the shore of Fort Erie. He was a volunteer under Gen. Fike, and received two wounds while performing his duty. At Sacket's Harbor, his right arm was shattered; at the capture of Fort Erie, a shell exploded and he was again severely injured. At Chippewa, that memorable and glorious field, a musket shot passed through his foot, and a few moments afterwards a cannon shot perfected the dismemberment of the whole limb. Captain Harrison, however, all bleeding and suffering as he was, refused to quit the ground, but continued to cheer on his company, and continued in its command until the day was won. Well might Gen. Scott speak of this "glorious display of fortitude." It was a specimen of the valor of a true-hearted American.

In rescuing these facts from oblivion, I feel that I perform an act of justice only, happy to become their brief chronicler."

THE NAVY.

The U. S. Phoenix, passed midshipman Nolan, commanding, sailed from Norfolk, on 23d ult. for Florida.

TEMPERANCE REFORM. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, says: On Sunday afternoon last the rev. Geo. C. Brooke delivered a temperance lecture in the market house, navy yard, in his usual happy and impressive manner; he, the course of his remarks he acknowledged the receipt of a letter from an officer of the marine corps, stationed on board the Delaware, which stated that the marines were faithful to the officers of the vessel, and that they received the high commendation of the commodore and other officers of the ship. Nor are the gallant tars attached to that noble vessel found wanting in that glorious cause. I am informed, that nearly the whole crew have signified their desire to relinquish the daily allowance of grog and receive its place in an industrious life. This determination, on the part of our sailors and soldiers, sheds the sheer anchor of our country's safety.

NAVY PENSIONS. The act recently passed by congress, providing for the payment of navy pensions, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the sum of one hundred and thirty-nine thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and six cents is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to receive the payment of pensions and half pay chargeable on the navy pension fund; provided, that all widows or children of all naval officers, seamen or marines now deceased, and entitled to receive or make proof of their pensions under the act of the third of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, shall receive the same until the close of the next session of congress; but no widow or children of any naval officer, seaman or marine who may hereafter die shall be entitled to any pension by virtue only of any provision in the said act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no officer, seaman or marine entitled to a pension from the navy pension fund, who receives pay from the public treasury, shall receive more from the said fund than is sufficient to make the whole amount received from both the above named sources equal to the pay fixed by law for the grade to which the officer, seaman or marine may belong, as an officer in the services in which he may be engaged during the war; and no officer shall receive pay at the same time both as a pensioner and an officer in service.

COMMODORE PERRY THE HERO OF LAKE ERIE. The New York Herald states that the remains of Commodore Perry were removed from the grave where they have remained since they were brought from Trinidad, to their new and final resting place, at the side of the monument, which is to be at once completed, under the direction of a committee of statesmen. The outside coffin was almost entirely decayed, leaving the leaden case exposed to view.

SINGULAR CASE OF OBTAINING EVIDENCE IN THE NAVY SERVICE. Under this head the Boston Mercantile Journal contains a long article, in which the secretary of the navy and Commodore Wilkinson are severely censured for their connection with a proceeding which recently took place on board of some of the United States vessels in Boston harbor. The facts in the case, as set forth in the Mercantile, are as follows:

In the early part of August, a communication dated on board the U. S. frigate Macedonian, appeared in a New York paper, in which the character of Commodore Wilkinson was dealt with—"The commodore" was represented as a man of no education to be one of the officers of the squadron, and for the purpose of obtaining positive proof of the fact he applied to the secretary of the navy for authority to require every officer under his command to say, upon his honor, whether he wrote the communication. The secretary immediately granted this authority, and on the 25th ult. the officers having been assembled on board of the Macedonian, the commodore proceeded to put the proposed interrogatory. The first lieutenant, the chaplain, and the midshipmen attached to the ship, answered the question in the affirmative; but six commissioned officers, and the acting master of the ship, refused to answer at all.—On the same day the question was proposed to the officers of the ship Warren, and with the exception of Commander Jameson, one midshipman, and one forward officer, all declined answering. The officers who refused to answer the interrogatory, have forwarded their reasons for so doing to the department. They disclaim, in the most positive terms, being influenced in their proceeding, in this matter by anything bordering on insubordination, or disrespect to the secretary of the navy, or the commodore, but they conceive that by replying to the question they should relinquish that right guaranteed to every American citizen, by which he is protected from all compulsion to give testimony which might tend to criminate himself against such a question, proposed in such a manner, may be regarded as an accusation of having committed the offence complained of, and a demand of each officer to plead guilty or not guilty; also, that an answer to this question would admit a principle, establishing a precedent, and perhaps a rule, which might be made an instrument of oppression and of oppression; that the establishment of such a rule would destroy all professional pride, and banish from the service a proper esprit de corps; and that the object of the interrogatory being to learn the author with a view to his punishment, the effect, if any officer in the squadron committed the offence, would be to humiliate him by being tried, and rob him of his right to keep his own secret,—here the matter, for the present, rests.

STATES OF THE UNION.

COMPARATIVE TABLE, SHOWING THE MONEY VALUE OF THE AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY OF THE SEVERAL STATES OF THE UNION.

In the September number of Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, is a table furnished for publication in that journal, by the secretary of state, showing the amount, in quantity, of the agricultural products of the union. This table does not, however, include Kentucky, the southern counties of Michigan, Wisconsin, or Florida; Kentucky and Middle Florida had not sent in their returns; and the aggregate from the southern states had not been made up.

With the aid of this table we have made an estimate of the money value of the several products, and have placed the result side by side with the population of each state respectively, to show the yield per head, in round numbers.

	Value.	Population.	Per head.
Maine	$34,730,000	581,773	$69
New Hampshire	55,703,000	284,574	90
Vermont	35,327,000	201,948	148
Massachusetts	88,800,000	737,609	38
Rhode Island	3,755,800	168,580	54
Connecticut	29,245,000	309,488	74
New York	238,800,000	2,498,921	98
New Jersey	35,911,000	273,303	95
Pennsylvania	136,249,000	1,724,033	79
Delaware	6,637,000	109,355	75
Maryland	48,466,200	429,257	72
Virginia	102,177,000	1,399,795	83
South Carolina	49,117,800	594,398	82
Georgia	58,300,000	691,392	85
Ohio	84,507,000	1,519,467	55
Tennessee	73,130,000	1,028,310	88
Alabama	57,066,000	555,000	100
Florida	44,776,000	900,756	71
Mississippi	41,773,000	375,601	111
Missouri	22,309,000	383,702	58
Indiana	47,859,000	685,866	69
Illinois	35,364,500	476,183	74
Arkansas	10,536,000	97,574	108
Louisiana	28,777,000	269,300	107
Dist. of Columbia	352,000	43,712	7

It will be seen by the foregoing that only four states produce more than $100 to each head of the population—viz. Vermont, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana.—Of these Vermont takes the lead; and the next is Mississippi, followed by Arkansas, and then Louisiana. Massachusetts is lowest in the scale; but that state is engaged extensively in commerce and manufactures.

The states most devoted to planting and farming, or those products chiefly agricultural, are, Louisiana, the southern and western. All the New England and middle states, as also Ohio are very considerable manufacturers, and the most of them have a large commercial and navigation interest—causes which operate to draw away hands from agriculture.

The average productions per capita are $77.50.—Fourteen members of the union live above this average, the remaining ten below it.

We hope it will not be long before the public is favored with complete corrected statements, showing the results of the whole productive industry of the country. It will furnish a mass of facts, which, in many points of view, may well be considered, as invaluable. The difference which may be visible between the productions of the several states will perhaps have to be accounted for by something besides disparities in population. In other words, the homely question may come up: "Do they work it right?" And the answer may be of some service.

[Cincinnati Gazette.]

NEW YORK.

Hon. JOHN C. CLARK, representative of the Chango district in congress, has issued an address to his constituents upon the present aspect of our public affairs. It is condemnatory of the president.

RESIGNATION. The New York Commercial Advertiser says the hon. JOHN GREIG, of Cananagau, has resigned his seat in congress as a member from the county of Ontario. Mr. Greig, it will be remembered, was elected to congress last spring, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Granger, on his appointment to the office of postmaster general. Now that circumstances have brought Mr. Granger back again among his constituents, as a private citizen, Mr. Greig has determined to give those constituents an opportunity of sending Mr. Granger, who is their best choice, back again to the house of representatives.

A CAPTURE. Yesterday, deputy sheriff Snyder, while in the discharge of his duty at Bern, was seized by the Helderberg "Indians." They intend, it is said, to deliver him to the authorities of Schoharie, where some legal process is out against him. As he was expected to be an important witness in the legal proceedings that are soon to be commenced against some of the Helderberg men, his capture has not been taken for the purpose of securing his absence.

[Albany Argus.]

HELOREBERG WAR. The difficulties between the Patron and his tenants, is renewed. We have, by the last mail, accounts of arrests—forcible rescue—intimidation of the sheriff—&c. &c.

DISSENT. Of a malignant character is prevailing in some of the river counties above the Highlands—and also typhus and bilious fevers.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CANDIDATES. W. B. Reed, esq. who had been nominated by the whig convention of Philadelphia as the candidate against Secord, in the election for U. S. house of representatives, not only declined the nomination but also declined at the same time his seat in the senate of the state. Joseph R. Ingersoll, esq. has since been nominated.

GIRARD FUND. Among the liabilities of the late United States bank is the sum of $1,300,000, loaned to the institution by the city of Philadelphia. It formed part of the bequest of Girard, which the city held in trust for the foundation and endowment of the Girard Orphan Asylum.

MARYLAND.

HER POSITION AND RESOURCES. A review of the position and resources of the state of Maryland is, at the present moment, an interesting theme, which no one of her citizens can well be indifferent to. With but transient exceptions, up to this period, the revenue of the state has always been adequate to meet the current expenditures of its government, without the necessity of resorting to direct taxation. But now, although those resources remain in hand, as productive as heretofore, yet the legislature, at their last session, found it necessary to lay a direct tax on the people. Why this? What has rendered this necessary? What good is to result from paying it? How long is it to be exacted?—are questions that all are interested in.

We inserted in the REGISTER, in February last, a number of statistical facts in relation to this state—its population, its resources, its late census, together with some reflections which an examination of those statements then suggested—entertaining a hope that some of the many public spirited and well-qualified men of the state would devote sufficient leisure to so interesting a thesis, as to present a full and accurate statement of the attitude of Maryland at this moment, in the cause of her involvements—her means to meet the exigency—and her prospects in encountering her present difficulties. But as yet we have been disappointed in this hope—and now submit a few of our own hurried and undigested remarks thereon, as an apology for your visit, and ought to be said in connection with a large and important subject.

MARYLAND—however another state may have run off with the application—is, in reality, the centre or "key-stone state" of this union: as, between the northern and southern states, as, she is classed as often and as appropriately, perhaps, with the one as with the other. By those who assume that the Potomac is the dividing line on the eastern side of the Alleghenies, as the Ohio is admitted to be, upon the western side, she is classed as a northern state—others, insisting that “Mason and Dixon's line” is the true demarcation, attach Maryland to the southern states. As a desirable ground of settlement, if not of a neutral ground—upon many topics which are supposed to divide the interests and opinions of the people of the two sections of this confederation, MARYLAND must be an object of attention to the whole union. The data for reflection, upon one of the most exciting topics which this position involves, we gave in the preceding number of the REGISTER, and we repeat it in this, also, for the sake of reference. [They will be found in the concluding number of the REGISTER, vol. 59.] That topic it is not our present purpose to touch.

IN POLITICAL RELATIONS Maryland is, in a variety of particulars, an intermediate state. To have the capital of the nation located within what was her territory, and which yet constituted not a part, but a part of her community, is an admission of her central position, of which she may well be proud. What a vast advantage is derived to her people from having a tribute brought up annually from every corner of the union, to the national temple, in which the sanctioned assembly—a body of the ablest and most disinterested men that they are under the necessity of there expending for subsistence, is but the pecuniary consideration; and yet, that should have its weight in the estimate, as furnishing a CASH market for the produce of the surrounding region, of something approaching a million of dollars. But the political advantages, in consequence, when compared with the advantages derived from the association which it affords—may not yet be the education which it insures—to that people amongst whom the most distinguished and talented men from every community, of every section of the union, are concentrated, and bound to sojourn for a considerable part of each year—and those too, renewed year by year, by fresh selections? That the location of a seminary of learning, in any community, has a most powerful influence in elevating the character of the surrounding people, has long been matter of general observation. What superior advantages, then, to the people of this State, in the position which, as a common centre, the best talents of the whole country are attracted, and there retained in the fullest exercise of their highest powers? The executive of the nation—the heads of the several departments—the principal officers of government—the senators, congressmen, and the first men of each state's representatives, clustered from all quarters, the eminent of each district in the union—the supreme court and bar, always of the highest forensic talents known to the country. Such assemblages it is the peculiar fortune of Maryland to have the advantages of, from the location of the seat of the general government—considering the city of Washington, as in all those respects, it may yet fairly be claimed, in part of the Maryland community. To the eloquent voices of such men HER citizens daily listen, and with them mingle and become familiar.

But besides and above these fortuitous advantages, Maryland possesses others, marked out by the kind hand of Providence, and of which no revolution of society can deprive her. Embosoming within her borders one of the most magnificent sheets of navigable water upon this globe, connecting with which, her territory is interspersed with tributary streams that on one hand furnish the safest, quickest and cheapest possible highway to market from almost every plantation of one-half of the state, and on the other, afford a never failing water power, of incalculable value. Her commercial advantages have been proved by the rapid growth of her emporium, which in half a century has increased its population more than seven fold—say from 13,569 in 1790, to 102,513 in 1830. They have been proved by the spirited competition which the state sustains with other commercial states for superiority of tonnage—she now ranks as to number of tons, the fourth state of the union; Maine being the first, N. York the second, and Massachusetts the third. As to her ports, the symmetry of construction and deftness of sailing, the boats of the State surpass, if any are equal to, those of the Chesapeake. The forests of the state of Maryland furnish this day the best timber for ship building, except the live oak, that is to be found in this country.

As to the products of her soil, Maryland may strictly be classed as a southern state in this respect—partaking facilities for the production of almost everything produced in any other state, except rice, indigo and the sugar cane. Even cotton, the proudest staple of the south, was cultivated to some extent in Maryland long before it was attended to in those States, and now it is raised in great quantities.

But besides enjoying a considerable space of seacoast, and much the largest inland coast of any state of this union, with all the advantages derived to her citizens from such position—besides having a larger number of safe harbors for foreign shipping than any other state, those harbors and the ample high way to them, EXTENDS FURTHER INTO THE INTERIOR than that of any other state, and the connection which it is in the power of this state to construct between these cities and the waters of the great western valley, also, and with the waters of the great western lake, are, more direct, more eligible, more practicable than any other route that can be constructed between the Atlantic and that immense region of country which those waters penetrate.

The superiority of the Maryland route of connection between the Atlantic and the west, was clearly conceded, by its being selected for the location of the great national turnpike, now McAdamized road, which by the direction of congress, was started from Cumberland, Alleghany county, Maryland, many years since, and after traversing the mountains by easy ascents, is yet winding its way towards the Rocky mountains. For the construction of this road how many millions of dollars have been appropriated! and appropriations continue to be made every few years. To have the terminus of a highway of such extent as this is, and is to be, within her borders, is of itself a great value, as well as a proof of the eligibility of position.

But it is the superiority of water courses as a thoroughfare for trade, and the fact that the waters of the west and those of the Atlantic approach nearer to each other by the Potomac valley than by any other route, will always render that the most eligible direction for trade.

The precise data which amply sustain the superiority of this route were collected and published before the people of Maryland undertook to make that connection by the artificial highways which she is now constructing. These data have never yet been controverted, and they cannot be.

It was to General GEORGE WASHINGTON himself, as the pioneering engineer of such a project, that the state of Maryland is indebted for the suggestion. He was one of the first of surveyors, as well as of warriors and of statesmen. Gen. George Washington presided in the first internal improvement convention held in the State, and the Trade route which would convene met at the city of Annapolis, perhaps in the year 1785, at any rate immediately after the revolution, for the purpose of promoting the project of improving these peculiar advantages of position. Many of the most eminent men of that day were in that assembly, and the views there presented, the state of Maryland was induced to take up, and to undertake, and at that early period, exhausted as the country then was by the recent struggle for independence, Maryland led the way towards “internal improvements,” fully persuaded of the capacities that nature had stamped upon her position for becoming the favorite depot of the vast trade which would one day find its way across the Alleghany ridge and connect the millions of people that would inhabit each side of the mountains. Large expenditures were authorised by the legislature to improve those facilities.

If we mistake not, the old Maryland canal was the first canal constructed in this country. But it was with a view to an improvement of the Potomac, and the Potomac river that the principle expenditure was then authorised by the state. So little, however, did the people of this country then know of the science of internal improvements, that it is not to be wondered at that the details of those new enterprises should be so entirely unfortunate. The attempt to make the bed of the Potomac river navigable, cost the treasury of the state of Maryland of the then very formidable sum of $140,000, without realising any benefit whatever.

Nor was the next project in which some of her citizens were induced to embark, with others of the adjacent States, Delaware and Maryland, fortunate. The inhabitants of that part of the two States which lies between Elk River, leading into the head of the Chesapeake, and the Delaware bay, caught at the idea of connecting the two bays by a canal. How little was then known in this country on the subject of canalizing, was sufficiently illustrated by the fact that after holding a few public meetings upon the subject, it was finally resolved to commence the work upon their own hook, under the firm persuasion that it was little more of a task than to dig a common mill race—and to work they went accordingly with all due enthusiasm.

They soon began to dig, and however—and came to the conclusion that it would be better to form an association and employ workmen. Very considerable funds were raised, and an engineer appointed, who happened to know, that before a canal could be upon it, a feeder must be found to supply water upon it, and to work he went with a formidable force to conduct a neighboring stream of water to the point of elevation. To excavate this sub-aqueal, exhausted the whole of the funds of the company, and when the water was at last let into it, they found to their utter dismay, that the natural absorption of the earth in its length exhausted every drop of the water the stream allowed and there was none left for the main canal.

To the stock of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal company, which succeeded that project, the state subsequently subscribed $50,000. The investment proved totally unproductive. The principal part of the stock of this company was furnished by citizens of Philadelphia, and the expenditure was immorally expended in the highest education of its stock upwards of two millions of dollars.

These discouraging results for a long time paralysed the spirit of internal improvements in Maryland. It was many years before it could again be roused into action, and when awakened, the geographical localities of the Maryland State fact to have organized parties which for a long time presented insurmountable barriers to any progress whatever. The Susquehanna interest, and the Potomac interest, were in direct variance. Neither of them were strong enough to carry any measure in the legislature whilst the eastern shore counties remained hostile to the Potomac route, by either that might bring competitors to a market of which they now enjoyed a kind of monopoly for their superior facilities of access. From this cause Maryland remained inactive for nearly half a century after the failure of her first enterprise.

It was not until aroused by the bold and successful strides of New York in opening up a route to the great western lakes—and witnessing the gigantic enterprise commenced by Pennsylvania with a view to secure the western trade—and the movements of Virginia towards connecting the James River with the Kanawha, that at length opened the eyes of the whole people of Maryland, by either that might bring competitors to a market of which they now enjoyed a kind of monopoly for their superior facilities of access. From this cause Maryland remained inactive for nearly half a century after the failure of her first enterprise.

To these considerations were superadded an estimate of the vast resources which the coal and iron mines of the Alleghany region had now begun to develop. Whether they were to remain totally inactive, or to be put to use, it was necessary to connect them with the seat of trade, or by a canal to connect the part of the state, be opened to profitable use, was now also an enquiry.

It had been one of the characteristics of Marylanders to be distinguished for enterprise. The pre-eminence into which she had recently fallen was not that of apathy, but of unfortunate inaction, and the paralyzing influence of this spirit the opportunity of improving the avenues of either the Potomac or the Susquehanna in pursuit of the trade of the west, had been prevented—a too contracted view of the true interest of the state was taken by some of her influential men. She lost much by not pushing the improvements of her natural position, as was first determined upon—and fell behind one of the states at least, instead of leading in the career of internal improvements.

Awake at length to a sense of what was really at stake, the different parties coalesced, and now, all was enthusiasm. A large party, who had previously constituted so essential a part of our prosperity, Enterprise and improvements became the order of the day. New York was making her fortune before our eyes, by her canals—and was pushing her trade to the very Ohio, which was so much nearer to us. But Maryland was not to be left behind. And the cities of the District—the states of Virginia and Ohio—and at length the general government itself, was enlisted in the project for its improvement.

The spirit of that day was admirable. The enterprise was commenced under fair prospects—and for a time the career was upward.

But difficulties were in the path. The state had become fairly embarked and made a heavy investment in this main undertaking of connecting the Chesapeake with the Ohio by a canal, when an entirely new project was started, of connecting the city of Baltimore with the same points on the Ohio by a rail road. This suggestion once captivated the Baltimore community. The state seconded their views—and a rival work was forthwith started, and soon came into collision with the prior association, for the right of way. Unpleasant feelings, bickerings, disputes, law suits, injunctions, followed each other in succession, and at length both works were locked up in chancery.

THE TIDE WATER CANAL, which has also been constructed with a view to facilitate the transit of produce between the city of Baltimore and the Susquehanna region—and to connect with the Pennsylvania canal, and through that avenue with the west,

To pay for completing their line of road and its fixtures—to discharge debts which they have allowed to accumulate for want of funds—and to redeem notes and scrip which they had issued in payment for those and for the apparatus used upon the road, till for some time, continue to exhaust most of what the company will receive for travel and transportation. The ramifications of trade require time, to adapt themselves to any new channel, and as yet at this time has not been afforded to either this work, as well as ultimately with the lakes. This work also has but just been so far completed as to commence operations, say during the summer of 1840—but has been repeatedly interrupted to make indispensable "repairs" as they are called. Frequent publications announce the extent of business already done on the canal, yet it would be too sanguine to expect that their receipts will, for the current year, be sufficient to aid the public treasury, in meeting the interest which will be payable upon the one million loaned by the state to the undertaking. The company is considerably involved in debt. The state owns no share in this company.

The entire revenue of both these works, if we are not mistaken, are mortgaged to the state, to secure the loans she has advanced to them.

THE ANnapolis and WASHINGTON RAIL ROAD, 201 miles in length, connecting the seat of government with Baltimore and Baltimore road, was put into operation in a very incomplete condition, in December last, and even the connexion of the roads is not yet arranged. The buildings required are unfinished, and the terminus on the Severn, not yet located through the city. They had the misfortune to have a burning locomotive burnt down, and with it their two locomotives by the fire and by the loss by it nearly $3,000. The company having exhausted its funds was embarrassed by debts and unable to obtain reliefs wherewith to do much of the work that has been offered. The receipts for the month of August, even under these disadvantages, were upwards of $2,000. The average however is so much. The expenses ditto when once the road is completed, will be very considerable. The entire cost of construction, including the debts due by the company, amounted according to their last report to $144,435 61, of which the state had subscribed $300,000. Until the road is complete, no operation, the state cannot expect to derive any thing from this investment.—This is the only company that has yet made the cost of their work come within the estimates originally furnished. To construct the road without its appendages was estimated to require $350,000. Interest and exchange on the loan had to be constituted the largest item of the excess in the cost.

More than one-half of the total receipts of this company go to accumulate the receipts of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, without the latter company being at one cent of cost in constructing this line. In short, it is from lateral roads that a large portion of their profits will ultimately be derived. The rail road which starts from Harper's Ferry, and is penetrating by Winchester through Virginia, is another of its profitable connections.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL, under a charter granted by Virginia in 1824, and by Maryland and the congress of the United States in 1825, was commenced in 1828. Its entire projected length is 341 miles—its width 60 feet, and depth 6 feet—being equal or superior to the capacity of the New York canal, after it shall have been enlarged as now constructing, at an expense of double its original cost. The amount of lockage required in the entire line is 3,205 feet—of tunnels, 4 miles 80 yards, with a deep cut of 1,060 yards at the west end and 14 at the east, with a basin of 280 yards in length and 64 in width at each end.

The eastern section of this canal has been completed and is in operation from Georgetown to within fifty miles of Cumberland, and on this fifty miles 82 boats have been expended, and a considerable part of this distance has been excavated, and the heaviest part of the whole, the tunnel, is more than two-thirds done. The residue of the work, says Mr. President Thomas' reports of January, 1841, will require $1,825,300,—with the debts now due by the company, the amount will amount to between two and a half and three millions of dollars. The residue of the entire cost to Cumberland, as reported by Gen. BERNARD, then engineer in the United States service, was eight millions of dollars. The entire cost, however, will fall little short of twelve millions, of which the state of Maryland will have contributed nine and a half millions. The state of Maryland holds mortgages of all the property and revenues of the company, including what the United States, the state of Virginia and the District cities have severally subscribed, as well as what private stockholders own.

The interest payable upon the state's investment in this work may now be estimated at $125,000 per annum—and every day that its completion is delayed, costs the state $1,164 for interest alone.

The very shortest method to relieve the people of this burthen, is to bury the canal, and bring the receipts which it would have produced from it, after it has reached the coal and iron mines, to the aid of the public treasury.

The ultimate connection of this canal by the shortest route with the Chesapeake waters, we regard as a matter of course, after the main stem shall have been completed to the mines.

There is not one canal in the world, of which we have any knowledge, connecting coal and iron mines with places of trade, but what have turned out to be profitable. New York has no such auxiliary on her extensive line of canal, and yet her canal has more than paid for its entire construction.

The estimates are, that in seven years after the Chesapeake and Ohio canal shall have reached the coal region in Allegany, it will be worth more than thirteen millions of active capital to its proprietors, and that every year that sum will be accumulating. Expense, in less than three years the value of the taxable property in the state will have increased in consequence of its completion, more than would pay, by the tax levied thereon, the interest of the whole sum now required to complete the canal to Cumberland. How much has the value of property in the state of New York been enhanced by the construction of her canal? What would be the value of the property at Muncie Chalk, and in the vicinity of the Pennsylvania mines, if they were now without their canals? The increase of capital, of population, of wealth, dependent upon completing this work, is incalculable. Maryland having coal, to any amount, to export, instead of having to import and sell to foreigners for thousands of tons annually for her own consumption, will, of itself be a most important change in the course of trade. The Schuylkill mines alone sent 500,000 tons of coal to Philadelphia last year. We have read a notice that over one hundred vessels are now waiting for loads of coal, and that one time in the Schuylkill, at Philadelphia, a few weeks since. It is calculated that 800,000 tons of coal would descend from Cumberland by the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, the first year it is fairly put into operation. This, at one cent per ton per mile, would produce, of itself, would realize more than sufficient to pay the interest on the whole sum advanced by the state towards constructing the work.

Add to this the value of the coal itself, now buried in the recesses of the mountains—of the iron, becoming every day more and more useful, more necessary and more profitable—and the value of the markets while subsisting the thousands whose industry will be required to work the mines, the forge, the furnaces and all the machinery of such establishments. What is it that has built up Lowell in Massachusetts, within a few years from a wild solitary residence, to a community numbering over 25,000 inhabitants, holding property worth many millions of dollars?

Ten companies are now waiting to commence the transportation of coal so soon as the canal is completed. One of these proposes to contract to pay the canal company $100,000 per annum for the privilege of transporting their coal alone. Others it is believed would be glad to make the same bargain. The state geologist, in his last official report to the legislature, represents one of the coal fields as containing 86,844 acres, and estimates the value of the coal alone, exclusive of the iron, at sixteen hundred millions of dollars. This is thought extravagant. It may be so, our object is not to exaggerate. We are content with the assurance that untold millions upon millions in value, the materials of wealth and prosperity, are to be opened to Maryland enterprise, and brought to market by the Maryland industrial system, and which, without its completion, would remain as they have remained, like the diamond in the mine, not worth one cent.

Do we want better data than mere speculative promises of such results? We have them in the official reports of the products actually realized from similar works by our neighbors. The tolls of the Pennsylvania works last year amounted to upwards of one million of dollars. Governor Seward informs us that the net revenue of the New York canals are over one million of dollars annually.

Maryland, though temporarily embarrassed, is rich. Her untold resources remains adequate to the current expenses of her government—exclusive of the debt which she has contracted towards constructing, and which are now coming rapidly into a condition to repay the treasury for the temporary outlay which the people are called upon to contribute towards their completion.

The amount actually appropriated towards public works up to the year 1840, if we mistake not, may thus be summed up:

The Chesapeake and Delaware canal,	$50,000
The Baltimore and Ohio rail road,	3,700,000
The Baltimore and Washington rail road,	500,000
The Chesapeake and Ohio canal,	7,500,000
The Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road,	2,250,000
The Tide Water canal,	1,000,000
The Annapolis and Elk Ridge rail road,	300,000
	$15,100,000

This is exclusive of the two millions appropriated last session towards completing the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, but made under such restrictions, that the company have not been able to avail thereof, and it therefore remains inoperative.

On three millions two hundred thousand of the sum included in the Baltimore and Ohio rail road item, that company has contracted to, and will no doubt pay three years interest.

This virtually reduces the above aggregate to $11,900,000.

But let us concede the whole amount as due, and that the state has to provide annually for the interest accruing on that amount—say in round numbers $800,000—the cost of finishing the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Cumberland in the estimate, and it ought to be included, the interest upon the whole would amount to nearly $1,120,000.

What resources have we to meet this with?

Entirely unaccounted as the people of Maryland have been to a state tax, they hardly know what an untouched resource they have in reserve.

Of the result of the general assessment which was ordered by the last legislature, and which is about being completed, we are yet unprovided, and have therefore to resort to mere estimates, predicated partly upon the results of old assessments.

Without having room for the particulars which lie before us, it will be sufficient to sum the aggregate in round numbers. Without pretending to accuracy, they will be found not very foreign from the mark.

In 1790, fifty years ago, there were 5,444,372 acres of land assessed in the state. We set down the value of the land now, at one hundred millions of dollars,

$100,000,000

The value of the improvements thereon, including buildings in the cities, the improvements upon the water courses, dwellings, upon the farms, &c.—and all other "real estate" 100,000,000

"Personal property," including live stock (the horses alone, in Maryland, we observe by the returns under the census, are valued at four millions of dollars), and all sheep and swine swells the amount upwards of eight million of dollars).

Stock in trade. (The mayor of Baltimore, in his last annual report estimates the goods sold in that city annually, at $18,400,000. By the census returns of the state, it appears that there are seventy houses engaged in foreign trade—one hundred and seventeen commission houses, with 1,266,700 capital, and 2,308 stores, having an aggregate capital of $9,157,494. Bank and all other joint company stocks, (the bank alone is about ten millions of dollars). Bonds, notes and other evidences of debt—foreign stocks owned by citizens of the state, shipping, agricultural products—the value of grain produced annually, is, according to the returns of the census, $2,289,490. Tobacco and hay over one million each).

Furniture—carriages—ornaments—books—implements—&c. &c. We are surely under the amount in setting down the whole at

100,000,000

Making the whole assessable property $300,000,000.

And this, if we are right in our recollection, was about the amount estimated by the house of delegates, during their discussion upon the subject.

Upon this sum, a direct tax of only five cents on every one hundred dollars, would pay off the whole of the state debt at once, in a single year, and leave us our investments in the public works, whatever they may prove to be worth, clear!

The tax levied under the act which is about to go into operation, is only at the rate of one fifth of one cent, on every one hundred dollars worth of assessable property; and at that rate, if our valuation be not too high, the tax will amount to $600,000 per annum.

At the rate of one third of one cent in every one hundred dollars, the product would be one million dollars.

But besides this ultimate and ample resort, which presents Maryland in her real and colossal powers, if discussion demand their exercise, we have other formidable resources which will be brought into requisition.

First of these, is our proportion of the products of the public lands, which, under the act of the late extra session of congress is more at length insured to us.

By a calculation which lately appeared in the Baltimore American, it is shown, that had the law which passed both houses of congress in 1832, and which President Jackson prevented from then going into operation, by defeating the sufficient majorities that were then in each house to have enacted it, the veto notwithstanding, if he had then returned the bill with his veto—Maryland's proportion of the sale of lands, from 1832 to 1835, would have amounted to more than nine millions of dollars. What it would have been from 1835 to this period, we have not ascertained.

According to an estimate which we lately published, supposing the annual sales of land to average only three millions of dollars, the proportion receivable by Maryland would be $2,000,000 per annum. This is, in some way, what it may amount to, is a new, and, it is by me, hoped, a permanent revenue to the state treasury.

Again:—We have an honest and long delayed claim upon the United States government for the balance of what the state patriotically advanced during the late war, which, with the accumulating interest thereon, now exceeds $100,000.

We have also the claim for the last instalment of the surplus revenue, which by law was to have been divided among the states.

We have the bonus to which the state will be entitled upon rechartering the several banks of the state—nearly all of whose charters expire in 1845.

We shall have in aid of the current resources of the state, the lottery revenue, relieved of the charge thereon of $12,000 per annum for the completion of the Washington monument—and the auction revenue, recovered from the payment of $20,000 annually for indorsements.

And lastly, we shall have whatever additional revenue the further progress and use of the various public works will now begin to bring in, in remuneration for the advances made by the state towards their construction; and which will eventually bring more of them, if not every one of them from the "unproductive" side of the treasurer's annual statement of the capital of the state of Maryland. Fifteen millions invested, yielding six per cent. would amount to $900,000 per annum.

In the meantime, the legislature when they first commenced the public works and permitted the ditto of the state to be used, made a wise provision for redeeming the principle of the debts thus contracted.

A SINKING FUND, was instituted, which has ever since been in vigilant though silent operation, and which amounted according to the treasurer's report as of 1st December last, to the sum of $1,076,539 88, and so constituted, and by him regularly compounded, that the state has not only to maintain its integrity, and this resource will of itself pay off the whole of the principal of all the debts which the state has incurred, by the time the several loans which constitute them, shall become payable—leaving us, when this is effected, the whole investment, and all the revenues it may produce, as a clear gain.

Such are the views which have stimulated the real friends and steady supporters of our system of public improvements, throughout all the vicissitudes of the very difficult, and sometimes unpopular task which their views of the true interest of the state inspired them to undertake, and by which they pressed forward with all their might, and with the proofs of the result so far, of which they promised—the basis of the future prospects for Maryland. A full share of the travel and trade of the west—a full development of the mineral resources of the Alleghenies, and a realization of their vast value, with all the salutary and salutary results inexhaustible—these are the fruits of the policy of the state, and the first and the most essential ingredient towards comfort, as well as the most material agent towards manufactures—besides opening an avenue to water power beyond calculation in amount. In short, such is the prospect of prosperity and wealth to the community, as well as of future resources for the public treasury, which prompts a spirited effort to complete the task in which we have so far progressed, and which we have such ample means of accomplishing.

[After having prepared more than two-thirds of this article for the compositor, we received the Frederick Herald, of the 25th September, containing an excellent article on the same subject, of which we avail in penning the residue.]

NORTH CAROLINA.

SUMNER. The United States Gazette says:—"We had the pleasure yesterday of examining another large number of silver from the mine in Davidson county, North Carolina. It weighed about forty-two pounds, and was as antique a 'hunk' of mineral as we have seen for a long time. It has gone to the mint, where, true to the character of the newly rich, it will soon be taking 'liberties.'"

DRAINING LANDS. This state some time since made an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of draining and reclaiming swamp lands belonging to the state. We now observe that a body of about 50,000 acres of reclaimed land, situate in the county of Hyde, will be offered at auction in sections of 100 acres each, on the 30th November next. The drainage has been effected by the construction of two canals, each about six miles in length, which empty into Pamlico Sound and are navigable by vessels engaged in the southern trade.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

STATEMENT of the Bank of South Carolina, 5th September, 1841.

Discounted notes	$569,669 91
Do. under compromise	26,378 03
Bills of exchange do.	27,922 55
Stock—state, city and bank stocks	131,428 14
Specie on hand	80,089 03
New York funds at maturity	10,639 74
Bills of exchange maturing	64,040 58
City bank notes on hand	17,000 00
Country do.	7,072 00

Bonds	178,901 35
Real estate	110,231 99
Incidental expenses	40,000 00
	24 04

	$1,855,556 04
	CR.
	$1,000,000 00

Profit and loss, balance as a contingent fund to meet any losses	52,583 64
--	-----------

Discount account since the 20th June last	$9,391 46
---	------------

Do. on exchange	312 61
-----------------	--------

Premium on do.	812 22
----------------	--------

Interest received	4,035 71
-------------------	----------

Dividends, unclaimed arrears	4,980 86
------------------------------	----------

Do. last six months	8,325 75
---------------------	----------

Bank notes in circulation	8,306 61
---------------------------	----------

Deposits	156,405 76
	$1,855,556 04

THOMAS CHAPMAN, cashier.

ILLINOIS.

The people of this state are engaged in discussing the propriety of calling a convention to amend their state constitution.

ELECTIONS. The following summary of votes at the late congressional election, is made up from the official canvass:

	1841—		1840—
	W. H. F. Buren.	W. H. F. Buren.	W. H. F. Buren.	W. H. F. Buren.
1st district,	5,319	8,913	7,487	11,594
2d district,	7,177	6,076	8,822	18,019
3d district,	21,698	19,553	29,349	25,883

Total,	34,138	34,572	45,558	47,496
--------	--------	--------	--------	--------

S. R. Rowan had 162, and W. Gilman 7 votes in the 1st district. F. Colliers, the abolition candidate, had 537 votes.

MURDERER AND BANK ROBBER ESCAPED. JACKSONVILLE is again in an uproar. The bank robber, and Gardner, the murderer, who was sentenced to be hung, and whose time expires the first Monday of October, broke jail last night, cutting off the timbers in the floor of the debtor's room (they being confined below) and came up into the room, and out of the window. No one has got after them.

[St. Louis Mail, 10th ult.]

MISSOURI.

TRIAL AT PALMYRA. The St. Louis Bulletin of the 13th September says, "The three abolitionists, (Burr, Work and Thompson), who were brought in the act of enticing away slaves from this state, have been tried, convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for 12 years. The case was conducted by Abernethy, the prosecuting attorney, assisted by Messrs. Anderson, of Palmyra, and Crockett, of St. Louis, and the defence by Messrs. Wright and Grove, of Palmyra, and Mr. Warren, of Quincy. We hope the result of this case, will have a salutary influence upon these decided fanatics in other places."

FLORIDA.

The correspondent of the Savannah Republican, writes on the 18th September: The news from Tampa is of a varied complexion. A good portion of the band of Hospitali has "come in," in accordance with the "talks" which that warrior sent to them.

The news in regard to the success of Wild Cat (Coachoochee), is not so cheering. That chief has returned to Tampa, from his mission to the camp of Tiger Tail, saying that Tiger Tail refuses to present to give up. He will consider upon the matter, but will wait until his brother arrives from Arkansas. His brother has been sent for by express, and it is hoped when he arrives, that his tale, by promise, will be more satisfactory. Tiger Tail to receive a portion of it in lieu of his present hunting ground.

Halleck Tustenuggee, it is thought, has left the Ocklawaha, in order to dub his forces with those of Sam Jones. The report of Sam Jones' "coming in" is a small mistake. When he and Halleck come of a peace accord, you shall hear of it, if we can raise one, by special express, and the paragraph which announces it to the world, may indeed be headed "Glorious News."

IOWA.

ELECTION OF DELEGATE TO CONGRESS. The official result of the election for delegates gives:

Ridge, (Van Buren)	4,398
Dodge, (Whig)	4,314

Dodge's majority,	514
-------------------	-----

DEBATE ON THE SECOND VETO.

SPEECH OF MR. BOTTS, OF VIRGINIA,
ON THE SECOND VETO MESSAGE.

House of Representatives, September 10, 1841.

The bill entitled "an act to provide for the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue, by means of a corporation to be styled the Fiscal Corporation of the United States," having been returned to the house of representatives by the president of the United States, with his objections thereto, and it having been made the order of the day at the hour of twelve—Mr. Botts called for the special order, and the house proceeded accordingly to reconsider the bill and the objections; when Mr. Speaker rose from the floor, and said: I should have been content, Mr. Speaker, to have permitted this second veto of President Tyler to pass without remark from me, but for the peculiar position I happen to occupy before the house and the country.

Coming not from the same state, but from the very district which gave birth to Mr. Tyler, and which he formerly represented in this house, and bearing to him the relations of personal and political friendship at the opening of congress, I have, from a high sense of public duty, felt myself called upon to array myself in opposition to him, and have employed terms relative to his executive course at once harsh and offensive. I have, in an address to the public, and in my representative character on this floor, charged him with perfidy and treachery to the party that elected him—with infidelity to the principles upon which he obtained his present lofty situation; and I feel that it becomes me to make good my charge, not only before the nation, but by facts that cannot be contradicted; and if I do not establish it conclusively and irresistibly to the mind of every disinterested man, I will not only take back what I have said, and make the most ample atonement in my power, but will consent to take upon myself all the odium that ought to attach to one who has so grossly failed in his groundless charge against a high public functionary.

It will be borne in mind, also, that when this charge was uttered on the floor, the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Cushing), like a gallant knight, at once came forth in defence of the president, and challenged an argument on the subject. The glove being thus thrown, I promptly took it up. The now come forward, before the nation, to repeat the charge and vindicate my cause; and to an intelligent public I shall leave the decision.

Before I proceed to this, however, I must be permitted to glance hastily over this extraordinary message of the president, which I scarcely know how to characterize. I say that it is a world, by its very form and discreditable state paper, destitute of plausibility or ingenuity, and wanting in frankness, candor and sincerity, is to say, perhaps, much less than it deserves.

Before I came to the house this morning, I examined it with some care, and shall offer what I conceive to be a perfectly fair analysis of the message; and I beg the members of the world, by no means to be disposed to justify the veto, to examine the message as I proceed, and correct me if I fall into error.

It commences, then, with an expression of extreme regret that he could not sign the bill, and I apprehend, if the regret felt was half as great as it is, it would, perhaps, by this time, have a law establishing some mode for the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue.

Then he begins with his objections to the bill, and the first is to the power of congress to establish a national bank to operate per se over the union."

Well, what distinction he draws between a national bank and a national bank per se, I confess I don't exactly comprehend; a national bank per se I take to be one by, of or within itself; and what other sort of national bank, created for national purposes, could it be, but it is to be inferred that if we would establish a national bank without the per se, this first objection would be removed. Well, sir, there is no per se in the bill; the president has put it there, as a faux artifice, upon which to found an objection.

"Next we have an admission that 'the qualified veto' with which the chief magistrate is invested ought to be most cautiously exercised; upon this point I believe we all agree, and it is much to be regretted that the president has not found it agreeable to practice a little more on his own theory. By the bye, sir, let me mention in connection with this subject, that I have from the first moment that I had a fair understanding of the provisions of our constitution and the principles of our government, been adverse to this one man power, called 'veto,' and shall never consider myself a citizen of a free government until it is effaced from the constitution."

"We are then told that the veto power never can be exercised except against the will of a majority of congress; this will scarcely be regarded as a new discovery! It is to be presumed if congress was indeed as ignorant of constitutional laws as the vetoes of President Tyler would intimate, that most of us must have known that he could not veto the will of a minority."

Now we have what I regard as the most extraordinary passage or objection contained in the whole message, and I quote the passage: "Does it," says the message, "violate the constitution by creating a national bank to operate per se over the union?" Its title, in the first place, declares its general character to be "an act to provide for the better collection, safe keeping and disbursement of the public revenue, by means of a corporation to be styled the Fiscal Corporation of the United States." In style, then, it is plainly national in its character. Its powers, functions and duties are those which pertain to the collection, keeping and disbursement of the public revenue. It means by which these are to be exercised is a corporation, to be styled the "Fiscal Corporation of the United States."

Before I proceed further, let us examine this objection for a moment. Is it, indeed, objectionable that a bank established by the national legislature for the purposes of the whole nation, for the uses of the national government, should be national in its character, and should provide for the better collection, safe keeping and disbursement of the public revenue? Is it, indeed, true, whenever congress shall pass a bill with powers, functions and duties pertaining to the collection, keeping and disbursement of the public revenue, that the interpolation of the veto power is to be expected? If so, then I would not hesitate much to say that the time for revolution is not distant.

The president then proceeds to give the true character of the bill, which it would seem to me was its strength and weakness, and which is the only ground for the propriety of its passage. "It is," he says, "a corporation created by the congress of the United States, in the character of a national legislature, for the whole union, to perform the fiscal purposes, meet the fiscal wants and exigencies, supply the fiscal uses, and exert the fiscal agencies of the treasury of the United States." Such is its own description of itself. Do its provisions contradict its title? They do not."

Who can read this and not stand amazed? From what quarter, or from which of his numerous unconstitutional and irresponsible advisers such an objection as this could have come, I am at a loss to conjecture. It came from the mouth of the chief magistrate of the United States, the man whom the country of John Tyler have exerted myself to sustain for the many prominent positions he has aspired to, and whom the people have elevated and confided in. I cannot believe it came from any of the gentlemen with whom I am in the habit of association, said to have been his private friends, and who were seen hiring scribbler for a dirty penny paper advocating at times the most detestable and destructive locofoco doctrines; but surely, surely it cannot be, that the American people are now to be gravely told, after eight years' struggle for a reform of the currency, that they have that which is the best mode of securing the better collection, safe keeping and disbursement of the public revenue; that a treasury agent to perform the fiscal purposes, meet the fiscal wants and exigencies, supply the fiscal uses, and exert the fiscal agencies of the treasury of the United States, must not be national in its character, but must be confined in its per se operations; not to the union, but to the District of Columbia; for every law passed by congress is of necessity national, except those passed as a local legislature for the exclusive benefit of the District and the territories.

Why, sir, if rumor speaks the truth—I mean rumor with a thousand tongues, not the "rumor" at the other end of the capital, that has occasionally been repeated, that the bill was introduced by Mr. Sumner, the title to this bill was in the president's own hand writing, and its provisions sanctioned by him before it was introduced here; but more of this hereafter.

He admits that its powers are seemingly more limited than have heretofore been granted to such institutions. "Every United States bank heretofore created has," he says, "had power to deal in bills of exchange, as well as in local discounts; and it was because he objected to the power of local discounts, contrary to the sense of all the whig party in both houses, that the operation of the bill was considered indispensable, and now it is enumerated with the objections to the bill. And after this undertaking to show that it is a national institution, which no man in his senses ever dreamed of disputing, he assumes that it may be regarded as a local bank of the District of Columbia, invested by congress with general powers to operate over the union, and it is therefore obnoxious to still stronger objections." The message continues: "It assumes that congress may invest a local institution with general or national powers. This view is precisely what the president asserted when he first proposed that congress, as local legislature, should establish a local bank in the District of Columbia, and then invest it with general uses and national powers, with the assent of the states; and the idea was laughed into ridicule; and when he perhaps became ashamed of it himself, he endeavors to turn his own avowed objections upon congress, and make it possible for his vagaries."

These are to be regarded as his constitutional objections, for he then says:

"When I come to look at the details of the bill, they do not recommend it strongly to my adoption."

His first objection to the details is: "It may be the subject of discount, and, therefore, of the most objectionable character;" though, as I have before said, it was limited in its transactions, because the president required it, to bills of exchange.

His next objection is, that "there is no limit prescribed to the premium in the purchase of bills of exchange, as one portion of our countrymen would say, I incline to calculate that it would put the financial skill of the president (who, it seems, is an adept at the trade) to the test to regulate the rates of exchange in a bank bill for the next twenty years. Congress supposed—foolishly, it may have been—that this would depend a good deal on an individual, and would not be long even. And a little further on it appears that, although a system of discounts of the most objectionable character may be substantially justified, yet it is a fatal objection to the bill that, 'whilst the District of Columbia is made the seat of the principal bank, its citizens are excluded from participation in any benefit which might arise by a positive prohibition of the bank from all discounting within the District;' notwithstanding we are previously reminded in the same message, and it could not therefore have escaped the observation of the president, that there is an express reservation in the bill 'to modify or create any bank or banks within the limits so far as the aggregate capital shall not exceed five millions.'"

"These are some of the prominent objections," he says; "but there are others that it would be unprofitable to dwell upon." Well, in this I agree with the president. If there are none stronger than these he has said, and he cannot enforce them with more power than these he has specified, it would be unprofitable indeed to dwell upon them. But, strange as anything that has yet preceded it, he says: "suffice it to add, that this charter is designed to continue for twenty years without a competitor." Well, what does he mean? Does he intend to say that, if favorable plan with a portion of the abstracted party for a while. Can it be this that the president refers? If not, what in the name of heaven does the message mean by objecting to this bank because it is to have no competitor for twenty years?

In conclusion, he tells the most anxious solicitude to meet the wishes of congress in the adoption of a fiscal agent; and, restrained by this feeling, he has been ready to yield much, in a spirit of conciliation to the opinions of others. Whatever may be said of the balance of the message, for the want of discretion, sound sense, or ingenuity, in this I must say the president betrays, as the nation will discern, and as we all know, a destitution of sincerity and candor. That has he no conscience? He will never be reconciled? Is it not known that two bills have passed the two houses of congress, neither of which was entirely acceptable to them, in a spirit of conciliation towards the president, and that he has put his negative on both? Is it not known that the provisions of the 10th section of the constitution will never be assented to by congress, that they would find favor with him, and that he availed himself of that section not only as a reason for the veto, but turned it into ridicule and scorn, and endeavored to hold up his own friends, who had placed him in power, as wanting in naughtiness and candor? And is it not known that this identical bill, now sent back, came here approved and sanctioned by him? That we were so compromising and conciliatory as to stoop to consult his wishes before we legislated for the nation's weal? And then he returns it with a second veto, and talks about his conciliatory temper, asks for time to consider the matter, and then recommends such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. Time! The president of the United States wants time, and very lamely and respectfully entreats for time! Time for what? To consummate a mischievous, wicked and corrupt coalition with our enemies, and to do this he wants time! A man who has filled more distinguished stations by good fortune than any other man of the same capacity ever filled before—a man whose good luck in procuring office led to the prediction of General Harrison's death before he was elected; a man who, after a number of the houses of representatives and senators of previous administrations, and of the offices he filled at home—a man who had been called on to speak in both houses on the subject—one who, as chairman of a committee, had investigated the whole internal police and management of the late bank, and prepared an elaborate report on the subject, and after a protracted session of the congress almost as long as from this time to the meeting of the next congress, and with the subject under deliberation from the 1st of June up to this time in congress, comes forward and tells you he has not had time to prepare and submit a decisive recommendation of his own and sincere opinion on the subject, and to elaborate reflections on the subject? All that he can serve to deceive some people, but it did not fool me. If I could have my own way, I would never leave this capital until the public money was put under the control of law, and the president divested of all power over it.

"It has been his good fortune and pleasure to concur with congress in every measure except this, and why should our difference on this alone be pushed to extremes. How supplesting! How humble! Why, sir, let me tell you, if you do not know it, that it has not been his pleasure to concur in all the measure. There was one, and that, next to this, the most important, that he signed without the least compunction. He says himself, 'It was a difficulty and hesitation in signing the bad or distribution bill notwithstanding, in his message to congress, he recommended its passage in the most unqualified terms, and notwithstanding, the last winter in which I served in the legislature of Virginia, he, as chairman of a committee, brought forward a resolution recommending its adoption, and a resolution instructing senators to vote for it; and nothing, let me tell you, but his deep and unqualified commitment to the measure ever obtained his signature to the bill, because it was so distasteful to the other party.'

But the peculiarity of his situation is appealed to as entitling him to a postponement of this subject to a more auspicious period for deliberation." The peculiarity of his situation! What is that peculiarity? He came into the presidential chair surrounded by such a party, for numbers, integrity, influence and fidelity, as never surrounded a president before, with a majority in both branches of congress ready to sustain him in all proper measures, pledged to carry out all the principles of reform which a corrupt dynasty of twelve years duration had rendered indispensable to our prosperity; pledged, too, upon a principle which he claimed to have been the first to suggest, of his concurrence in the terms; and he himself has been fairly installed into office, fired by a mad ambition, he sets himself up for the succession, detaches himself from his old friends and his party, collects around him as confidential whisperers men who, in some instances, are unworthy of his sight, much less of his confidence; and he himself, in the name of the opposition, in hopes of finding favor with them for their desertion of us, and now comes to congress to talk about the pecuniary of his situation, and asks for time to deliberate.

Mr. Speaker, as it is impossible to serve God and mammon both, so I conceived it impossible to serve Mr. Tyler and my country at the same time. Intimate with him as I had been, personally devoted to him as I was, when I found he had forsaken his principles I forsook him; when I found he had abandoned the faith upon which I supported him and the whig party had supported him—when I found him grasping at the purse strings of the nation, repudiating all laws by which the public money might be controlled, filling the public treasury with a vast amount, and then refusing his assent to such laws as the representatives of the people approved for their safety and disbursement, I abandoned him, and made war upon his principles and his policy. I came not here to war for men, whether for friends or against enemies; I came here to serve my country to the best of my power, and then refusing those principles upon which alone I believe the prosperity of the country can be preserved; and if I have been compelled to sever personal and political ties that have bound me to them for years past, it may be painful, but I am not troubled with the mortifying reflection that it has been so. I have no enemies. On the contrary, I feel proud a satisfaction at having shown that neither friendship nor individual advancement could drive me from the discharge of a high public duty.

Having now disposed of the veto message, I will proceed to make good the charge of pecuniary profligacy which I have just endeavored to do in a becoming spirit and temper; avoiding as far as possible all personality towards the president further than may be inseparable from a fair discussion of his public course, and then it will appear rather as a necessary consequence of that course than from any disposition I have to be malicious. I have no quarrel with him; there was sometimes policy in rashness, and I believe it to be true; and, perhaps, there could be no more fit occasion for a little intemperance than this, but that I feel I should better serve my purposes by avoiding it. In truth, sir, I feel no excitement; I have watched over the public bill, and the lingering death bed of another, until at last he becomes familiarized to the scene by preparation for the event, but at the same time I must say, my indignation has increased rather than diminished at this last act of treachery of his cabinet, to congress and the country as I will show in a moment.

At the first place, then, I state the proposition broadly, that the question of a reformed currency, which was contemplated through the operations of a national bank, was the great, leading, and paramount question in the late political canvass, and so understood to be throughout the whole of the country, that all various ignorance of the political history of the country not to know it, and a still greater degree of duplicity to deny it. I surely do not mean to say it was the only question anywhere presented, but it was a prominent question every where, made so by my adversary even where our friends desired to avoid it. So with the sub-treasury, it was another great and leading paramount question on the other side, but not the only question; the distribution bill was another question; so with the Hooe case, the standing army, infidelity of public agents, and a vast variety of other questions mixed up together, each having its bearing and influence; but still, at last, the currency question lay at the foundation of the contest. I am glad that those who are expected that we should admit it, when pressed upon us, that this was the exclusive test, and drive from our aid all who were disposed to join us on other grounds. And I am very far from intimating that all who voted the whig ticket are pledged to support a national bank, but I do maintain that those who are expected to do so, the party, at least to carry out their general principles, were at least pledged under all the circumstances to carry out the most prominent and most important, or to have declared their hostility to those measures when the nomination was tendered to them. Let us see what were the peculiar circumstances under which Mr. Tyler was elected.

In December, 1839, a national convention of the whig party assembled at Harrisburg to nominate a president and vice president. From the time of the expiration of the charter of the late Bank of the United States up to that period, the currency of the country had been in the most wretched and embarrassed condition. The only topic of discussion throughout the country; the army bill, Hooe case, and the rest having arisen subsequent to the nominations at Harrisburg, and therefore could have had no influence on the mind of Mr. Tyler, although they might have exercised an influence on many a voter at the polls; though, notwithstanding the influence of this general derangement of the currency, the stagnation of business consequent upon it, the fatal experiments that had been made to correct it, which only served to plunge it into deeper difficulty, thousands of the wisest men in the country were known to have changed their opinions not only upon the question of expediency, but also of the constitutionality of a bank, and, in the absence of all other proof, when Mr. Tyler stepped forward and arrayed himself under the whig banner, and identified himself with the whig party; without explanation or qualification on his part, it would have been a fair and natural inference that his mind had undergone a similar change. But did not the least of it follow? Did he did go to the Harrisburg convention a bank man, and I know it. I speak upon my own knowledge of his opinions; the summer preceding I had travelled through the western country in company with Mr. Tyler, and was with him for some weeks, during which I heard him speak in staunch conventional positions, (which were of course not confidential), if I were to say twenty times I should not be extravagant, that he was satisfied a bank of the United States was not only necessary, but indispensable; that the country could never get along without one, and that we should be compelled to resort to it. And yet, when I did go to the Harrisburg convention, and was understood to say, Will my colleague say that he ever heard Mr. Tyler say a bank of the United States was constitutional? The cries of "order! go on! go on! do not yield the floor!" &c. were so loud that Mr. B. could not distinctly hear the question put.

Well, sir, I have stated precisely what Mr. Tyler himself said—other gentlemen are as competent to draw their own conclusions as I am—but, sir, I will prove that he was not only a bank man then, but that he continued one until some time after the meeting of the present congress.

Well, sir, what part did Mr. Tyler play at that convention? Why he not only led us up to the last moment in the recommendation of Mr. Clay, but, as he himself states, wept over his defeat. Now will any man pretend that Mr. Tyler did not know that, if Mr. Clay was elected, the first great leading measure of his administration would be the establishment of a national bank? And did he not then recommend to the American people a candidate whose first act would be to commit a violent outrage upon the constitution, or that he recommended to them a candidate whose administration he knew in advance he could not support?

That was the position of his confidential friend in the senate (Mr. RIVES) a few days ago? Is Mr. Rives to be regarded as expressing the sentiments of Mr. Tyler? I presume he is. Well, Mr. Rives says that the nomination at Harrisburg turned on the bank question, and that but for Mr. Clay's known and avowed sentiments on that subject the nomination would have been bestowed on him; and that it was because General Harrison was not committed to a bank that he received it. In what position then does this place Mr. Tyler? The question being between a bank and an anti-bank man, Mr. Tyler, himself opposed to the institution, not only votes for the bank candidate, but cries over his defeat, and then comes here to tell us he was always opposed to such an institution on constitutional grounds. Sir, I mean to make the admission in the broadest terms that from Mr. Tyler's first entrance into public life up to its termination in 1834, all his public acts and declarations were in hostility to such an institution, but that his nomination was the result of a gross misapprehension, or a pretended now that the association of Mr. Tyler with the name of Gen. Harrison was a matter of compromise, whilst "Tippecanoe and Tyler too," strung together by some ballad writer to make a rhyme, it is now pretended was the result of a great principle in regard to the constitution. Forgive me, but it will be "Tippecanoe and no veto," as the rhyme will be quite as perfect, and more palatable to whig taste.

But, sir, this is not all. Some time during the last fall a committee of gentlemen of the opposite party from the county in which I live (Henrico) addressed a letter to Mr. Tyler, making inquiry whether he intended to vote for a bank or against it, and in reply to that letter Mr. Tyler says he adopts the language of General Harrison's speech at Dayton, in Ohio. Let us see now what General Harrison says in that speech.

"My opinion of the power of congress (says Gen. H.) in the charter of a national bank remains unchanged. There is not in the constitution any express grant of power for such purpose, and it could never be constitutional to exercise that power, save in the event the powers granted to congress could not be carried into effect without resorting to such an institution.

"I have no objection to congress creating a law creating a national bank, because he thought the revenue could not be collected or disbursed to the best advantage without the interposition of such an establishment. I said in my letter to Sherrod Williams that it was plain that the revenues of the union could only be collected and disbursed in the most effectual way by means of a bank."

Did this constitute a sufficient commitment to a bank? If not, let us see what further he did and said; but, before I proceed to that, let me read another extract from that Dayton speech, the language of which was adopted by Mr. Tyler. It is on the veto power. He says:

"I have never regarded the office of chief magistrate as conferring upon the incumbent the power of mastery over the popular will, but as granting him the power to execute the properly expressed will of the people, AND NOT TO RESIST IT. With my mother's milk did I suck in the principles on which the Declaration of Independence was founded. That declaration proclaimed THE KING OF THE WORLD NOT LET THE PEOPLE MAKE SUCH LAWS AS THEY WISHED. Shall a president or executive officer attempt at this time of day TO CONTROL THE PEOPLE IN THE EXERCISE OF THEIR SUPREME WILL? No. The people are the best guardians of their own rights, and IT IS THE DUTY OF THE PRESIDENT TO BESTOIL FROM INTERFERING IN OR THWARTING THE SACRED EXERCISE OF THE LAW-MAKING FUNCTIONS OF THEIR GOVERNMENT."

Oh! if Mr. Tyler could think now as he formerly thought of this veto power, and persuade himself that the people are the best guardians of their own rights, and that it was the duty of the executive to abstain from interfering in or thwarting the sacred exercise of the law-making functions of their own government, how much less pitiable would be his present condition, and how much happier and more prosperous would be the nation.

During the fall of 1840, just before the election came on, the president took occasion, more than once, at large public meetings of his fellow citizens, to employ stirring language. It will be recollected that he paid a visit to the state of Ohio, to attend a large convention of whigs. On his way he was entertained at Wheeling, and what he said there may be gathered with more accuracy by reading from the paper published in that city. I mean the Wheeling Gazette of the 23d of August.

"We have been favored," by yesterday morning's mail we received the message of President Tyler, which we lay before our readers to-day, returning, with his objections, the bill to incorporate the Fiscal Bank of the United States."

"Never have we seen a greater state of excitement manifested by our citizens than was produced by this extraordinary announcement, and we have heard of nothing but expressions of honest indignation. The whig party, in this section of the union, could not persuade themselves that JOHN TYLER could so utterly disregard the principles to which he is indebted for his elevation; they could not believe that he would consent to strike a death-blow at the prospect which was dawning upon the American people of relief from pecuniary oppression and bankruptcy. True, they were aware of the opinions expressed years since by the president, but they also recollected his more recently expressed sentiments; our citizens recollected that this same JOHN TYLER, while on a tour through the west, inadvertently, but before our eyes, uttered the following words: 'I have heard of many a man who has pursued; they remembered his speech in this city, and many of them reverted to his language when he pulled from his pocket an empty purse, and, shaking it at the multitude, ridiculed the idea of a metallic currency, abused the sub-treasury, and avowed a preference for "gold and silver" bank notes. But, they have been sadly disappointed, their reasonable expectations have been cruelly frustrated, and they have a right to express themselves in regard to the individual who has betrayed their confidence."

This account of the speech from the editor of the paper is confirmed by a report and resolutions adopted by a large meeting of the most respectable citizens of the city of Wheeling, and yet, in a very short time, we are aware that President Tyler had formerly spoken and voted against a national bank as unconstitutional and inexpedient, and we now regret that he thought proper, in his veto message, to allude to these opinions, and to insist that a change of them, in order to carry out his bank measures, was an unwarrantable and unjustified conduct on his part. It never entered into our minds that, should he in his official character approve such a bank bill, he would, in any degree, dishonor himself. Mr. Madison had opposed a bank of the U. States as inexpedient and unconstitutional, and yet, in a very short time, he was the author of the law which created the late national bank. We had not so learned the history of our country as to suppose Mr. Madison had committed a crime, or dishonored himself in the eyes of virtuous men. We had not supposed—we cannot suppose—that there lives the man on earth who could dishonor himself in the eyes of all by doing what President Madison had done in similar circumstances.

"During the late canvass we were honored with a visit from Mr. Tyler. He mingled and conversed freely with the people, and favored us and our neighbors with his views. He seemed anxious to sympathize with us in all our opinions and grievances, and to enter most ardently into the spirit of the contest, denouncing, in no measured terms, the conduct of the then and previous administrations. We all remember how (holding out an empty purse) he happened to express the hard money dogmas of our adversaries, and how cheerfully and emphatically he endorsed the speech in which General Harrison, at Dayton, had expressed his sentiments upon this question.

"Entertaining at that time the kindest feelings towards Mr. Tyler, and having confidence in his political principles, this confidence was confirmed by his conduct and declarations while among us.

"But now, since he has, in our opinion, acted without due respect to a salutary principle and to an obligation imposed by the spirit of the constitution, but, however sacred, can only be enforced by public opinion, we regard it as our right and duty privately and publicly to express our sentiments in relation to this act of the president."

The second resolution is as follows:

"We do, therefore, further resolve, That the president, using the power of the veto to defeat this bill, has behaved unwisely and dishonored himself, as we disapprove on his own conduct during the late political canvass; and that, by thus using the veto power, and assuming to the executive the right in his official acts to disregard the construction given to the constitution by the supreme court and the other departments of the government, he has, against his own declarations, assisted to fix upon the country principles destructive to the genius of our free institutions, to the rights of the people, and to the constitution itself."

Well, sir, does all this commit Mr. Tyler to the support of a bank? Surely, surely, none can deny it. But this is not all that he has done. He has, during the same trip; at Elizabethtown, Marshall county, Virginia, an account of which I will now read from the public prints:

"JOHN TYLER AND THE VETO. While the people are aroused by the astounding veto of the president upon the fiscal bank bill, and while Mr. Tyler proudly, and with a former expressed opinion, it may not be improper to advert to his sentiments upon this subject as expressed during the late campaign.

"In a speech delivered at Elizabethtown, Marshall county, Virginia, Mr. Tyler was particularly severe in denouncing General Jackson for his veto upon the bank bill, and no portion of his remarks was better received by his audience. We distinctly recollect that hundreds of our citizens as well as those of Marshall county will endorse our statement, that Mr. T. denounced it as an arbitrary exercise of a power conferred by the constitution; a power, said he, only intended to be used in extreme cases, and upon great constitutional questions; BUT WHICH HE DID NOT BELIEVE THE PRESIDENT WAS EVER JUSTIFIABLE IN USING IN REGARD TO ANY MEASURE WHICH HAD PASSED BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS BY A DECIDED MAJORITY.

"This we unhesitatingly assert was the substance of Mr. Tyler's remarks at Elizabethtown; and here we ask, can he, with this declaration—starting him in the face, reconcile his exercise of the veto with opinion formerly expressed? Were he the president of the United States, by election—did he occupy the seat by the vote of a majority of his fellow citizens, he would find it difficult to justify himself; but having been borne into office on the shoulders of one who would have regarded his professions—one who was sincere in his attachment to the measures of the whig party—can he justify this arbitrary exercise of the veto power upon a measure in reference to which he differs with the party which is so decidedly in the ascendant? We pause for a reply."

In confirmation of this statement I hold in my hand a letter, written to a member of this house by a gentleman of great respectability he vouches for, dated west Alexandria, Va., 29. 2. 41.

"It can be proven by hundreds of witnesses that John Tyler, in speeches delivered by him at Wheeling and Grave creek, last summer, denounced Gen. Jackson for vetoing the U. S. bank in the strongest terms.

Now, sir, in connexion with this subject, let me read an extract from a speech delivered by Mr.

Tyler on presenting a memorial from the county of Accomac, Va. on the removal of the deposits, which has so forcible an application to his own situation at that moment, that it would seem to have been made for the occasion. I read from the Register of Debates, p. 944, vol. 10:

"We were told yesterday (says Mr. Tyler) that the president could not retract his steps with honor. What language is this to be held by a public agent? Honor, or regard to the solemn obligations and duties of office, must of every man, and man repair the mischiefs which his own unwise policy may have inflicted on the country. By what sort of advisers must the president be surrounded, when we are told that he would be dishonored by giving audience to the constituent body, and yielding to their wishes? suffer because the president must not be inconsistent. Honor would not permit him to retract an ill-advised act, no matter what came out of it. Mr. T. would scout such an idea of honor and consistency."

This, together with a speech made a few days before on the removal of the deposits, contains so many passages applicable to the present case of Congress, that but for having something of my own to say, I might be content to adopt it as my speech on this occasion. In page 663, same volume:

"Mr. Tyler rose, and began by saying that if any man expected that the chief executive officer of any country, whatever the form of government, over which he might preside, or whatever his conduct, would be a want supporter and advocate, he was blind to the lights of history, and ignorant of the nature of man."

"* * * And many who have assisted in elevating the president by their suffrages to his high office, the wisdom of his, or soundness of his policy. Thus it is that men of great moral worth and of unquestioned patriotism have been found in all that has passed of our history, as they will be in all that is to come, rallying to the defence of the president whenever his conduct of public affairs shall be brought into question. Every expedient will be resorted to that honor can sanction, if not to justify, to excuse his conduct."

"To render inaudible the voices of those who call into question his conduct, and complain of violated law, they are assailed in their turn; and when arguable words, the war of appellatives begins. They are called all sorts of names, and are charged with being actuated by unwholy motives. [See the two editorial articles at this time, the Madisonian and the N. York Herald.] These expedients but too often succeed, and errors in the administration of affairs come to be ratified which but too frequently destroy the very foundation of free government."

Be it remembered, sir, that all laws regulating the custody of the public money have been abrogated and annulled by President Tyler, and that we now have a treasury under executive control. What says he on this subject?

"I beg your pardon, when a complaint is urged of proceeding, as in our history, of the assumption of powers not agreed by law, of laws abrogated and annulled, and of a treasury under executive control, established by no law, and sustained only by his will, we are told there is no danger, and a lullaby is sung to lull the people into repose. Sir, in every violation of law, there is but one remedy, and that is, to amount to a breach of the public faith, and to the wrong pledged—when it grasps the exchequer and places it under executive control—when the trial by jury, guaranteed by the constitution and the judicial authority are set at naught, who can doubt but there is danger to all possible dangers. What more is left to be done, which will be speedily followed, to change the whole character and structure of our government?"

I beg you, sir, and the country to ponder on this passage, which is full of truth and full of wisdom, and particularly applicable to the present executive.

Mr. Tyler endeavors to sustain his present course by the following argument. Hear him again:

"The argument derived from the approbation of the gentleman, is suicidal," says Mr. Tyler. "How would the question of the constitutionality of the bank stand if precedent is to be relied on? What becomes of the praises bestowed on the president for having saved the bank bill two years ago? Twice has the bank been saved by the approbation of all the constitutional organs of the government. Thrice has it passed the two houses of congress; and, not to speak of subordinate tribunals, once, if no more, has it received the solemn sanction of the highest court of the land, our judiciary." "Sir," continues Mr. Tyler, "the president came into office on the principle of reform."

and yet how ludicrous the figure he is made to cut. Drums and trumpets announce the coming of this great reformer, his banner waves above his head with

"Reform" inserted in large characters upon it; and yet, when he opens his lips, the only cry which issues from him is—precedent, precedent—good or bad, sound or unsound, still—precedent precedent."

And here, the only cry we hear from this great reformer is—consistency, consistency with my former opinions.

In President Tyler's inaugural he pledges himself to consult the wisdom and example of his predecessors; and in his last veto message he speaks of "upholding the institutions of the country as they have come down to us from the hands of our god-like ancestors." Whom Mr. Tyler looks upon as his god-like ancestors it is difficult to conjecture; they are neither Washington, nor Madison, nor the chief builders of the constitution, who established the first bank. But in 1834 he told us who they were. He says:

"The president, in his first inaugural, pledges himself to consult the lights held to him by the examples of those who had preceded him in the administration of the government. Has he done so, sir? He had the bright, the glorious example of Jefferson and Madison before him, and yet he rejected them both."

And now he has the bright and glorious example of Madison, the only one of those two ever called upon to act directly on this question, and rejects it, as he denounced Gen. Jackson for doing; and now thinks he would commit a crime, and dishonor himself in the eyes of virtuous men, to follow this bright and glorious example. But, sir, enough of this speech, which we are commending to the perusal of the president's friends.

These are the circumstances under which President Tyler came into office, and these are the circumstances under which congress assembled on the 31st day of May last.

The president, in his message to congress, intimates that he will not deny; and he does not submit to the representatives of the people which is most acceptable to their constituents, a bank of the United States, the sub-treasury or the state bank system; and at the same time we have submitted to us by the secretary of the treasury a plan for a national bank, which, if it can be established, met with his (the president's) approval, and which, if it is not established, that bill not being acceptable to congress, they started another bill, but engrained upon it, in the 16th section, a provision, not desirable or agreeable to a single man that voted for it, called the compromise clause, with the express end and aim of reconciling the president to the bill. And yet that very clause was made the pretext for the veto.

And yet, sir, the president did not intend to sign any bank bill, why did he not say so at once, and be done with it. But, instead of that, his whole course, from the commencement of the session, has been one of equivocation with his own character, and trilling with congress and the hopes of the country.

Why, sir, to how many persons did he say he would sign Mr. Ewing's bill, as it was called? He often told me so, and wanted me to vote for it; and he said as much to fifty others. Much has passed between the president and myself of a confidential nature, which shall never be divulged. I will neither publish confidential conversations nor private letters—I leave that for higher functionaries; but much has also passed not confidential, that I am at liberty to disclose. Well, sir, in one of those conversations in which the president endeavored to persuade me of the propriety of passing Mr. Ewing's bill, he said he would sign it without the least difficulty, that it was not precisely such a bank as he would prefer, that if left to himself to frame a bill without reference to the views of any other person, he would have such and such a bank, proceeding to describe precisely and identically such a bill as this he has not vetoed, with two unimportant exceptions, which, as I mean to be strictly accurate, I will therefore state them. He said he would not object to a capital of $35,000,000, but he thought to deal in exchanges alone $15,000,000 would be enough, and referred me, I think, to Mr. Gallatin and Mr. Appleton in confirmation of his statement. The difference was, that, in the bill he then described, he had no distinction between foreign and domestic bills. He subsequently made that difference; and this bill, to suit that view since expressed, is limited in its operations to foreign bills. Well, sir, while the first bill was before him for consideration, he expressly declared to the friends of the bill, that he would sign it; and he would sign it, if congress would pass it. A few days after he said he could not sign that bill, for he had never read it. And when asked what sort of a bill he would sign, he said he didn't know, for he hadn't had time to think of it. The veto came, and it was understood that the president said congress could pass a bill in three days that he could sign, and one that would answer all the purposes of the government. Two gentlemen were appointed to ascertain what sort of a bill that was: they consulted with the president or his cabinet; this last bill was drawn up and prepared expressly to suit his views, authenticated and sanctioned by him, and came to this house with his pledge to sign it; and before it had passed this house he declared to two members now present that he would lose both his arms before he would sign it. I have reason to believe that the title to the bill, with which he finds so much fault, was altered at his own request, and was drawn up in his own handwriting. Now, sir, do I use language too harsh when I characterize such conduct as trifling and emivocating?

It is certain that when we came here no doubt was entertained by either party that he would sign a bank bill; our friends thought so, or it would not have been discussed, as it was, for ten or twelve weeks; the other party thought so, or they would not have gotten up the cry of repeal! repeal! which resounded not only through the walls of this capitol, but became the watchword of the party throughout the country. But we are now told that we must wait, give time; it has been intimated by the president that the people are not in favor of a bank! Indeed, sir, the people not in favor of a bank! Why, what evidence is required stronger than that which you have before you? Forty-one voting for the bank, with seven absentees who voted for the first bank, which gives you thirty-eight. Several others who voted against it acknowledge their constituents to be in favor of some bank, though they were not satisfied with this, which gives you forty, or upwards! Which of those voting for the bank, sir, will charge the president with neglecting his constituents? None that we have heard of. Then suppose each member to represent his constituents fairly, and each one to represent sixty-thousand persons, which is a reasonable average, and the majority of forty on this floor gives you a majority of two million four hundred thousand of the population of the United States. Now, sir, if we are to be told it is a doubtful question on which the people have expressed no opinion!

It may be well enough to look and see if we can trace the influences that may have operated on his mind to produce this extraordinary change that the president has undergone.

It will not be forgotten by the house that, from the moment a veto was whispered as a probable thing, Mr. Tyler began to grow in the good graces of the opposition party, and the loco foco prelates of the country that had exhausted their vocabularies of abuse on him for the last two years, suddenly became somewhat ennobled and dignified. "I feel," declared the Washingtonian. "And Mr. Ritchie, in a number of the Episcopist which I now hold in my hand, tells him for a while on soft corn, which he took as kindly as a house pig; and he who had been abused for his relentless proscription, as it was called, and was made to assume all the qualities of his satirical majesty, was suddenly found to be a narrow-minded person; that as a consequence of his inflexible policy, one man, Mr. Jefferson Johnson, who was a 'patriotic statesman,' a 'national deliverer and benefactor,' one who had proved himself equal to such a crisis, and was worthy to be trusted now and hereafter by a generous and magnanimous people." He is told that "the wild slang about his policy is placed to carry out the principles of policy is absolutely ridiculous." Again he is told by the same "candid statesman," "his principles, duties, policy, interests, are all wildities, if he can be called a man. But will he see them? We hope and trust he will not throw himself into the arms of the federal whigs." This is to a whig president! And then comes the grand climacteric: the open, bold invitation, the barefaced proposition that he bid for in the public market with as much continuity as an old landowner's estate in an aristocracy: "We have the same paper, addressed to 'the excellency the president of the United States,' which concludes with this emphatic suggestion:

"At this moment you cannot be ignorant that the democrats, as a party, are exceedingly strong. The proposition of the wing party who adhere to you, who will not go for Mr. Clay, is also large. Common sense on this matter speaks a language that the lowest mind will misinterpret. Recollect, sir, that you are the son of a free who to a Christian's virtues united the Roman's firmness, that you are a Governor of a free public and private, and gave to him a proud name among those great men, which secures to the ancient dominion an imperishable fame."

This article professes to have been written from this place, and is signed "Washingtonian."

Now, I beg that it may not be forgotten that Mr. Tyler is the individual who has always claimed the credit of being the originator of the one-term principle, so strongly advocated in that election which brought him into power—not on the farcical ground now assumed by some of his friends, and no doubt by himself, to wit: that the honor was too high to be conferred on one man twice, but that the influence and patronage of the office should not be exerted to secure a re-election; and yet he had not been in office four weeks, having then nearly the whole presidential term of four years to run, before an attempt was made to create a third party, for the purpose of electing him a second time. He not only lends his countenance to it, but to accomplish it frustrates and defeats the measures of the party that elevated him, turns a deaf ear to the admonitions and entreaties of his former friends, collects around him as confidential advisers men without wisdom, without experience, and, in some instances, men with whom it is not very creditable that he should associate; confides more in the counsels of hired letter writers, who are paid to flatter him, than in the advice of his constituents; retains in office men who are obnoxious to every objection that has been urged against the horde of office holders for the last twelve years, and almost publicly proclaimed himself a candidate for the next presidency.

Sir, let me read to you a sentiment given by Mr. Tyler during the year preceeding the nomination of Gen. Harrison, at a whig festival in the county of Southampton, Virginia:

"By John Tyler: Pilgrim presidents and travelling cabinets—the fruitful off-spring of the second presidential term. One term, and no re-election; the best interests of the country demand it. Will not the popular suffrages decree it in 1840?"

This the sentiment of the man who now already sets himself up as a candidate for a second term.—What influence the course of the opposition party and presses may have exerted over him it is difficult to tell, except from his public acts; but about the time I have adverted to, when these propositions were made, a remarkable change came over the spirit of his dream, and he suddenly arrested all removals from office, and reconstituted some that had been removed; and he seemed to have been governed by himself, or from incompetency to discharge the duties assigned them. An extraordinary case occurred in this city.

The commissioner of the land office, with the approbation of the secretary of the treasury, notified eleven clerks in his department that their services were no longer required. It is said they waited on Mr. Tyler, and represented to him that although they were not very good Tyler men, they adhered to the principles, yet they were very good Tyler men, and they were all ordered indenter, during the absence of the head of the department from the city, to be resindented. Five of the pieces, however, had already been resindented before the commissioner's order. The other six resumed the duties of their office, and remained there to this moment, with the exception of one, who has since, I understand, resigned. There was an individual among them who has often been brought to the notice of this house, and is now in my eye at

The Globe reporters asked Graves to collect, then was a member of the last Congress, (often then the name of Linnell Washington was introduced on this floor by the honorable member from the Louisville district in Kentucky, (Mr. GRAVES), then, pointing his finger to him, as I do now, he said:

"There sits Linnell Washington, now conspicuous in the ranks of the Globe. At this moment is a salaried officer of the government, at 1,500 dollars a year, neglecting and quitting his duty to come here to embark in the politics of the country. This, sir, is the same individual of whom it has been said that, still holding his clerkship, he went to New York, huckstering during his absence, with a political astute and shrewd, and during his absence here, at a salary of $200 a year to perform his duties as a clerk!"

And this is one of the individuals removed and afterwards reinstated by Mr. Tyler because he was a Tyler man. Sir, such a harlequin of principles and of public rights stinks in the nostrils of all honorable

Let me now ask you and the country, Mr. Speaker whether I have not made good my charge of perfidy against Mr. Tyler? And if any man still doubts, let me throw all the proofs I have adduced to the winds and still one substantial ground is left upon which alone I would be willing to rest my charge.

Is Mr. Tyer spoken of by any body for the next presidential term? Yes, he is! By whom? By the whigs? No, not a man of them! but by the loco fero party! And, sir, is it within the compass of human belief that that party would take John Tyler, who was so recently elected as one of their bitterest opponents, as their candidate, if he had undergone no change, and they had received no assurances or encouragement from him—the very men who so recently opposed, ridiculed, and abused him? No, sir, the thing is not credible. There must have been some change somewhere, either in Mr. Tyler or the opposition party. They do not admit that they have changed, and yet they have by some miraculous means come together. What, then, is the irresistible conclusion? Why, that Mr. Tyler has changed, and deserted his party and his principles.

But there is no perjury, no treachery in this—not at all; because, say gentlemen, he has differed with us on one point only—which, by the bye, I have shown not to be so, because removals of unfaithful and incompetent men from office was a most important duty of the President, and the whig party the party. But suppose it to be true that we differ only on this one point; suppose this great, paramount, all-absorbing question of currency should be the only question about which we have been deceived in the conduct of the president, could not treachery be established? could not the president be shown to have fastened the sub-treasury upon us, either open or disguised, would there be no perjury in this? Why, sir, Arnold and Hull only differed on one point with their fellow soldiers and brother officers, and that was, whether they should fight for or against their country; and here the single question with Mr. Tyler is, whether he should put the whigs in power, or put him in power, or to over to the loco focus by whom he hopes to be retained in power.

Pshaw! don't talk to me about his fidelity. I know too much of this business to be duped by such slang. A difference of opinion conscientiously entertained I could tolerate with as much liberality as other men; but conscientious convictions do not undergo as frequent and rapid changes as Mr. Tyler has undergone in the last three months.

No, sir; an unholy, ungodly and corrupt coalition, I believe in my heart, was about to be formed, and will yet be formed if not defeated by the prompt action of the whig party; and "heed him or die" is the motto that I have adopted, and there is no open, fair and honorable means that I will not adopt to frustrate his designs.

Sir, let not gentlemen roll up the whites of their eyes at this charge of perfidy against Mr. Tyler; it is not the first or second time the same charge has been made at home. I will detain you for a while, that I may give you a scrap or two from his political history in connexion with our state elections.

In the year 1897, Mr. Tyler was governor of Virginia, professing to belong to the Jackson party—Mr. Randolph was then a senator of the U. States and had, by the violence of his course, excited the deep hostility of the anti-Jackson party, who were determined to beat him in the election just then about to take place. Mr. Tyler, in order to secure personal connections and friends in the house, which added to the whig vote, would give them a majority was applied to lend his name to his political opponents; and while it was alleged that Mr. Tyler among his political friends in the Jackson ranks, secretly displayed an opposition to the course he was secretly connived at the intrigue of his political adversaries, (as the pamphlet now in my hand states which was written years ago), invited, through a friend, a letter to be written to him that he might have an opportunity of defining his position, and that (as now with the com. sec.) use himself of the opportunity to improve an attempt to induce the audience or awe him into submission; written in spirit of dictation which he felt authorised to resist. Sir, it is a curious history, and I will read a few extracts from a letter, written perhaps the day after the election by a member of the house of delegates, which was published at the time as a part of the history of the perfidy then charged upon Mr. Tyler.

Speaking of the letter of Mr. Tyler, written on the morning of the election, or at all events withheld at that time, consenting that his name might be used, the certainly of his election having been then ascertained, the writer, Mr. Daniel A. Wilson, says:

"It was not such as I expected it would be, judging from the opinions and declarations uniformly ascribed to him. It was reported and believed, and have never heard the contrary asserted, that he resisted with great zeal the idea of Judge Barbour being put in nomination as a candidate in opposition to Mr. Randolph, alleging he would not do; that we wanted at this time, the services of a man who was read and willing to throw himself into the breach sworn in hand; that Judge Barbour was not and Mr. Randolph was that man."

"It was also reported with equal confidence, as generally believed, that he approved in the strongest terms the promptness and decision of Judge Barbo and his personal friends in denying the use of his name, the effect of which would be to impair by decision the strength of the opposition, all of which would be necessary successfully to resist the encroachments of the government."

"The calculation was a fair one that Governor Tyler would (as Judge Barbour had done) look to the estimation in which his services were held by his political friends rather than the office he was to obtain at the hands of his political enemies.

The election, however, came on, and Mr. Tyler was the man that beat the candidate of his own party: opposition to whom he had deprecated in the strongest terms.

Well, sir, one or two extracts from the papers of the day, to show the public feeling at the time, and to have before this subject, which I have only adverted to show that the charge of perfidy will not grate so harshly on Virginians as it seems to do on the ears of Massachusetts (alluding to Mr. Cushing) and other states where he is less known.

The Winchester Virginian, speaking of Gov. Tyler's late tergiversation, says:

"We ask from Mr. Tyler a disclaimer of the course he shall pursue in the senate; we care not what may be his course. He has disclosed enough to satisfy us that he is not to be depended upon, and that it is a matter of little consequence whether he is for us or against us. He has bartered a large share of popularity, and as fair prospects as were possessed by any short man in Virginia, for the seat in the senate of the United States. He has been one of the favorite sons of Virginia; the doors to the highest offices in her gift had been thrown open to him; and, after having been warmed and cherished in her bosom, he has renounced her with the ingratitude of the adulator."

The Petersburg Republican says:

"Mr. Tyler will doubtless fill the office of senator the full time for which he has been elected. He may, and we hope will, represent Virginia faithfully in the great council of the nation; but of one thing we are certain, be his course during the next six years what it may, he never can regain the position he occupied only one short month ago, and when he retired from the senate of the United States. He will sink into that state of nothingness to which his own dissimulations conduct will have consigned him, and from which he will never again be able to emerge."

I read now from a Jackson paper published at that day in Richmond—it is a column cut from the paper, and not headed, but, I believe, the Enquirer. It says: "We have seen in the columns of the Enquirer, Mr. Floyd and Gov. Giles, to which it was resolved not to invite Mr. Tyler, gave great umbrage to his personal friends and the adherents of the coalition."

"We entertain no doubt, however, that Mr. Tyler will vote in the senate according to the wishes of Virginia, while it may comport with his ambition to do any thing more than that he will not set aside the wishes of the state so soon as personal aggrandizement may tempt him."

These were the opinions generally entertained of Mr. Tyler's course at that day. I now come down to a later period. In the winter of 1838, Mr. Tyler was again a candidate for the senate, in opposition to Mr. Rives. I supported him warmly; but he could not cut a better figure in his own party than he did in the defeated. During that contest, which lasted several weeks, he was frequently withdrawn and renominated. On one occasion he was nominated by a member of the then administration party, and, on his retiring from the house, he was asked if he would accept a nomination from that quarter; to which it was answered, that he would, before he retired, and would take the appointment from any quarter he could get it. Now, sir, let me be understood. I do not say that this charge was well founded; on the contrary, I defended him at the time—I have defended him ever since, though I have been almost the only man in the state who did defend him; others have not heard of it. I do not now charge him with it. I believed at the time he was altogether incapable of giving utterance to such a sentiment, though I confess his recent course has greatly shaken confidence in my former opinions. I mention the circumstance only as matter of history, for the purpose of showing that the charge of perfidy has nothing of novelty in it, when connected with his name.

The consequences, however, whether true or false, were most disastrous to him; it not only revived the recollection of the scenes of 1837, but it utterly and entirely prostrated him in the state. There was, at the time of the Harrisburg convention, no office in Virginia of the highest rank, which he most humbly, that Mr. Tyler could have obtained. In confirmation of this, when the Harrisburg convention met, and Mr. Tyler's name was mentioned for the vice presidency by accident, after several others had declined it, how many of Mr. Tyler's colleagues voted for it? Not one. They could not go back to the people of Virginia and say they had recommended John Tyler as their vice president; they put it on the ground of decline. But did the delegation of Kentucky refuse to vote for Mr. Clay on the score of delicacy? On the contrary, they were sent there for the purpose. Did the Ohio delegation decline to vote for Gen. Harrison? No; but the delegation declined to vote for Mr. Tyler. The truth was, they thought it would be indelicacy to vote against him, and they did not vote at all.

But I dismiss this part of the subject. It is a painful part to me, but necessary to my vindication. I have been challenged to the argument, and I mean to sustain my position on this charge as well as the other to be true. Those who think I have personal malignity and enemy mixed up with my political indignation do me injustice. I was his friend personally, and was disposed to be so politically, as my whole course towards him would show, up to the moment he vetoed the first bank bill; and then I withdrew the more fully, and did not sign it, but the motto by which I believed he was prompted in vetoing it. I then measured and weighed all that had passed. I gave due importance to a long line of conduct and remarks that I had before treated as having been adopted or said without meaning, in a spirit of levity or thoughtlessness; and the conviction was impressed on my mind that treachery was contemplated, and I gave him up to serve my country.

In connection with this subject I must advert to a letter I wrote to the president on the 10th of August, six days before the veto came, not simply to show my feelings towards him at that time, but to correct an erroneous impression that has been formed upon it.

I have heard it was whispered about that I had written a letter to the president on the same day I had written to Richmond—to wit: the 16th August—expressing sentiments of the most friendly character; and the attempt has been thus made to convict me of treachery to the President and the country. No matter from what source it comes, I stamp it with falsehood—absolute and unqualified falsehood. This is the letter I wrote, as I before said, six days before the veto came. It was addressed to him as private and confidential, and I do not know by what right the letter was spoken of by the president at all. However, as it has been spoken of, I will give it to the public. It is as follows:

[PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL.]

House of Representatives, August 10, 1841.

MY DEAR SIR: I feel that our relations, resting on political associations for some years past, and the warm personal regard I have always entertained for you, and the interest I have felt and manifested for your country, and the political welfare of our people, justify, if not justification, for addressing you upon a subject the probable consequences of which I look to with the most awful apprehensions.

It is generally understood that you are to vote the bank bill. If it is so, have you contemplated the consequence? Will you consent to your cabinet sustain you in the veto? Will they not be compelled to resign? For, whatever may be your views as to the principles upon which you came into power, it cannot be denied that these on which they have been sustained by the country require at their hands an earnest support of the measure that has been demanded by the people, and which their present plea of a majority exceeding the entire representation of Virginia and South Carolina, the two states in which the strongest opposition is supposed to exist.

If the present cabinet should be dissolved on that ground, could you assemble around you another from the whig party? You certainly could not. Could you do so, if the other party? If not, what could you do, if you were disposed; and equally true, I hope, that you would not if you could. They could not sustain you in that scheme for a bank to which you have already committed yourself. Nor could they support you in the distribution bill, nor indeed any of the principles you profess, and upon which you have been supported by the great body of the American people.

You would be thrown back then on the fragment of seceders, "the republican portion of the whig party," as they style themselves. Now, let me ask you, could you rally around you a cabinet of such men as would be distributed in the north or south from the different sections of the country, as would command the confidence or respect of the country? If not, in what condition would you be placed?

But, if you could, what measure could be adopted for carrying on the financial operations of the government?

The sub-treasury is repealed; and the deposit system of 1836 is also repealed in one house, and will pass the other, Congress will not consent to take the plan suggested by the secretary of the treasury. Will you not find it impossible to carry on the government, and will not a resignation be forced upon you?

On the contrary, if you can reconcile this bill to yourself, all is sunshine and calm. Your administration will meet with the warm, hearty, zealous support of the whole whig party, and you will retire from the great theatre of national politics with the thanks and plaudits and approbation of your countrymen.

Take these suggestions for Mr. Tyler's consideration; take them particularly, I beg you, in the spirit in which they are offered, and ascribe them to the ardent zeal of one who feels a deep solicitude for your own fame and happiness, and for the harmony and prosperity of our common country.

And believe me, with unfeigned sincerity, your friend,

JOHN M. BOTTS.

It was then announced that the hour had expired, and Mr. B. was compelled to take his seat.

NOTE.—I perceive by Mr. EWING's letter resigning his situation as secretary of the treasury, that he ascribes the loss of the bank bill to my letter; by which I suppose he means the letter published by Mr. Madison in the National Intelligencer, which was unceremoniously, and I think unnecessarily, if not unkindly, takes occasion most "unequivocally to condemn." If he could not approve, I do not see that his "condemnation" was particularly called for; nor can I exactly see where there was in that letter to justify his "unequivocal condemnation," if the one-half that he says of Mr. Tyler is true. I do not doubt the truth of all he states as matter of fact.—His inference as to the effect of that letter I do not concur in; and if the honorable secretary had paid a little more attention to dates and facts he would not have been so prompt to throw responsibility on me, as that I was the cause of it being so.

The letter was written on the 16th August; it was copied and sent to the president, and reached him on Thursday evening; it was in his possession all of Friday, and the second bill was presented to the house with the approbation and sanction of the president on the next day, and it was on the Monday following that the president said to two members of congress, "he would lose both his arms before he would sign the bill." Now I do not condemn the secretary's letter, because he has only done what I did myself, to tell the truth in relation to public affairs, which the public were entitled to know; but surely there is as much reason for not condemning the secretary as there is for the secretary to condemn me; for if my letter was calculated to produce a similar disposition in the president and prevent his signature to that bill, the secretary's letter is equally calculated to make him still more stubborn, and defeat any other bill that may be proposed in future.

Again, Mr. Tyler says, "that at the time he was endeavoring to throw upon me the responsibility of the loss of the bank, that, while that bill was under discussion in the house of representatives, the president had prepared for a member of congress an amendment with his own hand, to be presented to the house, with which amendment he said he would be perfectly satisfied to sign any bill." This amendment it was deemed inadvisable to offer in the house, as the bill was just then about to pass from the committee; and before it could be decided whether it was advisable to offer it in the senate or not, Mr. Tyler sent for the member of congress, into whose hands he had put it, and said to him that he had changed his mind again, and hoped no bill would be sent to him. All this trafficking was subsequent to the publication of my letter.

The amendment prepared by Mr. Tyler is as follows, and to come in at the end of the 16th section: "And provided, further, And it is to be expressly understood, that no bill shall be signed by the president, or be made to take effect or trade, as is in this and the ninth section of the bill provided, the assent of the state in which any such agency is established shall be first had and obtained by an express resolution of the legislature, or in some other form of usual legislative proceeding."

Now I assert as a fact susceptible of proof that Mr. Tyler's change of opinion and equivocation on this subject has arisen from a determination from the first not to sign any bank bill. Did not Mr. Wise say on the day the last veto was under discussion, in reply to Mr. THOMPSON, of Indiana, that he could have signed him at any time, and that Mr. Tyler never intended to sign any bill establishing a sub-treasury? And did not Mr. Tyler say, in the first week of the session, to a gentleman of the highest respectability, when speaking of his standing in Virginia, "Let them give me an opportunity to exercise the veto power, and I will have the whole state with me"—thus manifesting a strong and decided design to exert that power, and that, too, for the purpose of securing personal popularity to himself?

If all this does not remove the impression from the secretary's mind that I deserve his "unequivocal condemnation," then he would not believe though Mr. WISE and Mr. BOTTS were in the doubt. At least I hope it will relieve me from the doubt, condemnation that one who was so high in station, and is in standing, has very gratuitously endeavored to visit upon me.

JOHN M. BOTTS.

CHRONICLE.

The Abolitionists.—Convenient recently assembled in session, and nominated Francis Gillet of Bloomfield, and Levi Yale, jr. of Meriden, as their candidates for governor and lieutenant governor of that state.

The same convention passed a resolution "unanimously to take leave" to ask Mr. John Tyler, president of the United States, to emancipate his slaves. We are not precisely in Mr. Tyler's secrets, but it is a settled opinion with us that he will not consider these gentlemen as having any constitutional right per se, to make such a request.

(N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.)

ARTS AND SCIENCES. The third annual meeting of the Men of Science of Italy and foreign countries, is to be held at Florence the present month. Letters were addressed some months since to some of the scientific societies in this country, and among others to the Academy of Arts and Sciences of Massachusetts, inviting them to send delegates to represent them in this convention. The academy made choice of two of their members, Messrs. Edward Everett and Francis C. Gray. They are both now in Europe, and will probably be present at the meeting.

(Boston Traveller.)

BANK ITEMS. The Herkimer bank, New York, was robbed last week of $70,000 by one of its clerks named Brown, who, with his accomplices, Green and Francis, were all subsequently arrested near Saratoga, and the money, except $200 recovered. The fugitives are now in confinement at Albany.

An injunction was laid on Monday by authority of the bank commissioners, New York, upon the Commercial bank, and the city and county fund banks, and its doors are closed. The bank, it is believed, has overdrawn or loaned too large an amount to persons connected with its management.

BANK OF ENGLAND. Quarterly average of the weekly liabilities and assets of the Bank of England, from the 25th of May last to the 17th of August, both inclusive.

LIABILITIES.		ASSETS.
Circulation	£ 7,225,000	Securities	$23,012,000
Deposits	1,995,000	Bullion	5,106,000
	£25,181,000		£28,118,000

CLIMATES OF DIFFERENT COUNTRIES. We learn from the authority of Sir Richard Phillips, that the mean heat of the year at different places of note, is as follows:

	Deg. Min.	Deg. Min.
St. Petersburg,	35	84
Moscow,	40	10
Stockholm,	49	26
Gothenburg,	43	36
Copenhagen,	45	63
Edinburgh,	47	84
Boston,	47	3
Albany,	47	3
Philadelphia,	53	7
Richmond,	56	1
Washington,	58	1
Charleston,	61	1
Batavia,	49	0
London,	30	36
Yeraz Cruz,	77	72
Geneva,	49	28
Vienna,	50	14
Paris,	51	8
Amsterdam,	51	62
Brussels,	51	8
New York,	53	78
Milan,	56	76
Lyon,	56	45
Rome,	60	44
Algiers,	69	38
Cairo,	72	34
Canton,	81	26

NEW CITY.—The Mormons are about to build another city on the immediate borders of Illinois. They have squatted on land owned by a company of gentlemen in this city and elsewhere at the east, and because Joe Smith says it is a good place, or rather that he has had a revelation that it is the spot where a great city will stand, they are going to work at it.

(B. Times.)

GEX. CASS.—A long letter from Gen. Cass, the American minister at Paris, appears in the Philadelphia American Sentinel, written in reply to the proceedings of a meeting in Philadelphia, proposing him as a candidate for the presidency. He does not, in his letter, contain a denunciation of that office; but yet admits that in the contingency of being called upon by the general voice of the democratic party, he would not withhold his assent.

THE CENSUS OF GREAT BRITAIN. Now in progress, it is supposed will show a population of nearly fifty millions.

NEW YORK STATE CANALS. The bills received on all the canals of the state of New York to the 31st day of August, inclusive, for the last seven years, have been as follows:

1835	$93,991
1836	220,000
1837	643,163
1838	849,266
1839	913,959
1840	912,276
1841	1,134,785

It will be seen from the above table, says the Albany Advertiser, that the tolls thus far received during the present year exceed the receipts during the same period of the last year by the enormous sum of one hundred and twenty-one thousand five hundred and two dollars.

EARTHQUAKES. On the evening of the 17th August, two shocks were experienced at the island of Martinique, the last of which was nearly as severe as that experienced there two years ago.

FIRE. The Third Reformed Dutch church, built at Albany in 1828, at an expense of $16,000, and which the congregation had just completed paying for, took fire from a spark from a neighboring chimney on Tuesday last, and was burnt down.

FLOUR. Prices remain as last quoted, but with no considerable sales. Inspections of the last week in Baltimore 75¢ per barrel, and 4¢ 00¢ bushels of wheat were delivered from the Erie canal at Schenectady, West Troy and Albany, during the third week of September.

JEWELS IN PERU. It is stated that the jewels of the temple of the sun, which were secreted at the conquest of Peru by the Spaniards, have been recently discovered, and amount in value to 150,000,000 of dollars! Rather doubtful.

LIBERIA. It is stated in the Cincinnati papers, that since that serious riots, a number of the oldest and most respectable of the colored people in that city, possessing property, are making arrangements to dispose of their effects and remove to Liberia.

"MISERIES." As a designation for animal magnetism, derived from Mesmer, who is said to have discovered it, a volume of remarkable facts and "reasons for a dispassionate inquiry into it" by the Rev. Chauncy Hale Townsend, A. M. has just been published.

McLEOD CASE. The circuit court of the fifth circuit, New York, commenced its session on the 27th ult. The chief justice, Nelson, having been absent, Judge Grady presided. Three judges of the county courts were on the bench. The court house was crowded.

The usual formalities of opening court, swearing in the jury, and the like, having been completed, the first case called was that of the People of the State of New York vs. Alexander McLeod, indicted for the wilful murder of Amos Durfee, at Fort Schlosser, in the county of Niagara, in 1837.

Mr. Willis Hall, attorney general, responded on behalf of the people. He handed to the court a list of witnesses summoned on behalf of the people, which was called over by the clerk. A portion only answered to their names.

The court inquired when the case would be ready for trial. The attorney general replied that the case, on behalf of the people, was ready now. He moved that the trial proceed.

Mr. J. A. Spencer, of counsel for the prisoner, submitted his reasons for opposing the notion. His associates (Judge Gardner, of Rochester, and Mr. Briggs, of Albany) also submitted objections to the Canadian, collecting testimony. He expected their return daily, but was not ready to proceed without them. Unexpected difficulties had been encountered in the obtaining of testimony.

The request for a continuance was granted until after all British North America, from Lake St. Clair to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Many of them had been found and their testimony taken, of which three large packages were produced in court; but the others were not ready to get yet responded. He could not feel justified in going to trial in this state of the case, and he moved that the trial be set down for Monday next, (Oct. 4th), which was the earliest day that he could feel certain of.

Mr. Hall felt bound to oppose so long a postponement. He would do nothing to deprive the prisoner of a fair trial; but ample time had been allowed for preparation. The objection, as we well saw, that the trial came on at this time; while a great number of witnesses for the people had been at much expense summoned at a great distance from their homes, and were now in attendance. They could not be detained here a whole week beyond the time necessarily employed in the trial, but at great inconvenience and hardship to them.

Judge Grady reserved the question for the present, but with the right of the attorney to withdraw. The matter was adjourned until the next week should be thick proper to do so. He then made a brief and appropriate address to the jurors empaneled, reminding them of the great responsibility resting on them, of the great interest of the case, and of the great importance of the question which would be called upon to decide, to repel all attempts to influence them by rumors and indirect approaches, as well as otherwise. He then directed the jury to attempt to be made so to approach one or more of them, to give information to the court, by whom the offence would be promptly dealt with.

The case was then dropped, and the court proceeded to try the next case.

The correspondent of the New York Herald, to whom we are indebted for the above details, says I understand from the attorney general that he will feel it his duty to call the case again on Thursday next, when he will insist on the case again. Should the opposing counsel still insist on delay, without further reason, he will probably be obliged to swear off the case—on which case it goes over to the next term, unless by special agreement.

MISSIONARIES TO INDIA.—THE REV. John Wray and Levi Janyer, who were wives, were sent from Philadelphia, for Northern India, where they expect to spend the remainder of their lives in missionary service, under the direction of the Free-church board for foreign missions. The party of the Free-church board for foreign missions, of foreign ministers, take passage in the ship Louise, now in the port of Boston, awaiting a change of wind; Rev. Cephas Bennett, and lady, of Clinton, N. Y.; H. C. Kimball, of Worcester; Miss Mary M. Vinton, of Wilmington, Ct.; Mr. L. C. Avang, of Burmah. Their destination is the Bay of Bengal.

NEW ORLEANS. The yellow fever continues unabated either in number of deaths or new cases.

On the 17th and 18th there were 110 deaths, of which 94 were by the fever.

On the 19th and 20th there were 98 deaths, of which 77 were by the fever.

On the 21st, 60 deaths, of which 43 were by the fever.

POINARD.—Several ladies who are regarded as the leaders of fashion in the beau monde of Paris, have recently appeared at the opera with a dress of white, in which the gold handle is visible, and that is adorned with rich carving or precious stones. A Paris journalist, noticing this singular custom, says: "Are these young ladies the more modest or presumptuous? to punish inconsistency or to defend virtue? Probably we shall soon hear of some romantic drama, the denouement of which will be crowned by the protecting bloom!"

PLUM TIME. Nauticist boasts of her "sheep-sheepers," Barnstable of her "cranberry pickings," New-Haven of her "hyster-draggings," and New-York of her "plum time." On that huge sundbair, yelp Plum Island, grows a sort of plum; what sort we really don't know—which is ripe about these days; and having being over and the tide setting in the water plums, young men and maidens, old men and boys, pick plums from this and the neighboring towns; some in boats, some in omnibuses, some in wagons and some on foot—go down to the island to gather plums, drink tea, roll in the sand, bathe in the surf, and have a nice time. They won't go to school, girls won't churn; all insist upon having a frolic in plum time. One day last week, we are told, there were from one to two thousand people on the island, and the scene about and on the water was a sight, to be sure! May it be seen every year for centuries to come. We love these old customs, these long established holidays—May-days, sheep-washing, quelling parties, luskings, and other sports, which are the bright of civilization when they shall be voted vulgar, and known only in the dim memory of that veritable lady or gentleman, "the oldest inhabitant." (New-York Herald.)

RICE. A cargo of 2,000 bushels of the new crop came to market this Monday morning, from the estate of the late Governor. The quality was excellent. Quality we are told, seemed to give a fair promise. It was sent to mill to be beat out. (Cham. Rep.)

MARY ROGERS. The police of New York have been indelicate in pursuing inquiries for the perpetrators of the horrid offence which terminated in the death of this unfortunate lady. The Albany Argus now tells us that three or four of a gang of half a dozen notorious rowdies implicated, are in custody, under proof amounting nearly to certainty, that they were the perpetrators. James Fenimore Cooper is the name of one whose name is given.

SEAFARERS. The Chili, struck a reef near Valparaiso, about the 5th June, and was aided by a British frigate, and succeeded in reaching Valparaiso, where she was repairing on the 8th July.

The Boston Advertiser informs us, that of the Cunard steamer, one which will leave Boston in the months of January, February, March and April. One ship only will leave England during the months of December, January, February and March.

ERIE STEAMBOAT.—The Erie Gazette states that between 120 and 130 bodies have been taken from the lake since the body of the late Erie was burnt. They were principally buried at Silver Creek, Dunkirk and Buffalo. Two or three were brought to Erie for interment.

THE STEAM FRIGATE KAMSHATKA. This vessel, built at New York for the Russian government, sailed for Cronstadt on Wednesday morning. The vessel is not the first of the class, and is not the best in speed by any other sea steamer in the world. One of the principal features of the Kamshatka is the steadiness, and easy, swiftness of motion with which she moves through the water. She is not a vessel of great draught, nor does she rise from the machinery, all is quiet and firm. Standing on the deck, persons do not feel as if the entire fabric beneath them was tumbling to pieces. They feel safe and secure. The vessel is of the size of six hundred horse power, and has tonnage about two thousand.

SUB-MARINE ARMOR. Captain Taylor the inventor of the submarine armor, made an interesting and successful experiment of his apparatus recently, at the navy yard at Philadelphia, in the presence of a number of officers of the navy and invited guests. The gunner commanded the vessel, and with the armor, and having invested himself in it, he was let down into the water, and remained beneath the surface six minutes. He came out perfectly dry, and declared that he was not even slightly wet, and could remain below a week. The experiment is said to have been successful in every respect, and fully established the great utility of the invention. Captain Taylor superintended the experiment in person.

TEMPERANCE FRIENDS. Living up to Principle. The captain of the steamer from New-York to Maine was at short time at St. Croix, and was there offered $1,000 to bring home a cargo of rum, but refused, preferring to return in ballast.

THE VINE IN FRANCE. Five millions of acres are devoted to the cultivation of the vine in France. The value of the article produced is 500,000,000 francs a year.

VICKRETT. Some alarm was entertained on the 18th ult. of cases of yellow fever.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

[Fifth Series.—No. 6.—Vol. XI.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 9, 1841.

[Vol. LXXI.—Whole No. 1,567.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 6, VOL. XI.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS—Great Britain—Grain market, Harvest, Cotton market, State of trade, Huddersfield, Tea, Money market, Parliamentary proceedings, Ministerial explanation of measures, Debate on the destruction of the Caroline, Col. Napier and the Times, Items, Army aggregate, Mr. Peel on the question of peace or war.

FRANCE—Attempt to assassinate the Duke d'Angoulême, Items, French Affairs, Spain, Portugal, Holland and Belgium, Austria, Prussia, Poland, Greece, Turkey, British expedition up the Niger, Another up the Euphrates, Egypt, Syria, Failure in the Western Islands, South America, Rio Grande, Naval fight between the Buenos Ayres and Banda Oriental fleets, Cuba slave trade, Canada, Legislative proceedings.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS—Appointments, The secretary of war, John C. Spencer, Consuls, Treasury note report, Sketch of U. S. commerce and navigation, Operation of the new revenue act.

SPAIN—The Unpop—Massachusetts, Mechanics institute, New Hampshire, legislature; New York, historical account, of the New York and Erie rail road; New Jersey, to France; Items; Virginia, special election; Maryland, election, from Congress; South Carolina, military revenue; Illinois, statistics and population; Arkansas, bonds; Tennessee, death of Gov. Canoin; Florida, Indians.

MELROD'S TRIAL, commenced.

LETTERS from ex-president Andrew Jackson.

INVENTIONS, &c. explosive shells; Shrapnel inventors.

BRITISH EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

CAVE DISCOVERED IN CONNECTICUT.

THE SECOND VETO—Mr. Proffitt's speech.

CHRONICLE.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

The steamer Arcadia with 100 passengers reached Boston, via Halifax, on the 5th inst. bringing dates to the 15th September.

Daniel Dixie came passenger and is bearer of despatches for the American government from our minister in England.

GREAT BRITAIN.

GRAIN MARKET. Opening of the British ports. The account of the corn market shows that the last week opened the ports for the admission of foreign wheats and flour at the lowest rates of duty, viz: 1s. per quarter, the average price of the previous six weeks having been 73s. 3d. per quarter. This it was supposed would not last over a week.

THE HARVEST. The London Chronicle of the 13th contains extracts from various country papers respecting the state of the weather. There had been a good deal of rain, with changeable weather, and the gathering of the harvest had been retarded in the north—but in the south the corn being for the most part well housed and free from danger: there will, it is said, be a deficiency of about one-sixth or seventh of the usual average crop.

The London Atlas says:—The harvest is now fairly ended in many of the southern countries, although in the north it is still exposed to danger. Undoubtedly the result turns out much better than was expected a month or six weeks ago, still no one will deny that there will be a serious deficiency. From observation and inquiry in various parts we are inclined to think it will yield one-sixth or one-seventh less than an average crop; or, in other words, we may require two millions and a half, or three millions of quarters of wheat from foreign countries, in addition to our domestic supplies, to feed the population of Great Britain until the autumn of 1842.

COTTON MARKET. Liverpool, Sept. 11. There has again, this week, been a fair demand for cotton from the trade, but the market has been freely supplied and very irregular, and closes heavily at a decline of 1d. per lb. from last week's quotations, a decline of 1d. per lb. having been submitted to. The sales of the week amount to 32,550 bales, including 500 American on speculation and 1,250 American and 300 Surat for export. Yesterday there was a good attendance of the trade and an extensive demand; still the market closes very tamely. We have had a better business doing to-day, with a steadier market.—There is no variation in prices.

September 17. Weekly report. There was a good demand for cotton in the early part of the week, and rather advancing prices obtained; since Tuesday, however, there has been less animation, the market equal, if not a larger, quantity offering, consequently a more favorable market for the buyer; our quotations therefore will not differ from those of Friday last, in any descriptions except Maranhams, which are a shade lower. The sales of the week have been 30,100 bales, 400 New Orleans, 3c. good to fine, 7 to 8 3/4d. Mobile, 8c. good to 7 1/4 to 7 3/4; 6,730 upland Georgia, do. 7 to 7 1/4. Imports this week, 12,277 bales. Stock, September 17, 439,100 American; total stock of all kinds, 573,300. Last year, same date, 498,300.

STATE OF TRADE. At Manchester the whole of this week, as regards business, may be reported a blank; fewer operations in one week we never remembered, even at the worst date of the year, and this is the time of the year for all others that business is most brisk. We must, however, except the fustian trade, as in both fustians and cords a large amount of business has been done, and even at improved rates; indeed it is the only branch that can be said to be healthy. Prices both for goods and yarns may be reported lower, although in yarns for the Russian market some demand may be noticed. The print trade is very bad, and many print works are only half employed.

Huddersfield Market. A fair amount of business was done to-day, yet not so much as last week. Nor is there quite so much confidence; left in the commercial stability, partly owing to numerous failures in most parts of the country, and the foreign demand being on the wane. The principal demand was in the middle and low priced woollens and kerseys. Plain superfines there was more animation, and in light fancy goods generally, the demand was equal to the season. Prices are firm, and business in the warehouses continue tolerable.

The Market. The knowledge that about two-thirds of the usual annual supply of tea was in course of shipment for England, when the last letters from Canton were despatched, has frightened the speculators, and caused a reduction of 15 to 20 per cent. in the price of the article here; but the importers do not appear to sell at this reduction so readily as the speculators do.

Trade and Commerce. The business of the port of London has certainly improved this week, but still there is an absence of any thing like general activity. The tea trade is in a more quiescent state than was anticipated. The next arrivals from Canton are looked for with much interest.

London Journal of Commerce, Sept. 18.

Money Market. London Stock Exchange, Sept. 11. Weekly report—This has been a very quiet week; and if we took the events of each day and analyzed them, both as regards news and fluctuations in the stock market, we should find little on which to form a remark. Money still continues in request at five per cent. The English funds have been steady throughout the week. Exchequer bills have been heavy, and have declined about 3s. since the close of last week, owing to the pressure for money. The English stocks have been up to the close of business (4 o'clock); consols for money have advanced to 91 1/2; whilst for the account the price remains unaltered at 90 1/2. Exchequer bills have improved 1s. being now 12s. to 14s.

September 17. The fluctuations in the British stock market have been again limited this week, and business continued high to be conducted on a very small scale; but prices, after having improved, have since retrograded. It is only, therefore, necessary to annex the average of prices, as it will afford the best commentary as to the relative values the funds have borne since our last report—Consols, highest, 91 1/2; lowest, 90 1/2; ditto account, highest, 90 1/2; lowest, 89 1/2.

Friday Evening. The stock market to-day has recovered in a great measure from the partial depression which prevailed in it towards the close of business yesterday. The transactions have been on rather a larger scale. For present delivery, consols have advanced 88 1/2 to 89 1/2, and for the account 90 1/2 to 90 1/2, both on Wednesday's value. Exchequer bills have been done at a premium of 12s. to 14s.

London Journal of Commerce of the 18th.

The official London Gazette gives several appointments in the new ministerial list, but they are not of much importance.

Parliament, September 6. The house of lords re-assembled this day, when the change of seats customary upon the advent of a new administration to office took place.—Sept. 8. The business of the day having been disposed of, the house adjourned to Sept. 20. The house of commons re-assembled Sept. 6th, but the business is not of particular interest. The house adjourned September 8th till the 16th, when it again assembled, and sir Robert Peel made a short speech, in which he stated what he had to propose with respect to the course of business during the sitting.

Exposition of the measures of government. Sir Robert Peel rose and said that he desired to move for a paper, to which it was desirable to call the attention of the house, connected with the building of the new houses of parliament; and in doing so it might be also desirable that he should state for the convenience of honorable members the course which he intended to pursue with reference to the public business of the country. Notices had been given for to-morrow of the estimates for which complete provision had not yet been made.

It would be in the recollection of the house that a vote had been taken from the last parliament for money for the public service for one half year. What he proposed to do was to adopt, without exception, the estimates as framed by her majesty's late government, and to submit them to the house in precisely the same way as they had been submitted by its predecessors in office.

On some former occasion, however, the revision required had been taken in one amount, but as only a vote of credit had been previously taken, he should propose on this occasion to submit the estimates in detail, believing that on various grounds that course would be the most satisfactory one to the house and to the public.

He was not aware that it would be necessary to make any proposition with reference to any branch of the public service for which provision had not already been in part made, but with respect to one item of expenditure it was necessary for him to make allusion. He referred to the works in progress for the erection of the new houses of parliament. These works had now progressed to such a point, that it became necessary for the house to decide as to the erection of the stables and other apparatus for warming and lighting these buildings.

From 80,000 to 250,000 would be required for this purpose, and he thought it desirable that the house should give its special sanction to the expenditure of such a sum of money. With regard to another question it was his intention to propose bills to continue the operation of the laws which would expire either within the present session or at a definite date. The most important of those laws was the law for the relief of the poor.

That law he intended to propose to continue with the others for a certain time. The house was aware that in the regular order of things, the part of the law which constituted the poor law commission would expire on the 31st December next.

He should propose to provide that the act as it now stood should continue in full operation for half a year longer, namely to the 31st July, 1842, thus giving time for her majesty's government to consider what would be the nature of the provisions they should make with reference to this most important subject. It would be for the house to consider whether the enactment for continuing this law should be a separate one, or should form part and parcel of a general bill for the continuance of expiring laws.

He meant to introduce a general bill on the subject in the first instance; but if it was the desire of the house, he should have no objection to the continuance of this law being provided for by a separate and special enactment. (Hear.) He wished it to be understood, however, that he did not propose to make any alteration, but continue the law exactly as it now stood on the statute book.

With regard to the contested elections, he thought it would be for the general interest that no proceedings should be adopted for the present.

He believed no special order of the house was required on this subject, as under the controverted election act the general election committee had it in their power to fix the days for the commencement of proceedings before the committees.

With regard to financial arrangements, his right hon. friend the chancellor of the exchequer would, on the first day that he could do so in conformity with the rules of the house, state the amount of deficiency for which it would be the duty of the house to provide. He apprehended that that deficiency would not be found to fall very much short of the sum mentioned by the late chancellor of the exchequer—namely, two millions and a half.

With the details of the causes of that deficiency his right hon. friend would enter on that occasion and he would also avail himself of the opportunity to state the measures which her majesty's government purposes for making temporary provision to meet that deficiency.

With regard to any measure for equalizing the revenue and expenditures of the country, he (Sir Robert Peel) did not propose to enter during the present session. He had already expressed his opinion that it would be necessary to adopt some measures on that subject; and that ministers could not have any consideration, her majesty's government would not fail to present to the notice of the house such measures as they might deem desirable to meet the exigencies of the case.

But whether these measures would consist of a reduction of the expenditure of the country, or of an increase of the revenue, or of a combination of both, he must for the present postpone stating. He was enough in him to say now that it was impossible for the country to proceed in the course which it had pursued for several years past, namely, in the increase of debt in a period of peace.

But how he would regret that evil he must ask the committee of the house to give him time to consider; and he should also ask for the same with regard to other measures into which he need not now enter.—It was true that he and friends about him had now held their offices for several days, but he thought the house would be ready to acknowledge that the preliminary measures for the formation of a government were themselves calculated to engross the greater part of that time without his definitely arranging the measures he should submit to the consideration of parliament on these topics.

He should forbear calling the attention of parliament to measures of an important character in consequence of the peculiar circumstances attending the formation of the government. He thought that there was a desire even amongst the warmest opponents of the government to give a fair opportunity for the consideration of those measures which they may think beneficial to the country.

The right honorable baronet then concluded by moving "that there be laid before the house a copy of the letter from the first commissioner of woods and forests to the chancellor of the exchequer on the subject of warming and ventilating the houses of parliament."

Lord John Russell replied by stating, that he heard with great regret it was not Sir Robert Peel's intention to bring forward any important measure in the present session; he thought, considering the time which had elapsed since the principal of the now pending questions had come under the public consideration, that ministers could not have any preparation to present a proposal in connexion with subjects of so much consequence to the country.

Sept. 17. Sir Robert Peel having moved the order of the day, that the house go into a committee of supply, Lord John Russell rose and made a long speech, in which he stated the course which he thought ought to be pursued with reference to the present state of public affairs. Sir Robert Peel replied, that he should not alter his decisions, as stated to the house. Lord Palmerston regretted the course taken, and said he would not be satisfied with the result. A long and uninteresting discussion then ensued, which ended in Mr. Fiebelman moving an amendment, calling on the house, before granting the supplies, to take into consideration the business of the country. Dr. Bowring seconded the motion, and on a division, the original motion was carried by 149 to 41. The house then went into committee on supply. Some miscellaneous estimates were then voted, and the house adjourned to the 20th.

DESTRUCTION OF THE CAROLINE. Lord John Russell then rose and made his promised speech, giving his view of the present state of the country and the line of policy proper to be pursued—in other words, marking out the course of opposition. He began by the foreign relations, and especially with the United States, as to which he said:

In one part of our foreign relations there is certainly a question in connexion with the U. States, which, in some of its aspects, affords cause of uneasiness; but my noble friend, as secretary for foreign affairs, satisfied the house, by an answer of the United States secretary, that both her majesty's government and the government of the United States perfectly agreed as to the character which should be attributed to the attack upon, and the capture of, the Caroline—(loudly)—that it was a case which was debated between nation and nation, and not to be treated as a private wrong. A different view, however, had been taken by the judges of the state of N. York, and if that view should be carried out it would be destructive of all amicable relations between the two governments.

If two governments were not to decide if a question was international, or between private individuals, and any judge had the power of deciding that a question which the government considered national was a subject for the local courts, no amicable relation could subsist between the two states. (Hear, hear.) He read the judgment of the judges who decided this case, and in that judgment it seemed to be admitted that the two executive authorities had agreed that the case was one which should be decided between the two governments. But the judge who had decided that case had stated it as his opinion that it could not be considered as a case of war, and therefore that it was a proper one to be decided by his own tribunal.

It appears to me that this is a doctrine to which no government can agree. For, according to this doctrine, if sir Graham Moore, or any other officer who had captured the Spanish frigates at the beginning of the Spanish war, should be taken before a Spanish tribunal, it would be equally competent to the judge of that tribunal to say there was no declaration of war at the time these captures were made, therefore the captures are piratical, and the officers engaged in them are liable to be convicted of murder. But on the other hand it appears that, though such may be the construction of the law adopted by the state of N. York, yet, considering what has been stated on one side by Mr. Fox, and on the other by Mr. Webster, with regard to circumstances attending the capture of the Caroline, and the accordance of opinion existing on that subject. (Hear.) I do not believe that the authority of the law will permit any occurrence to take place which will expose our country to the possibility to danger for executing the commands of his sovereign. I therefore feel convinced that, while the two governments are agreed, it is not likely that there will arise any cause of war between the two countries. I am sure that there prevails in this country, and I believe in the United States also, the strongest desire that peace may be preserved between those two great countries. (Cheers.)

Sir Robert Peel replied. With reference to the United States he was brief enough.

As to the United States, I confess I look to the present state of our relations with them with great solicitude. (Hear, hear.) It seems to be so manifestly the interest of these two countries, which are united by so many ties, to avoid a hostile collision, that I hope the good feeling and the good sense of the people of this country will aid the government if any necessity for that should arise. But at the same time feel the obligation of making no concession derogatory to the honor of this country for the sake of a temporary conciliation. (Great cheering.)

Sir Edward Sugden has refused to accept the chancellorship of Ireland.

A great anti-corn law meeting was held at Manchester on the 16th of September, the call for which was signed by 318 of the most respectable firms and individuals in and about any of the counties.

A memorial to the queen was adopted, imploring her majesty to use her influence for the repeal of the taxes on food. The statements of distress made by some of the speakers were most appalling.

A great number of petitions for the repeal of the corn laws were presented.

Mr. Barclay gave notice of an address to the queen, praying her to use her influence with all maritime powers to obtain treaties binding them to suppress the barbarous practice of piracy.

Mr. J. Curtis, of Ohio, has been making speeches in several large towns in England, about the expediency of the war against America, to supply England with corn. The people of Manchester had asked him to write home that the corn laws should be repealed.

Vauxhall Gardens were sold by auction, at Garraway's coffee house, on the 9th ult. for £20,200, to a Mr. Fowler. The Princess's theatre, in Oxford-street, burnt by Mr. Hankey, the jeweller, to the value of £10,000, and the theatre of his assignees, for £16,000. Covent Garden theatre was assigned by Madame Vestris on the 6th ult.

The old banking-house of Holbourn & Co. of Bath, has stopped payment.

The Kelso, a new ship of 900 tons, was destroyed by fire, with most of her cargo, on the 9th ult. in the West India docks. A fire broke out in a building in Piccadilly, occupied by a Mr. Salmon, on the 12th, and entirely destroyed it. A fireman was killed at the time by the falling timbers, and another was seriously injured.

D. J. O'Connell continues to attend the repeal meetings in Ireland, and is very violent against the new cabinet. He boasts of the aid he receives from America, and says that a large remittance from New York was expected soon.

Col. Napier, the author, it is thought, of the great history of the Peninsula war, has been engaged in a controversy with the Times, on the McLeod case. We have only one of his articles, but it seems to afford a sufficient understanding of the whole discussion.

Colonel Napier in reply to the "Times."

Times.—"The republican sympathisers were the first aggressors."

Answer.—That gave England no right to invade America.

Times.—"The destruction of the Caroline was a matter of self-defence."

Answer.—That may be proved. If she had been destroyed out of the American waters it would have been so. If she had been pursued into the American waters when flying from an attack, it would have been so. But she was deliberately attacked in the American waters, without any previous demand for redress, without any proof offered, any declaration made, and without any piratical vessel being in the vicinity, was, therefore, an attack on the American nation.

Times.—"The state of New York was bound to enforce the neutrality of its citizens."

Answer.—Undoubtedly, if it could. An American general was sent with troops to enforce it. But the frontier is immense, and a coast so long. The neutral coast could not be enforced. Was bad faith on the part of the American government suspected? If so, an energetic remonstrance and notice of reprisals, if redress was not granted, would have been the mode of proceeding according to the international law.—Was no deceit suspected? Then a demand for the surrender of the Caroline and her crew as a piratical vessel, or the punishment of the pirates, according to the laws of America, would have been the proper mode of proceeding. In either case the right of the American nation to have its sovereignty in its own waters respected would have been conceded, but the deliberate destruction of the Caroline in American waters by a command act in itself, and not the continuation of an attack commenced before she took refuge in the American waters, was quite unauthorized by international law. Was it a matter of necessity? That necessity should have been shown; and an apology founded on it offered for the assault upon American sovereignty. Had this been done, on the instant weakness or dishonor could have been imputed to England, and though it would be less graceful now, it is never too late to act justly and honorably.

Times.—"The federal government has explicitly recognised the right of England to insist unconditionally on Mr. McLeod's release."

Answer.—This has no bearing on the question.—The captivity and trial of McLeod, after the English government had taken upon itself the responsibility of destroying the Caroline, is a violation of international law on the part of America, which the federal government does not defend, and which it undertakes to defend in no manner justifies the previous violation of international law by England. The federal government is willing to redress the injustice done to us by releasing McLeod, but apparently it is unable. We then, on our part, ought to express an equal willingness to redress the injury done to American sovereignty, either by showing the necessity of releasing the provocation, and apologizing. In fine, the Times would adduce those proofs of the necessity for the destruction of the Caroline, in the manner it was effected, which have been laid down in Mr. Webster's letter to Mr. Fox as requisite to bring the act within the pale of necessity and expediency, and more reasonable and more effectual than calling any proposal for an apology "stark staring nonsense."

W. NAPIER.

ARMY. We find, from a return moved for by Mr. Hume, M. P. that the total number of English, Irish, and Scotch non-commissioned officers and privates in the British army (exclusive of artillery and sappers and miners) amounted to 103,400 in January, 1840, and 103,350, and on the 1st of January, 1841, 102,577.

PEACE AND WAR. Extracts from the speech of Sir R. Peel. Let me first notice two or three points in the address upon which no great difference of opinion is entertained. The first is that in which we express our satisfaction "that the temporary suspension of the measures taken in execution of the treaty of the 15th of July, 1840, created between the contracting parties and France has now ceased." Sir, no man learns with more satisfaction than I do, that that separation has ceased. No man learns with more satisfaction that France has acted consistently with her honor in entering again into the great councils of Europe. (Hear, hear.) I do, however, hope that that union will not be a mere formal reunion, but that it will be accompanied with the restoration of those amicable feelings, and of that cordial and good understanding between the chambers of dep. of France, and the people, and the security and tranquillity of Europe. (Cries of "hear" from both sides of the house.) I have read with feelings of the greatest satisfaction the sentiments which have been recently expressed by a great statesman—I speak not of sentiments expressed in the assembly of the chambers of dep. of France, but of a public meeting, and whatever is stated at such a meeting by a man so eminent, holding so high and important a situation, and who has proved himself so truly deserving of the character of a great statesman as M. Guizot, the present minister for foreign affairs in France must command attention—I have seen, I say, in the utterance of such a frank and candid declaration from him—that he rejoices in the prospect of the restoration of a good understanding between France and the other powers of Europe. (Hear, hear.)

The next paragraph says—"her majesty trusts that the union of the principal powers upon all matters affecting the great interests of France will afford a firm security for the maintenance of peace." I, for one, with the rest of this house, also reciprocate that hope. I sincerely hope that a cordial union may exist between those powers upon all matters relating to the interests of Europe, and I hope the first great interest of Europe that will be discussed, will be the maintenance of peace. (Hear, hear.) Is not the time come when those powerful councils may reduce their military establishments, (hear, hear), when they may say to each other "there is no use in this relative increase of military strength?" And what, after all, is the use of one power greatly increasing her navy or greatly increasing her army? Does not that power know that for the purposes of protection and self-defence other powers will follow the example? And does it not also know that there is no relative increase of military strength that does not produce a corresponding weakness in another direction? (Hear, hear.) By such a course you derive political and military advantages, which you anticipate, the energies of war whenever may become necessary. It is no romantic idea, that when a nation has to trust to its armaments for security, profusion of its resources must weaken its power of protection. If each country will commune with itself, if each country will ask what is the state of its finances and those of every country in Europe, if each country will ask what is the danger to be apprehended at present from foreign aggression, compared with the danger of producing dissatisfaction and discontent, from curtailing the comforts of the people by undue taxation, the answer it must give is, that the danger from foreign aggression is less than the danger from the preparation of war. (Hear, hear.) That is a question connected with the interests of Europe which I hope may be amongst the first attended to. It is not a question of which country shall exercise the greatest influence in this court or in another; the question is, whether it is not the true interest of the countries of Europe to have a common accord which shall enable them to reduce those military armaments which belong to a state of war rather than of peace. (Hear, hear.)

I wish that the councils of each of those countries—and if their councils will not, I hope that the public opinion of each country will induce them to direct their attention to the great revolution which has been brought about of late years in the feelings of Europe. A 25 years peace, an increased intercourse of commerce, new connexions, and new interests, have effected a great change in public affairs. Take France, for instance, and what country in Europe, if common sense and the councils of that country, will direct them to wish to see such a nation curtailed of its legitimate proportion of its authority in the general councils of Europe. Some persons are disposed to think that this old feeling of what is supposed to be national hostility towards France still prevails in this country. That is a complete mistake. (A general cry of "hear.") If you take the public opinion of this country in the proportion of 99 to 1, you will find that there is no other wish amongst her people than that France should consolidate the free representative institutions by which she is governed—you will find that there is no other feeling of jealousy or hostility against her successful competition in the paths of science, in the encouragement of the arts, of literature, of manufactures, of industry, and of commerce. (Hear, hear.) My firm belief is, that if France were in danger from just aggression, the security of the nation would not be found in the number of her regiments, but in the mind and public support of her people, who would rise with the energy of one man to dispel the danger of that aggression.

The same may be said of that magnificent country Germany, in the midst of which though divided into separate estates, there prevails at this moment, a spirit and a force which extends from Hamburg to the Tyrol, and from Berlin to the southern confines of the country, and which, if the country were threatened with aggression would likewise rise in all its fulness, and its majesty, and annihilate the invaders. (Hear, hear.) In them are to be found the securities against aggression, and for the maintenance of peace, and in "Time-raised battlements or labored mounds," in "Thick built walls or moated gates."

but in man, his mind, his soul, the same, who, at the call of patriotism in Germany or France, would, at the notice of a moment, rise in all that energy which France displayed in '98. (Cheers.) Why do I give this counsel? (Cries of "hear," from the ministerial side of the house.) If I could assume your hypothesis that I shall be called to power, you surely will charge me with an indecent presumption in giving this advice. (Hear, hear.) The first impression perhaps will be, that "this man is afraid of war," or that he counsels other states to reduce their army, in order that he may gain by their doing some paltry advantage; but public men must disregard such low and grovelling insinuations. (Cheers.) You cannot conduct a war as a party. You cannot make a country that you conquer bear the expense of the conquest. That is impossible. What, then, must these warlike preparations end in? A moment must arrive the most ineluctable for states as well as for individuals; a day of reckoning will come. (Loud cries of "hear.") It is the same thing in every country. And when the people come to calculate in their sober moments the relative advantages of immense armaments and universal distress in the train of military glory, with the taxes raised to maintain those armaments—when they come to take calmer and more discreet views as to the relative merits of the cost and of the momentary excitement, their sober conclusions would justify a statesman in adopting an equally sober policy, but a policy which at the same time is perfectly consistent with the firmest determination, if an occasion should unhappily call for it, to risk every thing in the maintenance of the honor and true interests of the country. (Cheers.)

FRANCE.

The most important news from Paris is that respecting an attempt to assassinate one of the royal family on the 13th ult. The French papers are occupied with little else of interest. It appears that the Duke d'Angame, who had marched with the 17th light infantry through France from Marseilles, had just arrived in Paris, a white proceeding at the head of his regiment, together with his three brothers, the Dukes of Orléans, Nemours and Montpensier, an assassin named Pappard discharged a pistol shot at him; but fortunately the shot did not take effect.—Pappard was instantly arrested. The greatest excitement prevailed in Paris. Groups of loose characterable men, many of the cost, uttered edifying remarks as Louis Philippe—was Guizot—we must have blood," were heard. The mobs were dispersed without a riot taking place. The census had caused very disagreeable events in the south of France, where trifling disorders had taken place. The people fired on the military at Clermont, in Auvergne, killing and wounding several. The troops succeeded in putting the riots down. The disturbances in most places had nearly subsided by the last accounts.

M. Hottinguer, the celebrated banker of Paris, died on the 10th ult. also E. Berlin, principal editor of the Journal des Debats for 40 years.

It was generally believed in Paris that the new French loan (for 150,000,000) would be brought out in October.

French Africa. Toulon, Sept. 11, (received the 13th).—The maritime prefect to the minister of marine. The situation of the provinces of the west is continually improving; 10,000 Men have been sent on our side, and, thanks to their medium, Mostaganem abounds with supplies. The submission of the Bordja, who have sent in hostages, is considered as likely to take place soon; and their example will necessarily bring about the surrender of the Garrabas. The Arabs, who had abandoned our Domain as we were asking for leave to return. There is no longer any talk of Abdel-Kader, who does not give any obstacles to these desertions; and it is hence concluded that the autumn campaign will subdue him completely. There is nothing new from Mahon.

AFRICA.

The expedition fitted out in England for promoting civilization in Africa, visited Monrovia, and took on board one or two persons to assist in cotton planting. The fleet consists of two iron steamers and a tender. They will proceed up the Niger.

The object of the expedition, as shown by Captain Trotter, is to proceed up the Niger, with a view to obtain accurate geographical knowledge and surveys, and to form treaties with the various chiefs in its route, for the abolition of the traffic in slaves, and the establishment of a legitimate commerce.

The immediate objects of the society, are to make the Africans acquainted with the innumerable riches of their own soil, and to sedulously divert their attention to its cultivation, on a system of free labor. To convince them, moreover, of the unmeasurable superiority of agriculture, and innocent commerce even in point of profit over the slave trade, which excludes them.

2. To instruct the natives in agriculture and practical science, by cultivating small portions of land as models for their imitation, to distribute agricultural implements, seeds, plants, &c. to introduce local and other improvements, and to suggest and facilitate the means of beneficially exchanging the products of Africa for the manufactures of Europe.

3. To examine the principal languages of Africa, and to reduce them when possible to a written form.

4. To investigate the diseases of the climate, and local peculiarities of Africa, for the benefit as well of natives as of foreign residents and travellers, and to send out medicine for the manufacture of Europe.

5. To co-operate by every means in its power with the government expedition to the Niger, to report the progress, assist its operations, circulate the valuable information it communicates, and generally to keep alive the interest of Great Britain in the suppression of the slave trade, and the welfare of Africa.

SPAIN.

The news from Madrid is unimportant. The Spanish government has permitted the Infante Don Francisco de Paulo and his family to return to Madrid. To measure will give a sad blow to the faction of the exiles.

Espartaco has signified to the French government that the queen being a minor would not be permitted to receive letters from an ambassador, even if deputed by his government for that purpose.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

Spain and Portugal were on the worst terms. Many fear that the two nations are inevitable. The regent of Spain is well disposed for a rupture with Donna Maria.

GREECE.

The new Greek ministry is at an end. Myrceorodo, worn out by the obstacles thrown in his way by King Otho, has definitely resigned, and another cabinet had been formed. The affairs of Greece were rapidly becoming more complicated, and an insurrection against the Bavarian rule was anticipated.

HOLLAND AND BELGIUM.

Amsterdam. The report on the budget has met with such rigorous opposition that it is thought the legislature may not even be satisfied with rejecting several of the most obnoxious chapters. The introduction of a more rigid economy, and a more simple administration, has been insisted on.

The British Queen steamer arrived at Antwerp Sept. 9.

AUSTRIA.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Morning Post, states that the notes of prince Metternich had procured the assent of France to the disarming of Europe. The reduction of the Austrian army is to take place in October, when, it is said, the entire Landwehr will be disbanded.

PRUSSIA.

It is stated that the differences between Prussia and the Holy See had been adjusted, by means of mutual concessions, and that the king had conferred a decoration on the Prussian negotiator in testimony of his satisfaction.

POLAND.

Advices from the frontiers of Poland, contradict the reports of changes in the institutions of that country. The emperor, it was thought, would not visit Warsaw this year. The Russian troops in Poland had been reduced to the peace footing.

TURKEY.

Accounts from Constantinople of the 28th of August, states that the tribute to be paid by the Syrian emirs had been fixed at £17,530. Said Bey was still in the Turkish capital.

Lord Ponsonby was about to leave Constantinople for England.

The Candian insurrection was completely at an end and Mustafa pasha had returned to Candia.

The appointment under these circumstances seemed calculated to show a disposition on the part of President Tyler to conciliate the differences between the lately interrupted party. The action in good faith and followed by a corresponding course of executive action, given to the people will hardly know what to believe while the President, the official organ of the executive, is at the same time to vituperate the warring party, and to charge upon Mr. CLAY and his friends a foul conspiracy against the purpose of breaking down Mr. TYLER.—It is this charge is too absurd to gain credence.— fact that it is made and reiterated argues anything but a conciliatory disposition.

With regard to Mr. SPENCER, he is every where spoken of with great respect. His abilities are highly esteemed, and his character for application and business habits are of the first order. Previous to his appointment to the war department he held in New York the office of secretary of state."

CONSULS. EDWARD DE WOLF, esq. consul for the Netherlands at Mobile, died at Pensacola on the 17th ultimo.

Among the strangers lately arrived in Washington, is BATH VANDERSTRAETEN, who succeeds Count DE BAILLET, as secretary to the Belgian legation near the United States.

TREASURY NOTES. Treasury Department, October 2, 1841. Amount of treasury notes issued under the provisions of the acts of congress of 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840 $30,681,337. 52
Redeemed of those issues 24,902,925.64

Leaving outstanding	$1,778,411.89
Issued under the act of February, 1841, viz: Prior to
March 4, 1838	673,651.32
Since March 4, 1838	5,373,251.53
	5,946,932.90
Redeemed of that issue	352,320.39
Leaving outstanding	5,594,612.51
Making an aggregate outstanding of	$7,373,024.40
W. FORWARD, secretary of the treasury.

SKETCH OF THE COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN 1840. We have at length received a copy of the annual report which has just been printed. In anticipation of the regular tables which we generally publish, we have made the following hasty sketch of the commerce of 1840.

Imports 1840. The imports in 1840 (year ending 30th September) amounted to $107,141,519, exceeded by the exports 24,944,427. (This amount varies from the tables accompanying the report of the secretary, vol. III, p. 409, it being then only an estimate.)

In 1838 the imports were $113,717,041
1839 162,092,132
1840 107,141,519

Which shows the imports in 1840 to have been less than in 1838 by $6,575,585, and than in 1839, $5,495,613.

Of the imports, 499,802,352 were in American, and $14,339,167 in foreign vessels.

Of the whole amount of imports $57,196,204, or 53 per cent was free of duty.

The amount of imports from England $33,114,133 Mexico $4,175,001
France 17,572,876 Hanse towns 2,521,493
China 9,835,477 Brit. Am. col. 2,007,767
Brazil 6,640,829 Russia 2,572,427
Spain 4,927,296 Brit. E. Ind. 1,952,641
From Sweden and Norway, Holland, British W. I. Hayti, Spain, Spanish W. I. except Cuba, Italy, Venezuela, Chili, the imports exceeded one million each.
Some of the principal articles of imported were Teas (from China) lbs. 19,814,476 $5,417,589
Coffee, lbs. 94,996,095 8,546,222
Silks net India 8,288,958
Cloths and cassimeres 4,686,529
Cottons dyed, printed or colored 3,893,694
Brown sugar, 107,955,093 lbs. 4,742,492
Bar iron 3,397,480
Salt 1,015,426
Molasses 2,910,791

Exports.
The amt of exports in 1840 amt'd to $132,085,946
1839 121,028,416
1838 106,486,616
Being an excess in 1840 over 1838 of $25,399,330 and over 1839 of $11,057,530. Domestic exports in 1840 amounted to $113,395,634, and foreign exports to $18,190,312. In 1840 the domestic exports exceeded those of 1839, $10,361,743. The exports exceed the imports $24,944,427.

Some of the principal domestic exports in 1840—
Cotton $63,750,367
Flour 10,143,615
Tobacco 9,883,957
Cotton goods 3,549,607
Refined sugar 1,214,658
Of the exports there went to England $57,045,660 Holland $8,656,310
France 21,841,554 Brit. W. Ind. 2,965,584
Cuba 6,310,515 Mexico 2,515,341
Brit. Am. Col. 6,093,250 Brazil 2,066,574
Hanse towns 4,198,439 Scotland 2,050,940

Russia, Danish W. Indies, Hayti, Italy, Trieste, Texas, Chili and China each took of the exports over one million.

Imports—gold bullion	$723,127
silver do.	469,434
	742,561
Specie—gold	2,812,030
silver	5,328,222
	8,140,252
	8,882,513
Exports—Am. gold & silver coin	2,235,073
Foreign gold	1,468,300
silver	4,665,952
	6,134,252
	8,369,325

Total excess of imports $513,458
Showing that there has been an excess of imports of $2,748,561 of foreign gold and silver, and an export of $2,255,073 of American in its place.

Commerce of some of the Atlantic states.
New York—Imports 60,440,750 dollars. Exports $34,064,050, viz: domestic produce $2,676,609. Foreign $11,587,471—Tonnage entered, vessels, 4,551; tons, 1,006,990; crews, 54,583 men and boys. American vessels, 2,483; foreign, 1,708. Cleared, 2,411 American; 1,678 foreign; total, 4,089.
Massachusetts—Imports $16,513,858. Exports, $10,186,261, viz: American $6,968,158. Foreign, $3,918,103. Tonnage entered, 1,904 vessels; tons, 321,450; crews, 16,566; American vessels, 1,201; foreign, 703. Cleared, 1,704, viz: 940 American and 764 foreign.

Pennsylvania—Imports $3,464,882. Exports, $6,890,155, viz: American produce $5,736,456; foreign, $1,083,689. Tonnage entered, 444 vessels; tons, 87,792; crews, 4,253; American, 353; foreign, 91. Cleared, 376 American; 83 foreign.

Maryland—Imports, 4,910,746 dollars. Exports, $5,768,768, viz: American produce $3,495,020. Foreign, $2,273,748. Vessels entered 410 tons, 82,144; crews, 3,727; American, 303; foreign 101. Cleared 352 American and 109 foreign; total, 461.

Virginia—Imports, $45,085. Exports, $4,769,337 domestic produce; $8,283 foreign. Total, $4,774,220; vessels entered, 136 American, 34 foreign; total, 170. Cleared, 223 American, 37 foreign; total, 260.

South Carolina—Imports, $2,025,470. Exports, $9,981,016 of domestic, and $55,733 foreign; total, $10,036,769; vessels entered, 257; tons, 60,645; crews, 27,792. Cleared, 406, viz: American, 323; foreign 84.
Georgia—Imports $91,428. Exports, $6,862,959—all American produce; entered 175 vessels; cleared, 281.

Alabama—Imports $574,651. Exports, $12,854,694—all domestic; vessels entered, 146 American; 61 foreign; total, 207. Cleared, 251 American, and 57 foreign; total, 308.

Louisiana—Imports 10,673,190 dollars. Exports, $32,998,059 of domestic, and $1,238,577 foreign; total, $34,236,636; vessels entered, 672 American; 352 foreign; total, 924. Cleared, 890 American and 265 foreign; total, 1,155.

Of the whole amount of domestic exports, the southern states exported, viz:

Maryland	5,495,020
Virginia	4,769,337
North Carolina	357,844
South Carolina	9,981,016
Georgia	6,862,959
Alabama	12,854,694
Louisiana	32,998,059
Florida	1,850,709
	75,199,878

The middle states exported as follows:
New York 22,676,609
New Jersey 14,863
Pennsylvania 5,736,456
Delaware 37,001

New England states:
Maine 1,009,910
New Hampshire 20,761
Vermont 305,150
Massachusetts 6,268,158
Rhode Island 203,006
Connecticut 515,210

Western states:
Ohio 991,954
Michigan 162,229

District of Columbia 1,154,183
751,429

Total exports $113,895,634
From this statement it would appear that the southern states export nearly three-fourths of the domestic products of the United States—of which Louisiana exports nearly one-half. But as the Mississippi is the natural outlet of the south-western and western states, which do not appear in the tables to have any exports—they ought to be considered in connexion with that state.—Again, they are entitled to a credit for a considerable portion of the exports from the middle and eastern states—such as cotton, tobacco, rice, &c.

The following is a similar classification of the states with respect to imports:

Maryland	4,910,746
Virginia	545,085
North Carolina	252,532
South Carolina	2,058,870
Georgia	491,428
Alabama	574,651
Louisiana	10,673,190
Florida	190,728
	19,697,230

Middle states:
New York 60,440,750
New Jersey 19,209
Pennsylvania 8,464,882
Delaware 802

New England or eastern states:
Maine 628,762
New Hampshire 110,647
Vermont 40,407
Massachusetts 16,513,858
Rhode Island 274,534
Connecticut 277,072

South-western and western:
Ohio 4,915
Kentucky 2,241
Tennessee 28,983
Michigan 138,610
Missouri 10,600

District of Columbia 185,304
119,552

Total imports $707,141,519
Showing that about four-fifths of the whole amount of imports arrive in the middle and eastern states.

Navigation and tonnage.
There arrived in 1840, 7,211 American, 4,571 foreign vessels—total 11,782 vessels, of 3,289,309 tons. Crews, 110,091 men, 3,739 boys. Cleared during the same time, 7,583 American, 4,583 foreign—total 12,166; tons 3,253,495. Crews, 116,331 men, 3,415 boys.

Of the foreign vessels which entered, 4,024 were British, 113 French, 134 Hanseatic, 101 Spanish.

Of the vessels entered, there arrived at
New York 1,955
Boston 1,507
Pascamaquoddy 1,161
New Orleans 924
Philadelphia 444
Baltimore 110

The registered tonnage of U. States is 899,764—76 enrolled and licensed 1,176,694—46 fishing vessels 104,304—84

Tons 2,180,764—16-95

The tonnage employed in whole fishery 136,926—64-95 coasting trade 1,144,664—34 cod fishery 67,926—48 mackerel fishery 28,269—19 steam navigation 198,184—30

There were built in the United States in 1840—37 ships, 109 brigs, 378 schooners, 221 sloops, 63 steamboats, total 871. Tonnage 118,309—23-35.

Of these 181 were built in Maine,
113 " " Massachusetts,
109 " " New Jersey,
103 " " Pennsylvania,
111 " " Maryland,
72 " " New York.

There were sold to foreigners 11 ships, " " 29 brigs, " " 46 schooners, " " 1 sloop.
Lost at sea 33 ships, " " 87 schooners, " 41 brigs, " 20 sloops, 72 " 16 steamboats.

88 vessels were condemned as unseaworthy.
[Hazard's Commercial Register.]

OPERATION OF THE NEW REVENUE ACT. The N. York American of the 1st inst. says—The new revenue act goes into operation this day. It was stated in our last that great quantities of free goods, in anticipation of the duties imposed by this act, were pouring in; and, moreover, that of French goods, by far the largest portion was for foreign export, or consigned to foreign houses here. The first of this statement having been questioned in a Philadelphia paper, we have obtained a statement from the custom house books of the entries by tree ships from Havre; and from these it appears that goods then "free," but now subject to duty, to the amount of six millions of francs, or about twelve hundred thousand dollars, were entered.

On the second point, the almost entire exclusion of America from the French trade, these shipments are not less significant—for about nine-tenths of the whole were for foreign account, and entered by foreigners.

Nor is it with French free goods alone that the market is glutted. Linens to an enormous amount have been brought in—so that it is estimated a full supply, for more than a year, has been received in anticipation of the duty.

THE ARMY.

MAJOR GENERAL SCOTT and his aid, Lieut. ALDEN, reached Washington on the 1st inst. from the northern frontier.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 58.

Head-quarters of the Army, Adjutant General's office, Washington, Oct. 2, 1841.

I. The 5th regiment of infantry will proceed to the Detroit frontier and Upper Lakes without delay, and take post as follows:

At Fort Brady, - - - one
Fort Mackinac, - - - two
Fort Gratiot, - - - two Companies.

II. Second and dependencies, five
On the 5th inst. the 5th infantry, the five companies of the 4th regiment of artillery on the Upper Lakes, (including Capt. Munroe's) will proceed to Buffalo, N. Y. and be stationed as follows:

Two at the head-quarters, Buffalo,
One at Fort Niagara,
One at Fort Oswego,
Two at Madison barracks.

III. Six companies of the 2d regiment of dragoons, with the major, will be withdrawn from Florida, and under the colonel proceed without delay to the southwestern frontier, and take post as follows:

Four companies at Fort Towson, and Two at Fort Jessup.

Col. Worth will direct these companies, on leaving Florida, to proceed via Tallahassee to Mount Vernon arsenal, Alabama, where they will be concentrated. Four companies of the regiment will continue for the present on duty with the Florida army, under the lieutenant colonel, who will join the squadron without delay.

IV. The companies of the 4th infantry, now stationed at Fort Towson and Jessup, on being relieved by the dragoons, will take post at such stations as the commanding general of the second military department may direct. By command of Major Gen. Scott. R. JONES, Adj't. Gen.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 55.

War department, Adjutant General's office, Washington, September 29, 1841.

I. The following addition to paragraph 1,249, of the general regulations for the army, has been received from the department of war, and is published for the information and government of all concerned:

"And no pay or emoluments will be allowed to officers who may hereafter be restored to rank, for the service they may have been on of service."

II. Fort Monroe and Jefferson barracks having been re-garrisoned, are, by direction of the war department, placed on the list of chaplain posts.

By order, R. JONES, Adjutant General.

COASTS OF ENGINEERS. The officers of the corps of engineers are engaged in superintending the construction and repair of the various fortifications in the harbors of the U. States. Several of them have also the general supervision of works in other places than those where they reside or are stationed, and are assisted by the junior officers of the corps. Those marked thus, * are members of the board of engineers. The address of each officer follows his name.

Colonel.
I. Joseph G. Totten, * Washington, chief engineer; general supervision of works at Fort Adams, Newport, R. I. and ex officio inspector of the military academy.

Lieutenant colonels.
I. Sylvanus Thayer, * Boston, Mass.; Boston harbor, Portland, Maine, and Portsmouth, N. H.
R. B. De Russy, * Old Point Comfort, Va. Forts Monroe, Callison and Delaware.

Majors.
I. John L. Smith, New York; Fort Schuyler; New York and New London harbors, and light house on Flynn's Knoll.
2. William H. Chace, Pensacola; Pensacola harbor and Gulf of Mexico.

3. Richard DeLafield, superintendent and commanding military academy.

4. C. A. Ogden, Mobile; Mobile harbor and near New Orleans.

Captains.

1. Henry Brewster, Albany, N. Y.; improvement of river Hudson near Albany—absent with leave until Dec. 31, 1841.

2. George Totten, Beaufort, N. C.; Forts Macon and Caswell.

3. J. K. F. Mansfield, Savannah; Fort Pulaski—on temporary duty at Middletown, Conn.

4. A. H. Bowman, Charleston, S. C.; Charleston harbor.

5. Robert E. Lee, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.; Forts Hamilton and Lafayette.

6. Alexander J. Swift, instructor of practical engineering, military academy.

7. Frederick A. Smith, Fort Washington, Potomac river.

8. Jonathan G. Barnard, Fort Livingston, Louisiana; Forts Livingston, Jackson and St. Philip.

9. George W. Callum, New London, Conn; Fort Trumbull.

10. William D. Fraser, Fort Niagara, New York.

11. John Sanders, New York; Forts Columbus and William.

12. Charles H. Bigelow, Boston, assistant to Col. Thayer.

First lieutenants.

1. George L. Welcker, Washington; assistant to chief engineer.

2. J. L. Mason, Newport, R. I.; assistant to Colonel Totten.

3. Henry W. Benham, St. Augustine, E. F.; sea wall.

4. Danville Leadbetter, Oswego, N. Y.; Fort Ontario.

5. Montgomery C. Meigs, Washington; assistant to board of engineers—in temporary charge of Fort Delaware.

6. Daniel P. Woodbury, Portland, Maine; assistant to Col. Thayer.

7. William H. Wright, Boston; assistant to Colonel Totten.

8. P. G. T. Beauregard, N. O.; Forts Pike and Wood.

9. James H. Trapier, Charleston, S. C.; assistant to Captain Bowman.

10. Stephen H. Campbell, Old Point Comfort; assistant to Colonel DeRussy.

11. J. M. Scarritt, Pensacola; assistant to Major Chace.

12. Isaac J. Stevens, Newport, R. I.; assistant to Colonel Totten.

Second lieutenants.

1. Robert Q. Butler, West Point; assistant professor engineering.

2. Henry W. Halleck, Washington; assistant board engineers.

3. Jeremy F. Gilmer, Fort Schuyler; assistant to Major Smith.

4. Henry L. Smith, N. O.; assistant to Captain Barnard.

5. Paul O. Hebert, West Point; assistant professor engineering.

6. Zealons B. Tower, Washington; assistant board engineering.

7. Horatio G. Wright, Washington; assistant board of engineers.

8. Massillon Harrison, Boston; assistant to Colonel Thayer.

Lieutenant I. J. Stevens arrived at New Bedford, Mass. on the 18th September, for the purpose of superintending operations upon the old fort in that harbor, which are to be commenced immediately.

[Army & Navy Chron.]

TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS. We learn that Major Bahe, of the topographical engineers, with his party, will commence a survey of the Patuxent river in a few days. This, we presume, is the preliminary step to a location for a fort on Solter's flats, or wherever the board of engineers may deem the most important point to be.

[Baltimore American.]

FIRST LIEUT. A. P. ALLEN died at Fort Jessup on the 1st inst. having ruptured a blood vessel while on duty surveying the boundary line between the United States and Texas.

MEDICAL STAFF. Surgeon E. Macomb ordered to report to superintendent of Recruiting service, for duty with a detachment of recruits about to embark for Florida; after performing this service, to report to the colonel commanding in Florida for duty.

FIRST ARTILLERY. Company B, under the command of Captain Van Ness, arrived at Fort Fairfield, on the Arrostook, September 10, from Hancock barracks, and took military possession of the fort.

Formal delivery of the block house and premises was made to captain C. O. Collins, acting quartermaster for the United States, by Zebloun Inverslev, esq. the assistant land agent. The soldiers take up their quarters in the block house; but the officers will occupy tents until some suitable and convenient buildings can be erected for themselves and their families.

SECOND ARTILLERY. Company B, under the command of Lieut. H. Brooks, has arrived at the United States arsenal, Rome, N. Y. where it will remain for the present.

FIRST INFANTRY. Companies A, D, E, G, H and K, under command of captain A. S. Miller, arrived at Fort Crawford, Prairie du Chien, on the 6th September. The remaining companies, except G, were expected in a few days. The following is the distribution of this regiment:

Companies A, B, E, F,	Fort Crawford.
D, G, H,	Fort Snelling.
I,	Fort Winnebago.
C,	Fort Atkinson.
G,	Jefferson Barracks.

Captain Jonett will leave the depot at Newport, Kentucky, about the 1st October with all the disposable recruits, (about 65), for the 1st infantry.

TRANSFERS. Second lieutenant Bayard Clarke, of the 8th infantry, transferred to the 3d dragoons, to take station next below lieutenant D. G. Rogers. Second lieutenant Amiel W. Whipple, of the 1st artillery, transferred to the corps of topographical engineers.

RECRUITS. By general orders number 56, September 25, the superintendent of the recruiting service is directed to despatch, as soon after the 5th October as practicable, the number of recruits mentioned below, to reinforce the regiments in Florida.

2d infantry, at Fort King	300
3d infantry, at Fort Stanbury	150
6th infantry, at Cedar Keys	210
7th infantry, at Fort Waccassassa	140

The commanding officer at Carlisle barracks is directed to put in march 120 recruits for the five companies of the 1st regiment of dragoons at Fort Leavenworth.

AUTHENTIC FROM FLORIDA. An extract from a report from Colonel Worth, commanding, dated September 13, at Ponta Rosas, which is opposite Tayne Island, on the bay into which the Coosawatchie river empties, says:

"I have the honor to report, for the information of the major general commanding, that on the 11th inst., the appointed day, three of the five messengers sent out from Pease creek, as you were advised in my report No. 45, appeared at this point, with forty-six Indians of Hospiatiki's band, two remained out to gather others, to whom I have added three. On the 22d inst I expect to add to the above number about one hundred and fifty, perhaps more. A post will be re-established here, as convenient for the approach of Indians, and as an important point on the gulf side, in the event of operations south. I shall return to Tampa in a few days, where it is hoped the Indians expected from Arkansas will have arrived, as their presence will greatly facilitate the collection of the Creeks and Tallahassee—from position, objects of the greatest interest.

The whole number of Hospiatiki's people now in is sixty-two, including the chief, three sub-chiefs, and twenty-three warriors."

LATE AND CHERRING NEWS FROM FLORIDA. The steam packet, Beaufort district, Capt. Budd, arrived here yesterday morning, from Savannah, bringing us the papers of that city to Saturday, and the following slips from our correspondent of the Georgian, of Sunday's date. [Charleston Courier.]

The United States steamer, Capt. Budd, arrived here yesterday morning from Florida.

One of our valuable correspondents writes—(15th inst.)—"We have nothing new in the way of Indian news."

Another furnishes the subjoined letter, which details the latest occurrences at Tampa.

Fort Brooke, Tampa Bay, E. F. Sept. 1, 1841.

Sir: The prospect for terminating the long continued difficulties with our red brethren continues to brighten all around, under the auspices of our present commander, Colonel Worth. But it would be well for us all, not to anticipate too much, as we might eventually after closing the war, have more, have the sore displeasure of being compelled to resume it again. I will not however allow myself to doubt, with the brilliant prospect now before me, that Col. Worth will, during the coming winter, put a final termination to this inglorious Florida war.

There are at present at this post about 370 Indians, the greater portion warriors. The principal chiefs are Hoso-pita-cha, Allack-Hadjo and the renowned Coa-coo-chie. The latest named chief is a master spirit, and although not acknowledged heretofore, as being more than the leader of a small band of warriors, it cannot now be doubted that he is, and always will be, the prime, secret, controlling genius, which has directed the affairs and swayed the different tribes in all their operations, for peace and for war. He is the master of his own tribe, and a word from him, in the shape of an order, is treated with awe, as if defiance, and obeyed with as much alacrity, as if given by a sovereign. In fact the chiefs of all the different tribes now here, look to him as their minister and chief councillor. He has become, since his capture, reconciled to emigration, and is now using his influence with the tribes that are still out and hostile, to come with their people speedily, and go to their new homes in the west.

The 8th inst. was the day fixed upon by Colonel Worth, to have a council with the chief of the Tallahassee, Tiger-Tail, at the Annattulga hammock. Coa-coo-chie went as the representative of Colonel Worth taking with him four warriors and a white bear, and at the appointed time and place, Neah-tah-math-la, the brother of Tiger-Tail, and twelve sub-chiefs and warriors. Tiger-tail did not appear on account of sickness. They conferred together, and the Tallahassee pledged themselves to collect their warriors, women and children, and meet near noon, at the same place, and as soon thereafter, as the model would send their brother (now on his way to Tampa from Arkansas) to them with a talk, they would come in prepared to emigrate at once.

It is expected that all the people (numbering about two hundred) of Hoso-pita-cha, (the name of the tribe at Peace creek, waiting the arrival of a steamboat to bring them to Tampa. A boat, I learn, is to leave this morning for them. It is not doubted that these Indians will all be collected, as anticipated.

Should the negotiations that are now going on, be brought to a successful issue, as I have every reason to believe, there will be none but two bands of Seminoles left, the Tallahassee left, to harass the inhabitants of the country. An active campaign will be commenced by the latter part of next, or the first of the succeeding month, and with Colonel Worth's known energy, aided by the experienced officers now under his command, we may be led to hope, at least, that these remaining Indians will be led up to, and captured, and peace will once more prevail throughout the limits of the territory, and the citizens of Florida may, as in days past, return to the cultivation of their fields, oranges and fig trees, and be allowed to worship under the same, and by their own altars and firesides, and have no one to make them afraid.

Yours, in haste.

OBITUARY.—"In the midst of life we are in death." Never was this solemn truth more deeply realized than in the death of Lieut. JONES, who breathed his last on Thursday morning at Fort McHenry—having survived the fatal accident but a very short time.

All that friendship and medical skill could do to preserve his young and valuable life, has been proved vain. And thus to a moment—in the twinkling of an eye—he has been snatched from the hearts of his devoted parents and the hopes of his country, to scenes of happiness and honor more enduring beyond the grave.

WILLIAM F. JONES was the eldest son of General Robert Jones, adj. genl. of the United States army. Remarkable from childhood for sweetness and simplicity of disposition and the warmth of his affections, he became, as he grew up, the idol of his parents and fond friends. Partaking, in a great degree, the spirit of his gallant father and uncle, he was become anxious to enroll himself among the defenders of his country, and with this view was educated at West Point—where he graduated two years ago, bearing off with him the first honors of his class, and the regard and admiration of his associates. Since then he has been stationed here, where his fine qualities of heart and head endeared him to his commanding officer, and to the soldiers placed under his charge.

We must forbear further notice now, and humbly trust that the Divine arm which has thus stricken the blow, will give strength and consolation to the bereaved parents and relatives under this their heavy and sudden affliction.

Lieut. Jones' remains were on Friday deposited in a private vault of this city, to await their final removal. All due military honors were paid on the occasion.

[Baltimore American.]

On the death of Lieutenant William Page Jones. From the Baltimore Sun.

The landscape sunleth fair in sunny spring,
And when the summer comes 'tis brighter still;
Gay birds, and breeze, and silver streamlet sing,
And happy nature dreams no lurking ill.

'Twas thus the spring-time of thy life, my friend,
Scent'd a bright season of unmingled joy,
Thus did the melodies of earth attune
The flow'ry pathway of the laughing boy!
Oh, I remember well the verdant vale,
And the sweet waters flowing gently by,
The mossy rocks, the tree—from which a gale
Tore its green boughs, and hurried them to the sky—
The cave, where we retired from sudden rain,
And read strange stories of the days of old—
All, all are present to my mind again,
As if reality my eyes beheld!

Then, WILLIAM, sorrow was unknown to thee,
And thou didst tread resounding billy thy song:
The pretty flow'rets smiled upon thy glee,
The zephyrs kiss'd thee, as they danced along.

We parted—years flew by—once more we met—
We met where Hudson forms a fairy scene—
Ah, who that roams the highlands can forget
Those frowning mountains, and that stream serene!

It was the summer of thy silliest days,
The buds of promise now were fully blown,
While their rich beauty was increasing fast,
And far and freely was their fragrance thrown.

Proud Fame invited to her temple bright,
And held a banquet to her chosen on thy way.
I saw thee advance, thy heart's delight,
As from thine eyes it beam'd in sunny ray.

Again we parted, and we met again;
The elder's phrase waved lightly o'er thy brow,
Thy noble steed rushed warlike o'er the plain—
He bore a chieftain fall'd and valiant now.

The far artillery, with thunder roar,
Most terrible, e'en shook the stubborn ground:
And blue Potomac's waves from shore to shore
Ran fearful, trembling at the awful sound!

Silence resumed her reign—and thou wast gone—
Gone, little thought we never more to meet,
Gone, leaving friends and relatives alone;
Gone, cold and silent, in thy winding-sheet!

Ambition blasted, withered youth and love,
Sudden removed from pleasing earthly strife;
WILLIAM, 'tis happier far to dwell above,
And roam the halls of everlasting life!

ZONA.

Washington, September, 1841.

From the National Intelligencer.

The much lamented subject of the above elegy was a graduate of the military academy, and one of the best distinguished of his class. He received his diplomas in July, 1840, and at the time of his exit was on duty with his company, with which he had been serving with great zeal and devotion. The fatal accident which has so suddenly cut off this promising officer, just at the dawn of his hopeful career, occurred about noon, on Wednesday, the 5th inst. He was on a hedge, Lieutenant, riding his friends together, had, it would seem, fallen in the rear of the company as it was retiring from the plain, not very far from Fort McHenry, after the field exercises of the morning; and, in order to come up with it before entering the post, they advanced at a rapid rate, when, unfortunately, several cows, coming suddenly out from a hedge, crossed the path, and overthrew both riders, together with their horses. Lieutenant Jones was rendered insensible for the moment of receiving the fatal injury, ("concussion of the brain"), and never spoke afterwards. He expired the following morning, at half past four o'clock, in the 23d year of his age—beloved by his friends, lamented by all who knew him, mourned by all his comrades. His family:

"Hold my trembling hand;
See not to part this vale,
Which feeling hearts may understand,
But words can never show."

His commanding officer and friend (Capt. Ringgold) says in his official despatch: "In announcing the intelligence to the adjutant general of the army, I have to add the expression of my grief for the loss of an officer who had already given proofs of brilliant talents, and who was an ornament to his profession."

Attended by a few of the many deeply sympathizing friends of the deceased, and of his afflicted family, his remains were silently conveyed from St. Paul's church yard to the Green Mount Cemetery, near Baltimore, on Saturday, the 1st inst. of September. And the relief and mourners who were able to witness the last duties administered to the earth-

"Captain Ringgold's company of flying artillery, in which Lieut. Jones served, was, during the summer ordered from Fort McHenry to Washington, and frequently manoeuvred in gallant style on the plains of the majestic Potomac, the cannon's roar often echoed from shore to shore.

Entire.

ly all of a son, a brother, and a soldier, was the father, General JONES, of the army.

"Best wily, adieu! Thy rich reward—
The bliss that ne'er can clay—
Receive from the approving hand:
Go enter in his joy."

September 20, 1841.
The following notice of the funeral of Lieut. JONES we find in the Baltimore American of Tuesday morning:

The remains of Lieut. Wm. F. JONES were, on Saturday last, removed from the private vault where they had been temporarily placed, to Green Mount Cemetery, and finally interred. This sad ceremony was attended by the bereaved father, Gen. R. JONES, and a few mourning relatives and friends, under a military escort of U. S. dragoons, commanded by Captain RINGGOLD. The Rev. Dr. WYATT performed the services with great feeling and solemnity.

The death of this interesting young officer, under circumstances so sudden and painful, is well calculated to arrest the attention of the young and admonish them of the uncertainty and emptiness of all earthly pleasures and hopes.

Few had more brilliant prospects opening before them than young JONES, and his fate will fall with deep and serious reflection on the hearts of those who, like him, are entering on the morning of life.

May all, when thus suddenly called away, be found as highly endowed with the graces and virtues which an early and well-founded Christian education alone can give.

Brave, generous, modest and intellectual, he yet added to these the higher excellence of a domestic piety, taught him by a fond mother, and never forgotten by a devoted son.

"The will of Heaven is done—the struggle's o'er"
And hope, that lingered long, declines no more,
But bore his spirit on her wings away,
From doubt and darkness, to eternal day!
Lamented there, he never can deceive.
No friends are severed, there, no bosoms grieve;
There we should cast the anchor of the soul,
And leave the billows round the earth to roll.

L.

"THE MARCH OF INTELLIGENCE," SURE ENOUGH. It is stated in the Massachusetts newspapers, that the superintendent of the U. S. armory, at Springfield, has recently issued orders, forbidding any of the mechanics employed in that establishment, from receiving or reading any letter or newspaper within the limits of the armory building. This certainly seems, upon the face of it, to carry a Jack Cadish sort of opposition to the aristocracy of the country of reading and writing, and we need not wonder at the excitement it is said to have produced in Springfield. After all, however, we apprehend there is another side to this case, and before any undue amount of indignation is expended, it would be well enough to wait and see whether the order is any thing more or less than a prohibition of the superintendent, to send newspapers during their regular working hours. If that is really all there is about it, it is hardly worth while to hang the superintendent.

[Cour. & Enq.]

THE NAVY.
MEDICAL STAFF. Assistant surgeon J. Martin, now at Augusta, Gea. arsenal, ordered to Filatka, to report to the col. commanding, for duty.

Ass't sur. R. Weightman, now at St. Augustine, ordered to New York, and there to await further orders.

Surgeon Elwes to report to supt. recruiting service, New York, for duty, with a detachment of recruits about to embark for Florida. On arriving in Florida, to report to the col. commanding for duty.

William Levely, of Md., appointed assistant surgeon, and ordered to Fort Columbus, N. Y. for duty. Dabney Herndon, of Va., appointed assistant surgeon, and ordered to Carlisle barracks for duty.

Ass't surgeons H. Holt and W. W. Hoxton resigned, Sept. 30, 1841.

3d infantry.—Resignation of 1st lieut. Jacob Carter accepted, Sept. 30.

Head Quarters of the Marine Corps.

Adj't and Insp's Office, Washington, Oct. 6, 1841.

ORDERS. As a tribute in respect to the memory of lieut. col. ROBERT D. WAINSWRIGHT, late of the corps of engineers, who died at Fort Mifflin, in Washington, on the 5th inst. at 10 1/2 o'clock, P. M. the officers of the corps are directed to wear crepe on the left arm and the sword belt for one month from the receipt of this order.

By order of Archd. Henderson, col. comd. marine corps.

P. G. HOWLE, adj. and insp.

DRY DOCK AT BROOKLYN. On the 10th September, Mr. Badger the then secretary of the navy, appointed Messrs. Isaac S. Smith and John Wainwright, of Brooklyn, and JOHN G. HICKS, of New York commissioners for building this dry dock, for which appropriations had been made a number of years since, but no progress having been made towards it, the time expired by the general limitation, which revokes appropriations that remain in the treasury a certain time unexpended. The appropriation was renewed at the last session however, and to comply with the views of congress, the above appointments were made.

Entire.

These appointments have since been revoked by the president, and EDWARD H. COURTNEY, esq. has been appointed to superintend the construction of the dock.

Some of the New York papers appear exasperated at our meddling, and attribute it to a hostility which they say the commissioners of the navy, (whose province the president has decided it to be superintending in the case, instead of the secretary of the navy), have always manifested towards its construction, accusing them of all the delay that has occurred, and of a design still longer to delay the work. They also insinuate, that a Virginian feeling, in behalf of the dry dock at the Norfolk depot, has had its influence in this change of superintendence. This, it is to be hoped, is unjust alike to the president, and to the board of navy commissioners.

THE LEVANT. A N. York paper contains a letter from on board the United States ship Levant, dated Pensacola, 17th September, which says: "We are now in the Gulf of Mexico, and our health is improving—eighty-five men down with the fever at the hospital—many convalescent—but two deaths. Nearly all the officers have been attacked. The doctors, as usual, disagree; some say 'yellow fever,' others 'high bilious.' All the well men have left early in the yard. The moment cool weather sets in we shall send the ship and crew to the Gulf of Mexico, where the malaria that has afflicted all hands. In 1839, the crew of the ship suffered with the same fever in a more virulent form; and it is the opinion of many that the ship has not been free from malaria since, requiring only the exciting cause, or climate, to produce fever."

In Pensacola many cases of fever have occurred, a number terminating fatally. The place is unusually dull. We are all looking anxiously forward to the time when, well and hearty, we shall cruise again."

THE PRINCE DE JOINVILLE, the enterprising son of Louis Philippe, of France, and commander of the French frigate Belle Poule, now at N. York, designs, we understand, to spend some time in the U. States. He has been on board the Levant, having passed through Philadelphia, Baltimore and the capital, and is now at N. York. He has been received with the warmest cordiality wherever he has appeared, not only by his own countrymen in this country, but by the citizens generally, and the public officers especially, whose feeling for him personally is no less influential than their respect to the station he occupies, and to the country of which he is a distinguished officer.

The Norfolk Herald says: "The frigate Belle Poule, in which the prince de Joinville recently visited New York, with the brig Cassard (as her tender) are hourly expected in Hampton Roads, where they will wait for the prince."

The prince visited the United States ship North Carolina, immediately after his own ship arrived at New York and saluted. He was received with due distinction by Commodore Perry, who promptly returned both the salute and the visit. Afterwards he visited the navy yards at Brooklyn and Philadelphia and was received with military honors.

Upon reaching Washington, the prince immediately called upon the president, by whom he was received as we near as a guest. The king of the French would of course be welcomed. He visited the navy yard also, and after partaking of a dinner to which the corps diplomatique, public officers and distinguished strangers then in the city were invited by President Tyler, and an evening ball, he left for Norfolk, although thence we learn indeed he visited the interior; Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, the lakes, &c.

READY FOR ACTION. A letter from an officer of the United States frigate Constitution, mentions the fact that our Chinese squadron, having heard that war had been declared between the United States and Great Britain, prepared for a desperate fight. The Constitution had her rigging down and topmasts cut down, when the boatswain called all hands to rig ship. Up went topmasts and top gallant masts, rigging, topmasts crossed, sails bent, all hands here to quarters, and the guns shotted. In three hours, the ship was ready for action, and sailing out of the harbor in line of battle, to meet an English ship of war, which was running off the harbor. The ship proved to be the Melvill, 74, from England, which informed the squadron that the report of war was premature. This fact goes to show the energy and determination of our naval officers, and the readiness, and promptitude which they would display should occasion require it.

(Lodge.)

FATAL EXPLOSION. We learn from the New York papers that an explosion, attended with fatal consequences, occurred on board the steam frigate Fulton, of Sandy Hook, on Tuesday afternoon. While some experiments were making with a new kind of shell, a 64 pounder burst, killing two persons, and severely wounding six others. The names of the killed are Samuel Snowman, seaman, and Joseph Phillips, carpenter seaman. The wounded are, Russell Smith, carpenter's mate, Joshua Wyman, quarter gunner, Levi Lawson, Thomas Smith, Richard Bell and John Cooper, seamen, all badly.

The explosion did great damage to the fore part of the vessel, giving the appearance of a period wreck. The starboard steam chimney was blown down.

The Express says that the gun broke outside of the carriage and split in the breech—the two parts of the breech taking different directions, one landed on the starboard side (the gun was on the larboard)—the other went 40 feet aft, carrying away the distillery and purser's store room, and iron stanchions, and the staving in both starboard steam chimneys, which added to the horror of the scene by filling the ship with steam. The spar-deck is all knocked up. Lieutenant Strong was thrown 15 feet in the air, falling on the hammock and never rose again.

The almost sure was taken by Captain Newton, Lieut. Chaton, (the first lieutenant) and all the officers of the ship, to prevent an accident which the officers greatly feared.

The officers kept the men back, placing themselves between the gun and the men, and then fired the gun with a slow match.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MASSACHUSETTS.

SINGULAR BARRAGE. The following is part of a description given in the Boston Transcript, of the splendid exhibition and fair held in that city last week:

The third exhibition of the fair of the Mechanics' Institute, was opened this day at 12 o'clock, and appearances indicate that it will far excel either of the previous ones. At this early stage it is impossible to give any thing like a full description of it. It occupies the whole of the Canal and adjoining wharves, being connected by a bridge extended from the second story of the one to the other. This bridge, or more properly it might be called a tunnel, is itself a great curiosity. It is of a cylindrical form, ninety feet in length and ten feet in diameter. It is composed of narrow strips of board, crossing each other angularly, like lattice work, and resembling open basket work. These are riveted together, and the bridge, notwithstanding its length, will easily sustain the weight of any number of persons who could be crowded into it. It was invented by Mr. Isaiah Rogers, architect, for which invention he secured a patent more than a year ago, and is now for the first time exhibited. An experiment was made with it before it was put up, by placing the ends on two abutments, and a weight of three thousand pounds being placed in the centre, did not settle it a quarter of an inch. It is one of the most ingenious pieces of mechanism at the present exhibition.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

LEGISLATURE. It has been stated in the New Hampshire Patriot, and other papers, that the law passed at the last session of the New Hampshire legislature relative to divorce, was passed for the purpose of meeting the case of Mrs. D'Hauteville. We are glad to learn from so good authority as that of the New Hampshire Patriot that such is not the fact.

That paper says: "Since our last publication we have happened to be in a position to ascertain facts, and we find that the lady in question does not at this time and has at no other time resided within the limits of New Hampshire; and we are fully satisfied that no friend of hers ever made application to any member of the legislature for the passage of such a law. The law was secured upon information of the character of this lady as to be fully of the belief that she should not be made the subject of censure or severe remark under her peculiar case. Her connexion with a foreigner of almost every advantage, taste, habits and manners, was unfortunately the child could not be required but by separation: the evil was claimed by the father, as is believed, more from motives of cupidity than of generous affection—the object has become probable, merely and purely mercenary. The lady is reproached by those who best know her, to be unpunctual, retiring and amiable, with no disposition of herself to contend even with an unamiable husband."

NEW YORK.

HISTORICAL AGENCY. We have received a letter from our friend J. Romeyn Brodhead, esq. dated the Hague, 24th of August. He visits Europe as agent, under the appointment of this state, to collect such papers and documents, as might tend to elucidate the colonial history of this state, in Holland, England and France. We are happy to find that he is succeeding in Holland beyond his most sanguine expectation, in attaining the object of his mission. The Dutch government has most kindly and courteously aided him in his mission. All the paper in the departments of state is at his disposal.

"I am now very happy to inform you, that Providence has been pleased so to bless my labors here, that I have succeeded vastly beyond the narrow bounds which limited my anticipations when I left New York. I have received the most generous courtesy from the government here, and the result of my examination, so far, is the obtaining of 3,000 pages of manuscript, commencing with 1614, and extending down to 1673. In this series of papers are many documents of the highest historical value, which I think will throw a great flood of light over some of the obscure and uncertain parts of our annals. You know, when I left, I was not sanguine about obtaining much from Holland. I think now, that it will be the richest mine that I shall explore. The West India company papers (at Amsterdam) are said to be complete from 1623; and I have already obtained in order, from the proper department, allowance to be made of copies of any papers I may wish. If Providence should bless my labors at Amsterdam, as it has already done at the Hague, I shall have no cause to complain of want of success in Holland. Indeed I can I think safely say, that the documents I have already procured, when they come to be examined, will be pronounced among the most interesting in our records." (Christian List.)

OPENING OF THE NEW YORK AND ERIE RAIL ROAD. "Tough oak and triple brass," says Horace, "must have eaked the breast of that man who first committed a frail bark to the mighty sea," and so, said we mentally, as we whirled at a steam gallant through the rocks and mountains of Rockland county, must his be the breast of that man who first dreamed of constructing a rail road through such a region. But the dream has been realized.

Yesterday at 8 o'clock in the morning, the steamboat Utica, with the veteran, not old—Schultz as commodore, received on board as goodly a company as ever left our wharves, based on the first excursion over the New York and Erie rail road to Goshen.

The governor of the state, with his staff, civil and military, the mayor, and several members of common council, were of the company: the judges of our courts the members of congress from this city, the reverend clergy of various denominations, the bar the banks, the insurance companies, the chamber of commerce, the board of trade, the press, and the people, all had large representatives on board; among the strangers were Mr. Senator Phelps, of Vermont, and Mr. T. Butler King, of the house of representatives from Georgia.

From New York, also, there was a numerous and welcome delegation, and as a bright October sun burst forth upon the boat—as, to the inspiring airs of a fine band, she put out upon the broad Hudson—the men seemed propitious that the noble work, the completion of the first portion of which we were about to witness, would so commend itself to the favor of the state, and of the city, as to render its full and prompt accomplishment certain.

About 10 o'clock we reached Piermont, the enormous jetty of which place, running one mile into the Hudson, so as to reach deep water, attracted general notice.

Transferred speedily from the boat to the cars in waiting at the end of the pier, and augmenting our numbers with a goodly addition from Westchester, among whom was Washington Irving, we started in two trains for Goshen.

The ascent is about 60 feet in the mile, with numerous curves, increasing of course the draft. The cars, moreover, are of a heavy construction, and are burdened as they were with human beings, to press down upon the wheels, of which the flanges ground at each revolution into the frame work—Nevertheless, the steam giants flagged not, and though laboring hard very often, they tired never, and rapidly did their way down the mountain through a region of stone and iron—but of cultivation, there was nothing, until we had left the Highlands behind, and entered upon the fertile fields of Orange.

The summit near Ramapo being gained, there is thence a continuous stretch of road through the

HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

	W. Hig.	F. B.
Baltimore city,	0	5
" county,	0	15
Cecil,	0	3
Carroll,	0	4
Frederick,	0	5
Annapolis,	1	0
Harford,	0	4
Washington,	0	4
Prince George's,	4	0
Anne Arundel,	0	5
Calvert,	3	0
Caroline,	3	0
Queen Anne's,	0	3
Montgomery,	8	0
Ken,	3	0
St. Mary's,	3	0
Charles,	3	0
	24	37

Allegany, Talbot, Dorchester, Somerset and Worcester, to hear from. The house of delegates consists of 79 members. The opposition have not an ascertained majority of the members, but it is probable their vote will be increased by the addition of the members from Allegany and Talbot.

[Balt. Patriot.

PENNSYLVANIA.

IRON ORE. A large deposit of excellent iron ore was discovered a few days since, in digging a well on the property of Mr. William Albright, on the west side of the Susquehanna, nearly opposite Sunbury, Pa. The vein has already been pierced to the extent of nearly seven feet, and "the end is not yet." On examination it was discovered that the rocks in the road over which the wagons have been passed for forty years, were an excellent iron ore.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

MILITARY REVIEW AT WHITEHALL. Abbeville District, Sept. 24. On Saturday, 18th inst, his excellency the governor, accompanied by Gen. Mc Caffie, General Brantley, and Col. W. H. Marshall and Calhoun, arrived at Shilburg, Edgefield district, the spot appointed for the review of the 24 reg't of cavalry. Upon the day previous, all officers, commissioned and non-commissioned of the regiment and of the companies, had been required to repair thither, but the floods occasioned by the previous heavy rains had prevented the attendance of almost all of them, and even on the 18th, the waters were so high and the roads so bad, as to prevent the attendance of nearly half the regiment. The day however was a delightful one, and all present can testify that the previous unprecedent delay of rain had not in any way damped the ardor of the troops. The regiment with great credit to its officers, as well as to itself, performed many evolutions, after which his excellency gratified the men and remarked to them—

"How gratifying it was to him to witness the performances of the cavalry; that he himself was a trooper, and felt all the interest of a veteran steed upon hearing the clangor of the trumpet sound again, calling him to action. How pleased he was with the proficiency of the officers, the appearance of the soldiers and the faultless (with but few exceptions) performances of the day. He urged upon the men the propriety of encouraging that military spirit upon which alone in case of emergency the safety of the state rested. He stated his regret that the encampment system was no longer in force and his desire that the legislature might be convinced of the necessity of speedily restoring it. He alluded to the customs of the ancients, who provided schools to instruct their youths in military science, and suggested the impossibility of the militia of this state attaining any efficiency in their military capacity without the re-establishment of the encampment master system, which this state has abolished, but which other states have admired and adopted. He stated it was his desire that the encampment should last for six days in each year, at which he pledged himself drill masters should be provided capable of affording the requisite instruction—it was also his desire that all petty matters should be abolished, so that with six days encampment, one regimental parade and one battalion parade, the number of days to be devoted to the acquisition of military knowledge may be the same as at present. His excellency further stated that it was his intention again to review the regiment before the expiration of his term of office, upon which occasion he proposed presenting a plume to that company which he should consider best equipped, best disciplined and most obedient, and be rewarded by thanking the regiment for their attendance and attention.

Highlands, following the sinuosities of the Ramapo river, and constructed close beside its rocky bed, of several miles, with a grade of only 12 feet, and singularly beautiful from its windings among the mountains.

Emerging thence into Orange county, the eye is greeted with a succession of delightful landscapes, of highly cultivated farms, rich pastures, and grazing herds, that started with affright, as the unaccustomed spectacle swept past them. Within a few miles of Goshen, the road runs over a peat meadow formerly famous for hemp, and there is built upon piles driven, some of them, seventy feet down into the soil.

As Goshen came into view, its whole population, with that of all the neighboring towns, seemed paraded upon the gentle slopes near which the depot and the rail road hotel are constructed, and amid the firing of cannon, the sound of music, and the prolonged buzz of the multitude, the first train from this city over the New York and Erie rail road arrived at Goshen; and amid songs and toasts and speeches, the brief space allotted for the halt at Goshen rapidly passed.

It was a great event, and meet it was that it should be so looked upon, and not only by the citizens of Orange county, but by every friend of the state of New York.

Very extensive preparations were made for regaling the arriving multitudes: food, extensive as these were, the hungry and the thirsty were more so; and very few stood upon "the order of their going," but went at once to the work of mastication, each one settling down where he could find a vacant spot, the forms of proceeding were considerably deranged, but in no wise to the detriment of the enjoyment and spirit of the occasion.

There were, to be sure, strange expedients resorted to for knives, and forks, and plates, and tumblers; but, by the aid of such expedients, there was the wherewithal to satisfy hunger, and gratify thirst.

It was our good fortune to be in the room where the president of the company, Mr. Bowen, was, and to listen to the very neat and appropriate speech in which he returned thanks for a toast of prosperity to the road and confidence in its president, he explained the difficulties that had been surmounted, and the claims the enterprise had upon the citizens of N. York.

The former president, Mr. E. Lord, was toasted by Horace Maxwell, esq., to dwell in a few brief remarks upon the services rendered by that gentleman.

Mr. Lord, who was present, returned thanks.

Mr. Bowen then asked permission to propose the health of his own immediate predecessor, James G. King, who had given, as Mr. B. said, all the influence of his character and position, to forwarding this enterprise. The toast, after being acknowledged in behalf of Mr. King, who sometime before had left the table, by another gentleman, was drank with cheers.

Other toasts, among them one to De Witt Clinton, were enthusiastically drunk, while some capital singing by some gentlemen from Newark, N. J. added to the general glee—when a little before sundown, the shrill whistle of the impatient locomotive, admonished all that it was time to part; and again, in a few minutes, the multitudinous throng had turned their backs upon Goshen, and were steaming at the rate of twenty miles an hour towards the Hudson.

By the bright moonlight we reached our good stopping at Utica, much gratified by the day's excursion, and without a single accident of any kind to mar the general gratification.

On board the Utica a collation was prepared, at which some of the best speeches of the occasion were made. Among them was one by Bishop Onderdonk, who, acknowledging a toast to the clergy, took the opportunity of bearing testimony to what he considered the marked effect of such enterprises as that we were met to celebrate, by disseminating knowledge, eradicating prejudices, and bringing distant points into close and friendly relations. The bishop dwelt with force and effect upon these views, and was listened to with manifest gratification.

Gov. Seward, in answer to a toast, explained at length his views on all such undertakings, which were for the people, and for them especially; and therefore should be so carried on as to ensure the cheapest possible rate of travel and transportation. To this end, he maintained that corporations should not, and could not properly be created with their sole object that it was the duty of the state, and that the state should be alone the great internal improver. As to the New York and Erie rail road, he said, no private company could make it, that the state must do it, and that it should form only one of the great lines of rail roads with which New York must be covered.

He said the line of rail road from Albany to Buffalo, must and could make the road from the Hudson to Erie; that, under the control of the state, the production of one line of roads could make up for the unproductiveness of another line; that, as parts of a great system, it was not material that each branch should pay its own way, so that, as a whole, it was productive; and finally, that, by adopting the policy of owning all the great rail roads as well as canals, New York would soon be able not only to complete her projected works—the New York and Erie rail road among them—but to effect that which was the great end and aim of all—reduce the price of traveling to the lowest possible rate; which the governor estimated to be about one cent and a half per mile, or about $6 from New York to Buffalo, a meagre and very general outline of the reasoning of the governor, who spoke for more than half an hour with great animation, and with apparently strong personal conviction of the expediency of such a system as he advocated.

At about half past ten o'clock, the Utica came to the wharf, and the party dispersed, gratified, we are sure, with their beautiful excursion, and resolved, we will not doubt, each in his own sphere, to aid with all zeal and good will, the completion of the New York and Erie rail road. [N. Y. American.

NEW JERSEY.

TEMPERANCE. It would appear by this extract from a letter in the N. Y. Observer, that some distinguished members of the faculty of Princeton college, have deemed it expedient to lend their sanction to the total abstinence doctrine of some of the temperance societies, with prudent stipulations:

"Our temperance meeting on Tuesday evening was the commencement, I hope, of good in Princeton. Professors Hervey and Briggs, who are the force of habit, and concluded by saying, that 'as far as his example went, total abstinence should have it' and he stepped forward and signed the pledge.— Prof. James Alexander, after stating his protest against three things, 1. That it should be thought that the friends of temperance considered it a sin to drink. 2. That the society should at all interfere with the communion. 3. That any one should be constrained to say that scripture wines were not intoxicating; said 'he had come to do what he had never done before, to sign a total abstinence pledge'; and he accordingly signed it. Prof. McLean said he had been wrongfully considered an enemy of the total abstinence society—he was an enemy of ultra measures, he had never signed a total abstinence pledge, but would now do it; and he did it. Many of the students also signed. Prof. McLean then stated, that the president and Prof. Dod were prevented by sickness from attending and signing."

VIRGINIA.

A SPECIAL ELECTION, held in Albemarle county, Virginia, on Monday, for a delegate to the legislature, in place of Mr. Coles deceased, resulted as follows: Alexander Rives (whig) 546
S. F. Leake (V. B.) 529

Whig majority 17

MARYLAND.

RETURNS FOR GOVERNOR. The following table comprises all the returns we have received for governor. We compare them with the vote for governor in 1838, when Grason, (V. B.) was elected by 311 majority.

	Governor, 1841.	Governor, 1838.
(W.) (V. B.)	(W.) (V. B.)
Johnson.	Thomass. Steele.	Grason.
Annapolis	181	122
Baltimore city	6,386	7,427
Baltimore co.	1,411	2,886
Caroline	605	551
Carroll	1,443	1,619
Cecil	125	151
Charles	250	135
Frederick	1,114	158
Harford	597	446
Ken.	1,114	158
Montgomery	909	723
Prince George's	187	161
St. Mary's	170	141
Queen Anne's	702	721
Washington	2,196	2,346

16,234 17,814 19,385 20,327
16,234 19,385
5,150 992
Mr. Thomas' majority so far is 1,610, being a gain of 688 on the gubernatorial election of 1838.

Gen. McDuffie then came forward and also expressed his admiration of the performances of the day. He stated that he had formerly expressed his intention of resigning his commission upon the abandonment of the encampment system, that he had done so, but that his excellency had kindly returned his resignation, with a particular request that he (Gen. McD.) would not only continue to hold his commission but would also co-operate with his excellency in promoting the efficiency of the militia and in re-establishing that system which alone can render their equipments more perfect, which the legislature has so considerably compromised by repeal, and which the ominous character of the latest news from England points out as necessary.

Upon the conclusion of Gen. McDuffie's short address, his excellency requested those officers in favor of the encampment muster system to step forward and draw their swords, and his request was complied with by all, but one, who was a corporal named Armstrong.

The general and suite then returned to partake of an excellent dinner, at which they were speedily joined by Col. Dixon and the rest of his regiment.

ILLINOIS.

STATISTICS OF POPULATION, &c., IN 1840. A table showing the population of each county in the state of Illinois, taken at the census of 1840—also, the number of square miles in the several counties in that state; from official documents—compiled by J. A. Townsend, esq. of Allen, Illinois.

Counties.	Population.	Square Miles.	Counties.	Population.	Square Miles.
Adams	14,461	791	Livingston	759	1,028
Alexander	3,316	369	Logan	2,333	576
Bond	5,004	300	Madison	14,433	790
Bowie	1,705	414	Marion	4,390	360
Brown	4,189	306	Marion	4,390	360
Bureau	3,063	810	Montgomery	4,470	684
Cass	2,968	288	Macoupin	7,332	864
Carroll	1,023	432	Morgan	19,154	612
Calhoun	1,741	232	McLean	6,793	1,512
Campaign	5,724	408	Macon	3,638	972
Clark	10,301	1,008	McDonough	3,332	568
Clay	3,229	576	McHenry	2,578	468
Crawford	4,468	410	Marshall	1,849	466
Clark	7,584	504	Meade	4,426	504
Coles	9,616	1,008	Ogle	3,490	756
Christian	1,877	240	Pope	3,320	504
De Kalb	1,708	648	Putnam	4,230	432
De Witt	3,247	510	Pike	11,736	732
Du Page	3,533	378	Putnam	4,231	252
Elkhart	1,676	468	Peoria	6,028	668
Edwards	3,107	210	Randolph	7,615	576
Effingham	2,227	504	Rock Island	2,619	432
Fayette	6,334	720	Scott	6,223	916
Franklin	3,663	432	St. Clair	13,629	684
Fulton	13,149	118	Shelby	6,673	900
Gallatin	10,913	768	Sangamon	14,716	828
Greene	11,963	504	Schuyler	6,927	360
Henry	1,262	240	Stark	1,573	360
Hardin	1,329	104	Stephenson	2,896	276
Hamilton	3,263	423	Tazewell	7,230	892
Hancock	9,901	756	Union	5,523	385
Hopkins	1,693	1,041	Vermilion	9,306	1,692
Johnson	3,640	484	Washington	4,942	576
Jefferson	5,765	576	White	7,913	461
Keokuk	2,927	484	Wayne	5,125	720
Jasper	1,415	488	Wabash	3,894	684
Jo Daviess	6,180	720	Warren	6,719	928
Jersey	4,507	324	Will	10,024	1,128
Kane	6,501	648	Winnebago	4,608	432
Knox	7,062	720	Whitesides	2,515	720
Lawrence	7,075	720	Williamson	4,282	432
La Salle	9,377	1,092
Lake	2,634	450	Total	476,273	54,004
Lee	2,033	720

Whites.

Under 5 years	48,004	males	44,067	females.
" 10 "	37,375	"	33,909	"
" 15 "	31,066	"	28,333	"
" 20 "	24,892	"	24,189	"
" 30 "	51,921	"	38,914	"
" 40 "	31,075	"	25,367	"
" 50 "	15,623	"	12,508	"
" 60 "	8,558	"	6,525	"
" 70 "	5,030	"	2,871	"
" 80 "	1,106	"	818	"
" 90 "	232	"	183	"
" 100 "	33	"	36	"
" 110 "	9	"	3	"

Total 254,904 " 215,703 "

Colored.

Free males	1,842	Females	1,635
Slaves	143	"	161
Total	1,985	Total	1,816

Number of persons employed in Mining	1,297
Agriculture	97,731
Commerce	2,523
Manufactures and trades	12,488
Navigation of the ocean	285
" " rivers and lakes	795
Learned professions	1,931
Deaf and dumb, &c.
Deaf and dumb 146—Blind 80—Insane and idiots 300
Colleges, &c.
Number,	7
Students,	311
Academies	41
" " " "	1,907
Common schools	1,200
At public charge	33,734
Number of white persons over 20, who cannot read and write	28,780

ARKANSAS.

FACTS RELATIVE TO BONDS. An inquiry has been made through one of the city papers for particular information relative to the value of Arkansas bonds; a few facts will enable us to judge of their value. Arkansas owes no debt for any purpose, but bank capital. Her bank capital is all sound and available.

The bonds are drawn payable to the order of the banks, and the banks pay the interest regularly, and are legally liable for both principal and interest.

The Real Estate bank of Arkansas has a capital of one million five hundred thousand dollars. The stock is secured by bonds and mortgages on the improved property of the citizens to the amount of three millions.

These three millions of bonds and mortgages were transferred to the state as security for the one million five hundred thousand dollars of bonds bearing an interest of six per cent. By the terms of the charter no dividend can be made to the stockholders until these bonds, principal and interest are paid.

The security of the bonds are three fold:
1st. The state is pledged, and owes no other debt.
2d. The bank capital and all its earnings.
3d. Three millions of bonds and mortgages on the best productive lands of the state.

Besides, the FAITH of the state, which is the only security upon which other state bonds rest. These bonds are secured by the revenues of the state, against the bank capital, and the other against the three millions bonds and mortgages held by the state in trust for this purpose.

The interest on these bonds will always be promptly made in this city. [New York Times.]

TENNESSEE.

DEATH OF GUBERNOR CANNON. The mysterious disease, which in the dispensation of Divine Providence, suddenly attacked this excellent citizen, and distinguished and honest public servant, a few days since, terminated his existence at 7 o'clock, last evening. And though the paralytic shock and the course of active treatment to which the governor was subjected, had made rapid and distressing inroads upon his athletic frame, (so recently in the vigor of health), he yielded his spirit to the God who gave it, with the utmost resignation, and in all apparent composure.

The name of NEWTON CANNON will occupy no ordinary place in the political annals of Tennessee. For more than thirty years a citizen of the state, he, filled, during that long and eventful period, numerous and highly responsible stations in the local and national councils, in all of which he was distinguished for a sincere and pure patriotism, and a zealous devotion to the common weal, that won the respect of his political enemies, and commanded him to the confidence of his constituents. A member of the state legislature in 1811, and in several subsequent sessions—a member of congress in 1816 and again in 1819–20, representing the district embracing at that time about half the territory of Middle Tennessee—a member of the state convention in 1834—and governor of Tennessee from 1835 to 1839, he passed with honor and success through the gradations of political life, to the highest office known to the constitution of his adopted state.

In the relation of private life, few men were more truly beloved than Governor CANNON. Sincere in his attachments, exact in his dealings, unostentatious in his character and kind and indulgent in the domestic circle, he lived respected and died lamented, the upright neighbor and devoted friend.

FLORIDA.

INDIANS AGAIN. A correspondent of the Savannah Republican writes from East Florida, Sept. 25. Nothing particularly new from Tampa Bay by the last mail. As the mail rider was coming into Palatka last night, three Indians fired at him from a short distance, about nine miles from that post, one ball struck his horse about the shoulder, which killed him after running about a mile; the Indians followed, and nearly came up to the express rider, when he drew his pistols, and caused them to stop—perhaps to load their rifles; this gave the express rider the start, which he kept at a killing pace, until he reached Palatka, more than half dead himself. A detachment of dragoons, under Captain Ker, was immediately despatched to the place where this daring outrage was committed, but no trace of the Indians beyond their tracks following the express rider could be discovered.

MCLEOD'S TRIAL.

The Preliminary Arrangements for the Trial.—The trial of Alexander McLeod for the murder of Thurtell commences to-day, all the witnesses and commissions on behalf of the prisoner having arrived. The number of witnesses for the prosecution is about fifty.—The evidence on the defence is mostly documentary, taken under commissions, and about a half a dozen witnesses, who will be examined. The proof contained in most of these depositions can have little if any force, and throw no light whatever upon the presence or absence of McLeod at the destruction of the Caroline, or his participation in the crime. Consequently they can be of little avail in his behalf, the main point of his defence being in the establishment of an alibi. Indeed, as far as I can ascertain, there are but three among all his witnesses present here or in Canada, who will swear positively that he was not present on this occasion and such of these, as I learn, will be impeached beyond all chance of salvation.

The court have adopted very salutary and vigorous orders in relation to the ingress and egress of the bar, witnesses, spectators, &c., at the court room. These orders have been printed in large hand bills, and posted about town; and a large number of officers will be in attendance to enforce their observance.

An adequate number of constables and special deputies are in attendance, to preserve order and provide for the entrance and departure of those having business with the court.

CIRCUIT COURT AND OYER AND TERMINER OF ONEIDA COUNTY.

TRIAL OF ALEX. MCLEOD FOR THE MURDER OF DR. DUFFIE.

At half past nine o'clock, his honor Judge Gridley took his seat on the bench, together with Judges White, Kimball and Jones of the county court, who did form part of the court at this trial, they being only on the civil order of the court.

On behalf of the prosecution, appeared W. G. Hall, esq. attorney general, Timothy Jenkins, esq. district attorney of this county, the district attorney of Niagara county, J. L. Wood, esq. and Seth C. Bailey, esq. of Buffalo. On the part of the prisoner appeared J. M. Spenser, esq. and D. Gardner and Alvan C. Bradley, esq. of Lockport.

After the court, bar and jurors had taken their seats, the public generally were admitted to the extent of the capacity of the room, and in doing which a remarkable degree of regularity and order was preserved. Judge White, briefly stated to the auditory the necessity of strictly preserving order and silence, and no disposition was manifested by the audience to disobey.

The trial then opened the circuit court and court of oyer and terminer of Oneida county; and by the direction of Mr. Hall, attorney general, called the name of Theodore Stone, a witness for the prosecution, who not answering, Mr. Hall moved for an attachment against him, which was forthwith issued.

The prisoner, McLeod, was then brought in and placed by the side of his counsel. His appearance indicated a man who had lived well, and felt much at ease.

Mr. Hall then called on the trial of McLeod, and the counsel for the prisoner expressing their readiness to proceed, the prisoner was arraigned and informed of his right of challenge. The jury having been empanelled.

Mr. Hall, attorney general, then proceeded to open the case for the prosecution. He commenced by expressing briefly, but feelingly, the delicacy of his situation and the duty which now devolved upon him and the jury. He next reverted to the great excitement which pervaded the public mind, from one extremity of the union to the other, in relation to the important trial upon which they were now entered; and the evidence of which was before the eyes of the jury, in the living masses which thronged and surrounded the court house. To this excitement it was the duty of the jury and himself to close their eyes, and to know it not, and to seek to forget it.

We shall probably furnish his remarks at large in the next Register. The court was occupied the residue of Monday and Tuesday in the examination of witnesses. The trial will evidently be of great length.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

LETTER OF EX-PRESIDENT GENERAL ANDREW JACKSON, in reply to resolutions of a convention held in the 9th ward of the city of New York.

Herald, September 11th, 1841.

Sir: Your letter of the 28th ultimo, with its enclosure, the resolutions of the democratic republican mass convention held in the 9th ward of the city of New York, of the same month, have been duly received, and are acknowledged with sentiments of profound gratitude for the honor they confer upon me.

The state of my health, which is now much deteriorated by an attack of fever, does not allow me to express at length the reflections excited in my mind by the perusal of the resolutions. I have, however, I cannot refrain, however, from saying, that they meet generally with my concurrence—and particularly that which gives praise to Mr. Tyler for his veto of the bank bill. If he maintains the position that he has assumed against this great lever of federalism, this deadly foe to the principles of our government, the designs of that party, in other respects will be less difficult to counteract; for the ship of state, relieved of the corrupt influence of a bank of the United States at its helm, will naturally right itself.

It is true, a great error was committed in the repeal of the sub-treasury bill, which may be remedied while there is no bank substituted in its stead. The people care not so much for forms—they go for substance—for practical measures—measures that will ensure economy and accountability in the administration of government; that will make the taxes as light as is consistent with the public safety; that will secure the application of the public moneys, at all times and in all places to constitutional objects. These are the things which it would be the office of a bank to thwart; and they are the things which it would be the tendency of the sub-treasury to promote; and hence, I believe, that that system, or something like it, cannot be long dispensed with.

Doubtless the personal beliefs that the sub-treasury has been condemned by the people, and so believing, he ought not to be censured for giving his sanction to its repeal. But the independence he manifested in the veto, authorises us to hope that he will not be easily led by the whole subject hereafter, and that he will conform to the principles of the Virginia school of republicans.

You are pleased to refer in terms of much commendation to the course pursued by me on the subject of the former bank charter. I acted at the time under a high sense of duty, and derive much satisfaction from the fact that I have received, even from many who then censured me, of the approbation of my country. But, sir, I considered my labor as but the commencement of the work of reform in regard to the banking system. Much higher praise is due to Mr. Van Buren, against whom the whole force of the spirit of monopoly was brought to bear. It has driven that distinguished statesman, and well-pretending patriot into retirement, but it has rendered him dearer than ever to his country, because of the noble sacrifice he has made to the cause of equal rights.

My strength failing me, I cannot follow out these reflections. Every effort to write, admonishes me that my life is nearly spent. Let me conclude, therefore, this hasty and imperfect response to your letter, with an assurance to my republican and democratic friends every where, that I am proud of their respect, and have an abiding faith in the success of their efforts to secure the rights of freedom and equal rights to themselves and their posterity. Very respectfully, your fellow citizen,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Garrit Gilbert, eqs.

INVENTIONS, IMPROVEMENTS, &c.

EXPLOSIVE SHELLS. In your paper of the 23d September, I observed a notice of Dr. A. Jones' detonating shells. In that notice it is stated that Jones had invented a shell which possesses these advantages:—The first is, that it can be fired without exploding in or leaving the gun; secondly, that it shall explode on reaching its destination; and thirdly, that it shall be perfectly safe to handle; and no other inventor, in this or any other country, has ever yet been fully able to attain. "Mr. Barry and myself have invented a new mode of construction," says the notice, "which possesses all the requisites in that of Dr. Jones. The following experiment with our shells, which was made in the presence of Col. Bonford, Capt. Symington, hon. J. C. Calhoun, Messrs. Lewis, Pickens, and many other gentlemen, will prove the utility and the perfect safety of our shells." The shells fired weighed only 7½ ounces. A target was made 12 feet high, 6 feet wide, and 1 foot thick; distance from the gun, 50 yards. Four shells were fired into the target, splitting it its entire length and breadth, exploding every time. Col. Bonford directed me to fire on Buzzard point, and explode the shell, and also explode one by ricochet shot. These two last were also successful. I have fired these shot with a very reduced charge into a target without exploding them, and Mr. B. afterwards cut the same shot, fired them with a full charge, when they have always exploded. More than one hundred of these shells were fired; different times were fired in the presence of at least five hundred witnesses, and not a single failure. Every effort on my part has been made to bring this destructive shell under the notice of both the navy and war departments, but without success. The largest shell of the size of the one I stand the force of our 43-pounder concussion shells; no steamship could stand the effect of one. To test this shell fully, it would not require an expenditure of more than one thousand dollars, and it is probable half that sum would do it. I am, with respect, your obedient servant.

W. D. PORTER, U. S. N.
[Loring and Nacy Chen.

THE SHRAPNEL INVENTORS. Lieut. Gen. Shrapnel, of the artillery, the inventor of the shells (commonly called spherical case shot), has taken out a patent for a new kind of fowling piece, which, without using caps, may be fired more than one hundred times by merely cocking the gun, and is more secure from going off accidentally, which is always the case when any thing touches the trigger, after the gun is loaded. There is likewise a joint in the stock, by which means the barrel may be elevated or depressed more or less, so as to suit the sportsman, and which may be done in the field by merely turning a screw for that purpose. Likewise a new musket, made to regulate the elevation of the barrel, according to the distance of the enemy, and also a pistol, which makes a good defence against the broad sword.

BRITISH EXPLORING EXPEDITION. Extract of a letter received at Lloyd's, from Hobart town, dated April 17, 1841:

"By the last list you will have perceived the return to this port of her majesty's ships Erebus and Terror, under the command of Ross and Crozier to Nocton official has as yet transpired, but it is generally understood that the expedition has been very successful, and these British ships proceeded eleven degrees further south than the Astrolabe or Zela, and four degrees more than any other vessel has ever yet reached. The expedition was enabled to discover the position of the south magnetic pole at about one hundred miles distance from thence; and that some extraordinary mistake appears to have affected the calculation of the Americans who approached those regions.

The ships Erebus and Terror entered the main part of the ice, on their voyage of discovery towards the south pole, on the 5th of January last, being then in latitude 66 45 south, and longitude 174 13 east. On the 10th of the same month they described land in latitude 71 56 south, longitude 171 17 east; and coming up to it on the 12th January, they took possession of it in the name of her majesty. The land extends south to degree 79. Proceeding onwards, a large volcano, emitting dense clouds of smoke, was observed on the 26th of January, in latitude 77 31 S. longitude 167 36 E. On the 2d of February they reached to the utmost extent of their voyage, viz: latitude 78 30 S. longitude 173 12 W. and were surrounded by icebergs 150 feet high, and by fields of ice, which were traced as extending 300 miles to the eastward.

"The expedition penetrated about four degrees further south than the American or French discovery vessels, although the course of the voyage it was considerable. The correctness of many of the spots laid down in the charts of the former, they also discovered one single error, viz: the existence of water over a large space described as land, and which the Erebus and Terror actually sailed over for a considerable distance, leaving the land three hundred miles from the latter's laid down in the American chart. It is said that the sea in this direction abounds in seals and sperm whale. Not a single casualty occurred among the crews, and the vessels reached Hobart town in safety, where they will remain till the season arrives for further operations."

The duke of Bordeaux has met with the accident of breaking his leg, by his falling from the window him. It was at first apprehended that he would not recover, but later accounts from him were more favorable.

There have been serious disturbances at Toulouse, in opposition to the government taking the census. The citizens closed their houses and refused to allow the officers to progress for fear their taxes would be raised. The national guards had to be disarmed.

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY.

Colebrook, Conn. September 24, 1841.

For several years past I have been in the quiet little town has been in quest of a "cannon-hole" in consequence of a rumored discovery of a large cavern in the northwest part of the town, bordering on Massachusetts. I at first supposed the story to be a hoax, and treated it as such, but, being assured to the contrary, by a respectable neighbor who said he had seen the cave, I was induced to visit the place several times, and have had ocular demonstration of the truth of the report. It may appear incredible that a great cavern should have remained so long unknown in this inhabited region, but it is nevertheless true. It is probably large, but how large is not known, as it has been explored but about a quarter of its extent. I have been in it, and who ever heard of its existence before. I have agreed with a number of my neighbors to explore the cavern as far as practicable, and I propose, with your permission, to give the result of our researches from time to time, through the medium of your paper.

The mouth of the cavern is in the arm of Mr. J. Randall, in the northwest part of the town, within a mile and a half of the Massachusetts line. It is a barren, rocky, unfrequented spot—a projecting cliff, of craggy rock full one hundred feet high, hangs over it with an aspect so threatening as to daunt the courage of the best daring climber. It does not fall over one can tell. It seems to stand against all the known laws of gravitation.

It is called the "Witch's Retreat," but why I know not. When I was a boy, my father lived within one mile of this place, and I have spent hours with other boys, climbing over the rocks, and up the side of this precipice. The mouth of the cavern, at the bottom of the precipice, is covered with a huge mass of rocks which have evidently fallen from the cliff above. Some of them are very large, and from their size and form one may easily discover the place from which they fell. There was nothing in the general appearance of the place, that induced me to look for such a cavern, and one might clamber about there a week and not suspect such a thing. The only opening was under a large rock, and scarcely large enough for a boy to crawl into. It could only have been discovered by accident, as it was.

Two weeks since, Sabbath, one of Mr. Randall's boys, a bold, adventurous little fellow, and two other boys, a bold, adventurous little fellow, and two other boys, scarcely less so, wandering about the fields for pastime, came to this spot. While they were amusing themselves by climbing about and hiding among the rocks, one of the boys, without knowing why, put his head into this hole under the rock, and shouted "halloo!" He called out, and the boys, who were with him, called his companions. Each in turn, put his head under the rock and made some noise, which resounded like the response of an hundred voices. Boys though they were, they had hallooed into too many cisterns and vaults not to know that such reverberations indicated room inside. The young Randall proposed they should go in and see what discovery they could make. This the other boys declined doing. But young Randall, nothing daunted by the fears of his comrades, boldly declared he would go in alone. He crawled in about eight feet, when he found there was room enough to stand upright. A few straggling rays of light found their way between the rocks, not sufficient to discover the dimensions of the place he was in. He seemed to feel, however, that he was in a large place, as a man blindfolded will feel the difference between a small room and a large one. He uttered a loud shriek with a view to frighten his companions outside, and to terrify them, and to terrify it only frightened himself, and he came out much quicker than he went in. This was a discovery just suited to the adventurous dispositions of these boys, and they resolved to make the most of it. Before they parted, they agreed to keep the thing a secret from all others, and to return on the next Sunday, prepared with old clothes, matches, a lantern, &c. to explore the "new cave," as they call it.

The next Sunday they repaired to their rendezvous, accoutred according to agreement, and provided with the necessary implements, they prepared to enter. Boys, like men, will rarely acknowledge a want of courage, but as each accused the other of being afraid, he concluded they were all half frightened out of their wits, so it had occurred to them that this place was called "the Witch's Retreat," and this cave might be full of wretches. But with some hesitation and many misgivings, they at length entered. With lantern in hand, they proceeded to explore, and found good cause to keep in sight of the hole by which they entered. Having gone about ten rods without meeting with any boundary to their cave, and their small entering place beginning to grow dim in the distance, they judged it prudent to venture no farther. The cavern was now very dark, and they were in the dark, and they concluded to confine the secret to older and wiser

The gentleman tells us that the president objects to the feature of the bill which, in his opinion, authorizes local discounts; and then triumphantly turns to the project submitted by the secretary of the treasury, which authorizes the same thing, and charges the president with inconsistency—avowing, as the gentleman does, that the plan emanating from the secretary was approved by the president. Now, sir, I deny that the details of the plan submitted by the secretary of the treasury ever were approved by the president, and I call upon the gentleman for proof of his assertion. But, admitting, for argument's sake, that the president had approved of the plan, the president, and taking the gentleman's statement that it was a national bank with all the powers necessary to such an institution—to deal in exchanges, foreign and domestic—to discount local paper, &c. I ask the gentleman why that plan was immediately rejected? Was it pronounced a "poor rickety affair"? Why, if you were so anxious for a bank, did you not at once accept of this plan? It had, you confess, all the powers and privileges of a national bank. The gentleman may say that it required the assent of the states to establish branches, and therefore was objectionable. Well, sir, that objection has long since passed. But it may be said that it only asked consent by indirection, or that it merely seemed to ask the consent of the states, but in reality asserted the power of congress to establish branches. Then, sir, it was no compromise, as you have again and again asserted. It was a national bank, and it required the assent of the states, and therefore did not respect the president's objection; so that, take the question in either light, the gentleman is at fault in his charges. Sir, he can give us, if he will, the reason for rejecting the project of the secretary, and for pressing these two bank bills on the president with so much haste.

The first bill that passed all acknowledged to be a most excellent one. I voted in favor of it. Several of the most prominent whigs in this house voted against it. Not a single one approved of the bill. I can well understand, sir, how unwilling its framers were to make an issue on the fate of that bill. It was, therefore, necessary to frame another. And even before it went to the executive, the gentleman predicted that it would be vetoed. It could be vetoed. He openly avowed this opinion on the floor; and said that when the veto came, he, for one, would speak freely of the president's course.—And, sir, he has done so to-day. But how came that gentleman to know that the president would veto the bill? He appears, sir, to have been an excellent executive. I do not know that the bill was so palpably objectionable, that it could not be vetoed.—Or, sir, was it framed with a view of "heading" the president? Sir, if the gentleman will not dispel the mystery hanging over all this bank business, I will. The whole session has been passed in "president-making." I told you so a few days since. I tell you so again.—And I repeat that, from the first meeting of congress up to this hour, there has been a determination on the part of some gentlemen to create an issue with the president. His constitutional principles, well known and openly avowed, have been sneered at, and under the pretext of avoiding them, the most absurd and evasive propositions have been presented to him, with a full knowledge that they could not receive his sanction. In the expressive language of the gentleman, there has been every means used to "head him"—to make him sign a bill which neither his conscience nor judgment approved, and thereby to violate his long-cherished principles, and subject himself to the scorn of the good and virtuous, or, by refusing his assent, to become an object of abuse and misrepresentation for those who hate him, and look upon him as standing between them and the objects of their ambition. Why, sir, even this day, the gentleman from Virginia, when speaking of the president, proclaimed as his motto, "head him, or die." It evinces the inveteracy of his opposition. He may choose what motto he pleases. I admire neither the inscription on his banner nor the object for which he struggles. I tell the gentleman, beware of the people. They fought under another banner than that of Virginia. They are not willing that, while they play this desperate political game, their interests, their principles, their honesty of purpose, shall be sacrificed or forgotten in the heartless schemes of ambition. They did not send us here, sir, to plot and counterplot—to mine and to dig for the president's political ruin. I do not send us here to pass our time in concocting schemes to "head" the president. And I think when we return home they will inform us that it is not a fitting employment for legislators and statesmen. I know, sir, that it is difficult for the people to understand the order and course of legislative proceedings. I think that they will deliver judgment, I fear not their verdict on the matters now agitating and exciting the nation.

I, sir, have but one object in view—a sincere desire to perform my duty, to do justice to the president, to maintain the principles for which I have contended from the days of my boyhood, to produce harmony and union amongst those with whom I have so long been associated, and to include concession and forbearance in lieu of the unfortunate spirit of strife and enmity now so lamentably palpable. I shall, therefore, give briefly what I conceive to be an analysis of the message now before us. The president says that he cannot conscientiously approve of local banking, and to include concession and forbearance which he has sworn "to protect, preserve and defend."

Admitting that the veto power ought to be exercised with great caution, and as a "conservative power," yet the president justly says that no alternative is left to him, if the bill presented is to his mind clearly violative of the constitution.

He considers the constitution of the U. States as the "embodied and written will of the whole people," unanimously adopted, and prescribing to the public functionaries imperative duties.

He considers that this bill which professes to establish an agent of the government purely national, grants powers not required for the operation of the government, and at war with the constitution. He objects to the power granted with local discounts as unnecessary to the fiscal operations of the government, and as subjecting the public funds to loss, and to improper uses by the officers of the institution. He contends that the permission to discount is without limitation, or time unlimited, with power of renewability unchecked, and at rates of interest unrestrained, are powers improper to be granted, and liable to be grossly abused, not only injuriously to the government, but to the people. He contends that the power to deal in this kind of discount is absolutely to all the banks of the local discount. He denies the power assumed by congress to invest a local institution with general or national powers. He contends that, under this bill, fictitious bills of exchange can be drawn without limit, whereas all operations in exchange ought to be based upon a real and substantial basis; in other words, he is anxious to destroy all the operations of the institution to true business transactions.

He considers that the bill would have a tendency to postpone indefinitely the resumption of specie payments by the banks. He contends that an institution which is to continue in operation for twenty years, to enjoy the same privileges, to be subject to the same, which, irrevocable, ought not to be thus liable to objection, and that it would be over hazardous to pass such a bill into a law.

The president regrets the differences of opinion existing, suggests that the matter be postponed, and says that, at the regular meeting of congress in November next, it will be his duty, under the constitution, to recommend such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. These, I believe, are the leading points in the message; and, sir, I have no doubt but that the president, through the secretary of the treasury, will, at our next meeting, present a message which, availing constitutional objections, will answer all the purposes of the government, regulate, incidentally the currency and exchanges, and receive the sanction of congress. But, sir, if the spirit manifested here to-day is fostered and encouraged—if, instead of courtesy and kindness, we are to hear taunts and threats and denunciations—give up all hope of success from the late contest. The victory so hardly achieved. I consider, sir, the speech delivered this day by the gentleman from Virginia as calculated to do much mischief by its excessive violence and personal allusions. And even a conciliatory language used by the executive has been misinterpreted, and resulted at times to the gentleman, alluding to it, says that the president winningly asks of congress "compassion and forgiveness." Sir, there is no such language made use of in the message; the gentleman must know this. There is nothing approaching it. Then why attribute to the president such humiliating and unbecoming language? It is not only extremely reprehensible and grossly unjust, but tending to place the executive in a false position before the country. The gentleman must know that thousands who peruse his remarks will impute from them false impressions, and surely he could not wish that.

He will now proceed, Mr. Speaker, to investigate the charges of a personal character made by the gentleman, regretting sincerely the necessity I am under of engaging in such unprofitable discussion.

I wish to call the attention of the house and of the country to one particular feature of the charge of the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman preferred against the president. He says that this is not the first time that John Tyler has been thus charged, and the charge proven. He says that John Tyler was elected to the senate of the United States in 1827, over John Randolph, by an act of perfidy. I will not stop, sir, to defend the legislature of Virginia from this odious imputation on their honor; I leave that to its honorable representatives of both parties. The gentleman from Georgia (Gustavus) has already expressed his indignant disbelief of the assertion. But, sir, what must we think of the open declaration made on this floor by the gentleman (Mr. Borrs) that he, having been benefited politically by the treason, ought not to complain of the traitor? Sir, this is a startling and astonishing avowal of a strange species of political morality. Has he not been elected on evil times, when such an attitude could be openly made in an American house of representatives? What, sir, the beneficiary of treachery and treason announcing to the world that treason, and openly admitting that he ought not to complain, because the political benefits derived from that treachery inured to himself and his party? Sir, however much I must regret to hear such language made use of in this house, still, if it is to be used, I am glad that it has been done in this open manner. It carries upon its face a refutation. The avowal of the gentleman is "open" and "public" and "in the face of the world" against this and similar charges. Sir, the gentleman read us an extract from a pamphlet to prove this allegation, but he favored us not with the name of the author. It may be that it is one of those anonymous productions of party malignity or personal pique so often sent abroad to excite animosities and stir up place and power. A pamphlet, sir, is the gentleman's evidence against John Tyler, who has been in political life for thirty years, and who has filled all the highest offices in the gift of his native state and of the nation. Why, sir, the gentleman can find pamphlets and levers, and newspaper productions charging Treachery, Washington, and the president and treachery, Jefferson with corruption and perfidy, and our beloved Harrison with delinquency and treason, and base poltroonery. And does not every honorable man look upon these vile effusions with loathing and contempt unutterable? But, sir, I shall now call upon the gentleman to explain to the country how it is that he has been the constant, ardent and ardent supporter of John Tyler, ever since the act of treachery which he says was perpetrated in 1827? I say, sir, that the gentleman, when a member of the legislature of Virginia, voted for John Tyler for the senate of the United States, long after this act of perfidy, as the gentleman now avers, had been proven.

[A voice here exclaimed, "Is it possible?"]

Mr. PROFFER continued. Yes, sir, it is possible; the gentleman did vote for John Tyler for the senate of the United States. He can deny it if I misrepresent him. He used every exertion to secure the election of that man, who, as he now says, was guilty of perfidy years before. And, sir, this is not all. The gentleman voted for John Tyler as vice president at the late election. He was one of the most active and efficient supporters of the man, who, in 1827, as he now asserts, was guilty of treachery.—But I have not yet done with the gentleman. He was a prominent member of the whig central committee; composed of members of congress, which committee, upon more than one occasion, vouched for the purity of the characters of Gen. Harrison and John Tyler. Sir, if he knew of John Tyler's perfidy, he is responsible to this nation for not avowing that knowledge previous to the election of that man, who, as he has been faithful to his trust in supporting him. And, sir, he has been inscribed upon the whig banner as one without spot and without blemish. But I have still another evidence to rebut the gentleman's charge of perfidy, and that evidence has been furnished by himself to-day. He read to this house a letter addressed by him to the president, sealed "private and confidential," in which letter he expresses feelings of friendship and sentiments of regard towards him. It was written, sir, during the time the first bank bill was in the possession of the executive. He informs the president in that letter that if he vetoed the bank bill the president "would immediately resign, and that he (the president) could not refuse to resign." And, sir, if he, the gentleman really believed the president capable of perfidy, how comes it that he is in private and confidential correspondence with him within the last few weeks? What becomes of his professions of friendship voluntarily made public in this house? Sir, the gentleman has been guilty of treachery, and of the spirit which actuates him who makes the charge. But another feature in this matter has been exposed by the gentleman. He tells the president in his letter, thus fortunately given to the public, "that if he vetoes the bank bill his cabinet will immediately resign, and that he cannot form another from the whig party."

Now what becomes of the charge made in this house and in the other end of the capitol, and in the public press, that a cabal was here formed, the object of which was to break up the whig party, dissolve the cabinet, &c. It appears, sir, by the gentleman's own letter, that the scheme of dissolving the cabinet was agreed upon by himself and his friends; and not only that, but that the president shall be prevented from forming a new one composed of whigs. And now, sir, who constitute the cabal? Who is it that charges the president with a desire to form a coalition with the opposition party, and yet openly avows that a cabal of his friends and associates, the gentlemen of the whig party? Can it be possible, Mr. Speaker, that a plan is determined on to compel the president to call gentlemen of the opposition into his cabinet, that an opportunity may be afforded for denouncing him, and thus to add to the gross injustice already done by the president's action? If so, I tell gentlemen their scheming is vain. They can not drive the president from his determination to maintain his position, and in purity and honesty to administer the government upon the principles on which he came into power.

Having thus hastily glanced, sir, at the relative position of the gentleman from Virginia and the president of the United States, I call upon the gentleman for his proofs of the charge of perfidy. Proof, sir, I demand, in the name of justice; proof I demand in the name of the country.

Mr. BERRY said that if Mr. PROFFIT would give him the remainder of the time to which Mr. P. was entitled, he would give proof.

Mr. PROFFIT continued. No doubt, sir, but the gentleman would be glad to take the floor from me. No doubt but he would rejoice that I should cease to hold him to proof of his charges. He would, I presume, read us some of his newspapers, and quotations from pamphlets. He, sir, has had possession of the floor for an hour, and although he opened with a declaration that he possessed undeniable evidence, still, sir, he failed to present any thing but a pamphlet and a quotation from the Richmond Enquirer concerning a dinner Mr. Giles, neither of which approached the allegation of perfidy. Sir, let the gentleman hand me his proofs and I will read them to the house, and here, unprepared as I am, undertake to refute them. Sir, there is not the slightest evidence against John Tyler. He was elected to the senate because the legislature of Virginia, well known for its honesty and its patriotism, decided that he would honor his native state in the high office to which they called him. He received many votes from those who differed with him politically, but that, sir, is proof of the high character he maintained even with his political opponents. You and I, sir, have received, when candidates, many votes from those who differed with us in politics, and we even dream of being charged to that account with perfidy.

Leaving, then, the gentleman to reconcile his support of Mr. Tyler with his charge of perfidy, and also to settle with his own conscience for having made the charge unsupported by proof, I proceed to notice another statement made by the gentleman.

The gentleman has said that an offer of support was made to the president by the opposition party, through the Richmond Enquirer, if he, the president, would abandon whig principles, and the gentleman quotes a letter from Mr. Ritchie on the subject of the bank. He then proceeds to charge the president with having accepted the offer, and that, as proof, Mr. Tyler's perfidy to his party, the fact of Mr. Lund Washington and some dozen other clerks being reinstated in the general land office, after having been dismissed by the secretary of the treasury. He says that the clerks immediately presented themselves to the president, and declared that although they were hostile to General Harrison, they were the principles of the whig party, still they were good Tyler men." He says that, upon this statement, they were forthwith reinstated. Again, sir, I call upon him for proof. Give me the proof, sir, that the president reinstated these clerks because they were his friends.

[Here Mr. BERRY said he would, and whispered in Mr. PROFFIT'S ear.]

Mr. PROFFIT continued. Sir, the gentleman whispers in my ear. He loudly prefers charges, and then whispers proofs. Let the gentleman tell this house—let him tell this country—not whig-per to me, sir, what the house may think on answer to my call. Sir, in justice to the president, let him prove his charges in the face of day. I deny this accusation against the president. He never reinstated Mr. Washington at all. That gentleman never was, in truth, formally dismissed. He received notice that his services would be dispensed with, and he asked the commissioner of the general land office for suspension of his order, that he might have time for intercession. Time was granted him, and the president requested the commissioner to suspend action in the case of the clerks, and the commissioner acceded to the president's request; but he never interfered with the authority of the proper officers of the treasury department, and I refer the gentleman to the commissioner to sustain the statement I have made. Now, sir, what becomes of this charge? The gentleman will relieve me from an unpleasant situation by telling the house what he whispered to me. If it be a secret, he ought not to have told me. If it be not, let the world know it. Open charges should not be made on secret information, and yet, sir, a grave charge of perfidy to the whig party is based upon such shallow authority as this.

I call, sir, upon the gentleman from Virginia for proof of another charge made by him.

He says that the president, "inspired by a mad ambition, and with a view to secure his own re-election, had detached himself from his party and his friends, and thrown himself into the arms of the opposition." Sir, where are the evidences that the president has ever declared a wish for re-election? Where has he given cause for the accusation that he has thrown himself into the arms of the opposition? I call upon the gentleman for proof. He offered none on this floor; he is silent now, sir. Then I call upon the gentleman to prove the charge. He says the president ever made overtures to you for support. Has he ever made a proposition to you, either individually or as a party? (Numerous voices here answered, "Never; never.") No, sir, never has John Tyler for so long a time forgotten the principles on which he was elected, as to duty to his country. The gentleman says that he has been visited by opposition members. Yes, sir, his house has been as open as his heart. He has treated all men, whigs and opposition, with kindness, with courtesy, with hospitality; and for this, he is charged with going over to the opposition. This is his sole offense.

Show me, sir, where he has abandoned whig principles. He rejected the bill providing for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, the loan bill, the revenue bill, the bill repealing the sub-treasury law, the bankrupt bill, the home squadron bill, the fortification bill, the navy appropriation bills, and every other measure passed by the majority here, and yet he is charged with having abandoned whig principles. He has recommended and practiced economy. In the language of Mr. Harrison, he has "struck the fetters of party from the hands of the office holders, and encouraged freedom of thought and liberty of speech." He has appointed no hawking partisans of his to office. He holds every department of the government to strict accountability. No delinquency is suffered to escape his searching investigations. The Florida war is, in it, it is a credit to the management of his administration. He gladly takes upon himself all the responsibilities attendant on his station, and recommends openly and plainly such measures as he deems beneficial to the country. No pretension, no evasion, no scheming for a continuance of power, no party presses supported from the public treasury, no violations of law, or attempted avoidance of it; and yet, sir, he is accused of abandoning whig principles, because he conscientiously differs with congress on the character of a fiscal agent of the government, an agent which will meet the wants of the nation. I say, sir, that the president feels as deeply and sincerely on this subject as any member on this floor.

[Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, asked Mr. P. if he would tell the house what the president was in favor of.]

Mr. PROFFIT said: I, sir, am not authorized to speak for the executive. I do not pretend to be an expert in his particular views; but, sir, if I understand them, he is in favor of the same measures, striving for its object the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public money, and which shall be free from all constitutional objection. I hope, sir, that this explanation is satisfactory to my friend from Kentucky. (Great laughter.)

Mr. BERRY asked Mr. P. for the proof.]

Mr. PROFFIT said, sir, he has been prepared to show the gentleman from Virginia, I refer to the message of the president; there he will find his opinions openly avowed. And, sir, it is identically the language used by Gen. Harrison on more than one occasion, and which I referred some days since, and should I have time will again refresh the memory of the house by quoting.

If the gentleman from Virginia is at a loss for proof for this charge I will proceed to another, and it may be that he will be better fortified on his next point.

He says that a similar charge of treachery was preferred against Mr. Tyler some three years since, and so unpopular did it render him that he could not remain in the state; and in confirmation of this fact, that the Virginia delegation at the Harrisburg convention did not vote for Mr. Tyler. Now, sir, every person on this floor knows that he was nominated by the unanimous vote of that body, not only without any wish on his part; but in direct opposition to his expressed wishes and remonstrances—the Virginia delegation, out of motives of delicacy, remaining silent on the subject. The gentleman says that "the Virginia delegation could not go back and tell the people they voted for me, yet they voted for me." He responded to that, enthusiastically. John Tyler's name was echoed in praise by every whig, and even his political adversaries spoke of him with respect. And, sir, such a man was supported warmly by this very gentleman, who has now so many charges of criminal delinquency against people, who would not vote for him for the most insignificant office as he asserts, voted for him for vice president of the United States. Wait, sir, until the gentleman's speech reaches Virginia, and you will receive an indignant denial of this charge from the Barbour's, the Leighs, and other noble sons of Virginia who represented that patriotic state in the convention at Harrisburg. You will see, sir, whether the thousands who voted for John Tyler for vice president considered him the perfidious traitor the gentleman seems to intimate. But, sir, I am unwilling to do the gentleman injustice. He has the same sentence of proof to sustain this charge, I will pause to read it, and then, because, I pass on to examine some other of his statements.

The next is rather an insignificant one, but it will serve to open the eyes of the people to the system of warfare urged upon the president. The gentleman says that the president during the canvass avowed sentiments "entirely different from those now entertained by him, and that a letter proving the fact is in the possession of a member of this house, and ready to be produced. Sir, I was happy to hear this. It looked like fairness. I waited anxiously to see that letter, and was certain that it would be forthcoming, particularly as it was in the house when the gentleman was in the presence of the house, and it was produced. Now, sir, I demand that the letter be read to the possession of the gentleman? Who has it? What, all mute? The letter on this floor, sir, and yet, when challenged to produce it, a guarded silence reigns among those so clamorous in charges! Well, sir, the members of this country must judge of these things.

The president is charged, sir, with a desire to possess not only the sword of this nation, but also the purse. That is to say, he wishes to combine in himself powers inimical to the free institutions of the republic. This charge is based upon the fact that, by the repeal of the sub-treasury bill, the custody of the public money was placed in the treasury of the U. States, no bank bill having been passed. The president is accused of having signed the bill repealing the independent treasury law and of having vetoed the bank bill with a view of obtaining the custody of the public money. Sir, what an absurd accusation! First, your public purse is empty; the government has no money. Second, the president has not daily made up to it, and as for the sword, I know that the president cannot call a single man to his service without authority from congress. But since this matter has been broached, I, sir, will give the causes which led to this state of things.

Immediately after the passage of the sub-treasury bill, a motion was evinced to veto the bill, and it was at the earliest day. The distinguished senator from Kentucky (Mr. CLAY) introduced a bill for that purpose. It was hurried through the senate with an avowal that it must go to the president and receive his sanction on the fourth day of July—the very day on which the bill was to be referred to the president of the late executive. It came to this house, was referred to the committee of ways and means; but on the next day it was perceived that a blunder had been committed, and the bill was sent to the finance committee. There, sir, it remained for weeks; the fourth of July passed, but not a word was said about the bill. A sudden change had taken place in opinions. There was a rumor that the bank bill of the senator from Kentucky would not receive the executive approval. The managers went to work, and shortly afterwards we were informed that the repeal of the sub-treasury bill was to be tacked on to the bank bill, so as to send both to the president at once, and force him to veto both together. This, sir, was a political move. Despising subterfuge and unfairness as I do, sir, and as I have always done, and scorning indirect legislation, I called upon the chairman of the finance committee, on at least a dozen different occasions, for his reasons for withholding the bill. The public press commenced a warfare on the unfairness of the procedure, and at last it made a reluctant appearance in the house, but was laid upon the table. Still the fate of the bank bill was undecided. The bankrupt bill was taken up and discussed, evidently as a dilatory maneuver, as giving time to operate upon other measures. One morning you decided that it would be very improper to take it out of committee of the whole the next day at four o'clock. The next morning, at ten, you decided that it would be proper to end the discussion at four o'clock of that day. At half past eleven you again decided that it would be improper to take the bill out of committee at four o'clock. Suddenly, at twelve o'clock, you postponed the consideration of the bankrupt bill, and took up the bill repealing the sub-treasury law. The "previous question" was speedily called, the bill passed under its operation, and then we heard the exulting cry, "we have the president fastened now; he cannot vote the bank bill and sign the repeal of the sub-treasury; that will leave the public money under his control, and we will charge him with having in view object." Well, sir, the bank bill has been voted, and the result is as anticipated. I can talk that "union" and "republicanism" and sword," declaim about monarchical powers, and accuse the president of being the cause of a state of things which your legislation produced, and purpose to aimed at.

"Think you, sir, that this shallow harlequinade, this political vice-working, will deceive the people!—Think you that their good sense can be imposed upon by such juggling artifice? No, sir, your pretty address will not. I ask you, sir, whether you have not your time to talk about purse and sword, all will fail you before the keen eye of an intelligent constituency. So much for this charge; and really, sir, am fatigued with following the tortuous maze of inconsistencies which gentlemen induce themselves by their attempts to prejudge the people and to mislead the nation. I have no more to say, but I have a few observations and assumptions against the executive. I have, I believe, answered the prominent charges made by the gentleman from Virginia. I shall not notice his remarks about the conversations he has had with the president, on steamboats and at private interviews. I could make many important observations on this subject, but I have no time to do so out of this house. But, sir, I never refer to private conversations. I consider it improper, as tending to lower the character of our public debates.

On a former occasion, sir, I took some pains to portray correctly the principles of the whig party, as avowed previous to the late election. I traced the opinions of General Harrison on the subject of a bank from 1822 to November, 1839; and I gave extracts from his letters, circulars and speeches, all going to prove that he considered the question of the constitutionality of a national bank as an open question; and that his own convictions were, that the establishment of a bank was unconstitutional, "unless it was necessary to the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public money;" and I will again quote a short passage of his letter to Sherrod Williams, when speaking of a bank:

"The question, then, for me to answer is, whether, under the circumstances you state, if elected to the office of president, I would sign an act to charter another bank. I answer, I would, if it were clearly ascertained that the public interest, in relation to the currency, would be promoted by the establishment of a bank, and that the people would be materially suifer without one, and there were unequivocal manifestations of public opinion in its favor. I think, however, the experiment should be fairly tried, to ascertain whether the financial operations of the government cannot be as well carried on without the aid of a national bank. If it is not necessary for that purpose, it is needless to me that one can be established, and I should be inclined to authorize what I can give the constitution which would authorize it, on the ground of affording facilities to commerce. The measure, if adopted, must have for its object the carrying into effect (facilitating, at least, the exercise of) some one of the powers positively granted to the general government. If others flow from it, promoting the same advantages as the main power, so much the better; but these cannot be made the ground for justifying a recourse to it.

"The excitement which has been produced by the bank question, the number and respectability of those who deny the right to congress to charter one, strongly recommend the course above suggested."

Again, sir, in his Dayton speech, made September 10, 1840, he said:

"My opinion of the power of congress to charter a national bank remains unchanged. There is not in the constitution any express grant of power for such purpose, and it could never be constitutional to exercise that power save in the event the powers granted to congress could not be carried into effect without resorting to such an institution. Mr. Madison signed the law creating a national bank because he thought that the revenues of the country could not be collected or disbursed to the best advantage without the interposition of such an establishment. I said, in my letter to Sherrod Williams, that, if it was plain that the revenues of the union could only be collected and disbursed in the most effectual way by means of a bank, and if I was clearly of opinion that the majority of the people of the United States desired such an institution, then, and then only, would I sign a bill going to charter a bank."

I ask, sir, the excuse of the house for again citing them to these opinions; but really there is such an evident attempt to mystify and mislead the public mind that I think it proper to place the declarations of Gen. Harrison, under which he was elected, prominently before the people.

I alluded also to the same expression of opinion as having been made by very many prominent and distinguished gentlemen of the whig party during the late contest. Since then, sir, other evidence has come to light, and I will give you a letter written by Mr. Ewing, the present secretary of the treasury, and published previous to the election. It goes to prove that even he did not wish to make the question of a bank an open issue at the late canvass.

*From the Marietta Intelligencer (Whig) of July 30, 1840.
Lancaster, July 18, 1840.*

MY DEAR : On my return from Columbus this evening, I received your letter informing me that it was asserted at a public meeting in Washington that "our government is a monarchy." I would have been glad to have been present at the meeting, but the true question between the parties was a bank of the United States, and that you, from a knowledge of the real question and of me, had contradicted the assertion. In this, of course, you were perfectly safe, and I am glad that you were. I am very glad to have ascertained that the true question was and is the restriction or extension of executive power. That its encroachments, open and covert, were of the most alarming nature, and if not resisted must end in the subjection of all that is sacred to the representative principle of our government, that a dangerous anarchy, in effect, if not in name, must rise on its ruins. I said that our opponents were attempting to make the question of a bank the issue between the parties. I spoke of the impudence and absurdity of the attempt, and of the folly of those who were so easily deceived by us any thing more than a mere matter of convenience—a useful article of furniture in our noble edifice. That our opponents were gravely raising and debating the question whether this article of furniture had a table or a settee standing in our halls, while their suppers and miners were at work tumbing its walls and columns about our ears. This, with amplification and illustration, is the substance of what I said to you that particular object. You perceive, that you did not make a mistake in your opinions or in my language.

Your sincere friend,
L. D. BARKER, esq.

This, sir, shows you that the issue was avoided even by many of the most ultra whigs.

On the occasion alluded to, I gave the recorded opinions of John Tyler in 1819—his vote against the bank in the senate in 1832—his open declaration in the "Henrico letter" a few months previous to the election, and his correspondence with Henry Clay, in relation to the subject of a bank. I merely allude again to these opinions as a defence of the president from the charge of having concealed his opinions; and I now say that I believe the president will yet convince even the gentleman from Virginia that the president is not in the least inconsistent in appointing an agent of the government, according to the plan of Gen. Harrison, which shall have for its object "the collection, safe-keeping, and disbursement of the public revenues, and which, in the event of a rebellion, shall regulate the exchanges and currency of the country."

In opposition to the recorded votes and opinions of the president during a long life, the gentleman from Virginia gives in evidence a conversation had with him on a steamboat, and an extract from an editorial in the Washington Post, and an editorial in the Washington Herald, all of which are in the possession of the gentleman from Virginia. It is open, avowed enmity. There are other and more dangerous enemies whom the president has encountered in his public life, but he has never been able to profess friendship, and secretly striking at his fair game. Men like Machiavel, of whom it has been forcibly said, "he could not comprehend how a man should scruple to deceive him whom he does not scruple to destroy." He would think it madness to declare open enmity to a man, and then to attempt to win him by friendly embrace, or poison in a consecrated water.

These are the men, who, faintly exclaiming, "I think he is honest," chuckle at the venomous effusions of hireling writers, and the ruffian attacks upon the public and private character of the executive.—They, sir, it is who encourage these burnings in effigy and other scandalous exhibitions of the depravity of human nature.

And, sir, these men even condescend sometimes to take abusive notice of the friends of the president—

Wise, gallant, highminded gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) and his colleagues (Messrs. Blair and Loring) and others, and even my humble self. I, sir, have been most shamefully misrepresented and vilified in the press, and the feelings which my feelings have been repaid by bitter denunciations, allude to this treatment in no spirit of complaint. I have too proud a heart for that; I laugh at such petty malice and impotent clamor; and when I say I laugh at it, I express but a small portion of the utter contempt I feel for it. For the wretched scribblers who have thus abused me, I have no words but to rebuke their mouths and a bribe in their pockets, stand ready to denounce any one, I spit upon them, as I would upon their masters had they courage to avow themselves the owners of such slaves. Sir, I should occupy more than the time allotted to me, if I were to notice a title of the slanders which have been published against myself and the gentlemen with whom I am proud to act. We have been charged with abandoning our principles. I deny it. I, sir, am standing where I have always stood. We defend the administration to place which in power we have battled through years of toil and gloom. And for what are we abused? For defending and supporting the administration of a man whose name I honor, and who, sir, by those gentlemen who opposed us in the late contest, no, sir, but by those who, professing to be friends of the administration, vilify us for defending it! Forgetful of every thing like principle themselves, our assailants insolently lecture us because we will not allow ourselves to be run in ruin. And what are these self-constituted leaders? Are they then to assume to be the special oracles of the great whig party? Men, sir, who never soiled a point of their caubric ruffles to the late fight—men who never spent a farthing to advance the cause, or gave a moment of their life to the great conflict. Stretched supinely in shade, they have seen others toiled and sweat in the path to the harvest field. And now they come into this house, like sea-weed on the beach, by the tossings of the political tempest raised by my friend (Mr. Wise) and others such as he. These are the men, sir, who command that we stultify ourselves, unthink ourselves, and worship in blind obedience the idols which they have made. And now they demand our adoration. They say we must denounce every man because we will not join in the imprecations they heap upon the executive, and because we will not, forgetful of the duty we owe to the whole country, command an electioneering canvass for the next presidency in behalf of their favorite candidate. I, sir, for one, will pledge my name to no man. We have no business to be the tools of the passions of a party, but we are devoted to honest legislation for the good of the country.

But, sir, we are told that we do not stand by the party, and that the president does not go with his party. The executive, sir, has no party: he ought to pave none. He is the president of the nation, and it would be well for these gentlemen to recollect the language of the venerated Harrison. Methinks I see him now, sir, his grey hairs streaming in the wind, as, with uplifted hand and eyes upturned to heaven, he exclaimed: "Here, in the presence of this multitude, in the sight of heaven, I vow to know no party, and to devote myself to the good of the country, the whole country, and nothing but the country." And yet gentlemen wish the executive to be merely the representative of a party. That, sir, he will never be.

I should, sir, be glad to meet any gentleman on this floor who would undertake to assert that I have departed from any principle advocated by the white party during the late contest, but I shall forbear to canvass that matter here. It would imply that I held myself accountable to this house for my course, which I do not. But, sir, I have a constituency to whom I am responsible, both parties of which I am ready, any day, to defend. I shall, therefore, how to approach the independence of action, singleness of purpose, straightforwardness and liberality of sentiment. They, sir, know me, and on that knowledge I rely with unshaken and unwavering faith.

[A note appeared in the National Intelligencer of 25th September, from Mr. BORRIS, in which that gentleman denies that certain parts of the language employed by Mr. PROFFIT, in the foregoing speech, was uttered upon the floor of congress, but charges it as having been subsequently prepared by that gentleman in his closet. Mr. B. admits, in this note, that a part of his own speech as inserted in the last number of the Register, was not delivered upon the floor—for want of time.

In the Intelligencer of the 29th, Mr. PROFFIT replies to the foregoing note. He in like manner admits that his reported speech varied somewhat from the one delivered by him, but he disputes in regard to the part cited by Mr. BORRS.]

CHRONICLE.

AFRICANS OF THE AMISTAD. Those who have charge of the crew of the Amistad, now reduced to 35 in number, have appealed to the public to aid them with means to enable them to send them to Sierra Leone, and thence to their native land, Mendi, whither they have engaged two, and expect the services of two more missionaries to accompany them.

BANK TREAS. The National Intelligence states that the secretary of the treasury has selected the following banks as the agencies of the United States for the payment of the interest on the public debt: Bank of the Metropolis, Washington. The Merchants' bank, Boston. The Bank of Commerce, New York.

CHAMPAGNE WINE. The entire quantity of champagne fit for bottling, grown in 1840, according to the local journals of France, does not amount to more than 21,160,000 litres, (about 5,600,000 English gallons), although ten times this quantity is sold in France or sent abroad as genuine champagne!

LEWIS CORNELIUS, esq. one of the most remarkable of the human family for size, died on the 20th ult. at his residence, Miford, Pike county, Pa. in the 47th year of his age. Daniel Lambert, who is known as one of the wonders of the world, weighed only 19 pounds more than Mr. Cornelius did before his recent illness, during which he fell off from 720 to 655 lbs. Lambert weighed 739 lbs.

The dimensions of Mr. C. were as follows: Height 6 feet 2 to 3 inches; circumference round the waist 6 feet 2 in.; body 6 feet 2 in.; arm above elbow 2 feet 2 in.; below do. 1 foot 9 in.; wrist 1 foot 3 in.; thigh 4 feet 2 in.; calf of leg 2 feet 7 in.; ankle 1 foot 7 in.

COTTON. The receipts at New Orleans the week ending 18th ult., 9,000 bales, notwithstanding the prevalence of the malignant fever. At other ports the crop is running in.

The amount of the crop is estimated at 1,600,000 bales.

ELECTIONS. In Maryland our latest accounts leave no doubt of the election of F. THOMAS, the Van Buren candidate for governor; and the probability is that the house of delegates will stand 41 Van Buren, 37 whigs, and 1 tie (in Queen Anne's county).

EMBROIDERY. The French embroiderers very far exceed the English in that art; nothing can be more brilliant than to see the manufactures of the two countries, when exposed for sale in the London fabric shops; the French in many instances commanding more than six times the price of the English goods, principally from excellency of style and work. [Nottingham Review.]

EXCHANGE. New York bills on London have gone up to 9½d 00 cent. prem. in consequence of which considerable amounts of specie are now going out to meet the balance of trade.

New York on London 93; on France 5f 17½d; on Philadelphia 3½; on Baltimore 2½; Washington 2½; Richmond, Petersburg, Norfolk 3½; Raleigh 4; Charleston 1½; interior of S. C. 2½; Augusta 4; Macon 12½; Columbus 14; Savannah 2; Mobile 8½; New Orleans 3; St. Louis 9; Cincinnati 8½; Nashville 11; Illinois 10.

THE FORGER. Monroe Edwards alias Caldwell, who had recently practised so successfully upon the verbal of the banks and brokers to very large amounts, is supposed to be in custody, and undergoing examination before Judge Randall, Philadelphia. The governor of New York has served a requisition demanding him as a fugitive from justice. L. Tappan, of New York, has published an account of a very useful demonstration made by Edwards upon him, with the view of obtaining $5,000 to enable him, as a wealthy heir to a number of negroes in the south west, to complete their emancipation and removal from a slave state, to effect which he wished to go to England. Mr. Edwards had obtained a very small sum.

The New York Courier and Enquirer says: "In connection with this affair, several important arrests have been made in Philadelphia and elsewhere, the particulars of which have not yet been developed.—We regret to add that we learn from good authority that the accused is the son of the late Ninian Edwards, once governor of Illinois."

FIRES. The oil factory of the Staten Island Whaling company was burnt on the 30th ult. with $50,000 worth of oil.

The large saltinet factory belonging to the New England company, in Vernon, Connecticut, was destroyed by fire on Saturday evening, with all its contents. The loss is understood to be $50,000, on which there was insurance to the amount of $20,000.

FLOUR. Prices are quoted at Boston $6 50½ 75; New York $6 12½ 25; Baltimore $6 00½ 37½; New Orleans $6 50½ 00; Cincinnati $5 00.

A slight decline in prices has in some instances been submitted to.

The New York Express says: "The news from England has had an unfavorable effect on the flour market. All hope of any demand from England has died, consequently prices now rest on the supply and home demand. Six dollars is now about the standard price with very little prospect of any advance until the river closes.

The inspections of the last week in Baltimore consisted of 11,681 bbls. and 662 half bbls. Holders continue to ask $6 35 for city mills, $6 12½ for Susquehanna, and $6 for Howard-street.

LANGUAGE. It was stated by the secretary of the Irish society at its last meeting, that there are about 600,000 persons in Ireland who have no knowledge whatever of the English language, and about two millions more who have some knowledge of English, but whose vernacular is the Irish language. [Atlas.]

NEW ORLEANS. There were 52 deaths in the 24 hours ending on the 22d ult. of which 43 were of yellow fever.

Sept. 25th, 41, of which 31 by yellow fever. Total number of deaths during the week, 327, of which 239 were by yellow fever.

From the 25th to the 28th, 79 deaths by yellow fever occurred.

The virulence of the disease which has been prevalent here, to have yielded somewhat by the latest accounts.

GEN. EDWARD PAINE, one of the earliest settlers of northern Ohio, died at his residence in Painesville, on the 25th ultimo, at the advanced age of 96. Gen. Paine was one of the first to engage in our glorious revolutionary struggle. He led on the first company that broke ground on Dutchess heights, soon after which Gen. Gage evacuated Boston. He was stationed on Governor's island when the American army retreated out of New York, and his company covered the retreating army.

THE REV. EZRA RIPLEY, D. D. died on Tuesday the 20th ultimo, in Concord, Mass. aged 84 years.—He was born in Westfield, Connecticut, in 1757, graduated at Harvard university in 1776, and was a classmate with Gov. Gore, Judges Thatcher, Tyler and Sewell, and other distinguished worthies of the revolutionary period. He was ordained pastor of the Unitarian Congregational church in Concord, Nov. 9, 1777, and remained in that office until his death, in Massachusetts. He preached for the last time on the last anniversary of his birth.

RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT. On the 5th instant, on the rail road line just opened between Boston and Hudson, on the track from Westfield to Chester factories, and five miles from the former, the cars from the east came in contact with those from the west, both trains at the top of their speed, going at the rate of 30 or 40 miles an hour, and the passenger cars of both trains immediately behind the tenders, were shivered to pieces by the concussion.

The scene, is said to have been horrible beyond description, as the wounded were carried to the baggage cars to return to Westfield, covered with blood and groaning from pain. Some were so entangled in the wreckage of the cars, that they could only be extracted by using levers, and thereby raising the fragment which confined them. Some were literally dug out.

The number injured we have not ascertained—supposed to be 30 to 35. And of these two or three were killed, and many were mortally wounded. Some had limbs broken, six or eight were seriously wounded and the remainder were more or less hurt.

Lt. Mr. Warren, the conductor of the train from the west, is dead. Mr. Taylor, the engineer of that train, is badly wounded. A young lady, niece of Major Whistler, is said to be dangerously hurt.—Col. Harvey Chapin, is much bruised, but not dangerously hurt.

The Springfield correspondent of the Atlas, giving a hasty account of the disaster, says: "The rev. S. Elliott, an Episcopal clergyman from South Carolina, and family, left here this noon, were brought back to the United States hotel this evening in sad condition. The ladies were seriously hurt, but two sons, who were in the train, were unscathed and unharmed, and the other had his leg broken above the knee.

SPECIES is rapidly leaving us, if we are to judge by the amount which went from the port of New York last week. The packet Gladiator took out for London $230,000; the Alkbar for Canton 94 Liverpool, $250,000; the Great Western, for Liverpool, 271,310 dollars; and the Louis Philippe, for Havre, $316,000. Total, $1,097,310.

The Mediator, from New York to London, took $370,000, and the Chas. Carroll, for Havre, $192,000.

EPHRAIM SARGENT, one of the last survivors of the battle of Bunker's Hill, recently died at Ashford Court, near London, aged 94 years. A correspondent of the Albany Evening Journal says: "Years of toil and blood was the price of our freedom; and of the gallant men who achieved it, but few, but very few, are left among us. They have gone, and bequeathed to us the blood-bought treasure, and us, let me say, we will! A few yet longer linger, and their heads are whitened with the frosts of many winters, and their furrowed cheeks and old drooping forms speak to us with a silent eloquence. But a few short years, and all will have passed away—and even now, the host of that immortal band who stood on Bunker's bloody height has gone. There was sacrificed the first and the last of the bonds of tyranny; but of the thousand hearts that burned with all the ardor the spirit of liberty could inspire, the last is chilled to death."

STEAM SHIPS. The proprietors of the British steamers have entered into new contracts with the British government, whereby for the additional consideration of $2,000 per annum, they are to leave England and the United States once every week with the royal mail, this arrangement to commence in May. The price of passage from Halifax to Liverpool has been raised to £30, say $150.

The West India Steamboats.—The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company have contracted with the British government to supply not less than 14 steamers, of not less than 400 horse power each, and four others of smaller dimensions. Seven of them are built in England and seven in Scotland. They are named after the rivers Forth, Tweed, Trent, Clyde, Meridina, Avon, Thames, Deer, Tyne, Shannon, Trent, Meridina, and Tyne. They are all built with stoves, dining saloon below deck and single cabins—1,400 tons burthen and engines of 450 horse power. The Forth is the first one completed, and was to leave England on the 1st of October.

The British Queen steamer was lying below Liverpool, in Dutch colors flying on the 4th ult. purchased by the B-ign government to run between Belgium and New York. On the 9th September she arrived at Antwerp.

STOCKS. A depression in prices has occurred within the last ten days of from 1 to 2 per cent in most of the stocks. In New York, Indiana bonds 43; Ohio 35s 9; Kentucky 35s 8½; Illinois 35s 46½; of Dutch colors flying on the 4th ult. purchased by the B-ign government to run between Belgium and New York. On the 9th September she arrived at Antwerp.

SUGAR FROM CANN STALKS. An enterprising citizen of Delaware has discovered and patented a method of making sugar from the ordinary corn stalk, which is said to promise most important results. He exhibited a specimen of his manufacture at the late agricultural exhibition of New Castle county.

TEA. 19,981,476 pounds have been imported into the United States from China during the last year, the official value of which is set down at $5,417,589. The New York Courier says:—"The sale of tea Tuesday, per Eben Peble, was well attended, and the competition was animated. The country young hyson sold at from 3 to 4 cents advance per pound on the last sale. Canton made was withdrawn after supplying the bids at 42 cents."

TEMPERANCE REFORM. The Limerick Chronicle says: "Father Mathew administered the pledge to thirty-six thousand persons at Monaghan on St. Patrick's day, and to ten thousand at Colgher on the following day. A Carriknacross he was employed three days to administer the pledge to sixty thousand persons, when Lord and Lady Louisa attended."

LIEUT. COL. R. D. WAINWRIGHT, of the marine corps, The Washington correspondent of the Star writes on the 6th inst. "The melancholy duty again devolves upon me to announce the sudden disease of another gallant officer! Lieutenant colonel R. D. Wainwright, of the marine corps, was yesterday seen on our avenue, conversing with his friends, in the usual health of his company, and engaged in at his dwelling last evening in the usual cheerfulness and urbanity; but, a few minutes after he had retired to his chamber, he was found a lifeless corpse having expired apparently without a struggle or a groan, occasioned, as is presumed, by a disease of the heart."

Colonel Wainwright was born in South Carolina, in June, 1783; entered the service of his country on the 9th of May, 1800; brevetted as lieutenant colonel on the 3rd of March, 1837; and appointed lieutenant colonel on the 1st of July, 1834, and at the period of his decease was superintendent of the recruiting service for this station."

WHEAT at New York, 1,600 bush. Genessee brought $1 35 on the 6th instant; at Baltimore $1 20½ 1 30.

NEWS' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 7.—VOL. XL]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 16, 1911.

[VOL. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,568.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 7, VOL. 11.

FOREIGN ARTICLES—France, census instruction; China, British fleet approaching Canton; South America, interesting account of the interior of the Mosquito chief of Honduras; drought in California; West India, British views on Cuba; Texas, good news for fruit-brokers.

NATURAL ARTICLES—Appointments by the president; President Tyler's cabinet as completed; extracts relative to its members; customs recognised; large importations; Mexican commercial regulations; cotton crop and trade; Lake trader; Santa Fe riders.

GENERAL ARTICLES—Gnomes released by the authorities of Canada. ARMY—General orders No. 59 and 60; various movements of troops; operations in Florida and progress of the war.

NAVY—Revenue cutter service, home squadron, four commodores at Norfolk, brig Consort, a Gudgey channel in the Delaware bay, Pacific squadron, brig Jefferson, French squadron leaves the Chesapeake, the Kamechatka Russian steamer leaves New York, exploring expedition.

STATES OF THE UNION—Maine, ship building; Massachusetts, western rail road, transatlantic, rail road account Rhode Island, election of Nicholas Brown; Connecticut, thanksgiving; New York, Universalist convention, Atlantic basin docks, newly discovered salt spring, general Protestant Episcopal convention, rail road at auction; New Jersey, college, election; Pennsylvania, election; Maryland, election, conventions, tide water canal trade; Virginia, Belleville burns, North Carolina, death of Gov. Owen; Georgia, election; Louisiana, election; Wisconsin, election; Tennessee, election.

TRANS-ATLANTIC—ALEXANDER M. LEON. POLITICS—Letter from Senator Tallmadge; Mr. Cushing's address to his constituents. CHRONICLE.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

FRANCE.

The Monitor announces that a sedicious movement, of which the arrests which took place at Clermont Ferrand on the 10th, were for some time emissaries of the anarchical parties were laboring to excite the population to revolt. They succeeded in their ends on the 9th, when the factious erected several barricades, which were carried and destroyed by the troops. On the 10th the disorders continued. Late in the evening a column of troops traversed the streets, committing acts of violence. They then attacked the armed force, killed 3 soldiers, and wounded 15 or 16. The insurgents, on their side, had several killed and wounded. The mail arrived in Paris on Sunday morning, and although it passed through Clermont at 10 o'clock, P. M. it brought no letters from that town. According to the statement of the guard the people was burning the gates, and the fighting continued. Orders were immediately forwarded from Paris to march a considerable force to Clermont.

A telegraphic despatch from Toulon, dated 11th, at 9 o'clock, P. M. and addressed by the prefect of Puy de Dôme to the minister of the interior, announces that tranquillity prevailed during the whole of that day, that patrols had not ceased to parade the town and the neighborhood, and that they had nowhere met with resistance.

CHINA.

The ship Lowell arrived at New York from Canton, whence she sailed on the 29th May. On the 20th the entire English fleet, consisting of twenty sail of ships and transports, were passing up Canton river, for the purpose of destroying Canton. And the guard ship, being at Angier, received orders to join the fleet immediately. We shall probably have an account of the fate of the doomed city by the next arrival.

SOUTH AMERICA.

INTERESTING FACTS. The following communication was read before the Academy of Natural Sciences, on Tuesday evening last, by J. B. Quinby, corresponding member. [Phil. Nat. Gazette.]

The following paragraph is now going the rounds of the newspapers:

"It was reported in Chili that the jewels of the Temple of the Sun, which at the time of the conquest of Peru, the natives had concealed from the Spaniards, have lately been recovered near the Cerro de Pasco, in Peru; the value of them has been calculated at $100,000,000 dollars."

Vol. XI.—Str. 7.

The palace of the Inca and the Temple of the Sun here referred to, we presume to be Huanoico Viejo, which is situated on the east side of the Andes, 20 leagues north of the Cerro de Pasco, on the right bank of the river Chuacabamba, one of the head branches of the Amazon (or Marañon) at an elevation of about fourteen thousand feet above the level of the ocean, —latitude 10° south, and longitude 74° west, nearly. It is known that when Pizarro, now more than three centuries ago, took the Temple of the Sun, at Cuzco, which is some twelve degrees south of that at Huanoico Viejo, and despoiled the Inca of his immense treasures of gold, and, finally, when threats could not be more, put him miserably to death, —the Inca of Huanoico Viejo, advised of what had taken place at Cuzco, secreted the jewels of the Temple and the gold of his palace in the fastnesses of the Andes and the neighboring rivers and lakes. —Avarice and ambition have since these hidden treasures brought out of concealment from the hands of Pizarro to the present time. But as yet no clue has been found to this El Dorado, unless the above announcement is well founded, which we are inclined to doubt.

The writer has been five different times at these magnificent ruins, and always found many persons employed in their vicinity searching for the hidden treasures of the Incas. The whole of the province of Huanoico, for a number of leagues above and below the Temple of the Sun, is arid, and the inhabitants of the province of Huanoico through which it passes, obtain by washing the sand, and by means of sheep skins, two or three hundred thousand dollars annually. The wool on the skins is cut out and it is about half an inch in length, the skins are then staked out on the sand, and the sheep are then staked out with the wool side up by means of loose stones placed on them, in and below the various falls and rapids, in which position they are suffered to remain from six to twenty-four hours; they are then carefully raised out of the water, turned wool side down into a balde (bowl) of water, and are again staked out, and the wool falling from the wool of the skin, and it is finally collected from the bottom of the balde. Sheep were unknown to the Incas, and as they had obtained an immense amount of gold from this pacloen stream it is presumed that they used the skins of the llama, (camelus lacinia of L.) and those of the vicuña (camelus peruanus or vicuña of L.).

When we reflect on the fact that the Indians and Spaniards have obtained by their rude washings on this river during two or three centuries, one, two and three hundred thousand dollars of gold annually, and that they have not probably secured the one hundredth part of the amount that has passed down the current of the stream, we may form an imperfect idea of the exhaustless source of this perennial supply. The stupendous Andes are alone capable of furnishing such countless riches.

We shall not attempt a description of the magnificent Temple of the Sun at Huanoico Viejo; its powerful fortress, and the ruins of the great city which they overlook. When, and by whom they were built, neither history nor tradition informs us. The ruins are in such a language and we are left to conjecture. But their great magnitude and massive walls, composed of huge blocks of square, oblong and elegantly wrought marble, greenstone, and greenstone porphyry, weighing many tons, bear mute but eloquent testimony to the untiring industry of the Incas and their advances in the arts of civilization. —The ruins are in such a language and we are left to conjecture. But their great magnitude and massive walls, composed of huge blocks of square, oblong and elegantly wrought marble, greenstone, and greenstone porphyry, weighing many tons, bear mute but eloquent testimony to the untiring industry of the Incas and their advances in the arts of civilization. —

The ruins are in such a language and we are left to conjecture. But their great magnitude and massive walls, composed of huge blocks of square, oblong and elegantly wrought marble, greenstone, and greenstone porphyry, weighing many tons, bear mute but eloquent testimony to the untiring industry of the Incas and their advances in the arts of civilization. —The ruins are in such a language and we are left to conjecture. But their great magnitude and massive walls, composed of huge blocks of square, oblong and elegantly wrought marble, greenstone, and greenstone porphyry, weighing many tons, bear mute but eloquent testimony to the untiring industry of the Incas and their advances in the arts of civilization. —The ruins are in such a language and we are left to conjecture. But their great magnitude and massive walls, composed of huge blocks of square, oblong and elegantly wrought marble, greenstone, and greenstone porphyry, weighing many tons, bear mute but eloquent testimony to the untiring industry of the Incas and their advances in the arts of civilization. —

These ruins are almost as perfect as they were when Pizarro conquered Peru. Even the great earthquake which destroyed the city of Callao built by the Spaniards, with its thirty thousand inhabitants, did not throw down the massive walls of the Temple of the Sun, and the writer can testify that they withstood, with but slight injury, the great earthquake of 30th March, 1828. The Seraglio and its various compartments, with the exception of the roof, the voluptuous boudoirs of a numerous train of wives, cut out of massive rocks, as almost as entire as they were on the landing of Pizarro.

There is here any location on the whole range of the Andes more sublime than all others, it is at the base of the peak of Raura, in sight of this temple. The writer has crossed the Andes from side to side twenty-four times, at seven or eight different passes, twice from Naranjal on the gulf of Guayaquil, 11

deg. S. of the equator, to the city of Cuenca, the capital of the province of Azuay, a little south of Chimborazo, and having spent more than two weeks at the foot of the peak of Raura, at least one thousand feet above the line of perpetual snow he has no hesitation in saying that it is incomparable, the most sublime spot ever visited by the human eye. Besides the peak of Raura, which we believe to be at least as high as Chimborazo, there are innumerable smaller ones rising on the range of the Cordilleras to the north and south, having their bases resting in the perpetual snow, and throwing up their snow clad apices thousands of feet into the pure and attenuated air, almost out of the reach of the eye and above the nutting wing of the immense Condor or South American eagle. The largest and nearest of these peaks is that of Nueva Potosi, the base of which approaches within a league of that of Raura, and is but little inferior in height and magnitude to Raura itself. The intervening space between these two peaks is occupied by the lake of Nueva Potosi, the surface of which is almost five hundred feet above the lower limit of perpetual snow; and as this line, within the tropics, is known to be about fifteen thousand five hundred feet above the level of the ocean, the surface of this lake must be sixteen thousand feet high. It is completely embosomed by a ridge of the Andes on the west, another on the east, the base of Raura on the north, and that of Nueva Potosi on the south. Its copious waters find a subterranean channel through a high western limestone ridge, and break out at the western side of the Andes, at a point where the mountain is very nearly vertical, and form a magnificent cascade of many hundred feet in height, falling into a lake of several leagues in circumference. A short distance to the northwest of this cascade, there is a large cerro (hill) of yaso (gypsum or sulphate of lime). The lake of Nueva Potosi is the source of the river Huancabamba, it makes its way down the sides of the Andes in very nearly a westerly direction, and falls into the Pacific ocean at Huachol, the famous salinas of the western coast, which supply the greater portion of the southern hemisphere with salt.

On the northeast of the base of the peak of Raura is the lake of the same name, one league north of the lake just described, and from which it is separated by a high trap dyke and amygdaloid. This lake, which is about one hundred and fifty miles from the Pacific, is little higher than that of Nueva Potosi, and has an open outlet to the east down a craggy precipice of several hundred feet in height. It forms the head of the river Chuacabamba, one of the principal branches of the Amazon, and probably it is the highest and most distant source of that great river. The waters of this lake traverse the continent of South America, from west to east, at its widest expanse, almost from the margin of the Pacific to the Atlantic, a distance of nearly ten thousand miles. Both of these lakes are the receptacles of avalanches from the peaks of their respective names. No less than two were precipitated into the lake of Raura whilst I was encamped on the snow in its vicinity. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time I was in the rear of a small hill; knowing what was taking place, I hastened as rapidly as I could to its summit, which commanded a view of the lake and its outlet, a distance of not less than five miles. The first occurred at midnight, and which, from the great noise and darkness, I mistook for a volcanic eruption, and mistook for an earthquake. The second took place at 10 o'clock in the morning. At the time

CENTRAL AMERICA.

It will be remembered that their was a report not long since that a chief of the Mosquito tribe of Indians had died and in his will left his dominions to Queen Victoria. We learn now from the New York Herald, by a vessel just arrived that "the king of the Mosquitoes, chief of a tribe of Indians, who inhabit a part of the province of Honduras, arrived at San Juan on the 15th of August, in company with the governor of Belize, in an English school of war, and laid claim to that port. The Central Americans were ordered to leave by the first of next March. His Mosquito majesty, with his English allies, then proceeded to Bocorero and ordered the Indians to leave by the same time. The commandant of San Juan had been sent to Belize to be tried for piracy.

The Herald adds: "It is reported by Captain Roberts, that the Americans, at San Juan, are almost daily insulted, and what is still worse, a high handed outrage has been committed at that dangerous place, on this city." We have received a full account of this outrage, and it calls loudly upon our government for instant redress."

CALIFORNIA.

DRUGHT AND FAMINE. The Boston Daily Advertiser says: "A letter from an intelligent gentleman states that the country was in a most deplorable condition, there having been no rains for a period of 13 months. No bread stuffs had been raised, and the cattle, in which consists the chief wealth of the country, were suffering greatly."

WEST INDIES.

ISLAND OF CUBA. A commercial gentleman, who has spent some weeks in Havana, informs his correspondent in this city, that he has become satisfied, from information he has obtained in the best quarters, that England is negotiating with Spain for a cession of Cuba. Some of the steps he has learned the British government have taken in the matter he states thus:—"The English demand the liberation of all the negroes introduced here since the treaty of 1830, as being called for by the spirit of that document. The government at Madrid referred the question to the governor here, who called a junta of rich people—they answered (with one exception) we cannot allow it. Now, England has said it must be done; if the regent of Spain says to Cuba de it, and the people of Cuba persist in saying no, the result will be the result of the question. A proud Spaniard asked me the other day, if I thought that the United States would accept of the Island? I answered, I believe the Island would be received, but you must first achieve your own independence—then she will acknowledge you, and take you as an partner. But the grand question is will Uncle Sam allow Bully Bull to take possession here, even if old Spain consents? If he does, adieu to peace—our southern institutions will at least be jeopardized, and a valuable trade closed against us."

[N. O. Bulletin.]

TEXAS.

TEXAS FUNDS. The New York Post says: "We are gratified at being able to state for the information of those interested in Texas funds, that a letter has been received in this city from General Hamilton, announcing the agreeable intelligence of his intention to leave Europe for this country early this month, bringing with him the proceeds of the Texas loan in gold. This will be good news to the holders of Texas bonds and treasury notes, and we anticipate a speedy advance in their prices."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Samuel D. Spencer, of New York, to be secretary for the department of war.

William B. Hodgson, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States for the city and kingdom of Tunis.

Francis J. Grund, to be consul of the United States for the port of Bremen.

Samuel D. Hoop, transferred from the consulate of the United States at Tunis, to be dragoman to the legation of the United States at the sublime port.

F. L. Cushman, of New York, to be consul of the United States for the city of Lima, in Peru, in the place of Edwin Bartlett, resigned.

John H. Preble, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States for the port of Campeche, in Mexico, in the place of John Lewis McGregor, deceased.

Samuel J. Douglas, to be judge of the United States for the middle district of Florida.

J. Washington Tyson, of Pennsylvania, has been appointed commissioner of purchases, vice Irvine deceased. John C. Watkinson, to be surveyor of the customs, at Philadelphia.

PRESIDENT TYLER'S CABINET AS NOW COMPLETED.

Secretary of state, DANIEL WEBSTER, of Mass.
Secretary of the treasury, WALTER FORWARD, of Pa.
Secretary of war, JOHN C. SPENCER, of New York.
Attorney general, ADAM P. VESUTI, of Virginia.
Attorney general, HUGH S. LEGARE, of S. Carolina.
Postmaster general, CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, of Ky.

Judge UPSHUR reached the seat of government on the 11th and assumed the duties of SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

JOHN C. SPENCER, ESQ. reached the seat of government on the 11th, and assumed the duties of SECRETARY OF WAR. On the following day the military dress was put upon him in full uniform. Afterward they paid the same respect to the chief of the navy department.

CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, ESQ. who has accepted the appointment of postmaster general, reached Washington city on the 11th inst. for the purpose of assuming the duties of the station.

Mr. Webster secretary of state, is on a visit to Boston.

President Tyler's cabinet is now complete. The MADISONIAN observes. "We have a cabinet that recognizes the president as their chief, and upon whose good faith, unity of action, and attachment to the constitution, the people may confidently rely. The members of the cabinet were advocates of the reform of 1840, and with one exception only, supporters of the principles upon which Gen. Jackson came into power in 1829."

CONSUL. The president has officially recognized THOMAS BARRETT, as consul of his holiness the Pope, for the port of New Orleans.

THE NEW CABINET.

From the New York Tribune.

The opinions and character of the men whom President Tyler has called around him as advisers have become the subject of universal inquiry and interest.

WALTER FORWARD, secretary of the treasury. Mr. Forward is a citizen of Pittsburgh, Pa. Our first knowledge of him was as a democratic member of congress from his district in 1824, and an ardent champion of the American system. He united in the caucus nomination of Mr. Crawford for president but afterward recanted, when the Jackson whirlwind swept across the country and he was elected. He abandoned General Jackson when it became evident that he was identified with the enemies of the protection of home industry. He has since been mainly out of public life, but known as a national republican or Clay whig, in contradistinction from the anti-nations, who bear sway in the construction of the tariff. In 1836 he was chosen a member of the constitutional convention of Pennsylvania, and distinguished himself in the deliberations of that body. But he has not for many years been active in politics till last season, when he took the stump for Harrison and Tyler in western Pennsylvania with great efficiency. His high personal character and reputation for independence gave him great weight. When General Harrison became president, he made Mr. Forward attorney for western Pennsylvania which he declined; then first comptroller of the treasury, which he accepted, and has since discharged the duties of that office. He is well qualified for the station to which he has been called.

From the Madisonian.

HEN. WALTER FORWARD. The recent promotion of the hon. Walter Forward, to the head of the treasury department of the United States, by President Tyler, furnishes a happy illustration of the agency of native talent, integrity, industry and perseverance, in receiving the high honors of the republic. Mr. Forward has been literally the architect of his own fortune. He is a native of Hartford county, Connecticut, and, in his younger days, he left his native state, "Alike unknown to fortune and to fame."

Having removed to Pennsylvania, he established himself at Pittsburgh, as a lawyer, and soon rose, by his own personal merits, to an enviable rank, at the bar of the western section of that state. In 1823, he was elected a member of congress, and in the next few years he was an assiduous and faithful representative from the Keystone commonwealth. As a member of the committee on manufactures, and, subsequently, as chairman of that committee, he exercised a commanding influence over that important branch of the business of legislation, and proved himself to be a wise and judicious member of congress.

On his retirement from his seat in congress, he returned to the practice of his profession. But his qualifications for the public service were too commanding to escape the attention of the party which prevailed at the election of 1840, and, at the commencement of the administration of President Harrison, he was appointed comptroller of the treasury. In this station he discharged his laborious and complicated duties so much to the satisfaction of President Tyler, that on the retirement of Mr. Ewing, he was elevated to the distinguished office of secretary of the treasury of the United States, which he now fills, with the approbation of the people, and to the entire satisfaction of his colleagues.

Mr. Forward is dignified in deportment, conciliatory in manners, methodical in business, of industrious habits, and entirely devoted to his arduous duties. He has had occasion to bestow much attention to political economy, and fiscal affairs, and, as a practical financier, he is probably surpassed by no man in the service of the government. Nor is there, perhaps, any man in the union more familiar, from practical experience, with the resources and wants of the country, in regard to the complicated system of national revenue. He is emphatically a man of details, and has made himself deeply acquainted with the incidental and remote tendencies of graduating duties and imposts on the multifarious articles of consumption, in respect to affording due protection to articles of domestic manufacture, and imposing appropriate burdens on articles of mere luxury.

Thus, after all, constitutes the great secret of financing, on a national scale, which has been so much the study and desideratum of the statesman of modern times. While, therefore, the advocates of American industry will find in Mr. Forward an enlightened and discreet friend, the nation at large will go with him, heart and soul, in all just recommendations, for deriving a suitable proportion of the revenue, from articles of mere luxury. In the selection, then, of Mr. Forward, to preside over the intricate and complicated affairs of the treasury department—extending its ramifications from the centre to the remote extremities of the republic—comprehending every species of revenue, and involving in its vortex interests connected with each and every branch of industry and commerce—President Tyler has afforded another signal instance of devotion to the best interests of the country. In fine, Mr. Forward has every qualification for his office, and bids fair to become as useful as any one of his predecessors.

From the Baltimore Patriot.

HONORABLE WALTER FORWARD. The Pittsburg Advocate pays a high compliment to the secretary of the treasury. It says: "We are disposed to look upon the appointment of this gentleman to the important station of secretary of the treasury as an auspicious omen. The moderation of his character, high moral worth and great abilities, are a guarantee that he will discharge his duties with impartiality and faithfully discharged; while to the northern and middle sections of it his known predilections in favor of the protection of domestic industry, will render it peculiarly acceptable."

From the Charleston Courier.

MR. LEGARE. The appointment of Mr. Legare, considered simply in reference to his fitness for the office, must please the country without distinction of party.

His selection to all Carolinians, to be a confidential adviser of the president, justifies the opinion which many citizens of the state have entertained of him; the president must have been guided by the estimate of public opinion.

Politically regarded, the appointment of Mr. Legare by Mr. Tyler, is the broadest possible intimation, that the president seeks nothing, and expects nothing from, and will yield nothing to Mr. Legare. The victor has not been a victor, and Mr. Legare, the routed, and the persecuted, is the responsible organ of his native state, in the councils of the administration.

From the Newark Advertiser.

The attorney general, Hugh S. Legare, is among the most accomplished members of our age—a well educated, a brave, a statesman and jurist. He comes from one of the old Huguenot families that emigrated to South Carolina more than a century ago. Being an able opponent of nullification, General Jackson made him charge to Belgium, and on his return in 1836, he was sent to congress from Charleston, where he was a distinguished member. He parted with the late Vice President, on the sub-treasury question and distinguished himself by his manly and eloquent speeches against it—knowing of course they must forfeit him his seat. His literary contribution to the Southern and New York Review, have given him at least a place among the best of the day.

From the New York Tribune.

HUGH S. LEGARE, attorney general. Mr. Legare is a citizen of Charleston, S. C. and we believe a descendant of one of the old French Huguenot families which settled there over a century ago. He became eminent by his writings in the "Southern Review," a quarterly published at Charleston some years since. He was appointed charge to Belgium, by General Jackson being a warm "union" man as opposed to nullification. He returned to Charleston in 1836-7, and was soon after proposed for elected and elected, turning out hon. L. L. Pinckney (nullifier) on a medley of political and local issues. Mr. L. went to congress in 1837 as an administration man, but he took no part in the tariff measure proposed by Mr. A. Buren, he took ground against it in a profound and masterly speech, as also in a powerful "letter to a constituent." For his course he was thrown out of congress at the next election—Charleston being the strongest sub-treasury city in the union—but he abated nothing of his warfare upon the sub-treasury project, speaking luminously at our conservative state convention last October and repeatedly in this city and elsewhere. He has recently contributed several masterly articles on classical literature to the New York Review.

From the Lexington, (Ky.) Observer.

Governor Wickliffe. We regret to observe that the Washington correspondent of the Louisville Journal and perhaps other papers, attribute this appointment to governor Wickliffe, supposed hostility to Mr. Clay—a motive equally disparaging to Mr. Tyler and to governor Wickliffe. Those who are in the least acquainted with the political history of our country know that the president and the master general served together many years in congress, and that the most intimate relations, both personal and political, subsisted between them. The admirable system, indomitable industry, and superior ability displayed by governor Wickliffe, and various statements which he has lately readily pointed out to us in every way admirably qualified to discharge the duties of the high station to which he has been called. We do not feel disposed to draw any invidious comparisons between Governor Wickliffe and any other gentleman, but we confidently believe that his appointment is the result of a most judicious selection. Kentucky, and predict that, under his administration, the post office department will be conducted with method, economy and to the satisfaction of the nation.

From the Frankfort, (Ky.) Commonwealth.

The president, in the formation of his cabinet, has conferred the office of postmaster general upon the hon. CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, and the appointment has been confirmed by the senate. It is understood here that Mr. WICKLIFFE will accept the office, and that he will enter upon the discharge of its duties as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements for resigning his present position. Mr. WICKLIFFE is eminently qualified for the office of postmaster general, uniting as he does to talents of the first order, great experience in the management of public affairs, both state and national, and an unerring industry. As chief magistrate of Kentucky, he gave great satisfaction by the ability and vigor of his administration, and we doubt not but that, when ever opportunity offers, he will still do all that he can to promote the interests and welfare of the state.

From the New York Courier and Enquirer.

MR. JOHN C. SPENCER.—The translation of this gentleman from the office of secretary of state of the state of New York, to the head of the war department, is one of those events which is well calculated to arrest public attention, and cause inquiry into the principles and motives which influence the conduct of prominent politicians. We said some months since that experience had taught us, that all our prominent politicians, if not corrupt, were at least time serving and venal. Every man who is experienced enough to confirm us in this conviction; and the sooner we see people arrive at the same conclusion the better it will be for the country, because a correct knowledge of our public men, is certain to change the character of our political contests, and render "principles, not men," the great object of our struggles.

When Mr. Tyler resigned upon his second veto, and that too, upon a bill which had been got up under his own supervision and at his personal request through DANIEL WEBSTER, his secretary of state,—public opinion was unanimous in his condemnation, and every person who pretended to think upon the subject, were ready to condemn him. It is now declared that the executive of the nation has proved himself false to his political friends, false to his country, false to his own reputation, and at the same time, guilty of the grossest deception to the members of his cabinet and the resolutions of the whig party in congress.

Four of the members of his cabinet retired in disgust, leaving the men of honor and honor who had no longer held office under one who had proved himself so utterly regardless of the most solemn pledges; and a fifth, Mr. GRANGER, also tendered his resignation, which was accepted, because his friends were of opinion, the honor of the empire state required that he should refuse to hold office under one who had thus treated with contempt the will of the people, and the reasonable expectations of those who had elected him to office, at the same time that he had proved himself wanting in that regard for his word, without which no man can claim to be the associate of gentlemen. Next came a manifesto from the whig members of congress, appealing to the people against the president; and this important document was responded to by a reply by a democratic member of congress, which call it was generally understood at the time, and is now admitted to have been written by JOHN C. SPENCER.

We give that portion of the document setting forth the cause for this rally against the executive. It is addressed to the whigs of the state of New York, and in these words:

"An eventful crisis has occurred in our political affairs. The individual elected to the second office in the general government, by the votes of the democratic whig party, and by an insupportable dispensation of Providence, called to fill the place which for the lauded HARRISON was designed, is declared by the representatives in congress of our party, to have forfeited their confidence, and to have 'voluntarily separated himself from those by whose exertions and suffrages he was elevated to that office through which he has reached his present exalted station.' He is represented to have withdrawn his confidence from all the members of his cabinet, and from the members of a cabinet selected by his predecessor, approved by the unanimous voice of the democratic whigs of the union, and invited by him to continue his chosen counselors; and to have trusted and been guided by those who have been distinguished as the ablest oppositors to any measure in which we have no long contended, and which have received his own sanction.

"We are informed from the same source, that he has capriciously exercised that last remnant of kingly power left in our constitution, the executive veto, against the unadvised expression of public opinion, through the legislative body, in relation to the re-organization of the treasury. And we now learn that what may be deemed the first step of conciliation towards his and our political antagonists has been taken by the appointment to one of the most important posts in the treasury department, of a decided adherent to Mr. Van Buren, and who, for that cause only, had but just been removed from the office."

Here are four distinct charges upon which Mr. SPENCER places the necessity for a state convention to rally the whig party against the president; and all save the last, which was based on an event that had not taken place, and which in itself was very immaterial, and of no great force. How then, it is every where asked, can Mr. TYLER offend, and Mr. SPENCER accept of a place in the new cabinet? This is a question which Mr. SPENCER is far more capable of answering than we are, and as we are so thick headed as not to be able to perceive how it is presumed that he can resign his place with honor, it is to be wished that he (Mr. C. S.) can answer it in a manner perfectly satisfactory. We hope so, because as at present advised, we look at his position as a very awkward one.

The New York Courier and Enquirer, nevertheless, thus testifies as to the new secretary.

"To those at a distance who do not know Mr. SPENCER, and to our many friends, who very naturally feel a deep interest in the character of the person placed at the head of the war department, we deem it proper to say, that Mr. JOHN C. SPENCER is a gentleman who as a man of talents and a lawyer, has no superior in New York, and but few equals in the nation. We believe him to be quite as honest as any other politician of the country. We are not disposed to say that he knew him to be the most laborious and indefatigable business man in the union,—aye, in the nation. With power of mind fully qualifying him for any position, he possesses ability to labor for the mere love of labor, such as has rarely if ever been seen in the political world. At Albany or Washington, he will not only discharge promptly all the duties of his office and the duties of most of the clerks under him, but he will insist that the duties of all the other departments be discharged with equal promptness, or enter upon their discharge himself. He is no respecter of persons, and the president and DANIEL WEBSTER and the finger of accusation, as well as their departments as well as his own, if they do not do better, and a little more than any executive or secretary of state ever did before.

Such is JOHN C. SPENCER; and although a somewhat impracticable politician, he is admirably calculated to do the duties of the office of war department, and for the duties of the office of war department, there can be no doubt his selection will prove highly beneficial to the interests of the department over which he is called to preside.

From the Madisonian.

JUDGE A. P. UPSHUR. Among the names transmitted by the president to the senate, was that of ABEL P. UPSHUR, of Virginia, for secretary of the navy. As Mr. Upshur has never been in congress, his name is not familiar to a large portion of the nation. In this respect he stands in the rear of many others of far inferior capacity. As he has been invited to take a seat in the cabinet of President Tyler, your readers will be interested to know something of his character and public career. He is not unknown to fame, however, in his own section, and in his country, and few equals in his state. He has for several years a distinguished member of the house of delegates, and took a prominent and leading part in the legislation of the times.

Judge Upshur is a distinguished justice of the high court of appeals of his native state. He was a pupil of the late Mr. Wirt, was for several years engaged in an extensive practice, and soon rose to the first rank in his profession. As a well-read lawyer and an able advocate, he had no superior, and few equals in his state. He has for several years a distinguished member of the house of delegates, and took a prominent and leading part in the legislation of the times.

In the memorable convention which assembled at Richmond in 1823, for the formation of a new constitution for Virginia, Judge Upshur was a prominent member. In that convention were comprehended the leading statesmen of the Old Dominion, including Madison, Monroe, John Marshall, John Tyler, J. W. P. Barbour, John Randolph, Benjamin Watkins Leigh, and others. James Monroe was president of the convention, and Judge Upshur was one of the members of its deliberations, Philip P. Barbour was chosen in his place. All the master-spirits of Virginia were there, and a more able assemblage of worthies was never convened in the Old Dominion. It was on that occasion that the qualities of Mr. Upshur as a statesman of enlarged and comprehensive views were fully displayed.

Amid the conflicting plans for the basis and outline of a constitution, Mr. Upshur had the distinguished honor of presenting the project, which was finally adopted, and in consequence of the profound wisdom displayed in conceiving the plan, and the ability and eloquence exerted in maturing, illustrating, and urging it to the satisfaction of those present, Mr. Madison, Mr. Marshall, and Mr. Tyler, united in a most memorable declaration that he was the ablest member of the convention. Such a compliment, coming from such high authority, would not have been bestowed at random, and could not have been a matter of indifference to any one, even though he had enjoyed the highest honors of his country. Judge Upshur is one of Mr. Upshur's own age,—then comparatively a young man—it was a distinction worthy of the most elevated ambition, and calculated to confer lasting honor. His efforts on that occasion, and the estimation in which they were held, gave him a rank among the most accomplished statesmen of the south.

In the character of a judge, his official labors have been limited to the unobtrusive discharge of judicial functions. The spotless ermine never rested on a more pure and upright judge. On the bench, he has redeemed the just expectations of the people, by the learning, ability, impartiality, and dignified manner, in which he has fulfilled the duties of his office. To talents of the first order,—to extensive and varied learning, and long experience, as a lawyer and judge—as a legislator and statesman of enlarged views—he unites industry and method in the application of a powerful intellect to the details of business. Few men possess so clear and comprehensive a mind, coupled with the native calmness, to enforce his conclusions on the minds of others, and it was the remark of a distinguished southern statesman, familiar with the character of both,—that he knew of no man in the union better calculated than Judge Upshur, to compete with the gigantic intellect of Daniel Webster, on any important subject.

Judge Upshur is an accomplished gentleman of the Virginia school, and in all the social relations of public and private life, he is dignified in manners, conciliatory in deportment, and accessible to friends, to neighbors, and to all others in the common intercourse of business.

On the death of the late Judge Barbour, Judge Upshur was spoken of as his successor, and it would have been in the highest degree satisfactory to the people of Virginia, to have seen him translated to the vacant seat on the bench of the supreme court of the United States. But other counsels prevailed, and the judicial department of the state was thus precluded from the services of one who was qualified to become one of its brightest ornaments.

It has been said that Judge Upshur has never been in congress, and is not extensively known beyond the limits of the Old Dominion. This is but a negative objection, and does not detract from his personal merits. A similar objection was made a few months ago to Mr. Badger, and when he was nominated by Gen. Harrison, as secretary of the navy, he was but little known out of North Carolina, and we heard the question propounded by more than one member of Congress, "What would L. B. Webster do?" The answer was, "He would do what he pleased." He accepted office, and is now universally acknowledged to have been an able and efficient head of the department. Those who know Judge U. best, are as ready to vouch for his qualifications, for any post that may be assigned to him.

From the National Intelligencer.

Of all the gentlemen appointed to fill the vacancies in the cabinet, except one, we have some personal knowledge; and, whilst we may doubt whether they are all the best selections that could be made for the stations they are respectively assigned to, we have no hesitation in saying that the appointments are upon the whole better than could have been expected. They are all gentlemen of honorable repute, of intelligence, and, we believe, of business habits.

From the Alexandria Gazette.

Of those gentlemen, it may be said, generally, that they are able and intelligent statesmen. Mr. Forward is an ardent whig; Mr. Upshur is a decided anti-reconstructionist; Mr. Legare is a distinguished whig conservative; and Mr. Wickliffe is a decided whig. The last cabinet, we consider, was the ablest and best that the country has had for many years.—We sincerely hope that the new one will devote itself to the welfare of the nation, and the great principles of retrenchment. Mr. Legare is the people had down as their will, at the election last November.

From the New York Times.

The gratitude of the republican party will accompany the late members of the cabinet in their retirement. They have performed their duty to the country worthily and well, and the great principles of democratic republicanism shall be squared by the to it command our unequalled respect. Their successors, are men of ability and integrity; and well qualified, we most not, as any who could have been selected to discharge the high trusts confided to them. We shall support them to the best of our ability, so long as their policy shall be squared by the democratic republican principles and precedents.—We go for measures, and not for men, except so far as they represent principles.

These are all whig journals. Now let us see what the other side says. "The New York Evening Post opens upon the dissolution in the cabinet. It is the latest late cabinet, an ill-assorted association that flew into fragments, like the rind seed-vessel of the plant called touché-not, when you brush it with your finger, "Mr. Webster," it says, "still clings to his office like an autumn leaf—"

"The last red leaf of all its clan,
That dances as long as it can,
On the top of the old tree."

If he abdicates his place at all, it will be
With sweet, reluctant, amorous delay—but we think he will be obliged, ere long, to go after his fellows."

The Post, after remarking that the confirmation of the new cabinet would be by a grudging and sulky vote, proceeds to speak of the members of it as follows:

"Walter Forward, who is nominated to the post of secretary of the treasury, is a western Pennsylvania lawyer, a native of one of the New England states, who went in early life to Pittsburg, and rose to eminence at the bar. He is known not to agree with the Clay party in the anti-banking question. On the other hand, he is a high-tariff man, and strongly attached to the mischievous protective system."

"Abel P. Upshur, who is named for the department of the navy, is an ingenious Virginian, fond of speculating and refining. He has written some essays upon the abolition question, in which, we believe, he maintained the extreme southern doctrine."
"Hugh S. Legare, whom Mr. Tyler has selected to fill the place of attorney general, holds in politics much the same position with regard to parties in this country, that the doctrinaires hold in France. He is eloquent and erudite, perhaps not very practical.—His brilliant but capricious talents make his accession to the cabinet ornamental at best."

"Of Charles A. Wickliffe, who it is supposed will be nominated to the place of postmaster general, we can say little. He belongs to a family of Kentuckians whose dislike of Mr. Clay is well known."

"The new cabinet, like the last, will be composed altogether of lawyers."

IMPORTATIONS. The New York Express says there is undoubtedly an immense stock of goods on hand, much larger of some descriptions than is wanted, or than will be sold for months to come. The Express says, to ease the new duty, had been such, that many foreign houses have been induced to ship, and the disposition to advance on consignments, is the great cause of the rise in foreign bills.

COMMERCIAL REGULATION. Information has been officially received from our consul at Matanzas that at Mexico a government is considering the project of erecting a tariff wall at Vera Cruz, to forbid the introduction of any articles coming from those countries, either directly or through the ports of other nations, into any of the ports of the Mexican republic, under the heavy penalties prescribed by the 51st article of the tariff.

The decree to this effect is enforced from and after the 25th of August past with regard to vessels from the coasts of the Mexican gulf and of Cuba, and from and after the 17th of September past with regard to vessels from the Atlantic ports of America.

[Nat. Intel.

MEXICAN CONSULATE. New Orleans, September 18, 1841. I am directed by his excellency, the president of the Mexican republic to make known to all persons travelling in the departments of Upper or Lower California, without giving notice to the government, or his diplomatic or consular agents for the purpose of obtaining passports, will be subject to be driven from the territories of said departments, without receiving the government's order, and in such manner as they will have failed to comply with the formalities required by the laws of the republic.

F. DE ARRONGOIS.

COTTON TRADE. The crop of cotton for the year has been made up at the south, this year, to the 1st of September, and of the 1st of October, as has been the case heretofore, consequently the present crop is the receipts for eleven months only, and the next will be those for thirteen months. They are, however, so exceedingly small during the present month, that it will make but little difference as to the actual result. The following is a table of the crops, as computed with other years.

Crop of Cotton in the United States.

	1838.	1839.	1840.	1841.
New Orleans,	721,356	580,160	939,598	756,857
Alabama,	309,807	251,743	446,678	317,699
South Carolina,	294,334	210,181	311,338	224,739
Georgia,	306,210	205,142	235,708	174,001
Florida,	106,130	83,177	113,344	88,000
North Carolina,	24,159	11,186	9,840	7,393
Virginia,	32,000	22,200	19,000	20,397
Other ports,	2,250

Total crops, 1,801,497 1,365,898 2,151,591 1,592,131
Increase, 377,567 435,709 755,693 559,469

The average crop for the past five years has been 1,663,000 bales, and has been an over supply. The stock on hand now being in excess of that of last year, at this time, about 1,000 bales in the U. States. The stock of raw cotton in Liverpool is also in excess of that of last year, and the falling off in the quantity taken by the trade, 3,800 bales per week for the first six months, the quantity actually consumed is stated, in Burns' Glance, at but 400 bales per week less than last year, making a decrease in the quantity of raw cotton held by the trade, of 88,400 bales during the six weeks. This exists, however, in the shape of goods, which it is difficult to dispose of at a profitable rate. The imports last year, during the first six months from Jan. 1, 1841, to August 30, have increased in all quantities of American.

Imports of cotton into England, January 1, to August 30, 1840, and 1841.

	1840.	1841.	Increase.	Decrease.
American,	1,013,852	793,289	220,563	220,563
Brazil,	65,941	81,098	15,157
East Indies,	140,348	124,991	15,357
Egypt,	24,847	30,251	5,404
West Indies,	3,308	5,639	2,331

Total, 1,216,296 1,052,806 163,490

During the six months it appears, then, that the decrease in imports was not so great as the decrease in quantity taken by the trade, and the quantity actually consumed is much greater in proportion to the consumption. The usual hue and cry is now raised from the south, as to the injury sustained by the new crop. There is in some sections a little truth in the matter, but under any circumstances that can now arise, the crop will be fully equal to the demand, but they do not yet make up their minds to submit to the large reduction demanded by shippers. [N. Y. Herald.

LAKE TRADE. There were cleared at the collector's office, in Buffalo, during the season of the canal navigation for 1840, boats, to the extent of $24,000 (about $24,000) barrels of ash, besides 25,000 bbls. pork, and 7,000 barrels of ashes, besides the thousands of tons of whiskey, butter, cheese, lard, seeds, fur, lumber, &c. &c. And the toll collected at that office exceeded in amount any other office in the state, being over $133,000.

The increase of tolls for the past season (1840-41) at that office is about $100,000. They received up to the first day of August about $200,000. And the same ratio of increase in the next five years will swell the tolls at that office to more than a million of dollars annually.

GROGAN RELEASED. We inserted in the Register of the 21st inst., an account of the abduction of James W. Grogan from the state of Vermont and of his confinement at Montreal. We learn by accounts from Canada that sir Richard Jackson, in the temporary administration of the Canadian government, promptly released the person of Grogan, and he was on the 14th instant handed over to the inspector of police by the sheriff of Montreal, to be by the former functionary safely escorted to the United States line.

A party of British soldiers it seems escorted Grogan to the Canada line and there dismissed him.—Our government will of course demand of Great Britain the punishment of the ruffians who committed the outrage.

The New York American states that the hon. C. R. Ogden, attorney general of Canada, on his way through that city to Boston, and thence by steamer to England, and on the evening of the 14th inst. Grogan, he took immediate measures to have him released, and that Grogan, after being brought to the United States, went back to Canada, when the people refused to arrest him; thus frustrating his design to become a McLeod lion.

We copy the annexed paragraph from the Montreal Gazette of the 28th ultimo. The Montreal Times also contains a similar paragraph.

"We mentioned a short time ago, that the notorious Grogan had been brought into town, in charge of a party of volunteer dragoons, and lodged in jail. Since then, we have learned that some little excitement has been created on the other side of the line by his arrestment, and the good people of Burlington have thought it worth while to hold a meeting, by which the gentleman may be restored to his amiable pursuits of house and barn burning. It was to have been held yesterday, and the grounds, we understand, upon which, 'action,' (as our neighbors phrase it), would be taken, were, that Grogan was kidnapped from the United States, carried into this province, and then surrendered to the civil power. If this be true, the man of course, ought not to be retained in custody; and if it can be established by affidavits, notwithstanding the high crimes of which true bills have been found against him in our criminal courts, no obstacle, we presume, will be offered to his surrender to such American authorities as may take the proper steps for his release."

From this paragraph, two important facts appear. First, That the force seizing Grogan was a volunteer, and not a regular force. Second, That opinion in Montreal is settled that if the man was kidnapped within our borders, he should be immediately given up.

There remains now only one other step, that sir R. Jackson should immediately order his restoration to our limits, and the punishment of the violators of our territory. This would this new species of war in the horizon be dissipated.

Since the above was in type we have seen a letter from an officer of the United States army, who had repaired to Albany, and there ascertained that the outrage was committed by volunteers and not regulars, and without the presence, or, so far as could be ascertained, the sanction of any commissioned officer.

Of course, therefore, restitution and redress will be promptly tendered by the Canadian government.

[New York American.

SANTA FE TRADERS. Several of the persons connected with this company, and among the number, arrived in the city several days ago, but through some intention their arrival was not noticed. We are greatly obliged to our correspondent for his letter. The information will be interesting to many of our readers. [St. Louis Bulletin.

Independence, Sept. 21, 1841.

MENSA. ERRORS. The company from Santa Fe arrived some short time since, as doubtless you have heard ere this. Only one or two of the old traders have returned; the majority of the party being composed of those who freighted out goods in the spring. Some Spaniards accompanied them for the purpose of taking out the remaining cargo of the season; they brought it along with them 70 or 80,000 dollars, and a quantity of valuable furs. The trip has been the most expeditious one ever performed. No news had been received at the time of the departure of the Texian expedition. A ready submission on the part John L. Prouty, 26 Nov. 1838 Hamilton.

Wm. Pease, 2 March, 1839 Tancay.
Chas. W. Bennett, 10 April, 1839 Wolcott.
John L. Stull, 1 June, 1839 Exing.
Edward Smoot, 24 July, 1839 Duane.
Wm. M. Wilson, 24 July, 1839 W.O. Baltimore.
J. G. Freshwood, 23 Oct. 1839 W.O. New York.
Nicholas Austio, 24 Oct. 1839 Vigilant.
John M. Jones, 16 Dec. 1839 Morris.
George Hays, Jr., 17 Feb. 1841 Locust.
James H. Jones, 17 Feb. 1841 Wolcott.
W. O. Walling, order.

Stations of the Cutters.
Alert, Capt. Whitcomb, Eastport, Me.
Morris, Capt. Walden, Portland.
Hamilton, Capt. Sturgis, Boston.
Vigilant, Capt. Mather, Newport, R. I.
Ward, Capt. Houghton, Wilmington, Del.
Woodbury, (repairing at Baltimore).
Taney, Capt. Polk, Norfolk.
Crawford, Capt. Currier, Savannah.
Duane, Lieut. C. B. Beauffort, Mobile.
Jackson, Capt. Fatio, New Orleans.
Note. Cutters Knapp, Erie, Fenwick, Virginia.
Erie, Fenwick, Madison and Van Buren, temporarily withdrawn from revenue duties, and now employed on the coast of Florida, under the orders of the navy department. Cutters Washington and Galatin employed in the coast survey, under the officers of the navy. [Army & Navy Chronicle.]

HONE SQUADRON. The Philadelphia American says that this squadron is to be composed of the following vessels: The Independence, Razer, theigate Commodore, the sloops of the frigates Commodore and the brig Boxer, the schooner Grampus, and the two steam frigates, Mississippi and Missouri.

Orders have been sent to the Philadelphia navy yard for the construction of two steamers of the medium size, carrying six hundred tons. One of them is to be propelled on the principle of the Archimedes screw.

Commander Charles Williamson is ordered to the Warren sloop of war, just out of dock at Norfolk.

FOR COMMODORE. The Army and Navy Chronicle says: The singular and unusual spectacle is now presented, of four commodore flags flying at the same time in the harbor of Norfolk and its vicinity: There are

The Delaware, No. 80, bound to the coast of Brazil, the flag ship of Commodore Morris, who being senior and within signal distance is entitled to the blue pennant.

The frigate Macedonian, flag ship of the West India squadron, Commodore Wilkinson, who, being next in rank, hoists the red.

The frigate United States, the flag ship of the squadron destined to the Pacific, Commodore Thomas Ap Catesby Jones.

The navy yard at Gosport, under the command of Commodore W. Branford Shubrick, who is junior to the other three.

The U. S. brig Concorde, lieutenant commanding L. M. Powell, engaged surveying Nantucket Shoal, was at anchor near the shore at the commencement of the late gale, and obliged to put to sea. During the gale she lost spars, boats, a bow anchor, and threw her guns overboard. When the gale broke up, she was off Barnegat. She has returned to Nantucket.

ANOTHER GEDNEY CHANNEL. We learn from the New York American that another illustration, if one were wanted, of the advantages to the country afforded by the United States coast survey, under the direction of F. R. Hassler, has been furnished within a few weeks by the discovery of a new channel into the Delaware bay by commander Thomas R. Gedney of the brig Washington.

This channel runs in a W. S. W. direction from Cape May, at about a quarter of a mile wide, has 17 feet in it at low water, and saves the circuitous course around the overfalls, of vessels bound into the Delaware from the northward.

PACIFIC SQUADRON. The Army and Navy Chronicle says that commodore Thomas Ap Catesby Jones was appointed on the 23d ult. to the command of the United States squadron in the Pacific Ocean, and will hoist his broad pennant on board the frigate United States at Norfolk.

The U. S. brig JEFFERSON, having undergone thorough repairs at Mobile, sailed from thence on Thursday week for Indian Key, to join the squadron under the command of Lieut. McLaughlin, and proceed to the everglades of Florida, to act in concert with the army against the Indians.

The French ships of war, which have been lying in Hampton Roads for the last six weeks, have sailed for Martinique. During their stay in our waters not a man was lost by desertion or sickness.

THE KAMSCHATKA. This magnificent steam frigate went to sea, says the New York Tribune, in charge of her gentlemanly commander, Capt. Von Shantz. A party of one hundred ladies and gentlemen went on board and accompanied her to the Hook, which she left amid the hearty cheers of the company. With only two inches of steam she made the excursion from the city to the Hook, a distance of sixteen miles, in two hours, to the entire satisfaction of all on board.

The only passengers on board the Kamschatka, on her outward passage, are Mad. Von Shantz, Geo. H. Schuyler, one of the contractors, and James A. Hamilton, esq. The frigate carries in her machinery and construction, 200,000 pounds of copper, 50,000 of wrought and 300,000 of cast iron, and employed 250 men for eight months in building.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MAINE.

SHIP-BUILDING. Ship-building has never been carried on so extensively in Maine as during the present season. Many large and valuable ships have been recently launched, and many others are now on the stocks in most of the seaport towns. And these ships are generally built of the best seasoned white oak from the middle states, of fine models, the hulls of which are finished in beautiful style.

Among the ships now on the stocks, are two at Newcastle—one of 750 and another of 800 tons; these are both elegant specimens of merchant ships. At Bath, the ship Hannibal, of 650 tons, is almost ready for launching. The ship South Carolina, of 760 tons, was launched some days since, and the ship Rappahannock, of 700 tons, is in the same state. This is the largest merchantman ever built in the United States. Her length on deck is 180 feet, her beam 37 feet, and her depth 23 feet 4 inches, and she measures about eleven hundred and forty tons! The ship is thoroughly built of Virginia white oak and Georgia pine.

Last week two large ships were launched in Belfast, Me. which for beauty of model, workmanship, materials and strength, are almost unequalled. One is called the Octavius, of 600 tons, the other the Dembaron, of about 550 tons.

In Bangor a large and substantial built barque was launched last week, and Gen. Veale has on the stocks a large ship ready for launching.

At Brewer's village there is a splendid ship on the stocks, another at Blue Hill, and another at Bucksport.

The ship carpenters in Bangor have launched several smaller vessels, of between one and two hundred tons, and there are three or four others in the vicinity that will be launched very soon.

A new barque was launched on Tuesday in south Boston—she is to be called the "Carib."

MASSACHUSETTS.

THE WESTERN RAIL ROAD. The Boston Atlas says, the directors, in their annual report to the legislature in February last, gave assurance that the entire road to the state line would be open for use by May 1st.

Notwithstanding the difficulties of the work, we think the Western road is an anomaly in the history of rail roads, the track having been laid down on Saturday last through the great cut at the summit and the entire line opened, for freight and passengers, eight months in advance of the time predicted. The revenue we learn, is fast increasing, and amounts to about $15,000 for the months of August and September—a large item for an unfinished work.

In November next the Albany and West Stockbridge road will be opened, thus carrying the line through to Albany, when the revenue will receive a great impetus. At least $150,000 interest is saved to the public by accelerating the completion of this great work by so long a period as eight months.

AMERICAN WOOLLENS. In our notice, says the Boston Atlas, of American woollens, at the fair, we omitted the broadcloths and cassimeres of the Mid-dlesex company, for many years standard fabrics, all purchased for by our own, as well as by distant purchasers.

The Middlesex company is the only woollen establishment in Lowell, and was built and we believe is managed by Messrs. Lawrence & Stone, and different from most woollen mills, is said to be productive to the proprietors.

The quantity of wool consumed by them, is 3,000 lbs. per day, equal to 2,300 yards of cloth, of single width, by far the largest amount produced by any one establishment in the country.

THANKSGIVING DAY. Governor Davis has issued his proclamation appointing the 25th of November next as a day of thanksgiving and praise.

THE LATE RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT. We have conversed with the Rev. Mr. Horton, a clergyman of the Methodist church, late of Lowell, but now resident at Providence, who was in the western rail road train at the time of the recent disaster. He describes the scene as awful, beyond the power of description. Mr. H. was in the car immediately succeeding the tender. The roof of that car was raised, and the tender was driven through the whole length of it, to the end of it, which was against the next car—and the baggage car, instead of being in front, as it should have been, to receive the shock, was in the rear, to resist the retrograde impulse of the train, and thereby increase the danger of the passengers. One of the gentlemen who signed the card in our paper of yesterday, overheard a conversation between Mr. Moore, the conductor of the train, and another person—in which Moore was urged not to go on until the arrival of the western train at Westfield—in reply to which he stated that his orders were to go on, and go he must.

The gentleman who overheard this conversation, being in a great state of alarm at the apprehended collision, took his station on the outside of the train, fearing the contact be leaped from the train, and thereby saved his life. The accident occurred seven miles from Westfield, at the junction of two curves of the road, where it was impossible for either train to have seen the other at a further distance than a few rods. Our reverend informant, Rev. Mr. Porter of this city, and the Rev. Mr. Lee, of Lowell, were thrown, with great violence, upon a heap of stones by the road-side—and the car in which they were seated was so completely demolished, that it is almost miraculous that these gentlemen escaped with their lives. The Rev. Mr. Porter attributes the blame to Mr. Moore, the conductor, than his acquiescence in being the agent to execute such atrocious orders. [Atlas.]

RHODE ISLAND.

MR. NICHOLAS BROWN, of R. ISLAND. The death of this venerable gentleman, looked upon by the people of that state as a public calamity. He was a most generous and liberal man, and during a long life maintained a character among his fellow citizens without spot or blemish. His contributions during life to the Rhode Island college, latterly called Brown university, amounted to $100,000. Other institutions have received the advantages of his munificence in a greater or less degree.

CONNECTICUT.

THANKSGIVING. Governor Ellsworth, of Connecticut, has appointed Thursday, the 25th of November next, to be observed in that state as a day of public thanksgiving.

NEW YORK.

THE UNIVERSAL GERALD CONVENTION, was recently held in New York. It was attended by 95 clergymen and some 500 laymen from all the states south to Maryland and west to Ohio. The occasional sermon was preached by Rev. T. J. Sawyer, the closing discourse by Rev. O. A. Skinner, of Boston. The convention adjourned to meet in Providence, R. Island, on the third Wednesday in September, 1842.

ATLANTIC BASIN, BROOKLYN. Hunt's Merchants' Magazine contains an interesting paper on "commercial docks." Among the subject touched upon is the Atlantic dock, now in process of construction. The capital to be expended is $1,000,000. 100,000 are authorized to commence the work when 100,000 have been subscribed and paid in. This requisition has been complied with, and operations have already been commenced. The scope and intention of this important work renders it probable that the business and prosperity of our city will receive from it a new and powerful impetus.

The object of the company is to construct piers and bulkheads, forming a basin to embrace a water surface of about forty-two acres, to be surrounded by rows of spacious warehouses, to which any class of vessels, from the large ship of war down to the Erie canal boat, may be accommodated, and receive freight, and where they can enter, at any stage of the tide, and remain in perfect safety, in all kind of weather, in every season of the year.

This work is located between Governor's Island and the L. I. shore, and is situated about one and a half miles from the city, and is on the edge of the street. The location has been selected after thorough and careful soundings, and an examination of the ground under water, which was found easy for excavation, and free from rock; and also after consid-dering its relative position and advantages to all the locations in and about this port. The situation of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, have all been examined by experienced and scientific gentlemen, and the result is, that the present location possesses many superior advantages over any other; being easy of access, and a short distance from the centre of business in New York. The distance of this location from the centre of business, and being on the opposite side of the river, cannot be deemed an objection as it is not without precedent in other similar works.

The whole work is under contract, and one half of the piers and bulkheads will be ready for the erection of warehouses, and one half the basin will be ready for use on the 1st of May, 1842. The land and water right designed for this purpose, embraces about 80 acres. The piers are to be constructed 150 feet wide, forming the front of the basin on the stream, divided by an entrance 200 feet wide. The depth of water in a portion of the basin at low tide is to be 25 feet, and on the outside of the pier as well as in the basin, the depth will be sufficient to moor the largest class of steamships or merchant vessels.

[Brooklyn Daily News.

A NEWLY DISCOVERED SALT SPRING. A salt spring has been opened in the town of Galen, county of Wayne, about fifty rods from the Erie canal, on the land of the Rev. Dr. Judd, of Ithaca, with the finest prospect of the best of brine, and even better than is evidenced by comparing the borings in Europe, and the late boring near Abingdon, in Virginia, with the report of the engineer employed at Galen. The diameter of the tube bored is 4 inches, 320 feet deep. The vein is strong, and continues to run profusely over the tube, destroying all vegetation within its reach. It is uncommonly pure, producing the finest salt without the use of lime. The brine is forced up by the gas with a violence known no where else.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION of the Protestant Episcopal church assembled in St. Paul's chapel, New York, yesterday (Wednesday) morning, at 10 o'clock. Morning prayer was offered by the Rev. D. Lyell, of New York, assisted in the lessons by the Rev. Dr. Froal, western New York. The anti-communion service was read by the Rev. the bishop of the eastern diocese, and the holy communion was administered by him, assisted by all the bishops. The usual sermon was preached by the right rev. the bishop of New York, and was an able vindication of the 17th article of the church against any supposed Calvinistic tendencies.

The two houses then proceeded to organize. All the bishops were present, with the exception of bishop Meade, who arrived during the morning and will no doubt take his seat to-day. The Rev. Dr. Wainwright was elected secretary to the house of bishops.

In the house of clerical and lay deputies, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt was appointed president pro tem, and the Rev. Dr. Anthon secretary pro tem. A committee was then appointed to report on the testimonials of deputies, and upon their report it appeared that nearly all the dioceses were represented. A motion was then made to go into the election of president and secretary, when the rev. gentlemen who had been appointed to fill the offices temporarily were respectively elected to them. After several of the usual preliminary resolutions, both houses adjourned to meet this morning at 9 o'clock, at St. John's chapel.

[N. Y. Amer.

RAIL ROADS AT AUCTION. It is stated in the Albany Argus, that the comptroller advertises to sell at auction, next April, the Catskill and Canajoharie, and Ithaca and Owego rail roads. Both are to be sold for default in pay the interest on the stocked loan to aid in their construction.

NEW JERSEY.

COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY. The annual commencement of this institution took place on Wednesday last. The degree of A. B. was conferred upon fifty-seven young gentlemen of the senior class, and the degree of A. M. upon 36 young alumni of the institution.

The honorary degree of L. L. D. was conferred on the hon. Joseph C. Hornbrouker, of Newark, hon. David L. Swain, president of the university of N. C. The hon. degree of D. D. was conferred on the Rev. Robert S. Candlish, of Edinburgh, Scotland, and the hon. degree of A. M. upon the Rev. David A. Frame, of Bloomfield, N. J.

ELECTION. The state election took place on Tuesday and Wednesday last; we have as yet but few returns which evince a great falling off of the number of votes since last year. The general result appears to be in favor of the whigs, but by greatly reduced majorities.

LAYER. The following table copied from the U. States Gazette of this morning, comprises the full returns of the state.

Council.	Assen.	Council.	Assen.
Whig.	Whig.	Van Buren.	Whig.
Cape May,	1	4	0
Morris,	1	4	0
Salem,	0	1	2
Somerset,	1	3	0
Cumberland,	1	3	0
Middlesex,	1	4	0
Atlantic,	0	0	1
Monmouth,	0	0	1
Gloucester,	0	2	1
Burlington,	1	5	0
Hunterdon,	0	0	1
Mercer,	1	3	0
Warren,	0	0	1
Sussex,	0	0	1
Essex,	1	7	0
Passaic,	0	1	1
Hudson,	1	1	0
Bergen,	0	0	1

There is a tie in the council, and a whig majority of twelve in the assembly.

The legislature of New Jersey will elect, by joint ballot, a governor, a chief justice, a state treasurer, and a host of minor officers.

The increase of population, as shown by the late census, gives Essex county two more assemblies than last year, Hunterdon one increase, Mercer one do. Monmouth one do. Consequently the new assembly will comprise 58 members. Last year 53.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ELECTIONS. The election for governor, state legislature, and a member of congress in place of Mr. Sergeant, took place on Tuesday last. The returns received leave no doubt whatever of the re-election of Governor PORTER, (Van Buren), by a large majority, and of a decided Van Buren majority in the legislature.

We have the complete official returns of Philadelphia city. They are as follow:

Whig.	For Governor.	Van Buren.
Banks,	5,930 Porter,	4,380
Igersoll,	5,332 Pettit,	4,596
Scott,	5,658 Badger,	5,000
Morris,	6,139 Hutchinson,	3,944

MARYLAND.

The vote for a governor, to serve for three years from the first Monday of January next, and of delegates to the general assembly, took place on Wednesday, the 6th instant. We insert such returns as we have received, where they include an entire county.

There was also a state senator elected for the city of Baltimore in place of Mr. Howard, resigned.

BALTIMORE CITY. The following is the aggregate votes given in the city of Baltimore, at this and the three preceding elections.

October, 1840,	Whig.	V. B.	Total.
Novem. "	7,295	7,336	14,631
May, 1841,	6,443	6,466	12,909
October, "	6,386	7,427	13,813

Van Buren ticket.

Governor.	Senator.	Delegates.
Wards.	Thomas.	Frick.
1st	410	409
2d	449	453
3d	574	574
4th	453	457
5th	585	582
6th	531	533
7th	508	511
8th	505	514
9th	679	679
10th	354	357
11th	515	519
12th	592	595
13th	638	637
14th	642	646

7,435 7,463 7,400 7,431 7,431 7,431 7,393

Whig ticket.	Governor.	Senator.	Delegates.
Wards.	Johnson.	Law.	Barnes.
1st	403	404	403
2d	341	343	345
3d	380	379	378
4th	606	604	606
5th	472	469	472
6th	190	188	191
7th	346	347	345
8th	851	937	942
9th	331	331	332
10th	488	485	489
11th	689	685	684
12th	374	373	374
13th	439	436	435
14th	313	309	308

6,386 6,350 6,365 6,388 6,353 6,339 6,344

BALTIMORE COUNTY.

Whigs.	1,414 Thomas,	2,318
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Howard,	1,380 Walker,	2,386
Kilbourn,	1,242 Poultey,	2,263
Merryman,	1,139 Randall,	2,241
Turner,	1,132 Risteau,	2,300
Jackson,	982 Hook,	2,253

ANAPOLIS CITY.

Whig.	181 F. Thomas,	112
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Wm. C. Johnson,	174 R. Welsh, of B.	114
John Johnson,	ANNE ARUNDEL CO. CO. CO.

For Governor.

Whig.	1,106 Thomas,	1,364
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,104 Owens,	1,383
Worthington,	1,087 T. D. Dorsey,	1,372
Compton,	1,077 Sellman,	1,369
M. Dorsey,	1,010 Hammond,	1,359
Ridgely,	St. Mary's County.

For Governor.

Whig.	743 Thomas,	450
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	753 No opposition.
Causin,	639
Sutton,	617
Hopewell,	529
Dunkinson,

For Commissioners.

Gough,	196 Morgan,	207
Sewell,	184 Miles,	132
Shanks,	157 Carroll,	52
Crane,	92 Sotheren,	48
Harrison,	81 Wood,	25

CARROLL COUNTY.

For Governor.

Whigs.	1,443 Thomas,	1,618
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,426 Powder,	1,645
Reese,	1,422 Boyle,	1,607
McCollum,	1,404 Davis,	1,610
Ecker,	1,365 Stull,	1,591
Thomson,	WASHINGTON COUNTY.

For Governor.

Whig.	2,196 Thomas,	2,346
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	2,321 Grove,	2,349
Zeller,	2,203 Spencer,	2,343
Fletcher,	2,185 Lyday,	2,379
Claggett,	2,150 Hollman,	2,336
Oh,	FREDERICK COUNTY.

For Governor.

Whig.	2,583 Thomas,	2,789
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	2,611 Simmons,	2,814
Doub,	2,600 Staler,	2,802
Johnson,	2,598 Geyer,	2,786
Ramsburg,	2,570 Biser,	2,777
Hughes,	2,568 Schley,	2,755
Simmons,	HARVARD COUNTY.

For Governor.

Whig.	1,114 Thomas,	1,151
For Governor.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,092 Sutton,	1,224
Billingslea,	1,091 Hoge,	1,175
Hopkins,	1,074 Johns,	1,198
Nelson,	1,066 Boulton,	1,120
Stump,

KENT COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	597	486
For Delegates.
J. A. Gale,	543	Cann,	507
T. M. Sutton,	533	Shaw,	501
R. M. Gale,	579	Hurt,	492
ALLEGANY COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,035	1,089
For Delegates.
McKaig,	1,030	Buskirk,	1,105
Sawin,	1,046	Duchman,	1,083
Ridgely,	1,019	Prantz,	1,003
TALBOT COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	682	774
For Delegates.
Harrington,	674	Sherwood,	777
Goldsborough,	671	Wills,	790
Tighman,	667	Lowe,	776
For Commissioner.
Corkrall,	678	Arringdale,	768
CECIL COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,188	1,295
For Delegates.
Roman,	1,183	Forwood,	1,291
Wilkinson,	1,164	Owens,	1,289
Rawlings,	1,180	Knight,	1,303
DORCHESTER COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	1,142	816
For Delegates.
Eccleston,	1,105	Jackson,	845
Traverse,	1,090	Cannon,	829
Nicols,	1,094	Hopper,	820
Richardson,	1,081	Ennals,	794
For Commissioners.
Muir,	1,100	Mobray,	832
Newton,	1,029	Georgegan,	827
Harrington,	1,086	Cook,	831
QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY. For Governor.
Whig.	Van Buren.
Johnson,	702	721
For Delegates.
Hooper,	700	Carmichael,	733
George,	693	Bryan,	732
Paca,	672	Newnam,	700
For Levy Court.
Ashcum,	682	Story,	739

GOVERNOR—RECAPITULATION.

Es.	Harrison.	Van Buren.	Johnson, W.	Thomas, Op.
	1,371	1,093	1,035	1,089
	-	-	181	113
del	1,604	1,384	1,106	1,364
city	7,296	7,326	6,386	7,435
county	1,941	2,620	1,414	2,318
	494	325	80 mj.	551
	687	335	605	535
	1,448	1,610	1,418	1,618
	1,448	1,314	1,183	1,297
	841	502	613	430
	1,381	839	1,142	816
	2,958	2,623	2,583	2,789
	1,342	1,248	1,114	1,151
	476	676	397	486
	1,059	665	969	733
arge	1,017	699	608	421
e's	778	661	702	721
	1,516	844	323 mj.
	895	415	713	450
	749	682	653	776
n	2,184	2,290	2,196	2,346
	1,494	691	594 mj.
	33,528	28,752	26,246	26,902
	28,752			26,246

The majority according to some statements is made out 505; we shall be able to ascertain the exact state of the case when the official returns are published.

ASSEMBLY—RECAPITULATION.

The house of delegates stands as follows: 1840.
1841.
Counties.
Whig.	Opposition.	Whig.	Opposition.
Alleghany	3	1	0
Annapolis city	1	0	0
Anne Arundel	4	0	4
Baltimore city	0	5	0
Baltimore county	0	5	0
Calvert	3	0	3
Caroline	3	0	3
Carroll	3	4	4
Cecil	3	0	3
Charles	3	0	3
Dorchester	4	0	4
Frederick	5	0	5
Harford	2	2	0
Kent	2	0	3
Montgomery	4	0	4
Prince George's	4	0	4
Queen Anne's	3	0	2*
Somerset	4	0	4
St. Mary's	0	3	0
Talbot	0	3	0
Washington	4	0	4
Worcester	4	0	4
	60	19	37
	19		35

Whig majority 41 Opposition majority 6

CONVENTIONS. On the 30th of this month the military convention is to meet in Frederick; and, on the 30th there is to be a temperance procession and convention at the same place, on which occasion all the county temperance societies are invited to join in.

THE WATER CANAL TRADE. Statement of property shipped at Wrightsville southward for the quarter ending September 30th, 1841:

Articles.	July.	August.	September.	TOTAL.
Flour, bbls.	7,250	4,659	6,667	19,010
Wheat, bushels	70,644	46,661	60,975	168,280
Indian, bushels	36,047	41,668	30,202	107,917
Corn and p. & do.	194	194	306	694
Grass seeds do.	5,723	5,723	40,294	51,740
Barley do.	784	39,344	739	40,867
Burnt do.	4,348	953	1,284	6,585
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Grass seeds do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Barley do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Burnt do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Fisheries do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wool do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Tobacco do.	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Flour, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Wheat, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Indian, barrels	6,000	1,700	1,700	9,400
Corn and p. & do.	6,000	1,700	1,70

may be the common or commonest, have produced this great popular excitement, it is to you and I nothing: neither you or I have any concern with them, except to shut our eyes and our ears and to close every avenue to our minds against them. If possible, we should suppose that we are alone in the world, and that no other eyes are looking to see that there is around us any ear to hear or any eye to see, save that alone of the all-seeing God or justice. My duty, gentlemen of the jury, like yours, is as plain and as easy to be discerned as it is difficult to be performed. To array and present to you, to examine, to cross-examine, to impeach and to defend, to bear against the life of a human being is always a painful duty. But it is a duty as peremptory and paramount as it is painful. But, gentlemen of the jury, thank God it is no part of my duty to attempt to blind, mislead, or to deceive you. I am not required to uphold any principle which I do not believe to be law, or upon any evidence which I do not believe to be true. The task to which my oath binds me is with a calm, resolute and unshrinking mind, to elicit the truth, and place it before you. The task in this case is a task which has been so often and so often judged in many quarters by unfounded and absurd rumors—prejudiced in all quarters by the fears, the interests and the passions of men, which it has excited—a task which overwhelms me with a sense of the greatness of my responsibility and an inadequacy of my own faculties, and I am constrained, with unfeigned humility, to throw myself upon your indulgence, and pray you not to let the cause of justice suffer for want of power in the people's advocate. If, from base fear or ignominious weakness, I do not rest the cause with the vigor and fervor which I desire, I pray you to rebuke my own weakness, let my truth be crushed by error. On the other hand, if in my efforts to sustain my cause against the powerful array of talent and eloquence which is enlisted on behalf of the prisoner, I should appear captious or overzealous, or set myself against him, I pray you, let me be rebuked by his humanity, the truth and justice of the case presented before you.

On the charge of the jury: The indictment which the grand jury have found, and which is now presented for your consideration and investigation, charges Alexander McLeod with having murdered, on the 29th December, 1837, Amos Durfee. This charge is presented in various forms or counts, seventeen in number. The facts are presented in such various forms in order to meet the testimony as it will be presented. The first count charges the prisoner with having assaulted Amos Durfee, and with a gun, loaded with powder and one leaden bullet, shot the said Amos Durfee, and thereby caused his death.

The second count states the same facts as the first, but states that it was done with a pistol, instead of a gun. The third count states that it was committed by John Mosier, and that Alexander McLeod was present and aiding. Mr. Hall then proceeded to enumerate the various counts in the indictment, the substance of which, and all the charges in it, he said were the same. He then read the indictment in full, and of this state, while in the county of Niagara, in this state, was killed by the prisoner at the bar, or by some persons with whom he was nearly or immediately connected and assisting. To sustain this indictment it will be proved before you that on or about the 28th of December, 1837, an American steamboat, called the Caroline, a boat of about 30 or 40 tons, was on the Niagara river, about 12 or 15 miles below Buffalo Falls and 2 miles above Niagara Falls. The boat was manned by American citizens, regularly enrolled at the custom house of Buffalo, according to the laws of the United States, and had a regular license from the collector of that port to ply between Buffalo and Schlosser. At that time, gentlemen of the jury, some 200 or 300 Canadian militia, armed with muskets, bayoneted rifles, and which they possessed and claimed, and held in the name of the provisional government of Upper Canada. There had been great excitement in Canada, and this excitement extended all along the border. Efforts were made by the Canadian insurgents to enlist our citizens in their cause. The fugitives from the terrible massacre at St. Eustache, at St. Esprit, and at Montreal, had been hurried and driven to the shores of this state, and were driven into the snows of a Canadian winter, found no difficulty, when telling the tales of their direful suffering, in enlisting the feelings and sympathies of our frontier citizens. And it was an easy and natural step from being sympathizers with the sufferers to sympathize with their cause, and now stimulated, and urged on by the loss of our young men, and our surgeons on Navy Island.

Great Britain has complained of this act, and many of our most judicious citizens have looked upon it as a great fault. It is no part of my case or design to vindicate the patriots or insurgents, but

It may not be irrelevant to state thus far, that our citizens who, without forming themselves into any military body on our own soil, but single handed and alone left our territory and united themselves with a foreign power; by doing so they violated no law of this state or of the United States, or the law of nations. They have done no more, gentlemen of the jury, than has been done by every nation on the face of the earth.

Your own recollections of history will give you numerous examples. The Swiss served in every army of Europe; and who ever complained of them for ever thought of holding them responsible? When Lord Cochran assisted the states of South America, or Lord Byron, by devoting his life and fortune to aid the Greeks in their struggle for liberty from Turkish bondage, did any person ever complain of them, or pretend that they were aiding a lawless rebellion? No, we did not, and no country complain when the great, good and glorious Lafayette devoted his life to his love of liberty, and gave his princely fortune and himself to assist the patriots of our own soil.

It will appear, from testimony, that the objects of the owner of the Caroline were totally of a different character. The collection of people at Navy Island had excited great curiosity. At that time of the year the lake and canals were closed with the ice, and the people were not allowed to come from their labors. Winter was set in, and the farmers and laborers were released from their toil. It was at the time of the Christmas holidays, and they had congregated at Schlosser, which was the nearest point to Navy Island. Was it extraordinary that the people of the neighborhood, and some of our eastern brethren, should see an object of enterprise in the circumstances which then existed in his neighborhood? Such was the fact. Mr. Wells said that great curiosity was drawing persons to Navy Island, and one of whom was connected with the insurgents at that place, and Mr. Wells was not to be taken in by such a man. Such was their lying tale, and unprofitable at Buffalo. With this idea, and intending no offence against God or man, he started from Buffalo Schlosser. He stopped at the intermediate landings of Grand Island, Navy Island and Schlosser. After reaching Schlosser, about 2 o'clock he crossed to Navy Island, made two trips that day to the steamer, carrying passengers and mail, and then returned to Buffalo. The other ferry had been ordered to make this passage. It will appear that among the articles on board the Caroline was a cannon. Much stress has been, and probably will be laid upon this, in the course of this trial; and I now pause to comment on that, in order that you may be enabled to make it of this kind should have on the case. It was an articles which the vessels of nations who are not at war are forbid to carry, under penalty of forfeiture and no other. If a neutral vessel is taken in possession of articles which she is forbidden to carry by the laws of nations, the vessel is entitled to be released and the articles liable to be seized or molested. This applies to the high seas, the common proper of all nations. At the same time when this vessel was passing between Schlosser and Navy Island, a ferry boat was plying between Buffalo and Waterloo, on the Canadian waters, and the Canadian army was fed from the American shores. And there, again, (I do not say it with pride,) American citizens were found in the ranks of the British army in Canada, and this at a time when it was charged that the interference of our citizens was prohibited. I have intentionally made—a charge which is not founded in fact.

After having made these trips, the stevedores, who had rolled the lumber at Fort Schlosser, as it is called, were not deceived, gentlemen, by the name; there is no fort there; the site of the old fort is now covered by luxuriant corn, and the only two houses near it were a warehouse on the end of the wharf, and Field's tall, narrow house, which was the only one of its kind in the place. Within two miles of the place. At this tavern, which was the only house in the neighborhood, hundreds of persons were congregated, and applied to Mr. Wells for permission to lodge on board the Caroline, in consequence of not having been permitted to do so by the military authorities in accordance with which, some eighteen or twenty took up their lodgings on board the boat that night. This boat was not armed, had no equipment of her own; none of her men were armed, nor were any of those who went on board that night armed, and the persons on board retired to repose, unsuspecting of danger as they were unconscious of war. About twelve o'clock (the testimony may vary from half past eleven to one o'clock) they captain was aroused by the watch, who told him that the boat was being menaced by a landing party. Soon a noise of tramping and shouting was heard, and the men aroused from their shelters, rushed forth, with what articles of clothing were at hand. They rushed for the companionship, the gangway, and every avenue that might afford chance of escape for their lives. Some were so fortunate as to escape; others were met by armed men, who then shot them down. Others escaped, but were severely wounded, yet they were not killed. It is but too probable, gentlemen of the jury, that there were others who alarmed at the sudden on-set, by the cries and shouts, by the firing of pistols and the cries of "no quarters," and apprehensive of being put to death, secreted themselves around the boiler and other places, and awaited the rushing of the flames, and left only to meet the rushing of the flames, and left with bewildering horror to the roar of Niagara.

But, gentlemen, those who had escaped from the boat had not thereby escaped from danger. Some who had escaped their assailants on the deck were pursued into the warehouse, which was searched with lights to ascertain, in the language of themselves, "if some of the d—d Yankees were not there." Amos Durfee, whose sad fate is the immediate cause of your return on the boat, with a ball shot through his head, the gun or pistol being fired so near him that the cap on his head was singed with the flame of the gun with which he was shot. He was doubtless shot at the spot, and died instantly of his wound. It will appear before you, gentlemen, that the assailants who committed this bloody deed were a band of armed men, between forty and sixty in number, and that they were not a secret and volunteer expedition, got up for the purpose of destroying the Caroline.

At that time, gentlemen of the jury, there was on the Canada shore an army of 2,500 men, who were collected on the occasion of the seizure of Navy Island by a body of insurgents. They were there to defend the shore against the attack of the British by the insurgents. From this it has been alleged that it was a transaction more of a military than of a civil character; that, being so organized, it was not to be governed by the rule which prevails in civil cases. I have already said that I do not follow that line of prevarication. It is right, gentlemen, that your minds should be disencumbered from all questions of that kind, and to that end I present this case broadly, in order that, when the evidence comes before you, you may be able to decide upon it as a case of civil law, and therefore submit to you the decision of the supreme court of this state in the case, given on a statement of facts submitted by the affidavit of the prisoner himself—a decision given in a case of this kind, and after great deliberation, which has given great and noble honor to the judiciary of our state. After that decision, that question is entirely disposed of, and the only question left to you is, whether the prisoner is a resident of this province, to decide he is or is not, as you are pointed out to you.

[Mr. Hall then read the very able opinion of Judge Cowan, delivered before the supreme court in New York, which has already been published.]

Mr. Halliday continued: Gentlemen, let me now call your attention to what has been decided, in the case. The supreme court has decided, in the first place, that it was not to be governed by the laws of war, nor by the laws of Canada, but by our own civil laws. Therefore the question before us comes down to this: Did the accused commit a murder, and was put upon his trial for the murder, in accordance with the cognizance of the same laws under which we all live. It has been decided, secondly, that no order from the British government can justify, excuse, or palliate. Another point is that in order to excuse the act on the ground of self defence or of defending the country, it must have been done to resist an immediate, dangerous and pressing assault.

The offence was committed against our laws alone and not against the laws of any other country. Elton has been shed upon our soil, and we are responsible for it, and no other people; and if he cannot be punished here he cannot be punished in Canada. He has violated no law of Canada, no law of the U. States. Here, and here alone, the avenger of blood calls upon you, if he be proved guilty, to answer for the blood shed with a bloody sword upon our soil. The supreme court stands on the oath of the judges, and in requiring all the statements to be true, and takes ground that Durfee was in arms at Navy Island against the Canadians. This places the prisoner in the same situation as if Van Rensselaer or any other patriot general had been killed instead of Durfee. But the testimony will show you that the man killed had no arms, and that he was as young as you are. It is shown that he was in nowise connected with the insurgents, but that he was there in pursuit of his own lawful business.

The only question left for you to decide is a question of fact. Was the prisoner one of the assailing party in the destruction of the Caroline and killed Durfee? To that single point you are limited. The questions of law, I have here decided by the supreme court, which you, and this court, and all of us are bound to obey, and it is for you to bear in mind that the testimony as to any other point than proving his presence at the scene, is to be thrown aside as tending only to embarrass you. The question then is, Was the prisoner one of the party who destroyed the Caroline? On this point we will examine numerous witnesses, some of whom say that among those who were avowedly of the expedition, the prisoner had declared he was one. We will show that previous to the expedition the prisoner was one of those most actively engaged in getting it up. That the day before he had been to Buffalo to ascertain whether the Caroline was coming down to Schlosser. That he took a deep and active interest in the affair, and that on that very evening he was engaged enlisting persons for the expedition. That on several occasions he exhibited a sword, and pointing to blood upon it, said that it was the blood of a Kankee. Other witnesses will prove that he saw you go with the boats on the expedition, and others that they saw him on his return from it.

Such is the nature of the testimony showing you what part the prisoner took in the expedition to destroy the Caroline, in which Amos Durfee met his death. Little more remains for me but to lay down a few simple propositions, which you will keep in your minds in order that you may properly judge the weight of evidence. Having now stripped the case of all extraneous and foreign law, we come to try it by our own law, as it has been administered since we have been a state independent of England, and as it is administered in England.

"Every homicide is presumed to be malicious, and therefore murder until the contrary appear. It is for the accused to show any matter of justification or excuse."

3d. Proposition—Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 651. The malice necessary to constitute the crime of murder, is not confined to an intention to take away the life of the deceased, but includes an intent to do any unlawful act which may probably end in depriving the party of life.

Blackstone's Commentaries, 199—The malice premeditated to murder, is not so properly spite or malvolence to the individual in particular, as an evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved and malignant mind.

2d Revised Statutes, 546; to the same.

3d Proposition—If an action, unlawful in itself, be done deliberately and with intention of mischief, or good badly hurt to particulars, or if mischief indistinctly, fall it where it may, and if it ensue against or beside the original intention of the party, it will be murder. 2 R. S. same proposition 546.

4th Proposition—ROSCOE 640.—In order to convict the prisoner of murder it is not necessary to prove that the crime is given by his hand.

B. C. C. 24.—If he was present, aiding and abetting the fact committed, he is a principal in the felony. The presence need not be [34] an actual immediate standing by within sight, or knowing of the fact.

Section 359.—If several persons set out together, or in small parties, for a common design, be it murder or other felony, or from any other purpose, unlawful in itself, and each takes the part assigned him, some commit the facts, others to watch at proper distances and stations to prevent a surprise or effect, if need be, the escape of those who are more numerous, engaged, &c. they are all, if the first be committed, in the law, principals in the crime. [Read also, the Tensing hunt-house case, 1 Hale, 681, 682.]

These are the principles and rules of law which must govern this case. There can be no dispute about them. They are principles well established; it is only for you to apply these principles of law, full purview of the case, to the prisoner within the Caroline. You find him guilty, you find him guilty—these facts: 1st, that Amos Durfee was killed; 2d, that he was killed in Niagara county. 3d, by a pistol or musket shot, or a weapon of a similar character. 4th, that he was killed by the prisoner. 5th, that he was killed by those he was knowingly aiding or abetting. If either of these facts are established, your verdict must be one of guilty.

I have endeavored to place the leading features of this case before you, both as to law and as to fact, so far and no farther than it might be understood to apply to this case.

The interests committed to your charge are of inexpressible importance. To the prisoner—his life is in your hands. To the people—they have committed to you the vindication of those laws on which all our lives depend. If the prisoner is proved guilty, and you find him innocent, you will sap the very foundations of justice.

Gentlemen, this trial must necessarily be long, tedious and painful. Let me urge you to arm yourselves with patience, as you would consult your own lives. You will think of it on your farms—at your firesides—and in your wassie waiting, through the world; and when the last dread hour of regret arrives, when your past lives and reminiscences arise before you—when the dark thoughts of this world are about to be illuminated by a light from eternity, this acts, and then stand forth as one of your most important responsibilities. If from fear, from cowardice, or from any other weakness; if through overlooking, or law and testimony, which you are bound to observe by the solemnity of your oath; if by any unwarranted assumption you attempt to decide upon the expediency of this trial or conviction, the consideration of which belongs to the executive, if by any vain presumption you attempt to weigh the consequences, which belong to God alone; if from any or all of these causes you find a false verdict, at that last dread hour you will bitterly and vainly regret it.

And I will add more to say to you. It is to conjure you, during the whole of this trial, at the beginning and the end, and every stage of it, to keep before you, as if written in letters of fire, the words "be just and fear not."

The case for the defence was opened by Mr. Spencer, as follows:

Gentlemen of the jury. I will here endeavor to open this defence in the manner which has just been suggested by his honor the circuit judge, because, precisely the way in which every defence should be opened, and from which the jury can best appreciate the evidence to be brought before them. I need scarcely say that this is a case of no ordinary character and importance. It is the first of the kind you have ever tried, or in all probability will be again called on to investigate. A solemn duty will be again upon you, and I have not the smallest doubt that it will be fully and faithfully discharged.

The defence which we intend to make is two-fold, thus early, in order that the jury in its double aspect, to direct our conduct of the case as it may develop. In the first place, then, we will inquire whether any murder has been committed at all, and secondly, whether, if that question be answered in the affirmative, whether Alexander McLeod was one of the murderers.

The first portion of my defence, we shall conduct with all deference to the opinion of the supreme court, which the learned attorney-general referred to so fully in his opening. We are no strangers to that opinion, nor to the questions presented on the argued gentleman opposite to my supposes, as he said, that the counsel of the prisoner sustained a rebuke, when that opinion was delivered, I avail myself of this early opportunity to say that the counsel have never felt the justice of that rebuke, and it yet remains to be shown that the opinion administered any real rebuke. There are some things in that opinion which, when I first heard them with a very wide circle, that fell upon my ear as a little strange, but there is also very much of that opinion to which I listened with great pleasure. That document is ably written; contains the evidence of great research and profound law of the case. But whether it may sound law of the case or not, and whether the learned counsel now presides on this trial will so regard it, I know not, but I feel bound to conduct this case on the broad grounds of what I consider the true principles of law as applicable to it.

I shall then, in the first place, after a few more facts shall have been made to appear in evidence before you, insist that there can be no such offence as that of murder proved as growing out of the destruction of the Caroline. And here allow me to say that in the whole course of my reading, (limited I admit it has been), and in all my experience, I never knew of a case where the evidence of the subject of the case or not, and whether the learned counsel now presides on this trial will so regard it, I know not, but I feel bound to conduct this case on the broad grounds of what I consider the true principles of law as applicable to it.

I shall then, in the first place, after a few more facts shall have been made to appear in evidence before you, insist that there can be no such offence as that of murder proved as growing out of the destruction of the Caroline. And here allow me to say that in the whole course of my reading, (limited I admit it has been), and in all my experience, I never knew of a case where the evidence of the subject of the case or not, and whether the learned counsel now presides on this trial will so regard it, I know not, but I feel bound to conduct this case on the broad grounds of what I consider the true principles of law as applicable to it.

The facts, gentlemen, to be adduced, will show that this party which made the attack on the Caroline, consisted of the crews of seven boats—six of them containing eight persons, and one containing nine—and which were made up of British provincial soldiers then on duty at Chippewa, or British naval officers then on duty at Chippewa—that Col. McNaughton ordered the expedition—that he acted under the authority of Sir Francis Bond Head, the provincial governor, who was ordered to seek out and destroy the Caroline, which he was to do, and that he was to be in the employment of the party on Navy Island, and that he had raised the standard of revolt, fortified their camp, and reared their batteries on the Canadian shore. When this party was thus circumstanced, and at a season of the year when navigation by any other vessel was extremely perilous, that boat came down for the express purpose of being employed by the occupants of Navy Island, and in their service that boat was from day to day engaged.

The boat was then as liable to destruction at Schlosser as if she had been moored at Navy Island, so far as respected individual responsibility. Indeed it was unnecessary to show that the boat was the property of the party of the island, or of those who were continually carried to the island. We shall contend then that the boat, while at Schlosser, was there for hostile purposes as if at Navy Island, and that the British authorities were therefore justified in destroying her there as if she had been at Navy Island, and I ask every American citizen if he would have regarded the destruction of the boat at Navy Island as an offence? Might not the island have been justifiably invaded and the persons on it taken prisoners and slaughtered with the same persons so invading it being chargeable with the crime of murder, or any other offence against the laws whatever? Whether the insurgents on the island were right or wrong is wholly immaterial. Whether the British government had been tyrannical and had driven these people to desperation is wholly immaterial. The Canadian subjects of Great Britain had seen fit to revolt, and with the assistance of American citizens had engaged in a civil war in Canada, and whether it was right or wrong it was a war, and all the rights and immunities that belonged to those engaged in war pertained to them.

We will show to you, gentlemen, that the government of the United States took this view of the case—that that the recognition of this offence, and the demanded reparation from the government of Great Britain—and that at a later day the British government acknowledged the responsibility of that act and declared it was done in obedience to the British provincial government, and justified it as a necessary act for the protection of the subjects of Great Britain then living in Canada. The federal government then under the constitution had taken cognizance of this whole matter, embracing not only the invasion of our territory, but also the destruction of the steamboat, the property of one of our citizens, and the taking away of the life of another. All, all these considerations were presented to the notice of Great Britain, and our government manifested the nation's rights and ready to vindicate them, had demanded full and entire satisfaction for the injury which our country has received. But the individual who formed part of that public force of Great Britain stands excused, as his action must, from all the consequences of his action under the constitution. The federal government is not answerable to any individual offender for the consequences of his action.

Passing from this, I will now take up another branch of the case, and when I am well persuaded the intelligent judge who presides here, and myself shall have no difference of opinion, whatever may be our respective views of the other features of the case, I will then, more deeply interesting question of the constitution, and I will show it to be the point as to whether McLeod had any thing to do with the organization or not. I am willing, and I intend to call your attention more minutely to the evidence sustaining that ground of defence, than to that pertaining to the other position which we have assumed. Because that evasion of the question of the latter, is not in any degree susceptible of dispute. Even the evidence given on the part of the prosecution, has gone to establish our case, and what is yet to come, will only confirm what has been shown already. But the point to which I call you now is, that Alexander McLeod had no share in the destruction of the Caroline, or in the killing of Durfee. The side of you, gentlemen of the jury. Not any more. And I feel that with a knowledge of the facts, and will satisfy you that what I have now said is fully and literally true.

I confess that I am somewhat surprised by the repeated statements of the friends of the party of the prosecution. I will say to the attorney-general, that I am honored with his indulgence—I will say to his associate, that I am astonished at the feebleness of their cause, conducted as it has been with such an array of talent.

Without making any extravagant pretensions to that sort of skill in matter of this kind, yet I would venture fearlessly to enter on the argument on the evidence as it is now before you, without the slightest dread of a verdict against my client. But I am not at liberty to play happy-go-lucky in such a case as this. I have to defend a man whose life is at stake to him as yours is to you, and to whom you are bound to give a fair trial—a patient hearing—and a faithful and impartial verdict, just as much as if he were an American citizen. I ask no favor at your hands because he is a foreigner. We expect nothing whatever from you on the account of the difficulty in which your verdict may place the governments of the two countries. We ask only that you will listen to the evidence, cautiously weigh it, and then pronounce whether Alexander McLeod is a murderer or not.

First, then, we will lay before you a mass of evidence taken by a commission under the sanction of the supreme court, and which, singular as it is, have been attended to in the execution by gentlemen on both sides. And here let me remark, that the opposite counsel have enjoyed all the advantages which a perfect knowledge of our whole case, from beginning to end, could afford, whilst we have been kept in profound ignorance of theirs.

Yes, had they enclosed the case in the hetacomb of Egypt it could not have been more religiously concealed from our view. None of the new witnesses who are relied upon to sustain the prosecution went before the grand jury. There may be a few exceptions, but I believe my assertion will be found correct.

And permit me to add that in my judgment if this were tried as often as the moon changed, new witnesses could be found to prove the case, as strong as it has been now presented on this trial. But the commissions have been returned and the evidence will be read before you. I will not, with pains and perseverance, my respected colleague succeeded in finding some men, more or less, who were on board each of the boats which formed the expedition against the Caroline. Twelve or so of our witnesses are of this description. First on part of the defence we have Col. McNab, who proves the sailing of the Caroline in the month of December, the date of the expedition. Col. McNab states that the expedition, when planned, was a profound secret, unknown to any except himself and one or two confidential officers. The party collected on the shore and went on board the boats, and then the purpose of the expedition was known when the party was on its way to accomplish its object.

When the expedition returned, Col. McNab ordered a list of all the men engaged in the expedition to be made out, intending to bestow upon them some mark of approbation for their hardihood and successful conduct of the expedition. And here let me say, that however we may regard the transaction, the provincial government of Great Britain looked on that act as a gallant achievement. But whether they rightfully or wrongfully appreciated the undertaking is perfectly indifferent to us. To return, however, in the lists thus made out, the name McLeod, either Alexander or Augustus, does not appear.

Col. McNab also says that he was on the shore when the expedition embarked, and that he did not see McLeod, whom he knows most intimately. Then every boat's crew were acquainted with each other, and they respectfully testify that McLeod was not among them, and that they are entirely sure that the members of every little party will know each other. This is in substance the evidence which we have taken on commission, and that will be the first laid before you in our defence. You will listen to that reading with attention, although it may not be so satisfactory as the evidence of a witness who would be before you personally.

But we will also produce before you living witnesses, who will speak of what they know. By a Mr. Hamilton we will show that the Rayncock of whom Wilson spoke as being present with McLeod between the 5th and 13th of January, was absent in Europe, and that he had been then in England, and that at the place and on the occasion described by Wilson.

With respect to Quimby, we will show you that a short time ago a letter was received by the postmaster here from a gentleman of respectability in Warren county, Pennsylvania, who bearing of Quimby's intention to come here as a witness, and knowing his character, wrote a warning as to his worthlessness and asked for information as to the name of two worthy citizens there, who have come here to speak of Quimby's character. This Quimby, you recollect, is the fellow who sold his load of hay and went to get payment before daylight from the commissary.

And will then show you, gentlemen, that McLeod was at Chippewa, in Davis' tavern, on the day of the destruction of the Caroline—that he went to bed early, as he was fatigued, having been one of the party who rowed round Navy Island. He remained in bed till sundown, when he rose. We will then show you that he went in company with Mr. William Press, then living at Niagara, and now keeping the "Hamilton House," in Hamilton, Canada, and in his company, Mr. McLeod left Davis' tavern and rode to Staniford, about five miles distant, in a very bad state of the roads, where he got out of his wagon, concluding that he would tarry over night with capt. John Morrison, a retired British officer in Canada.

He left Chippewa in company with Mr. Press after dark on that day. Well, he got out and went into Capt. Morrison's, and we will show you that gent. Capt. Morrison, and Mr. McLeod came to his house, that they sat and conversed till about midnight; that then they retired to bed; that he, (Capt. Morrison), rose early in the morning, as was his custom; that Mrs. Morrison arose, and their son, a little boy of fifteen years of age; that the lad went down to the gate in company of the house. That he saw there two gentlemen, who stopped as they passed and asked the lad to call his father—that Captain Morrison went down and there found some one whom I don't now remember, with a Col. Cameron, who lives at Toronto, and is an elderly gentleman, and is not able to be here. And the gentleman asked Morrison, and he heard the news, and on receiving his reply in the negative, they told him of the burning of the Caroline, and gave him as a trophy a fragment of the boat—which they had found in an eddy below the falls.

Captain Morrison returned to the house and found Mr. McLeod at his toilet, and to him he told the intelligence he had just received. McLeod wished to go immediately, but was prevailed on by Mrs. Morrison to remain for breakfast; Mrs. Morrison will show this, and also that Mr. McLeod's boots, which had been wet, were placed at the kitchen fire, where they remained till night, and in the morning he got on dry by him; Mr. McLeod, also a step-daughter, I believe, of Mr. Morrison, is also here; she is an intelligent lady and will corroborate the testimony of her relations.

To recur to the testimony of Press, to show that he cannot be mistaken in the day, he says he was at Chippewa but once that winter. He lived at Niagara and he was in the house, and he says that he took in passengers from his house that day; that their names are on his books, and the compensation he received from them entered on his cash book, under date of the 25th of December. But, further, he will tell you that he heard of the destruction of the Caroline on the next day, about ten o'clock—thus fixing, beyond all controversy, the day on which McLeod was in his company.

We then take McLeod from Chippewa early in the evening to Captain Munson's where he passes the night. Then, in the morning, he rode to the Pavilion at the falls, and during that time we have no evidence that saw him—but at the Pavilion he fell in company with a person who is here—a gentleman of the provincial government, and from the Pavilion he rode with McLeod to Chippewa conversing about the destruction of the Caroline, and they reached Chippewa about nine or ten o'clock, and then rode up the Niagara river to where Capt. Usher lived—the gentleman who was murdered at his own house, while the party were on their way from Navy Island, one ball falling directly at the edge of the river, which was handed to McLeod when he was returning.

Shortly after leaving the Caroline they met a gentleman who also is here—Mr. McLean, of New York, who had spent the previous night at Chippewa and in company with another person residing down the river, towards the falls, where he had seen McLeod, whom Mr. McLean well knew, and had seen in Buffalo a few days before, when McLeod was there.

Now gentlemen of the jury, this evidence will be laid before you, and I question if it will be at all necessary for you to embarrass your minds with the examination of the present jury, they were fired on by me committed by any one, but that on the contrary you will be rejoiced to find that you can return a verdict that the prisoner was not guilty because he had no participation in the matter. I know it will rejoice your hearts, as it will those of all true American citizens, that McLeod is innocent of this offence.

And here gentlemen let me ask you if this evidence which I have described be true, what will you think of the testimony you have heard. Will it not be found irreconcilable from beginning to end? Must it not then be admitted that these men must either have lied in their glories, or been misled by heated imagination?

Our witnesses are not surrounded by darkness—their observation not limited to a single and momentary view of the dawn of day or in the gloom of midnight. They have been in company with the prisoner, and could not be mistaken. There evidence then must be all perjured, or all true.

And if all true, then you will not have the slightest difficulty in pronouncing the verdict that justice demands—one which is due to the prisoner, to the nation whose subject he is, and to the American people.

The learned gentleman then concluded, after occupying three quarters of an hour in his opening, and as it was now nine o'clock, the court adjourned till next morning at the usual hour.

THURSDAY, OCT. 7. The evidence rendered by the witness Sears having closed, Mr. Spencer said that he now proposed to bring forward the documentary evidence. The learned gentleman stated that he would first introduce the various official documents that had reference to the regulations at present being before the governments of the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. Hall—For what purpose?

Mr. Spencer—With a view to establish the fact that the destruction of the Caroline and the killing of Furber were the acts of the public force of Great Britain, which acts were subsequently authorized by the governments.

Mr. Hall—You wish then to establish that there was a war.

Mr. Spencer—Or such a state of matters as released the individuals concerned under the protection of the government of Great Britain from all responsibility in regard to the consequences of their acts in that capacity. Mr. S. then proceeded at very considerable length to show that though there had been no formal declaration of war, yet the provincial government of Great Britain had a right to destroy the Caroline in such a case.

As however, the learned gentleman used the same arguments and adopted the same line of reasoning as he did, when the case occupied the attention of the supreme court, we do not deem it necessary to present his remarks on these points again to our readers.

Mr. Hall rose to reply.

The court observed Mr. Hall from replying and expressed its judicial opinion as follows:—The present indictment has been sent down to us by the supreme court, to be tried like any other issue in the circuit court. A motion was made for the prisoner's discharge on the ground that that court could look behind the indictment and inquire whether it was justified in discharging the prisoner. The supreme court came to the conclusion in the first place that they had no right to look behind the indictment; and second if they had that the motion should be denied for the want of merit or of soundness of the grounds on which it was made. And, as the court would be justified in so doing, they were in such a sense which makes the killing of individuals excusable or justifiable; and for the reason that there was nothing in the preceding negotiations which took away the right of the state of New York to punish offenders against her laws. This opinion, which has been arrived at by all the judges of the supreme court after the case had been ably and deliberately argued before them, and which opinion, though for the most part was written by one, was the expression of the court. From that opinion, even if I did not agree with it, I cannot dissent. That decision is law with me, and may be briefly stated that the American people, composed of Canadians and of American citizens, who voluntarily joined them.

These took possession of Navy Island, and were, therefore, a hostile force invading Canada. They were directly hostile to the Canadian government; and I have no doubt that the Canadian authorities had a right to repel that invasion—to suppress that insurrection, and, when engaged in war may use against rebel subjects or foreign enemies. But while that is true, it is proper also to look at the rights of neutrals. Every citizen of the United States who chose, had a right so far as respected his obligations to his own government, to expatriate himself and join the insurgents, but when he did so, he was subject to all the consequences that the real subject of Great Britain endured. Any of our citizens who chose had a right to carry provisions and munitions of war to those insurgents at the risk of their forfeiture, if captured; and in that view the Caroline was liable to seizure, if a portion of the armament of the rebels, if the flag, when there, or if possible on the high seas.

But every member of that hostile band when on shore was secure from injury by the adverse power; and the British government had no more right to send armed men from Canada to make an attack on that station, than it would have had if they had to send armed men to Buffalo to seize on the arsenal from which they feared the rebels might take arms, or to assassinate the mayor of that city lest he might give up those arms.

These in my view are the doctrines of the supreme court—not only opinions put forth by their decision, but clothed with authority, binding upon us, and which have no discretionary power to set aside, even if I had examined the question fully, and come to an opposite conclusion from that of the higher court. I am administering law here subject to the review of that very tribunal, and I therefore feel bound to reject the proposition to offer these matters in evidence.

Mr. Spencer asked the court to note his exception to its decision.

The editor of the N. York Tribune, who attended the trial during the week which was occupied in the examination of witnesses, thus sums up the case as developed by the testimony:

The preliminary and substantially admitted facts are these: A "patriot" rising or insurrection took place in both Upper and Lower Canada in the autumn of 1837, which was speedily suppressed—with considerable bloodshed in the province, but very little in the upper. The disaffected insurgents fled to the United States—those from the upper province mainly to Buffalo and its vicinity. They found there a state of feeling and circumstances very favorable to their cause—a great meeting was held in the theatre to "sympathize" with them; a great many volunteers to aid them; a military force was embodied; the arms and the munitions of the state were seized; the party moved down the river, crossed over to and took possession of Navy Island, situated in the Niagara river, near the middle of its deep and strong current, and only two miles above the Falls of Niagara. Here they planted batteries and commenced firing upon the adjacent Canada shore, the village of Chippewa lying just above them. They threatened and were expected to make a movement upon Canada directly, the adjacent shore being exposed to invasion from them at any time, while their own wooded island, with a surrounding current leading strongly to the great extract below, was extremely difficult and dangerous to attack.

But the hastily-levied and ill-provided force on the island, while daily boasting of their numbers and prospects, began to feel sadly the want of money, provisions and munitions. Winter had set in, they could no longer protect themselves from the cold in numbers, and needed every thing, from competent leaders down to whole shoes. A force of five hundred men sent against them might have annihilated them. The lake had frozen up, with all the craft upon it, though the Niagara remained open, as it mainly does at all seasons. The patriots then sent their friends in Buffalo, begging that supplies and a steamboat be sent to their relief.

The owners of the more valuable boats refused to jeopard their in this service, but the friends of the patriots prevailed on Mr. William Wells, who had recently purchased for an iron steamer, and was bound to steamboat Caroline, to send her down. She was accordingly sent out of the ice on the 25th by volunteer aid, hastily manned by a volunteer crew, and sent down the 29th—Mr. Wells himself and a number of steamboat captains, engineers, &c. being on board.

She ran down, touching at Black Rock Dam and Tonawanda, to Schlosser, thence across to Navy Island, where she made three trips during that day, and back to Schlosser, where she lay up for the night. She took on board at each place whatever was offered, and carried a cannon, men, provisions, &c. to Navy Island, charging nothing for passage or freight, though some few paid voluntarily. Mr. Wells evidently did not expect to be asked to have returned, and he went to Black Rock Dam to pass the night, but there was something wrong with the machinery—so he staid at Schlosser. Thirty-three men—twenty-three of them lodgers, merely, who could not find accommodation elsewhere—had retired on board, when about midnight a party was approached and begged to be taken on board, and when they had returned, they drove her inmates ashore, severely wounded James H. King, brother-in-law of Mr. Wells, took prisoner Luke Walker, a boy; shot Amos Durfee dead, just after he had stepped from the boat to the dock, roughly handled some others, set the boat on fire and poured kerosene on the current, which was a grand and burning flame over the mighty extract. Her destroyers returned in triumph to Chippewa. Such is the deed which, by a solemn adjudication of the supreme court of this state, is held to implicate every individual concerned in it in the guilt of murder, and for an alleged participation in which Alexander McLeod was indicted and put on trial for his life.

The circumstances which are held to involve him in this offence are as follows: He was a deputy sherriff in the Niagara district, an ardent, active loyalist, had busied himself prominently in the defensive operations at Chippewa; on the 25th was in Buffalo, doubtless on business adverse to the patriots; came very near being lynched by the "sympathizers" who bore away there; came back to Chippewa, and with others rowed round Navy Island early in the morning of the 29th, in search of the Caroline—did not see her, but was fired on from the island; went back to Chippewa, and slept two or three hours in the afternoon.

His prosecution is undisputed by the witnesses. So far as the state that he was seen in a private conference with Drew, Usher and other British officers at Chippewa at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon, (about which time the destruction of the Caroline was doubtless planned); came out of Davis' tavern at 9 o'clock, about which time the men were mustered, was imperfectly recognised by the men applying among the assassins on the Caroline; was seen to land from one of the boats after the destruction had been accomplished; was followed up to Davis' tavern, where he stood some time before the door talking of the affair; was seen again at sunrise next morning and again at three, where at last his attention was attracted to him by a current report that he had been wounded in the attack, which his appearance confirmed; that he was then heard to boast of his participation in the affair, and that he has since boasted to various witnesses who testified on the trial of having killed James H. King, &c. This is the substance of the case for the prosecution.

For the defence—aside from the objection that the destruction was an act of public force, to be adjudicated in the forum of nations, and that no murder can have been committed therein—a plea overruled by the judgment of the supreme court—it is given evidence that McLeod was not in or near Chippewa at the time the affair took place; that he left that evening at 7 o'clock for Niagara; went out to lieutenant Morrison's at Stamford, six miles distant; took tea there about 8; sat with the family till 10, and with lieutenant Morrison till after 12; rose at near 8 and was not dressed when Col. Cameron came along and told of the burning of the steamboat; went away about 9 o'clock; was met on his way to Chippewa near Niagara falls about 10, A. M. by judge McLean and Dr. Foote, who had come down from Buffalo to Chippewa the previous evening, and had when there vainly inquired for McLeod both then and in the morning; that he was not seen again until the morning of the 31st, Chippewa about 11, returning that afternoon by Stamford to Niagara, (not the falls). Such, with some impeachment of the witnesses for the prosecution, is the case for the defence.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

—LETTER FROM MR. TALLMADGE. In the Richmond Whig of the 16th ult. is published the following letter, which having connection with the affairs of the extra session, we copy:

Senate chamber, September 7, 1841.
MY DEAR SIR: When the former bank bill was before you, I took the liberty of frequently urging its approval. I suggested the effects of its approval upon the party that elected you, and upon the whole country. I also stated what I believed to be the sentiments of our friends in and out of congress, in relation to a veto of that bill, and that their feelings would be manifested in a way to show an unaltered determination to sustain their former position in the case of the veto of the present bill, and against executive influence over the legislature of congress.

On the receipt of your veto message, it was believed the public interest would be promoted by making another effort to meet your views in relation to a dissent, and to have the bill passed. I was very patient on carrying out the great measures for which this extra session was called, determined that all feelings of mortification or resentment should be sacrificed to the public good. They accordingly passed the bankrupt bill, the land bill, and another bank bill. I was the former have been approved by congress.

Later on now, when your veto message, even but a rumor predicts another veto. I trust that we are not to be subjected to that humiliation, and that you will, on this occasion, justify the expectations of your friends, and disappoint the hopes of your enemies.

The public mind is too much excited to receive another veto, without the most unequivocal manifestations of disapprobation, not to say indignation. Such feelings excited, but were suppressed on the former occasion, because it was seen that congress was making a great and mighty effort to recover from the depression of the country, and that the measure more severe and the less to be resisted, being indicated by a friend—by him too, who had come into power with the rich legacy of the lamented HARRison—namely, "to understand and carry out the true principles of the government," of which this measure was the leading one. Those feelings cannot longer be suppressed, after another exercise of the veto power on the present bill. That bill, it is well understood, was prepared in pursuance of your suggestions after full consultation with your cabinet, and with gentleness; and its provisions made to conform to your views, and with the unequivocal understanding, that it would meet your approbation.

It was brought forward, and passed by your friends in congress, in the hope that it would obviate all difficulties on your part, believing, as we all do, from the most undoubted sources, that its provisions had received your sanction. I cannot, therefore, for one moment, persuade myself that any credit ought to be given to a rumor of a second veto.

It rarely happens, in the course of one's public career, that an opportunity offers, which enables a man to distinguish himself, and to render service to the country, and to render the most important service to the country. Whenever such an opportunity does present itself, if he has the sagacity to perceive it, and the moral courage to embrace it, he can gain for himself the enviable title of a public benefactor. That is your situation at the present moment. The great and paramount interests of the nation require some sort of a national institution which shall furnish a uniform currency and equalize the exchanges. Without these we cannot expect that prosperity in business, to which the people are entitled, and which you have it in your power to promote, by granting to them such an institution as they have asked for, and which will be the basis of all our policies, the business of the country would be once more revived, and your name would become closely identified with all those great interests which it is the part of an honorable ambition to encourage and sustain.

The wounds inflicted by the veto of the former bill, and the great and painful appraisal of this. The feelings of disappointment which now pervade the whole country, would be turned into joy, and that joy would be heightened by the reflection, that neither pride of opinion nor inconsiderate counsels could long prevail over the patriotic impulses of one determined to do his duty to his party as well as to his country. It will not be long, I think, before the whole country will say that hereafter something may be done. They will tell you that "hereafter is yet to come," and that they require it now; that they have for a series of years combated the veto power and executive dictation: that the resistance of this power is the very foundation on which the principles of the party are based, and that they could no longer tamely and quietly submit to see their principles trampled under foot by any one, and more especially by one elected by themselves to carry out their great measures, of which a national bank was the most prominent and important. That they cannot consent to lose, by an inglorious and pusillanimous acquiescence, that moral force, which their resistance of this power has always given them, and without which they cannot preserve even their own self-respect, much less the respect and confidence of the country.

In my former communication, I expressed an apprehension that a rejection of that bill would distract and destroy the party. I have seen enough of public sentiment already, to convince me of the error of that opinion. I am satisfied that a rejection of the present bill will not distract or destroy the party. A veto may be the means of throwing a small and insignificant fragment of it into the illicit embraces of an unscrupulous and unprincipled man, but it will give life and renewed energy to the great and patriotic mass which remains. They will see the motives which control such a movement, and they will feel, as freemen should feel, when the fruits of the glorious victory, achieved under the gallant HARRISON, are thus soiled and soiled. They will no longer grasp at a veto, but will once more buckle on their armor, and prepare for another contest—a contest, not only of principle, but of feeling; and, animated by every motive that can rouse the patriot to action, they will again triumph, under auspices that will render their victory permanent and complete.

But I am the fear that such a contest will be necessary. I will rather hope that you will seize this occasion to sustain the confidence of the party which placed you where you are; and that you will by the approval of this bill, render your administration as popular as you will make the country prosperous.

Let no hasty opinions which may have been expressed against the bill, prevent you from consummating an act so honorable to yourself, so desirable to your party—so important to the country. It is the part of a great man to surmount the obstacles which are thrown in his way. We should be glad to have his veto of the first bank bill prepared, with the intention of sending it to congress; but that great man changed his purpose at the very last moment, and approved the bill. Is not his example worthy of imitation? Can you not, ought you not, to exhibit on the record of the past year, the same noble and virtuous disposition to aid in the preservation of the union of the whole country? How enviable would be your position! How laudable the ambition to imitate such an example! By your approval of this bill, the most intimate and cordial relations would be preserved between yourself and your political friends—the confidence of the party would be sustained, and we should all have the proud satisfaction of interchanging those reciprocal acts of kindness and good feeling which are the life and soul of all honorable, political associations. From my intimate acquaintance with the sentiments of our friends, I have no hesitation in saying such would be the result; and I assured you the great point of difficulty being thus happily removed, they would give to your administration a united, vigorous and cordial support—a support as honorable to themselves as it would be gratifying to you and interesting to the country. May I not hope, then, that this great and patriotic purpose may influence your decision, and that we may all return to our constituents, having by our united action accomplished the great objects for which we were called together, and receive their annunciation of "well done, good and faithful servants."

My solicitude for the success of the party and its measures and the consequent prosperity of the country, is my apology for this communication—I trust it will be received in the spirit of kindness which dictated it, and I cannot but indulge the hope that the same spirit will bring you to a conclusion so honorable to yourself and so agreeably desired by your friends. Very truly yours,

N. P. TALLMADGE.

TO PRESIDENT TYLER.

MR. CUSHING'S ADDRESS.

TO HIS CONSTITUENTS.

I beg leave, as well in execution of those deferred offices of private friendship, which, amid the cares of the busiest Congress of our times, it has been impossible for me to discharge by individual letter, as in order to render to all an account of my stewardship thus far as your representative, to address you in this form on the great public questions, which now occupy the thoughts of the people of the United States. A few words only, beforehand, in a personal relation.

It has been my anxious endeavor, at the late important session, so to act in all things as to guard your honor and interests, and those of our great common country.

My votes in the house of representatives, on the several measures before congress, speak for themselves.

In respect of all but one of these measures, there was, you know, perfect concord of action on the part of the two houses of congress and the president. Concerning one of them, and they differed.

On the great political question, as to the purpose of conduct should be pursued by congress in view of this difference, what judgment ought to be passed on this action, and on the consequences of that difference, it would have been easy for me to slay apparent respectability, leaving elements to the people to decide.

But contingence arose, thereupon, in which to be passive was to yield way, as it seemed to me, to bad and foolish counsels, and inaction being in its effect the worst of action, and to acquiesce tamely in wrong doing was to make one's self as truly responsible for it as to partake in its perpetration.

Besides which, in my estimation of the duties of one in public station, if he have clear convictions of right, he is bound, time and place fitting, to strike in behalf of the good cause.

On account of my conduct in these questions, involving as they do great personal and political interests, and stirring the passions of men, such censure has been cast upon me by presses out of my district, and for the most part out of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, which have volunteered to influence or to anticipate your judgment on your representative.

Be it so. I have nothing to say in that regard. I contentedly submit myself therefore to the sober sense of the people, and the all rectifying influences of time. It is the public question, and that alone, which demands immediate attention. I proceed at once to that.

A caucus dictatorship has been set up in congress, wholly, not satisfied with ruling that the chief magistracy of individual freedom of opinion, seeks to control the president in his proper sphere of duty, denounces him before you for refusing to surrender his independence and his conscience to its decree, and proposes, through subversion of the fundamental provisions and principles of the constitution, to usurp the command of the government.

It is a question, therefore, in fact, not of legislative measures, but of revolution.

The whig party in congress have been extremely desirous to cause a law to be enacted at the late session, incorporating a national bank.

Endorsing, by the veto of the president, a constitutional obstacle to the enactment of such a law at the late session, a certain portion of the whig party, represented by the caucus dictatorship, proceeds then, in the beginning, to denounce the president.

Will you concur in this denunciation of the president?

The answer to this inquiry resolves itself into, first, a question of expediency; and, secondly, one of principle.

First, as a question of expediency, it involves the following (among other) points of the cui bono:

To do so, dissolves the whig administration, composed of two necessary parts, namely, a united whig president and whig congress.

Is not a whig administration of more importance than to have a bank at a given moment of time?

Is it not worth more, for other purposes of good it may accomplish, than any mere corporation?

The whig administration dissolved, will any other administration give you a bank?

To what does it advantage the whig party, to sink itself into a minority in all or any of the states of the union?

Separating from the whig administration, what is to be the condition of the whig party? Is it to be an administration or opposition in the name of a party? Is it to be a party organization, in a secondary or incidental fact; but constitutional order, in the regular action of government and laws, is a necessary fact.

This regular action of government and laws, succeeding whigs (be they ever so many) cannot stop, if they would. It must and will go on. Do they desire to go on without them? If so, by and through whom?

When Lord Grenville broke up the whig party of England, in 1807, by the unreasonable pressure of some great question, and its consequent loss, "Why," said Sheridan, "did they not put it off, as Fox did? I have heard of men running their heads against a wall; but this is the first time I ever heard of men building a wall, and squaring it and clamping it, and then expressing their regret by knocking out their brains against it." This ban not of Sheridan's will apply to the whig party in congress, if, on account of the failure of the bank bill at the late session, they secede from the administration, and set up as a Tertium Quid in the government, neither administration nor opposition.

As such Tertium Quid, neither administration nor opposition, having no substantial issue with the president but the bank question, in how many of the states can the seceding whigs expect to maintain a majority by means of the merits exclusively of the bank question?

The bank question apart, is it possible to build up or maintain a great political party on the basis of remittances, or of surmises, suspicions or gossip injurious to the administration? Is not the country at present desirous of political repose? Anxious to attend to business? Is it possible to work up the people into a political fever, and keep them in it for three or four years to come, in aid of the remittances and personal attacks of a few politicians here and there? Is it possible to keep the people in the first access of passion ever, will the whigs continue to think, that the occupation of attempting to bite off one's own nose is pleasant or profitable?

Will it aid the bank question to heap on it sundry great projects of revolutionary change in the constitution of the federal government? Is the party strong enough to carry out an accumulated burthen?

Is it wise for the whig party to throw away the actuality of power for the current four years? If so, for what object? For some contingent possibility four years hence? If so, what use?

Is the contingent possibility of advancing to power four years hence, any one particular man in its ranks, whoever he may be, and however eminently deserving, a sufficient object to induce the whig party to abdicate the power which itself as a body possesses now?

If so, will its abdication of power now tend to promote that object? If it not, on the contrary, the very means to make sure the success of some candidate of the opposition.

Secondly, as a question of principle, the inquiry, whether the president shall be denounced by the whig party, becomes this, Ought he to be? If so, for what causes?

He vetoed the bank bill in each of the two forms in which it was presented to him; and this, it is charged, is perfidy to the whig party.

Yet, confessedly on all hands, the president was not nominated or elected on a pledge to this action.

And if the whig party came into power in virtue of such a pledge.

In refusing to sign those bills, then, he violated no engagement, and committed no act of perfidy in the sense of a forfeited pledge.

If those bank bills were, by a distinct understanding before the election, or in any other way, the sole and exclusive essence of whig policy, then, there would be something of plausibility in this charge of perfidy to the party. But, in any, the strongest point of view, they were but one whig measure among many.

Of thirty-one whig measures, a member of the party contains in thirty, but disapproves one. Is he for that cause to be unwhig, for whig party, for or for there are few who could stand the test. And yet that is the precise fact in this matter, so far as regards the president.

But, in this particular, the president, as an upright man, could do no otherwise than he did. He conscientiously disapproved those bills. And the constitution, which he has sworn to obey, commands him, expressly and peremptorily commands him, if he do not approve of any bill presented to him for his signature, to return it to the house of congress in which it originated. "If he approve he shall sign it; if not, he shall return it," are the words of the constitution. Would not such conscientious men themselves, forbid the president of the United States to have a conscience?

In fact, if he had approved the fiscal agent bill, he would have been quite singular in that, for nobody else did.

But, it is said, the constitutionality of a national bank is a closed question, decided by the supreme court of the United States, and by successive presidents of the United States.

This assertion is a great error. What has been thus decided is simply this:

There is in the constitution, no express power to incorporate a bank.

But if the national legislature be of opinion that a particular description of fiscal agent, called a bank, is necessary and proper to the execution of any of the powers granted to congress in the constitution, then congress possesses the power to create such a fiscal agent.

The supreme court have decided that the legislature is its constitutional judge of the fact of the necessity and propriety of such a fiscal agent.

If the legislature, by their action, in their incorporation of such a fiscal agent, declare the opinion that such agent is necessary and proper for the execution of some express power, then the supreme court decide, as a consequence from the fact so declared, the legal consequence of the constitutionality of such agent.

In the given case, the legislature is to look into the bill proposed and see whether the agent created by it is a necessary and proper one. The senate is to do this on its responsibility. The house is to do this. The president is to do this. And if they concur in the opinion, then, by the decision of the supreme court, the constitutionality of the agent so created follows as a consequence.

It has not been decided, either by the supreme court or by the action of any past president of the U. States, that any bill whatever, no matter what its contents, or consequences of its given, do so, by virtue of that title become of necessity constitutional. On the contrary, the name of the agent determines nothing. The quantity and quality of its powers—the nature of the functions bestowed upon it—its necessity and propriety, as well (in the detail) at the precise time, as (by principle) in general—are of the constitution. The fact and right of its existence in each case of a proposed bank, and to be examined by the president as well as by the two houses of congress.

And these are questions which, when they arise in the given case, are to be considered as well by the president as by the members of congress, in obedience to the express conscience dictations of the fact of the constitution. Their judgment on these questions is nowise precluded or excluded by the fact that the supreme court has passed on the general question of the constitutionality of a bank. On the contrary, such judgment is deferred to and imposed upon them by the very decision of the court itself. Such judgment is not those questions by them upon their consciences, but the constitutional means, and the only means, of ascertaining the premises, out of which, when so ascertained, the supreme court is to draw the consequence of the constitutionality of a bank.

The not perceiving, or, perceiving, the neglecting to act upon these questions by them upon their consciences, is a gross error at the late session of congress.

It induced members, instead of looking into and settling the question, to accept of the agent, and showing their necessity and propriety as the essential elements of the conclusion of constitutionality in the given case, it induced them, taking for granted this the very thing to be proved—it induced them to expend all their efforts in arguing the false idea that the question could not and must not be looked into or examined at all.

Their minds dominated by this sophism, and having adopted as the rule of their own action the theory of denegation, reason, and solution of question which it implies, it is not strange that they assumed the same rule as applicable to the president.

In refusing thus to shut his eyes, and in scrutinizing the true question, that, namely, of the necessity and propriety of each and all of the proposed powers of the bank in the given case, the president, instead of acting in conflict with the decision of the supreme court, did in fact tread in the very path, and aim at the very mark, which those decisions prescribe.

But, it is said, the bank question, at the present moment, has been decided by the whig party, and the president ought to have conformed himself to that decision. To which it is answered, it is obvious to reply, that no determination of party can settle a constitutional question, or preclude a question of conscience.

It is further said that the president ought to approve whatever the party in congress do.

This would be to make him do all the constitutional functions and duties of the president of the U. States,—to render him eventually the mere puppet of faction,—to transform him into a simple countersigning clerk,—and to transfer all the substantive power of the government into the hands of congress. Though president should sign the votes of a party, represented by a majority in congress, yet, as president, not congress, is to execute that office, and, to the best of his ability, preserve, protect and defend the constitution.

To say that whatever bill a majority of congress passes, that the president is, regardless of his own conscience, bound to sign, is to destroy the constitution. To say that the voice of a bare majority of congress is, as against the president, the final and conclusive pronouncement of the popular will, is to destroy the constitution. For the constitution expressly provides that, not a bare majority of the houses, but a two-thirds vote against the president's objections, and that alone, is to be considered as the authoritative declaration of the will of the people.

The exercise of the veto, it is said, is an odious act. If so, the more certain is it that it will be rarely exercised by any president, and that when he does exercise it, he does so from profound convictions of conscience, and overruling sense of public duty.

The president, it is said, has defeated the wishes of the whig party in congress and the country, and, by his mere will, deprived the nation of what it so much needs, to wit: a national bank.

It is true that the president is responsible solely, or nearly so, to congress, for the failure of the bill, at the late session, to establish a bank. To answer this question let us look at facts and dates.

On the 24th of June the senate called on the secretary of the treasury to present to them a plan of a bank and fiscal agent, which he communicated on the 13th of June.

To a similar call made by the house on the 21st of July, the secretary replied in the same way on the 23d of June.

In each house this plan was committed to a select committee on the currency.

It was known generally, and it was known particularly to those members of congress, who, by their personal and political position, had the best opportunity and the greatest inducement to obtain a clear understanding of the facts in this respect, that the president of the United States had strong and fixed convictions concerning a national bank; that it was his anxious wish, so far as his conscientious opinions would permit, to conform his action in this matter to the decision of congress. He accordingly, he had reflected much, and counselled with his private advisers on the subject; and that, among other conclusions to which he had arrived, was this:

Either no discounts, or, if discounts, then assent of the states.

The president, in considering this great question, looked beyond words, at ideas and things.

What is a bank? It seems to be assumed, in most of the newspaper discussions of the subject, that a bank is of necessity an institution combining depositors, discounts and circulation, or the issue of bills to the state as money. No, no. Neither of those things is, in itself, of the essence of a bank. A bank may be a bank of deposits without discounts or issues, or of deposits and issues without discounts, or of deposits and discounts without issues, or of deposits, discounts and circulation. Examples of each of these forms of bank exist in many countries, and may be found in our own.

The president had considered these things, and the fundamental idea in his mind touching the proposed fiscal bank, either no discounts, or, if discounts, then assent of the states, was incorporated in the 17th article of the 11th section of the plan of a fiscal agent communicated to the senate and the house by the secretary of the treasury.

On the 21st of June, Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, from the select committee of the senate, to which the bill of the secretary of the treasury had been referred, submitted a report, accompanied by his framed article according to the plan of the secretary, but in the vital matter of the constitutional question, involved in the 17th article of the 11th section, differing from the secretary of the treasury, and proposing to establish discount offices in the several states without their assent.

In the house of representatives, Mr. Sergeant, from the select committee of the house, reported a bill on the 21st day of July substantially the same as that reported by the committee of the senate.

The difference between the plan of the secretary and the plan of the senate committee, became, at once, the great question of the day.

Mr. Rives, on the 1st day of July, moved, as an amendment to the senate bill, to restore, in this respect, the precise language of the bill proposed by the secretary of the treasury. His amendment was a thing, but was the provision of the secretary, and consisted of his very words cut from the printed separate document and wafered on a sheet of paper, with nothing but the formal words of a motion to amend prefixed in manuscript.

Two senators from Massachusetts, Mr. Bates and Mr. Choate, adopted this amendment, that is, the adoption of the plan of the secretary in this respect in preference to the plan of the senate committee.

There is every reason to believe that, if the opinion of Mr. Bates and Mr. Choate had been followed and the amendment of Mr. Rives adopted, there would have existed a new United States bank, no dissolution of the bank would have occurred, no difference of opinion between congress and the president, and no schism in the whig party.

For the opinions expressed by Mr. Bates and Mr. Choate at that time, in the advocacy of this amendment, they incurred censure in some quarters. I apprehend that the Massachusetts, the constituents of those two senators, are sensible of these facts, and to do justice to the wisdom, patriotism and foresight of the senators of our commonwealth.

Was there, in this 17th article of the plan of the secretary, any thing so objectionable as to preclude its adoption on the part of congress?

That there was not, is conclusively proved by the fact that, when it was ascertained in the senate that the bill could not pass that body without inserting the principle of state assent, it was inserted. Whatever there was objectionable, in this respect, in the plan of the secretary, is to be found in the compromise provision, so called, of the fiscal bank, as it finally passed the senate, and, without change, the house. Did the former plan involve the difficulty of referring the agitation of the bank question to the political power of each of the states? So also did the latter. Did the former involve an implied surrender most ably demonstrated in the speeches in the house made by Mr. Marshall, of Kentucky, and Mr. Adams, of Massachusetts. In fact, the compromise provision, so called, was drawn up with such peculiar felicity, as to contain all the evil of both schemes without the benefits of either, and to be equally obnoxious to the condemnation of both classes of opinion, that of the federal school as well as the state rights' school.

When the bank question came into congress there were two courses to be pursued, in either of which there was a moral certainty that a bank would be established, at least on all occasion or pretext for any quarrel in the whig party, or between congress and the president, precluded.

One course would have been for congress, upon its own lights and opinions, to pass just such a bill as its members should, themselves, conceive to be the best possible, without demanding any plan from the treasury department, or the views of the president. Had this been done, the return of it by the president with his objections could have been no just cause of dissension.

The other course would have been, if congress chose to seek to shape its action in advance, in pursuance of the views of the president, then, having ascertained those views, to proceed in accordance with them.

Congress saw fit to adopt neither of these courses; that is, neither passing a bill of its own, nor accepting one from the president; and hence its failure to incorporate a fiscal bank. Doubtless, it was perfectly the right of congress to pursue the course it did; but, having elected to pursue this course, it should bear its due share of responsibility for the failure of the bill. And due responsibility ought not to be thrown on the president wholly.

It is distinctly conceded by the late secretary of the treasury, in his letter of resignation, that the action of the president, on the fiscal agent bill, was conscientious and honest; and this avowal sufficiently corroborates the idea, suggested at the time in the house of representatives, that he was to be condemned for the absence of conscientious reasons for that veto.

The president returned that bill to the senate on Monday, the 16th day of August.

In anticipation of that veto, and contemporaneous with it, as appears by the letters of the retiring secretaries, members of the whig party in congress contemplated the introduction of the second or fiscal corporation bill; and prior to the meeting of the cabinet to which they refer, the president was called on by Mr. Berrien of the senate, and Mr. Sergeant and Mr. W. C. Dawson of the house, they being, in fact, a committee from that portion of the whig party in congress which contemplated the initiation of a new bank bill, to ascertain the president's views on this subject.

The president being of opinion, as Mr. Madison had been in a similar case, that it was improper to take part, in this form, in the initiation of a bill, declined to do so.

But in this way as well as in various others, it became known to the president, that the purpose to pass a new bank bill was entertained by congress.

Hence, it would seem, the consultation of the president with the members of his cabinet on this subject.

At this time there was pending in the house in committee of the whole, the bill to establish a fiscal agent, reported by Mr. Sergeant, on the 21st day of July. For the bill which the house had passed was the second bill, the house bill remaining in committee of the whole not acted upon.

On Thursday, the 19th of August, the objections of the president to the fiscal agent bill were considered in the senate, and that bill was rejected on that day for the want of the requisite constitutional majority of two-thirds.

On Friday, the 20th of August, Mr. Sergeant, in the house of representatives, moved the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the state of the union; and then, the house being in committee of the whole on the state of the union, and having, at his motion, taken up the old pending house bill to incorporate a new bank, he moved to amend the same by striking out all the preceding words, and inserting, in lieu thereof, of the fiscal corporation bill.

On Saturday, the 21st of August, the house having again resolved itself into committee of the whole, and taken up the fiscal bank bill, Mr. Sergeant's amendment was adopted after some hours debate; and the house, without ever having been committed to any standing or select committee of the house, and with a disregard of the means and forms of deliberative examination most unexampled, the fiscal corporation bill was forced through the committee of the whole.

On Monday, the 23d of August, the fiscal corporation bill, as reported from the committee of the whole, was taken up in the house, and, under the previous question, and without debate, passed.

In the senate the bill was referred to a select committee, briefly debated, and on the 31st day of September, passed that body.

It appears by a published letter of the secretary of state, addressed by him to the senators from Massachusetts, on the 25th of August, that the president regretted the introduction of the fiscal corporation bill in the house, that he wished the whole subject might have been postponed to the regular session of congress, to afford time for information and reflection before calling on him to form an opinion on another plan for a bank, and to enable him to act without the restraint or embarrassment to which he was, at the present time, by collateral facts subjected; and for these reasons expressing it as his (the secretary of state's) opinion, that it was the duty of the whigs to forbear from passing the bank bill further at the present session of congress.

For the same or similar reasons it was felt from the beginning, by many, that the action of congress in the matter of the fiscal corporation bill was ill-advised, hasty, hazardous of much evil, and promising no good.

But other counsels prevailed; the bill was passed through both houses, submitted to the president, and by him returned to the house, with his objections, on the 9th day of September, and in the hour, by a vote according to the constitutional form of reconsideration, it was lost.

This act of the president has subjected him to new allegations of censure in addition to, and other than, those which followed the first veto.

The president, it is charged, trifled with one or more of the retiring secretaries. Of what occurred at cabinet meetings, the public knows and can know nothing. But, as to the main point, whether he initiated the fiscal corporation bill.

This is incompatible with the dates and facts above stated, which show that the consideration of a new bill was forced on the president by members of congress.

It is, also, incompatible with the fact that, on Tuesday, the 17th of August, as it is said by the secretary of war, the president expressed to him doubt as to any law.

That, at the very cabinet meeting itself as the secretary of the treasury declares, the president declared "a wish that the whole subject should be postponed till the next session of congress."

That if, at any moment before the fiscal corporation bill was moved in the house, it was seen by the president, yet, as admitted by the secretary of the treasury, it was never seen by the president in his presence; and of course it was not before them at the meeting of the cabinet.

It is further alleged that the fiscal corporation bill was such an exchange bank as the president, in the first veto, and in conversation with individuals, encouraged congress to suppose he would sanction.

In regard to this president, it is believed, never lost sight of the fundamental idea originally in his mind—either no discounts, or, if discounts, assent of the states.

This appears from the whole tenor of the second veto.

It also appears from the statement of the late secretary of the treasury, who himself ascribes to the president the emphatic expression: "Don't name discounts."

Nor could there be any misapprehension on this point, arising from a supposed omission to advert to the fact that the exclusion of the discount of promissory notes, inserted in the fiscal corporation bill, was not an absolute exclusion of discounts. You know very well that it may be a discount of a bill of exchange as well as of a promissory note. Though your banks do sometimes act as the mere collectors of bills of exchange, and the medium of obtaining payment of them from the acceptors, without making any discount upon them, yet, on the other hand, very much of the business of your banks consists of the discount of bills of exchange, payable on time, and discounted to the drawer or payee for his accommodation. And that this fact was present to the minds of gentlemen, and spoken of at the cabinet meeting of the 19th of August, is expressly stated in the published letter of the late secretary of the navy.

Finally, it is said, that whatever may be the force of the reasons assigned by the president for refusing to sanction the bank bill, yet that, in so doing, he acted from motives of personal ambition, and to injure the whig party. But this is mere gratuitous imputation, supported by no evidence, contradicted by all the facts of the case, and more especially by this, that, in what the president has done, he has conformed in accordance with long-avowed, well-known and persevering opinions of his whole life. It would be just as competent, and no more uncharitable, to retort the same imputation upon those who, patrons of the bank question, have yet with headlong haste driven it butt against two vetoes.

I believe that his conduct has been conscientious throughout, and, believing this, I deprecate the attempt to array against him the resentments of the whig party, as being unjust, inexpedient and unwise.

In aid of this attempt, it has been imputed to the president that, disregarding the counsel of the whigs, he takes advice from the opposition. In support of this imputation, it is believed that no evidence can be as none has been adduced, and that it is wholly without foundation.

All misapprehensions in regard to the motives of the president in this matter, arise from the denial of the president of the rights of conscience, in consequence of which it has been assumed that, whatever may be his conscientious convictions in regard to a measure, he would sign it, right or wrong, if his considerations recommend it. I submit to you whether a party seeking its own region, will adopt the idea that considerations of shifting party tactics, regardless of conscience, shall control the actions of the president. And yet this humiliating idea is the groundwork of injustice done him, so far as he is concerned.

And all the unintended errors of conduct, on the part of those whigs who, by reproach of the president, are hurrying on a quarrel between him and the whig party, would have been prevented, if, in addition to the recognition of his rights of conscience and conscientious obligation in this matter, and, being remembered, by right-thinking men, that, opinions, though they be a moral force only, yet constitute a fact, to be dealt with, and considered and conformed to where they cannot be changed, just as much as unchangeable physical facts. How does it promote the public interest, for instance, to build up one executive veto after another, if this policy is not the addition to pre-existing difficulties of new difficulties created by ourselves?

If the whig party allow itself to fall off into this warfare against the president, under the influence of the causes alluded to for that warfare, it will be to commit suicide, in order to avoid danger of, at some future time, dying a natural death.

When the ship of state encounters adverse winds, and cannot on the instant make her destined port, it is the part of men of sense to jump overboard and drown themselves! Will the whig party, in so doing, the discharge of its duty to the country or to itself?

Is resentment against the president for not having signed the bank bill, or resentment in behalf of his retiring secretaries because of any difference between them and him, a good and sufficient motive for politics?

If there be any sense or degree whatever in which such resentment is a good motive for a patriotic man to act upon, does not the gratification of it by the whig party to its own self destruction seem to be pushing it rather too far?

Supposing to be just all that the whigs have reproached the democrats with, ought the whigs, as a question of ethics and of patriotism, so to conduct under the influences of transitory causes and personal passion, as, in destroying their own power, to destroy the ascendancy and the means of usefulness of their principles?

Nothing, in this discussion of the question, whether the whig party shall quarrel with the president or not, of the particular fact that several of his late secretaries have, for various and not concurring reasons, resigned their places, except this:

That the retirement of secretaries is a common fact, and has happened under other administrations, and, however it may be considered as a consequence to the parties concerned, is of no permanent consequence to the people; provided they have wise, good, and fit successors in office;

That the president has, in this instance, selected able successors;

And that, whilst those gentlemen have retired, yet the secretary of state, in whose patriotism and ability you have more immediate cause to confide, has declared that he knows no sufficient cause for such separation, and continues to co-operate cordially with the president in the discharge of the duties of that station which he fills with so much honor to himself and advantage to the country.

It would be an act of fatuity for the whig party to seek of breaking from the president, and thus to break itself up, because of any of these changes in the personal organization of the cabinet.

Sincerely trust, therefore, that conceding to the president the rights of conscience, and that you claim for yourselves, and applying well-balanced minds to the calm consideration of all the facts, listening to no suggestions of factions violence, you will continue to yield to the administration a frank and candid support.

However that may be, it remains only for me to say that in none of the events which have transpired, is it that I wish to see good reasons for a radical and revolutionary change of the constitution of the United States. No evil exists, it seems to me, which calls for revolutionary remedies.

Yet an address has gone forth from a portion of the members of congress, purporting to be the unanimous action of a meeting of rue whigs of congress, which, besides arraigning the president on various allegations of fact and surmises not fact, recommends such radical changes of the constitution.

The expression "true whigs," would be generally understood to mean all the whigs. What members of a meeting of rue whigs issued this document does not appear. So far as the journals of the house afford any means of knowledge, it would seem that at the time when that address purports to have been adopted, it being the last day of the session, after all its legislative business was completed, less than half of the whig members of congress were in Washington; and it is known of many members present in the city, that they had no part in its adoption. For my rate, had none.

I protest against the act itself, the measures it proposes, and the opinions it promulgates.

The act itself seems to me to have been wholly unwise as a party movement. Our wounds need to be soothed by emollients, not inflamed by irritants. In a constitutional sense, it seems to me still more unwise, when coupled with its matter.

It proposes the organization of a new party, having for its main object summary vast changes in the constitution of the federal government. To attempt to organize a party in pursuit of various and great changes of the constitution, at this time, is to waste one's life in the chase of bubbles—for there is no existing fact which impels the people to make such changes, and therefore they will not be made.

Those changes, if effected, would concentrate the chief powers of government in the hands of that of which this document itself is an emanation, namely a caucus dictatorship of congress.

The veto power has been stigmatized as a one-man power. By the fact of the republic it was established, and by the best exponents of the constitution it has been constantly defended, as a useful check on, not only unconstitutional or usurping acts of the two houses of congress, but in general on all "unpopular" legislation, whether improper by intrinsic defects of whatever sort, or by attendant haste or faction.

And if there be any description of bill which more than any other requires mature consideration, and when apparently unconstitutional justifies the interposition of the suspensive power of the president, surely it is one which proposes to trust to a private corporation jurisdiction over the currency by an act irrevocable.

If to clear the way for a bank, or for any other object, this suspensive power of the president over bills, this one-man power, is to be struck from the constitution, why not go to the root of the matter at once, and strike from the constitution other parts of the one-man power, which are at present among the functions of the executive?

In fact, it is proposed in that document to do this; for example, to give to congress jurisdiction over removals from office and administration of the treasury.

Do this—take away the veto, so as to leave the power of congress unchecked, this is, absolute, for all liberty exists by means of checks on despotism, abandon to it not only the law-making power, but the appointing power and the money-power—and where stand then the liberties of the people of the United States? Nominally, in the hands of congress; really, in those of an unwatched and untempered party majority of congress—nominally, in the hands prescribed by the constitution; really, in those of a heated and despotic party caucus—nominally, in the responsible hands of the senate and house; really, in the irresponsible ones of one man behind the scenes, wielding the government through congress, and congress through the caucus.

I want no such government. The dark shadow of its threatened coming is enough for me. Save the country from the despotism of congress on the one hand, as well as from that of the executive on the other, by continuing to each the partition of powers as the constitution provides.

Who is to be the platform of an executive consolidation? Who is to be the platform of a whig congress come to be the platform of an executive consolidation?

These new articles of creed for the party seem to me to resemble the codicils to the will of Caesar which Mark Anthony was continually finding, or the additional chapters of pretended revelation which Mahomet was accustomed to produce—expedients to meet the emergency of the hour.

The English commonwealth tried the experiment of government by legislative assemblies, balanced by no executive check, and was glad enough to escape from it into the arms of the milder despotism of Oliver Cromwell.

The French republic tried it, and after finding that its operation was to enable one party chief alone to control, backed by clubs and caucuses, to exercise irresponsible to law, such a bloody tyranny as the world never saw before, was content to welcome instead the outcroachment of Napoleon Bonaparte.

My friends, let us devoutly thank God for the happier government he has given to us, and, notwithstanding all these perilous novelties, the hot bod growth of temporary party passions, springing up gourd-like in a night to wilt and perish in the first sun—repudiating these new fangled whimsies, let us cling with fond affection to the constitution whose foundations were cemented by the blood of our fathers, and which, in so many vicissitudes of fortune, has proved to be the ark of salvation to our blessed union.

C. CUSHING.

Washington, Sept. 27, 1841.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 8.—VOL. XL.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 23, 1841.

[VOL. LXI.—WHOLE No. 1,569.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 8, VOL. II.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.—The President's Appointments.
THE AUSTRIAN MINISTER.—Takes leave.
THE U. S. CENSUS.—Population of the cities: Notes on the census.

INDIAN TREATY.—With Sacs and Foxes.

YORKS LEADS.

ALBANY.—Operations in Florida; Shipment of Seminoles; Rems.

NAVY.—Midshipmen; War's expenses.

STATUTES OF THE UNION.—Maine, land sales, mechanics convention; Massachusetts, nominations, Boston exchange; Vermont, election; Rhode Island, suffrage convention; New Jersey, rail road; New York, Van Buren convention, candidates, Holdreithers in limbo, state canal toll, home industry convention, temperance celebration; Pennsylvania, another anthracite furnace, effect of the stopping of the U. States bank, loss by dereliction of stocks; Maryland, unity Georgia, resignations; banks; Alabama, penal code; Tennessee, legislature; Kentucky, substantial compliment to Mr Crittenden; Ohio, bank question; Illinois, Little Rock tragedy, dereliction returns, Illinois and Michigan canal, trial of 112 men for murder; Wisconsin, more lead.

TOTAL OF ALEXANDER McLEOD.—Concluded.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.—wing state convention of New York.

CURRICULE.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

THE PRESIDENT left the seat of government and reached Baltimore on Thursday, on his way per the Norfolk line, to his residence in Virginia, for a short relaxation, which after several months arduous application to executive duties must be very grateful.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Bennet J. Crawford, of New Orleans, to be judge of the United States for the district of Louisiana, in the place of Theodore H. McCalah, deceased.

Joseph S. Sanchez to be marshal of the United States for the Eastern district of Florida. Reappointed.

Thomas Claiborne to be marshal of the United States for the Middle district of Tennessee, in the place of S. B. Marshall.

AUSTRIAN MINISTER. The minister from Austria, Wenzel, Baron de Marschal, who has, by his sovereign, been transferred to Portugal, had his audience of leave of the president on Thursday last. We subjoin the address delivered by the minister, and annex the reply of the president.

The Baron's address to the president.

I have the honor, Mr. President, to offer you the letter of his majesty the emperor, my august master, putting a period to my functions near the government of the United States.

The first instruction given me, was to endeavor to draw more closely the relations of friendship and good will existing between the two countries.

All my efforts have tended to this end, and I shall feel myself happy to have, at least in part, succeeded.

I shall preserve, Mr. President, a grateful recollection of the good feeling and welcome which I have constantly received from the authorities and citizens of the union, and I pray you, Mr. President, to accept the expression of my respect for your person.

The president's reply.

If you shall have occasion, in after life, Mr. Minister, to associate with your recollection of your residence near this government, "the evidence (to use your own expression) of good feeling and welcome which you have constantly received from the authorities and citizens of the union," it gives me pleasure to assure you, that the authorities and citizens of the United States will not fail to remember the urbanity of your deportment towards them, which has rendered so agreeable your intercourse with this government, and won for you the friendship of those whose happiness it was to know you.

I take pleasure in adding, that the emperor, your august master, could not have entrusted the high objects of friendship and good will, which dictated your mission, to hands more acceptable to the United States, than those of Wenzel, Baron de Marschal.

Talk with you, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my high personal respect.

VOL. XI.—Sic. 8.

CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES.

We are at length enabled to lay before our readers the result of the new census—according to which, it will be perceived that the entire population of the United States, in the year 1840, was 17,068,660. The population in 1830 was 12,866,920

Increase in ten years 4,201,740 being within a fraction of 33 1/3 per cent.

This rate of increase has been so uniformly exhibited by each successive census taken since the formation of our government, that it furnishes almost a certain data for future estimates.

The population of the U. S. in 1790 was	3,929,326
" " " 1800 "	5,303,666
" " " 1810 "	7,239,903
" " " 1820 "	9,660,765
" " " 1830 "	12,866,920
" " " 1840 "	17,068,660

At the same rate of increase, the population, in 1850, will amount to twenty-two and half millions—and in 1860, to thirty millions.

Of the population of 1830, the total number of white males is 7,249,246
Of do. females 6,339,542

More males than females 309,404

This excess may be largely accounted for by the fact that of the immigration constantly taking place, a much larger number of males arrive from abroad than of females.

The colored population to whom this reason would not apply, is remarkably balanced. The aggregate

	Free.	Slaves.	Total.
Of males	186,467	1,246,408	1,432,875
Of females	189,778	1,240,605	1,440,383

Females more than males 7,508
Showing a difference of only 7,508 in an aggregate of 2,873,253 souls.

POPULATION OF THE CITIES. We find in the Philadelphia Inquirer the following table of the population of the cities and principal towns of the United States, made up from the official returns of the census of June 1, 1840.

MAINE.
Bangor	8,627	Saco	4,408
Bath	5,141	Hallowell	4,654
Belfast	4,186	Thomaston	6,227
Brunswick	4,359	Portland	15,318
Augusta	5,314
NEW HAMPSHIRE.
Concord	4,897	Meredith	3,351
Dover	6,458	Nashua	6,054
Portsmouth	7,887
MASSACHUSETTS.
Andover	5,207	Lynn	9,367
Boston	93,353	Marlborough	5,575
Barnstable	4,201	Middleborough	5,085
Beverly	4,689	Nantucket	9,012
Cambridge	8,409	New Bedford	12,087
Charlestown	11,484	Newburyport	7,161
Dartmouth	4,135	Plymouth	5,281
Dorchester	5,030	Roxbury	9,089
Fall River	6,350	Salem	15,082
Gloucester	6,738	Springfield	10,985
Haverhill	4,336	Taunton	7,645
Lowell	20,796	Worcester	7,497
RHODE ISLAND.
Cumberland	5,225	Smithfield	9,534
Newport	8,203	Warwick	6,720
Providence city	23,171
CONNECTICUT.
Danbury	4,504	New London	5,519
Harford city	9,468	Norwich city	4,200
Litchfield	4,038	Stonington	3,898
New Haven city	12,960	Wethersfield	3,524
VERMONT.
Bennington	3,429	Montpelier	3,725
Burlington	4,271

NEW YORK.
Albany	33,721
Buffalo	18,213	Brooklyn	36,233
Utica	12,782	Catskill	5,339
Rochester	20,191	Fishkill	10,437
Lockport	9,125	Hudson	8,672
Plattsburg	6,416	Kingston	5,824
Leopora	7,073	Mount Pleasant	7,307
Salina	11,014	Newburg	8,933
Schenectady	6,784	New York city	312,710
Troy	19,334	Poughkeepsie	10,006
Rome	5,680
NEW JERSEY.
Elizabeth	4,184
Newark	17,290	Princeton	3,055
Patterson	7,590	Trenton	4,035
PENNSYLVANIA.
Harrisburg	5,980
Joyensensing	11,573	Pittsburg	21,115
Kearnsington	22,314	Chambersburg	3,329
Spring Garden	27,349	Pottsville	4,345
N. Liberties	34,474	York	4,779
Southwark	27,548	Erie	3,412
Philad. city	93,665	Westchester	2,132
Lancaster city	8,417	Columbia	2,719
Reading	5,410	Alentown	2,493
Carlisle	4,511	Norristown	2,937
Allegheny city	10,069	Wilkesbarre	2,718
Gettysburg	1,903	Sunbury	1,103
Bristol	1,438	Milton	1,508
Lebanon	1,560	Holdaysburg	1,296
Frankford	2,376	Huntington	1,145
Levittown	2,058	Williamsport	1,353
Washington	3,062	Meadville	1,319
DELAWARE.
Wilmington	8,367
Dover	3,790	New Castle	2,737
MARYLAND.
Annapolis	2,793
Baltimore	102,313	Fredericktown	5,183
		Cumberland	2,428
VIRGINIA.
Fredericksburg	3,974
Lynchburg	6,395	Portsmouth	6,477
Norfolk	10,930	Richmond	20,153
Petersburg	11,136	Wheeling	7,885
		Winchester	3,454
NORTH CAROLINA.
Fayetteville	4,285
Raleigh	2,244	Wilmington	4,744
SOUTH CAROLINA.
Charleston	29,261
		Columbia	4,340
GEORGIA.
Augusta	6,403
Columbus	3,114	Milledgeville	2,095
Macon	3,927	Savannah	11,214
ALABAMA.
Mobile	12,672
Montgomery	2,179	Tuscaloosa	1,919
MISSISSIPPI.
Natchez	4,800
Baton Rouge	2,269	Vicksburg	3,104
Lexington	2,697	New Orleans	102,193
		Opelousas city	10,706
TENNESSEE.—
KENTUCKY.
Frankfort	1,917
Lafayette	3,207	Louisville	21,210
		Maysville	2,741
OHIO.
Chillicothe	3,977
Cincinnati	46,338	Dayton	6,067
Circleville	2,329	Lancaster	3,272
Cleveland	6,071	Staubenville	5,203
Columbus	6,043	Zanesville	4,766
INDIANA.
Indianapolis	2,692
Madison	3,798	New Albany	4,296
		Richmond	2,070
ILLINOIS.
Alton	2,340
Chicago	4,470	Peoria	1,467
Galeua	1,843	Quincy	2,313
		Springfield	2,579
MISSOURI.
Jefferson city	1,174
		St. Louis	16,469
MICHIGAN.
Detroit	9,102
Monroe	1,703	Ypsilanti	2,419
		Marshall	1,763
FLORIDA.
St. Augustine	2,459
		Tallahassee	1,616
WISCONSIN.—
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
Alexandria	8,459	Washington	23,364
Georgetown	7,312

adjusted through his instrumentality, are items that would render the responsible business of the commission a very difficult task. The agents are brought to bear on those who are not so well acquainted with the mode of managing these tribes as the Government. The object of the government we believe is to prevail upon the tribes and to sell out all their lands and agree to emigrate to Dakota territory. If this is effected, we shall have not only one of the best, but the very best watered territory that can be found in the world. Two of the greatest rivers will then have our shores—the Missouri on the east and the Missouri on the west with their innumerable tributaries "heading" high up and almost meeting each other in the very heart of the territory.

A company of dragoons is now at the agency, to prevent all improper conduct on the part of the whites or Indians. Captain Beach, the agent, has gone to St. Louis to make arrangements, obtain presents, &c., and it is expected that the treaty will be held between the 6th and 10th of next month. As the annuities of the Indians are to be paid for the present and last year, and as all the Indians of these tribes are expected to be present at the treaty, it is anticipated that a large company of whites will be present on the occasion. We would advise all such to go prepared to "camp out," as houses are not very numerous in that part of the Indian country. The place of holding the treaty is between 60 and 70 miles from Burlington.

UNITED STATES LOAN. A correspondent inquires why the government will not receive sums not less than $5,000 in amount? We believe certificates are issued, or, if not, will be, as low as $500, so that men of small means who wish to make a secure investment at 6 per cent. can do so. The apprehension of an immediate war with England has deterred capitalists from offering; but the agents of Mr. Leod having dissipated that apprehension, it is not now doubted that investments thus far held back will be sought with some avidity. [Madisonian.]

YORK LEDGE. A cast iron beacon has been placed on York Ledge. It is composed of six high low pillars, each 22 feet long, and placed so as to form a hexagonal pyramid, at the top of which is placed an iron cap, which rises eight feet above the top of the pillars—the whole beacon being therefore about 30 feet high. The bearings from it are, Boon Island light S. 3 N., about 7 miles; Whale's Back do. W. 3 N., S. 6 miles; York Noble N. by E. 3 miles; York harbour N. W. by N. 3 miles; east point of Island S. W. 7 miles; White Island shoals light S. by W. 7 W. 9 miles.

THE ARMY.

FROM FLORIDA. On the 11th inst. a party of between 200 and 250 Indians were put on board a transport at Tampa for New Orleans, in charge of Capt. Seawell, of the 7th infantry, and Major Capers, emigrating agent.

Conocochee came into Tampa a few days since from Tiger Tail, who is at present sick, and still disposed to come in as soon as the Arkansas delegation arrives and reports their country most favorable to reside in.

Mr. Hambaugh, the sutler for the 6th infantry, died very suddenly a few days ago, at Cedar Keys.

LATE FROM TAMPA BAY. St. Augustine, October 8. We have advices from Tampa to the 1st inst. On the 6th Col. Worth was to ship from 250 to 300 Indians westward, of whom 95 were warriors.

On the 20th, the two vessels were to be simultaneously dispatched throughout the territory.

Sampson, a slave of col. G. Humphreys, who was captured by the Indians at Caloosahatchee, succeeded in making his escape, and went into Tampa on the 30th ult. He has given some very valuable information to the commanding officer.

Capt. J. M. Cullen, 6th infantry, died recently in middle Florida. [Vice.]

LITTLE ROCK, (Ark.) Sept. 27. The steamboat Atlanta, with several companies of United States soldiers, from Fort Gibson for Florida, struck a snag and sunk a short distance below Van Buren. The soldiers, we understand, are to march across the country to Rockrose, on White river, and there take a boat for New Orleans.

A keel boat, containing officers and their families, intended to arrive here yesterday morning, and are to leave this morning for the mouth of the river. [Times.]

THE NAVY.

MIDSHIPMEN. The National Intelligencer says: We are requested to give notice that all the appointments of midshipmen, required by the present laws of the naval service, have been made, and that a list of the names of the successful candidates will be published in the Register.

WAR STEAMERS. Two or three have been ordered for building on the wharves at Norfolk, of from 6 to 700 tons—to be propelled by Hunter's apparatus—each engine to be constructed at the Washington navy yard. Lieut. Hunter will have a general superintendence of this steamer.

Another steamer, of about the same dimensions, will have Capt. Stenoer's apparatus, and that officer has the direction of the construction of this steamer.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MAINE.

LAND SALES. The Bangor Whig says—The land agent of this state has advertised the settling lands in fifteen townships, for sale. These lands are declared by those who have examined them, equal if not superior to any farming, to any in the state. Dr. Holmes, who some time since made a reconnaissance over that portion of the state, speaks of the fertility of the soil, in the highest terms; and Dr. Jackson calls the northeastern section, the granary of the state. The progress that has been made in the settlement of the Westbrook country is the strongest proof, however, of the opinion of practical men.

MECHANICS' CONVENTION. There is more too much time previous to the assembling of the convention of mechanics at Augusta on the 30th instant, for the delegates in the several towns to select their delegates, and make the necessary arrangements. The convention has been decided upon as the best means of awakening that spirit of improvement in the arts, and in the mental, moral and social condition of that numerous and important class engaged in the productive arts. The progress that has been made by the few in physical sciences, to which society owes so much for its increased comfort, needs to be more widely diffused among the practical artisans of the country; for it is now pretty well understood that every practical mechanic should be acquainted with science on which all the arts are based.

[Bangor Whig.]

PROFESSOR ESW. THE Bangor Advertiser says—The M. C. M. association, with a spirit which is worthy of something more than the commendation from all who are interested in the character and prosperity of Portland, have engaged this gentleman to deliver a course of lectures, on the philosophy of storms, at their own charge. With a view to the general advantage they have reduced the price of tickets to the nearest trifle, and the course to five lectures.

Shall these enterprising mechanics be encouraged in other words, will the fathers and mothers, the masters, the merchants, the ship owners, the employers and the property holders of Portland, to all of whom the knowledge communicated by professor Esy, would be valuable in a thousand ways, exceedingly pleasant; and capable of being applied by any person of tolerable understanding to the daily business of life—will they stand by the Mechanic association, assist in providing amusement and instruction for our people worthy of our day, and in upholding the character of the town—or will they stand aloof, and refuse to foot the bills, and when it is too late, express their sorrow, and wonder why they were never applied to personally for the encouragement of such a praiseworthy undertaking.

There is no time for such personal application. Nor ought it to be required. The next lecture is to-morrow night—and if our people do not wake up and encourage the enterprise in season, they may rest assured that lecturing will be over in Portland for one while.

P. S. I have only to add the expression of my belief that professor Esy is one of the best lecturers that ever appeared—living or dead.

THE TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL OF THE MAINE CHARITABLE MECHANIC ASSOCIATION. The following are the regular toasts. After the announcement of each member, the member appointed by the class complimented, responded in a speech and concluded with a sentiment.

Prior to announcing the sentiments, the president, (Mr. Oliver Gerrish, who we must say presided during the evening with much skill and ease), made an appropriate speech—which he concluded with the following address:

The old adage—"Two of a trade can never agree"—should be obliterated from our memories, and let us by our actions, show to the world, that fellow craftsman can agree, and guided by the golden rule, do to our brethren as we would they should do to us.

REGULAR TOASTS AND REPLIES.

1. Housewrights. The work of our brother class is the great basis of the present and future of our state of society; may their improvement in moral and intellectual building be as distinctly marked.

By Peter Mugford. The descendants of the ancient Britons present—although they are not all builders of earthly dwellings—it is hoped that while they gradually improve intellectually, they will also morally build up as assistants to the image of that great Architect who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters, so much so that they may be prepared not only to be useful and happy here, but for that habitation whose maker and builder is God.

2. Masons, plasterers, brick makers and stone cutters. Our third of this class furnish us with buildings of the most durable and any other moral influence stand monuments as lasting and beneficial.

By Joseph Poland. The officers and members of the association—may the mortar we build with, be tempered with wisdom, cemented with brotherly love—each built on the sure foundation, and each possessing an interest in the edifice ever stronger.

3. Blacksmiths. With strong arms and stout hearts, may they in every good work be as the anvil, and may they temper their minds as never to become the tools of others, or forge any chains for themselves, but those of brotherly love.

By Charles Staples. Mechanics—may we with a correct education as with a bellows, blow upon the kindling embers of our minds, until they become a mighty flame, which shall consume all false opinions, and light us up to that elevated station designed us by the Creator.

4. Cabinet makers, chair makers, organ builders, piano forte makers, turners and plane makers. May they never become dissatisfied with their appointments, and wish to break up the cabinet; loath a good business and desire work, fair of course; get out of time by slighting their work; turn themselves out of employment by unfaithfulness; or neglect to plane the rough places in their lives, if any there be, smooth!

By Calvin Edwards—The citizens of Portland. May their patriotism and pride, prevent the dissolution of the Union, and may they prize and respect enough to sustain their chair makers; harmonize enough of soul, candor enough of heart, to appreciate good tone and touch when produced in their own city not to turn with indifference or disgust from plane makers of fact, and by their custom enable them to arrive to the summit which they so much deserve.

5. Copers. May they never make any thing known only by the noise they make; but recollect that as their casks to be useful must be filled, so must their minds—else they will not answer the purpose for which their MAKER designed them.

By Henry B. Fernald. M. C. M. association—May the members follow the example of their predecessors—their founders having their minds well furnished with useful knowledge, being bound together in the bonds of love, and when at last death shall sever those bands, may they be raised in a new and more beautiful form to appear in the presence of their great Creator.

6. Painters, glaziers and brush makers. The first beauty even the eye labor upon—the second convey the great blessing of light into the dwellings of the poor; last make the ladies good natured, by furnishing them the means to "keep the house tidy." And while our habits are rendered pleasant by the painter, may the light, furnished by the glazier, remind us of our dependence upon the GREAT LIGHT, and lead all to truth and to the maker of our world.

By Ezekiel Gammon. The fair of Portland—Dear to the painters, glaziers and brush makers. Painted by the hand of nature, they are warranted fast colors; their frames are admirably fitted for setting the "best double crown," and when rightly handled, who like them, can break away with care.

Best men, shoe makers. In honor of these sons of CRISPIN who protect our understandings, and who are always ready to stick like wax to the last in vamping up a good cause; may each the single-soled ones now on tramp not only find fair mates, but make good fits, and never be able to tell where the shoe pinches; and may the double-soled ones never kick in vain for a seat of work or be cramped in their spurs by wear.

By H. H. Boddy. The world's benefactors. Our greatest friends, the shoe maker—his love is to cut soles, and he sticks like wax to his last.

8. Tailors. The necking of a goose once saved Rome—the rapid flight of the tailors' gait not only supplies their wants but "puts money in their pockets" and so the trade comes forth in making the outer man; may they faithful as the needle to the hole not forget to clothe the inner man after the pattern of their maker, and have such an understanding with each other as not to be sponged by the genteel loafers of the day.

By Charles Baker. The "genteel loafer" who has sponged his tailors of the rich trimmings, who has decorated his "outer man." He deserves the contempt of all honorable and high minded men, and should be made to feel their kicks and cuffs, until his "inner man" is made to sing and sing, like a bird in a cage.

9. Hatters. Every ready to exert their skill to crown that noble part of man's edifice, "where reason sits enthroned." When the cap of LIBERTY is in danger, may they never like blocks, stand anvils; but, in the bands of brotherhood, with sentiments, better fitted than expressed, go as far as any class to protect their country's colors.

By Benjamin Richards. The haters of our country—May that class who have crowned more heads than the kings and emperors of Europe, ever rally around the ensign of liberty to see that their colors are fast, and never desert their exertions till they subdue the foes of freedom, put cap upon despotism which shall be felt, and cap the climax of mechanical perfectibility.

10. Bakers and confectioners. While the former have the honorable duty assigned them of providing man with the "stuff of life," the latter furnish that which ranks high with ladies and confound the chief of the brain with blushing tableaux, knives and wedding cake, to the gratification of their ladies; their aid, may they so mould their minds as to be ready to leave "sweet home" to brave down any civil ferment, or preserve the national boundary from foreign aggression.

By Reuben King.—Our northeastern boundary—Without much pretension to scientific knowledge, we can see that highlands are not in the beds of rivers, and should occasion call, we shall be prepared to back up our opinion, with solid arguments.

11. Printers, book binders and paper makers. Although we had books and paper before the art of printing, were extremely scarce; but since its discovery, the sciences and literature have been dispensed, as if a new sun had been created, bearing its beams of light to every mind. May the first never justify one line of matter that "dying they would wish to blot"—the second never find a sheet or bind a book that would oppress the purest mind—the last never fail to keep them well stocked with good paper.

By Arthur Shirley. The several classes of mechanics composing this association—Having been aided by their skill and enterprise in advancing the art of printing to its present state of perfection, may those who wield this mighty lever possess sound minds and pure hearts—regarding the greatest good of the greatest number—may their pure light, that, like a little heaven it may lighten the whole lump—and all our brethren partake largely of its benefits.

12. Mathematical instrument makers, watch makers, gold and silver smiths, gilders and looking glass makers. The mathematical instrument makers assist astronomer and navigator; the watch makers, the clock makers the community in dividing time for various purposes of life; the gold and the silver smiths and gilders furnish housekeepers with the useful and ornamental; and they may always have the mirror of TRUTH before them, and so regulate their lives as to receive spiritual gold and silver—the verge of their existence so we need, that their skill shall be no friction when time with them shall cease.

By James Todd.—When we embark on the great voyage of eternity, may we find that we have so well used our instruments here, that they will then give us the true latitude and departure, and guide us to the abodes of the blessed.

13. Machinists, cutlers, copper smiths, brass founders, iron founders and plate workers. The noble and precious treasures to you to be moulded into a thousand forms for the convenience of man. 'Tis the machinists' province to furnish the means of saving human and animal labor, thus making the necessities of life more abundant and consequently within the reach of all; may they never forget that there is a reciprocal dependence between them and the other branches of their class—whatever their occupations are, that none should labor for himself alone, but for the good of the whole, making one grand unit, like the human frame.

By George Ropes—Power, physical and intellectual—time and space are the limits of the one, the mind of man cannot conceive the boundaries of the other.

14. Butchers, tanners, curriers, soap makers, and tallow chandlers. They all try to make the "currier" useful. Some "eater for the mass," some assist in defending us from the inclemency of the weather, some labor to effect our purification, and others to bring light out of darkness. May they never kill in nocence; fall into the pit of iniquity, carry with demagogues, frame any weak law to cover their shame; nor mould themselves to deeds that will not bear the light of truth.

By Elbridge Tobey. The orator of the day—We have long known him as a skillful caterer for our physical wants—and he has shown us this day, that he is well skilled in selecting good food for our intellectual appetites—may he always enjoy physically, morally and intellectually "a feast of fit things full of marrow."

15. Saddlers, harness makers, carriage builders and plough makers. May they never be saddled with bad debts, or harassed to evil habits; but may their carriage be so contrived that the shafts of man will not harm them, and may they, like the independent husbandman, at his plough, stand erect, as created by Deity.

16. Ship builders, ship joiners, boat builders and caulkers. It is by their aid that one nation is brought into intercourse with another, and civilization and the comforts and luxuries of life spread over the globe. Their handiwork are the "foreign ministers" of the mechanics, sent to all parts of the world as their representatives—may it always be their just ambition to enable their brother mechanics to say, "—and our of our diplomatic corps."

By William Bennett. Though rarely disbursed by the storms, so prevalent in the sea of speculation, and consequently now on the stocks to be repaired; may she soon be launched on the ocean of prosperity, and under her present commander bring good freight to Portland.

This sentiment was responded to by Mr. Churchill, the mayor, by a speech, and the following toast—

Doctor Benjamin Franklin, the mechanic, and philosopher; may every member of this association imitate his goodness and greatness, and improve upon the model.

17. Pump and block makers, rope makers, riggers and sail makers. Necessary occupations in either the military or human life, the ship either for national defence or commercial pursuits. The pump though simple in construction is powerful in its effects, and thousands of lives have depended on its operation for safety when the spars, sails and rigging were disabled by misfortune. May they unite to support the ship of state; be bound to sobriety, industry and temperance. May they carry the breeze of life in the walk—and as long as the breezes of life shall fill their sails; and, after being wailed over life's tempestuous ocean, be snugly moored in the HEAVEN or REST.

By Samuel R. Leavitt. The M. C. M. association—May she always be like the noble ship with her sails well sheeted home and well swayed up, with a good pilot and helmsman, always clear of a lee shore; and being strongly spliced to good principles by total abstinence from all that can intoxicate, sail happily over life's tempestuous sea and arrive safely at last in the haven of rest.

By Charles J. Barbour. Our honorary members—We honor you as our lawyers, ministers, but as patrons of the arts and friends to mechanics—may their patronage never induce us to distrust the necessity of watching with a jealous eye, those mechanics that fatten on the industry of them who are innocent of their duplicity; but rather may our associating with those we delight to honor stimulate us in the culture of our mental faculties, so that our intellectual, shall be equal to our physical strength; and then we can not only demand, but obtain that in our republic, places of honor and profit shall not be bestowed upon professional loafers, nor rich men's pangers, but upon the most meritorious of all classes.

This sentiment was responded to in a short speech by John Neal in behalf of the honorary members of the association.

Out of respect to the ladies, we append one sentiment offered by one of their number.

The mechanics of Portland—Honest, enterprising and intelligent—we may our city be proud to display them. May the name of "mechanic," ever be the surest word to win the female heart.

Many other excellent sentiments were given by the members of our mental faculties, and the

The regular toasts were interspersed with songs and glees given in fine style, by several ladies and gentlemen.

The company broke up about ten o'clock, every individual manifesting the highest delight.

Each class was preceded by a beautiful banner, and each by a band of music. The ladies added much to the beauty of the procession, and reflect credit upon the taste of those who designed them, and also upon their painters. Most of them were painted by Mr. William Capen. That for the blacksmiths, &c. was painted by J. E. Hodgkins. That carried by the printers, &c. was prepared by Messrs. A. Shirley and S. G. Cudworth. All the gentlemen named, are members of the association.

The banners were covered with appropriate mottoes and sentiments—and most of their staffs surmounted with tools or emblems of their trades. The butchers with knife and steel—the machinist with a miniature steam engine—the painters with a brush—the shoemakers with a hammer, &c. &c. The printers had a lever printing press in the procession, drawn by two horses—on which was occasionally worked and scattered among the crowd, the order of exercises. This attracted much attention. The mottoes, &c. were as follows—

1. Housewrights. On one side—"Strength, convenience—the great desiderata in civil architecture." On the reverse—"Our labor and skill are indispensable to the advancement of civilization."

2. Masons, plasterers, brickmakers and stone cutters. One side—"We are free masons—our secret is, industry and skill." Reverse—

"When history's page no date can give of empires overthrow,

"Our country's deeds and ours shall live in monumental stone."

3. Blacksmiths—On one side, motto, "Strike while the iron is hot"—with a drawing of two sons of Vulcan, a forge, fire and anvil—one of them with uplifted sledge hammers, the other with anvil, and the other holds on the anvil. Reverse, motto, "To this are all indebted"—with a sawy arm swinging the sledge.

4. Cabinet makers, chair makers, organ builders, piano forte makers, turners and plane makers. One side—"Our cabinet, although composed of different materials, is too strictly connected to be easily separated." Reverse—"Our chords of earthly harmony lead to the regions of the golden harp."

5. Coopers. One side—"Nothing but division can ever square the hoops of our casks." Reverse—"Bound by the circles of economy, driven by the hand of industry."

6. Painters. A beautiful specimen of painting. 7. Boot and shoe makers. One side—"Sons of Crispin, Sherman, Pendrell, Lee, Gifford, Bloomfield and a host of their craft, having labored with their awl, (the figure of an awl pointed), to mend the soles and improve the understandings of mankind." Reverse—"We have boots, shoes, hats, and that will not pay the shoe maker, is not worthy of a shoe."

8. Tailors. One side an ornamental wreath, in the centre of which the motto, "Think and act." Reverse—"By concord small beginning lead to greatness."

9. Hatters. One side—"Caps for infants and soap-baths for men." Reverse—"United in the bands of temperance, we are crowned with honor." (Painting of a beaver).

10. Bakers and confectioners. One side—"We'll mould the paste of life with skill, stamp it for use and not for show—and when at last, our batch we fill, we shall not wish our cake, surmounted with the motto, "The staff of life."

11. Printers, &c. On one side two presses—a Ramage and a copperplate. Motto, "The tyrant's foe, the people's friend." Reverse—"A Napier press with the steam engine that moves it. Motto—"Full of the spirit of improvement." Also a drawing, emblematical of the manufacturing of paper. The pole surmounted by a book and binder's roll.

12. Mathematical instrument makers, watch makers, gold and silver smiths, looking glass makers and gilders. One side—"The true measure of time is by deeds, not by centuries." (Hour glass.) Reverse, within the drawing of a mirror—"We make no unjust reflections, but hold the mirror up to nature."

13. Machinists, cutlers, coppersmiths, brass founders, iron founders and plate workers. One side—"New truths, new treasures, shall our fire unfold—and change an iron age to one of gold." Reverse—"Moulded from patterns of goodness and truth, the casts of our character need neither soldering nor brazing."

14. Butchers, tanners, curriers, soap boilers and tallow chandlers. One side—"Supported by the (drawing of a bullock) kingdom." Reverse—"Union is strength—let us stand fast and firm."

15. Saddlers and harness makers, carriage builders and plough makers. One side—"Saddle us not with bad debts—harness us not to evil habits." Reverse—"May our carriage ever be upright. God speed the plough."

16. Ship builders, ship joiners, boat builders and caulkers. One side—"A ship on the stocks. Reverse—"We lay the foundation of commercial enterprise."

17. Pump and block makers, mast and spar makers, rope makers, riggers and sail makers. One side—"A full rigged ship. Reverse—"By commerce we live."

MASSACHUSETTS.

NOMINATION. The Van Buren convention have nominated Marcus Morton for governor, and H. H. Child for lieutenant governor, at the next election.

THE BOSTON EXCHANGE. The last of the massive pillars for the front of the Boston exchange was brought into town last evening. The last but one was raised yesterday morning. The work of this beautiful building is advancing with great rapidity. The walls are mostly up and upon the rear the workmen are already laying the iron roof. The covering of the roof consists of galvanized iron, which promises to be the most safe and durable description of roof which has yet been invented. [Boston Daily Jbr.

The receipts at the late Mechanics' fair in Boston, amounted to upwards of $15,000.

VERMONT.

ELECTION. The Montpelier Watchman of the 4th gives the official canvass for senators in that state—

Highest whig vote	24,736
Highest democratic vote	21,730
Highest abolition vote	1,209

Scattering 140
The Van Buren vote at the presidential election last November was 18,055. More now, 3,685. The whig vote last November was 42,517. Less now, 7,781.

RHODE ISLAND.

THE GREAT SUFFRAGE CONVENTION IN RHODE ISLAND. The people of Rhode Island, or certain portions of them, are dissatisfied with the present form of government, under which that commonwealth of some thirty miles in length and half as much in breadth, have managed for a couple of hundred years to live, and a convention of delegates elected without any legal authority, lately assembled for the purpose of bringing about a change in the organic law of the state. The Providence Journal of Wednesday publishes the following outline, as comprising the principal provisions of the constitution which was agreed upon by the delegates lately assembled at Providence, for the purpose of effecting a change in the organic law of Rhode Island:

Declaration of Rights.—The declaration of rights does not differ materially from those adopted in all other constitutions. The great principles of liberty are guaranteed; the right of fishing and fowling according to the ancient customs of the state is distinctly recognised.

Suffrage is extended to every white male citizen of lawful age, resident in the state for one year, and in the town in which he offers to vote for three months. But in any question of raising a tax, or appropriating the proceeds of a tax, the voter must be possessed of property, either real or personal, to the value of $150.

Legislature.—The senate is composed of twelve members, elected by districts; and the house of representatives consists of thirty members.

The governor has a veto power, but the majority of both houses of the general assembly can pass a bill after having been returned with his objections. He is allowed forty-eight hours to consider a bill.

The judiciary consists of a supreme court, and such other courts as the general assembly may establish. The judges are to hold their offices until removed by a vote of both houses.

Sheriffs and justices of the peace are elected by the people.

The state election was fixed for the first Wednesday in April.

Or the manner in which it is proposed to carry this new frame of government into operation, the Journal remarks:

"We can see no other mode than upon forcible revolution, and from the tone of the debates in the convention, and the remarks out of it, it would seem that such a course was not looked upon as improbable. How such an attempt would be met, and what would be the consequences, we do not at the moment propose to discuss. The leading men in the convention were Thomas W. Dorr, Dutee J. Pearce, Aris Balou, John R. Waterman, J. B. Rathbone, Perez Simmons, Palenon Wileott, Dr. J. A. Brown, Saml. H. Wales and one or two others. The debates, although on several occasions warm, were courteous and conducted with propriety, and the members of the convention separated generally in harmony and union, although some were not satisfied with the constitution proposed, and declared that they should not support it. The proceedings of the convention have not excited much attention, and although held in a very central place, few spectators have attended. Indeed, for the last half of the session, it was difficult to keep a quorum of the members in their seats. Doubts were expressed if a quorum would meet in November, and Mr. Dorr thought that the adjournment would prove the death-blow to the whole affair, but the members present at the adjournment very generally and strongly declared their intention to meet again.

"It must be considered a curious spectacle—and one which no other country, if any other state, can present—a number of men assembled for the avowed purpose of overthrowing the government under which they live, without any authority from the legislative or executive powers, and yet proceeding without opposition and without hindrance. The monstrous tyranny of the state government, which was so loudly denounced, was not surely displayed on that occasion."

NEW JERSEY.

RAIL ROAD. It is expected that the section of the Elizabethtown rail road from Bound Brook to Somerville, N. J. will be completed within a month.

NEW YORK.

VAN BUREN MASS CONVENTION. The Hudson Gazette states that James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina; Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi and Silas Wright, of this state, will attend this great convention of the democracy of the river counties, to be held at Kingston, on the 7th of this month. The editor says—

"This is a strong team, as the phrase is, and right glad should we be to make one among the crowd, on that occasion, to listen to these strong men of our party."

CANDIDATES. Bowen Whiting, of Sebec, is the V. Buren candidate for congress in Ontario county, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Greig. Francis Granger (late postmaster general) is the whig candidate.

The Van Buren party of New York have put the following persons in nomination for the assembly. Auguste Daveaz, John O'Sullivan, Daniel C. Pentz, Conrad Swackhamer, Paul Grout George Weir.

SOME OF THE HELDERBERGERS IN LIMBO. The Albany Daily Advertiser of Friday says, "Matthew St. John and John S. Church were arrested yesterday by constable Dodge, in this city, and brought before the police. They were identified by Rider, a deputy sheriff of this county, the two of the 'Helderbergh Indians' who took part in a process of tarring and feathering Rider when on a visit to the Helderbergh in an official capacity. The accused were held to bail to answer the charge in the sum of $500 each."

CANAL TOLLS. The whole amount of tolls collected at Buffalo, from the opening of the navigation up to October 1, 1841, is $281,994, which is $45,390 more than in the same period of 1840. Every where along the line of canal there is an increase of toll collected.

STATE CANALS. We learn from the New York American that the amount received for tolls on the canals of the state during the last week in September, 1841, was

$55,345 25
Same period, 1840,	79,859 60

Increase, $5,485 65
The amount received during each month in the season of navigation for 1840 and 1841, was as follows:

	1840.	1841.
April,	$94,980 26	$91,244 37
May,	254,113 66	353,746 77
June,	205,916 56	254,256 09
July,	161,359 59	232,719 61
August,	197,005 60	219,911 61
September,	271,532 17	297,362 87
	$1,184,897 84	$1,432,240 75
		1,184,897 84

Increase for 1841, $247,342 91

The following statement shows the amount received from the commencement of navigation to the 30th of September, inclusive, for the last seven years

1835,	$1,095,202	1839,	$1,129,795
1836,	1,168,443	1840,	1,184,898
1837,	1,183,405	1841,	1,432,241
1838,	1,083,761

It will be seen from the above table that the tolls for 1841 exceed the amount received during the corresponding period of 1840 by the enormous sum of two hundred and forty-seven thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars!

There has been a perfect avalanche of western products upon us within the last 24 hours. Our marine list to-day presents the following summary of the principal articles—43,354 bushels wheat, 12,485 barrels flour, 5,226 bushels corn, 2,600 bushels oats. In addition there are now (1 o'clock P. M.) nearly twenty vessels in port, among them the ship Superior, whose cargoes we have not been able to procure before going to press. [Buffalo Com.]

HOME INDUSTRY CONVENTION. We learn from the New York Commercial that about one hundred delegates were present at the opening of this convention on Friday morning. Delegates were present from Rhode Island, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, N. Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Indiana and Florida.

The meeting was organized by the appointment of General James Tallmadge, as president; the honorable Mahlon Dickerson, of New Jersey, James Brewster, of Connecticut, Judge Harwood, of Maryland, George Field, of Florida, esqs. vice presidents; and Loring D. Chapin, of New York, M. Copeland, of Connecticut, and L. A. Stokes, of New Jersey, secretaries.—The objects of the convention were succinctly explained from the chair. Mr. Joseph Blunt, of New York, brought the meeting to work by proposing a resolution for the organization of a home league, for the purpose of protecting American home industry, and the diffusion of the principles of free trade. The resolution was ably sustained by the mover, and adopted.

TEMPERANCE CELEBRATION. According to announcement, the great New York temperance mass jubilee took place yesterday. The weather, like the cause, was, from dawn to sunset, full of heaven's own joyousness and serenity; and the great moral exhibition of thousands of our fellow citizens, as they passed through the principal streets and avenues of our city, in the motherhood of peace and the vindication of mind in its consciousness of nobility, was such as has never before been seen among us, one which has undoubtedly shed a gleam of hope around many a hitherto desolated fire-side.

The deputations from abroad were numerous and respectable, and their banners bore some beautiful illustrations of the decided principles of abstinence. Baltimore was most happily represented; and her champions in the cause—among whom were Messrs. POLLARD and WEIGHT—added much to the effect, as missionaries from what might be fairly termed the parent society. Boston deputed her "pilgrims" to the Mecca of temperance amidst great exertions, and a large concourse of travellers. Newark, Brooklyn and Williamsburg sent living assurances of their perfect though youthful maturity in the cause.

But the addresses were the grand climacteric of the day's enjoyments; and of the orator of the day, T. M. WOODCROFT, Esq., secretary of the New York W. Temperance benevolent society, was a masterly specimen of talent impassioned by sacred zeal, and arguments enforced by truth; it was well worthy of the occasion, and evidently went home to every heart.

The vast area of Tompkins square was covered with groups of happy and interested thousands, and the day's celebration terminated at about 5 o'clock at the Park, where the societies were dismissed to repair to the respective halls of refreshment and evening jubilee.

Could but the universe such sight behold,
How many a heart were wakened where none is cold!
How many a mind awake till 'insensate dream,
Wave 'manner things and 'manner men!

Several bands of music accompanied the procession throughout, which was halted in its progress by the approving smiles of thousands of both sexes and all ages and conditions; while the splendor of the banners and the beauty of the various badges and ornaments of each successive society gave an inspiring appearance to the entire spectacle. The crowd seemed to add, that this was the first temperance mass jubilee we have had. May the universe hail its centenary recurrence!

JOHN HAWKINS, the distinguished temperance lecturer from Baltimore, is now on a tour of duty through New Hampshire and Vermont. He spoke at Keene, N. H., on Wednesday last, and devoted his four hours and pledges to total abstinence in that country village. He proceeded thence to fulfil appointments in Rutland, Montpelier and Burlington, Vt. and is to speak in this city on the 21st, (Thursday of next week). [N. Y. Tribune.]

PENNSYLVANIA.

ANOTHER AMERICAN FURNACE. The Crane Iron company have commenced the erection of another anthracite furnace, in the vicinity of their present works on the Lehigh, near Allentown.

EFFECT IN PHILADELPHIA OF THE STOPPAGE OF THE UNITED STATES BANK. A letter from a friend in Philadelphia who has had many opportunities of observing the state of feeling in that city, says that persons at a distance can hardly conceive the extent of private distress which the failure of the United States bank has occasioned. A gloomy gloom seems to have settled upon the faces of a large portion of the inhabitants. In almost all the circles in which you visit, you hear of some poignant instance of suffering—of wealthy families suddenly reduced to poverty, of widows who have lost their all, of orphans stripped of the patrimony which a long life of labor and economy on the part of their parents had collected for them, of merchants compelled by diminished means to relinquish their houses and move out of town, and of laborers robbed of the hard-earned savings of many years. Indeed, the details are melancholy; the usual gaieties of society seem to be arrested; and but for the absence of the customary signs of mourning, one would be disposed to think that the whole city had experienced a great loss, that some calamity had visited it, that a pestilence had carried off its people, or that some great good man, universally beloved, had been taken away by death. Such is the general expression of sadness that you see every where.

[New York Post.

It is not matter of surprise that gloom should overspread the community, if the following account of the depression of the value of stocks in the institutions of the state is to be relied upon. We take from a late number of Bicknell's Reporter a table showing the price at which certain stocks were sold three years ago, and what is the present value of the same stocks.

It will be seen (says the Reporter) that we have mentioned only a portion of the stocks that have been bought and sold so freely in our market within the last few years. The picture it presents is frightful indeed. It will be seen that out of a capital of little more than sixty-two millions of dollars, there is an aggregate loss of nearly fifty-seven millions!! We think, therefore, that we may fairly head the table thus: The bubble of stock speculation illustrated by a few facts.

	Capital.	Value three years ago.	Value at present.	Per cent.	Value at present.	Per cent.
United States bank	25,000,000	100	123	10	39,350,000
American bank	1,000,000	100	300		270,000
Pennsylvania bank	2,000,000	100	500	250	1,500,000
Philadelphia bank	1,250,000	100	103	75	594,000
Farmers' & Merch.	1,300,000	100	50	15	425,000
Commercial bank	1,000,000	100	50	44	350,000
Mechanics' bank	1,400,000	25	54	26	1,120,000
Northern Liberties	350,000	25	45	30	130,000
Shawkill bank	1,000,000	50	50	5	90,000
Southwick bank	250,000	50	60	45	75,000
Kensington bank	250,000	50	75	49	175,000
Penn Township b/k	500,000	50	75	40	350,000
Girard bank	5,000,000	5	53	28	2,500,000
Western bank	500,000	50	59	30	255,000
Mantic & Mech. bank	401,300	50	55	35	150,520
Maryemans' bank	250,000	50	55	34	85,000
Shawkill Nav. co.	1,000,000	100	50	39	390,000
Schuykill Lyons	2,500,000	100	95	70	550,000
Lehigh Coal co.	1,500,000	50	90	15	1,550,000
Lehigh Lumber co.	4,400,000	100	60	60	1,750,000
	32,217,300				16,757,920

MARYLAND.

MAP OF MARYLAND. MR. FIELDING LUCAS, JR. is about to publish a map of Maryland, 55 by 38 inches in size, and containing a portion of the adjoining states, at $5 per copy.

GEORGIA.

TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS RESIGNED. The Georgia papers announce the resignation of Messrs. Alford and Nisbet, of their seats in congress.

BANKS. We have previously noticed the fact, that the Mechanics' bank, and the bank of Augusta, were paying out their bills freely to pay for our staple. We have now the pleasure of announcing to our country friends, that all our banks have come to a similar determination, and the planters may therefore confidently calculate on receiving a specie paying currency, for their crops. [Georgia Chronicle.

ALABAMA.

THE PENAL CODE passed by the last legislature, took effect on the 1st instant. The Mobile correspondent of the New York Advertiser writes that it is one of the most rigid and severe laws of any state in the union, so much so as to make many sections of it a "dead letter." The kind and warm-hearted sympathies of the people are a serious barrier to a rigid administration of justice. The penitentiary is not yet quite completed. A good deal of opposition prevails in the state to the establishment of the penitentiary.

*Nominal

TENNESSEE.

LEGISLATURE. The message of the governor, and the report of the state treasurer, were read in the legislature on the 7th inst. The first is a long document, occupying about eight and a half columns of the Nashville Whig. The report of the treasurer exhibits the financial condition of the state in a rather satisfactory condition—receipts $669,339 23; disbursements $470,744 75—balance in the treasury $139,590 47.

KENTUCKY.

A REAL COMPLIMENT. We learn from the Louisville Courier, that the citizens of Woodford have purchased the fine farm, in that county, on which the honorable J. J. Crittenden was born, and made him a present of it. The price paid was $17,000.

OHIO.

THE BANK QUESTION. The Springfield Republican gives a list of the banks of the state of Ohio, showing an aggregate capital of sixteen millions of dollars and adds that nearly this whole amount of banking capital, required for the trade of the community, is about to be withdrawn by the expiration of the charters which occurs on the 1st January, 1843, a list of which is given.

A FEARFUL TIME AHEAD! The Ohio State Journal of the 6th inst. says: Of $11,115,567 of banking capital returned as paid in in the banks of this state the Bank of Lebanon, Bank of Cincinnati, Lancaster Bank and Clinton Bank of Columbus, not included; there is owned in the state $4,386,132, and out of it $6,750,436. Should no measures be adopted during the ensuing session to renew the charters of the banks, three-fourths of this immense amount will have to be collected by the people, and will be withdrawn from the state altogether. The state of New York, with all its vast resources, could not stand such a drain of capital without being convulsed from centre to circumference. It must unavoidably derange the business of Ohio to such a degree that its blighting effects will be felt for fifteen years to come.

ILLINOIS.

THE ROCK RIVER TRAGEDY. A letter from Judge Ford, dated Oregon city, Illinois, September 27th, to the editor of the Peoria Register, says—"the persons who had a hand in the last summer's murder trial were collected by the people, and will be withdrawn from the circuit court of Ogle county. One hundred and twenty persons were indicted and all acquitted by the jury."

ELECTION. The Journal of Commerce says: Owing to the negligence of some of the returning officers, the complete official vote of Illinois for congressmen, has been delayed to the present time. The official vote from all the counties is as follows:

Opposition.	Union.
1st.	8,043
2d.	6,976
3.	19,533
Total.	34,552

Opposition majority in the state 341; do the presidential election last November, 1,338. Whig gain 1,554.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL. This work is being prosecuted with considerable vigor. New jobs have been taken and the old contractors generally have resumed operations. In the neighborhood of Ottawa in particular, we learn that the canal is going on fully. The new lettings are being covered with shanties and workmen. The basin at that town will soon be completed. The Fox river aqueduct is so far advanced that it could be easily finished this fall if so far could be favored with one month more of warm weather. [Chicago American.

TRIAL OF ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE MEN FOR MURDER. The correspondent of the Illinois Free Trader gives an account of the trial of the persons charged with the murder of the Driskalls, John and William, from which the editor of the Era has made the following extracts:

He says "The September term of the Ogle circuit court has just closed, and its session has been marked by a trial which, in the number of the accused tried in one indictment for the crime of murder, is without a parallel. One hundred and twelve men were indicted for the murder of John Driskall and Vin. Driskall, in June last, near Washington Grove, in this county. About 100 plead not guilty, and were put upon their trial. Judge Ford, whatever might have been his feelings, (the accused were his neighbors, Judge F. living in Ogle county), exhibited upon the bench a stern determination that the accused should be fully and fairly tried. However, the very fact of the great confusion occasioned by so many names in the indictment, left the accused without any evidence to contend against.

The two or three first witnesses, whose names were endorsed upon the indictment, (and by the laws of this state made, except those whose names are so endorsed, can be called to prove the substantive part of the accusation), only knew some of the preparatory steps taken, which led to the supposed offence."

The facts connected with the killing of the Driskalls are stated as follows: That the Driskalls were a part of an organized gang, endeavoring to increase the number of persons in the county of Ogle and the adjoining counties, who carried on a systematized scheme of operations against the lives and property of the inhabitants. That murders, robberies and larcenies had been carried on by them for a number of years; and that, owing to the extent and perfection of their combinations, it had become impossible to convict by the ordinary process of law. Perjured members of their gang swearing to alibis or such defence as were adapted for the occasion, had, for a long time, defied and defeated the course of justice. That a few days previous to the execution of the Driskalls, a Mr. Campbell, a citizen of the highest respectability, had been killed in his own yard, for his presumed exertions against this gang, and that there was sufficient evidence to leave no reasonable doubt, that the Driskalls planned and incited, and probably perpetrated his murder. Further, that the Driskalls were the chief and most dangerous of the gang. They had been the cause of the death of several hundred of the most respectable citizens of Ogle and the adjoining counties of the truth of the foregoing facts.

The case was submitted to the jury who, without leaving their seats, rendered a verdict not guilty. This verdict was given partially from a want of evidence, and therefore warranted the absolute necessity of the case. The writer says the laws could not protect the community where the banditti committed their many enormities—the occasion was too urgent to wait for their uncertain amendment and adoption to the emergency—individually they could not protect themselves—no law they resorted to—therefore they resorted to a counter organization, ordained new rules of evidence, and a new mode of proceeding, such, and such only, as in their judgment were effectual to protect them. There may be those who are disposed to cavil, perhaps to condemn. The judgments and precepts of such, would be essentially exaggerated, could they have dwelt for a short time here, and suffered the murder of their friends, the burning of their dwellings, and the plunder of their property; and, when they called on the law to redress these wrongs, to see those whom they knew to be the perpetrators, escape with impunity."

WISCONSIN.

MORE LEAD. The Southport (Wisconsin) Telegraph announces the discovery of new lead mines in the vicinity of Simunara Moreau, near the southern boundary of the territory. Concerning the quality and extent of the mine, the Telegraph says—"The veins of mineral are the richest of any which have been discovered for the last six years. About 600 miners are already employed in these new diggings, and immense quantities of ore are daily raised. General Dodge is about to come to this territory as one of the proprietors of the new discovery."

This mine, if it turns out as rich as is anticipated, will add much to the value of the lands in that vicinity.

ALEXANDER McLEOD'S TRIAL.

The opening of this case was inserted in the last number of the Register. Without attempting to furnish the testimony produced on behalf of the prosecution, we merely proceed to register the evidence upon which the decision of the case was manifestly predicated. This, with a brief notice of the summoning up by the counsel, and the charge of the judge on committing the case to the jury, will give a distinct view of the facts in the case.

There are some points of this affair which furnish satisfactory evidence in favor of our system of government, however complicated it appears to foreign eyes. The resolute determination which both the general and the state governments evinced in the progress of the case to have their respective jurisdictions maintained, the laws enforced, and justice administered to a foreigner, although that foreigner had taken pains to exasperate the border passions and inflame national prejudices on the one hand, and in whose behalf language verging towards intimidation had been adventured to some extent by proud authorities on the other. But neither popular impulse, nor national pride, has been allowed to swerve our authorities from the strict course which the laws of the land lay down. The facts in the case have been coolly and deliberately sought out and pronounced upon by an impartial jury of the country. It has been fully ascertained that McLeod was not present or assisting in the transaction for which he is indicted, and he is acquitted accordingly.

So ends the McLeod affair.

The affair of the COROLINE, however, remains to be adjudged between the two countries, whose peace was violated by that transaction. The facts in that affair have, in the progress of this trial, been fully developed. The two governments will approach its discussion in a far more deliberate and dispassionate spirit, now that the case is divested of a highly exciting collateral topic. The negotiation of foreign disputes is wisely committed, by the federal constitution, to the EXECUTIVE, and it is sincerely to be hoped that not only the public press, but also, that other public authorities of this country will allow the executive the full enjoyment of its delicate and highly important trust, in this respect, without undue interference. There has been no greater difficulty encountered in our foreign relations, than by premature and imprudent interference in negotiations that have, from time to time, been pending. Amongst these instances stands most prominent the everlasting calls, which are proposed in congress, upon topics that are properly trusted to an executive department only—and which, the premature agitation of, by the legislative department, is calculated invariably to embarrass.

And again—the difficulties which the McLeod case appeared to present, in reference to conflicting jurisdiction between the federal and state governments will, of course, we presume, be obviated, as it certainly ought to be, before another such case occurs, and will be much more likely to be judiciously provided for, when no pending case is to be influenced by the direction which the authorities, on an abstract view of the subject, shall judge to be right.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON. After a number of objections being made by Mr. Hall, and which were partially overruled by the court, the reading of the deposition commenced, but were protracted very much by the technical objections of Mr. Hall. In substance the depositions are as follows:

Sir Allen McNab's evidence—the testimony of sir Allen McNab was taken at Kingston in Canada on the 13th September, 1841, before James E. Small and James Harvey, esqs. commissioners—Joseph Center, esq. being present and interpreting for the people. Information being given to the witnesses, he said I am a barrister; I reside at Dunawin in the Gore district, in the province of Canada, about 45 miles from the town of Niagara; I know a body of militia was assembled at Chippewa during December, 1837, and January, 1838, to the number of between two thousand and three hundred men, and that they were British rebels and American brigands assembled on Navy Island, and on the American shore near Schlosser; they were ordered out by the lieutenant governor of Upper Canada, sir Francis Bond Head, for the purpose aforesaid; I was the officer in actual command of the forces then and there assembled; sir E. B. Head was at Chippewa, except that during the months named, of the force assembled by his directions; I assumed the command by his order, directed to me as colonel of the 3d regiment of Gore militia; the governor general of the two provinces was not at Chippewa at the time mentioned.

I do remember the last time the steamboat Caroline came down previous to her destruction; from the information I received, I had every reason to believe that she came down for the express purpose of assisting the rebels and brigands on Navy Island with arms, men, ammunition, provisions, stores, &c. to ascertain this fact, I sent two officers with instructions to watch the movements of the boat, to note the cargo and report to me; they reported they saw her land a cumbered on, (a six or nine pounder) several men armed and equipped as soldiers, and that she had dropped her anchor on the east side of Navy Island; on the information I had previously received from highly respectable persons in Buffalo, together with the report of these gentlemen, I determined to destroy her that night.

I entrusted the command of the expedition for the purposes aforesaid, to capt. A. Drew, royal navy; seven boats were equipped, and left the Canadian shore; do not recollect the number of men in each boat; Capt. Drew told the rank and file of the 3d regiment of the royal navy; I ordered the expedition and first communicated it to capt. Andrew Drew, on the beach, where the men embarked a short time previous to their embarkation; Captain Drew was ordered to take and destroy the Caroline wherever he found it; he gave the order as officer in command of the forces assembled for the purposes aforesaid; they embarked at the mouth of the Chippewa river; I was there when they embarked, and when the boats set off; I had been there about a quarter of an hour; I noticed most of the persons going into the boats; I stood within ten or twelve feet of most of the boats as the men went on board, and while they were preparing, I was walking about among them, which afforded me the means of knowing who embarked; I know Alexander McLeod, late deputy sheriff of the Niagara district; I have known him for about five or six years; I was on the shore with the boats when they landed, and was near some of the boats when they landed; I saw the lieutenant general of the men who landed, perhaps half of the whole; I did not see Alexander McLeod; I think I made a return to the lieutenant governor of Upper Canada of the officers and men of the Caroline; I am sure the name of Alexander McLeod was not among them.

I have no knowledge that there was any person of the name of McLeod in the expedition; if there had been a person of that name, I think I should have known it; the force under my command volunteered their services on being called on by the lieutenant governor of the province, from which force the expedition was composed by men selected by captain Andrew Drew, under my orders; they were dressed in their usual clothing; the militia were not at that time provided with uniform; the party were armed with pistols and cutlasses; I was the person who gave the orders to Capt. Drew, which were personal, verbal and put in writing; the orders were to take and destroy the Caroline; they were given to the captain and to the officers previous to the expedition starting off from the shore; in my orders to Capt. Drew nothing was said about invading the territory of the United States, but such was their nature that Captain Drew might feel himself justified in destroying the boat wherever he met it.

Mr. Spencer said that as the remainder of the depositions contained merely collateral evidence, he proposed to introduce at present the oral testimony.

William Press was then called to the stand, and being sworn, deposes that he lives in Canada; keeps a public house at Niagara; knew McLeod well; had known him a year before the destruction of the Caroline; remembered the "troubles" in Canada about the 27th of May; was at Chippewa only once; that was on the 27th of Dec.; returned to Niagara the same evening; took the passengers in a wagon from Niagara to Chippewa; entered in a cash book the money received for carrying these persons, the date was 29th Dec.; the money was delivered to him by a man, the name of that evening; put his gun and a box in a yard opposite Davis' tavern; started from Davis' immediately after dark; O'Keefe rode with witness to Niagara, and McLeod went to Stamford; the latter place is about six miles from Chippewa; the roads were very dark; were at least an hour and a half going to Stamford; McLeod left witness at the gate of Captain Morrison's.

John Morrison was next sworn, and deposed as follows—Resides at Stamford, U. C.; moved there from Toronto; came to Toronto in June, 1835; knows Alexander McLeod perfectly; made his acquaintance in '36; heard of the destruction of the Caroline on the morning of the 29th Dec. 1837; heard of it from Captain Cameron, formerly of the 3d regiment of the royal navy; was told by one of his sons that the colonel wanted him at the gate; went down and saw him there; was asked if he had heard the news, and said no; Col. C. then told him that a party had gone down to Schlosser the night before and cut out the Caroline; he replied he had not; witness said that "your friend McLeod is in the house, and I will give you a sample and see him"; he begged to be excused, as he was in a great hurry; Col. C. was in a wagon; he handed witness a piece of wood, saying it was a piece of the Caroline, which witness took to the house and cut from it a piece; kept the piece and returned the larger part to Captain Cameron, from whom it was got under the "Falls"; made the colonel good-by; from other sources then learned during the day of the destruction of the Caroline; Colonel Cameron served with witness in France, Spain and Portugal under the great Duke of Wellington for 14 years; McLeod was in the cottage on the morning of the 29th Dec. 1837; the conversation took place; he came there nearly as usual, as a stranger, at a short time after 7 o'clock on the night before that morning; he slept in the parlor; he drank tea that evening with witness' family; took breakfast in the parlor next morning; McLeod and witness retired to bed in familiar conversation after taking a tumbler of toddy; McLeod had not left his horse; before witness saw Colonel Cameron next morning after returning the piece of wood to Cameron, witness went to the cottage; at the threshold of the door saw McLeod half dressed in the room; repeated to him the intelligence received from Cameron; McLeod said, "You don't say so?" Witness replied Colonel Cameron told me so.

By the court—When did he make that answer?

Just when I said Colonel Cameron had said the Caroline had been cut out and sent over the falls.

Examination continued—McLeod then said, "I wish to God—I had been there!" and McLeod continued, "I think, Mr. Archibald, I was not a horse!" which witness off to get the horse; there was a little part eight—he was pressed not to think of going before breakfast, and agreed to remain—he did remain—he then, after being dressed and having breakfast, went down with him and saw him get his horse and ride towards Chippewa—never saw McLeod till the afternoon of the 30th January 1838.

Archibald Morrison, son of the last witness, an intelligent looking lad, was then sworn and examined—he deposes that he knew McLeod—had seen colonel Duncan Cameron sometimes—he was in Toronto as witness believed—was at his father's gate when Colonel Cameron came up about eight o'clock in the morning; thought he would like to see him; to come to him, I went up to the house; a gentleman was with Colonel C. they were in a two horse wagon; my father went down, I went down with him; heard them say that the Caroline was burnt, heard Colonel C. say that; McLeod was then in the parlor of my father's house; he was there till about five, before tea I think—he went away about morning after breakfast, about eight o'clock; he went away on horseback.

Mr. Margaret Morrison was then examined: knows McLeod—has known him for six years—remembers hearing of the burning of the Caroline; it was in the morning of the 29th Dec. 1837; the intelligence was burnt the night before—the intelligence was brought by Colonel Cameron—understood that he brought a part of the boat—saw the piece that Mr. Morrison cut off—at the time McLeod was in the parlor—he came there the night before—about 7 o'clock—he was there till the night he stayed there all of the morning; he thought he would like to go away that night—Mr. Morrison and McLeod sat up till half past 12 o'clock—witness sat up, part of the time being in the room—McLeod and Mr. Morrison took a glass of toddy together—McLeod slept in the parlor; he slept on a "stretcher" (witness explained this as being a cot), the parlor was not commonly used as a bedroom—Mr. McLeod's boots were taken from the parlour before bed time to be dried by the kitchen fire—they were at the same place in the morning—they were then dry, but were wet the night before—Mr. McLeod did not leave the place during the night to the knowledge of witness—could not have seen him; did not see him till the morning after breakfast.

By the court—Saw McLeod for the last time that night about twelve o'clock; the "stretcher" was made up before the young ladies retired, the young ladies retired about ten o'clock; saw McLeod next morning about eight o'clock; had then been up about half an hour; he was in the parlour when told McLeod was gone; did not see him till the morning after breakfast; what had happened about the Caroline, and McLeod wished he had been there; saw McLeod again in the afternoon of the same day; when he returned from Chippewa, on his way to Niagara; he had a cannon ball in his hand, which was said to have been fired from Navy Island.

By Mr. Spencer—Was married to Mr. Morrison 13 years; and she remained about three days after he came from Toronto; can tell certainly that it was on the 23d of January that McLeod was again at Mr. Morrison's house; there is no room for mistake as of his being there on the night the 23rd Dec.—the night that the Caroline was destroyed; the burning of the Caroline was talked about at the breakfast table that morning as an event that had occurred during the previous night. The daughter who lived with McLeod had not been at her father's for a long time till about a month ago, this circumstance had affected the intimacy of the family with McLeod; it had broken it off altogether; does not know why she has returned.

forced by the mandate of the law to appear and testify.

The witness very properly received sympathy from a jury. To that we do not object, and when witnesses seemed to be treated with kindness, with asperity, even with insult, it is very natural that the sympathies of the jury should be excited in their behalf, and that the prejudices of the jury should be roused against the counsel who thus roughly handle them, and transcend the limits of their duty. If any such sentiments, gentlemen, have been originated in your minds, if you will find them, we will satisfy you in the extraordinary case in which he has been engaged and which is submitted to your consideration, and that you will have less sympathy for the witnesses who have come here to swear away the prisoner's life than you would have for witnesses in other circumstances and on a different occasion.

It is natural, gentlemen, too, that the counsel for the prosecution should indulge in a firm belief on the one hand of the truth of his own case and the reverse of ours. But I, on the other hand, may as properly and reasonably entertain a disbelief of the case of my own adversary. Both cases cannot be true; both cannot stand. To the grapple here for mastery, one or the other is to be overthrown, and your verdict is to declare who is to fall and who is to stand triumphant, which is to be overthrown and who is to remain firm as the rock of ages—as truth itself. That's the point. And it is natural I should feel warmly, and as I believe our case to be the truth, and the case for the prosecution to be not only untrue, (which implies only mistake or misapprehension), but I am sorry to say, utterly false. And I desire, you gentlemen of the jury, to understand that word in its legitimate and strongest application.

And to say that the prosecution has been sought to be upheld by a combination of the rankest perjury ever brought into a court of justice since the sun shone in Christendom; in a case, too, involving not only the life of an individual, but interests of the great nations in two hemispheres that hold the highest rank in the map of the world, two nations bound in the closest ties, inhabited by races speaking the same language—one common people, kith and kin; I do not shrink from saying that the sole object of this prosecution has been to involve these countries in a bloody war, and believing that, I confess I have felt but little charity for the witnesses who have sustained it, and no more than a doubtful respect manifested as an awkwardness as I felt. This, gentlemen of the jury, is my apology.

The learned gentlemen then referred to the decision of the supreme court, which had excluded the question arising out of the principles of international law as applicable to the defense of the prisoner. By that decision, the learned judge who now presided over the deliberations had declared himself to be bound.

Of this decision, Mr. Spencer did not complain, nor was it expected by him. He was well acquainted with his honor, and with the uniform defence with which he had all times regarded the decisions of the supreme court.

But though thus deprived of this ground of defence, they were not without defence on another ground. In the correctness of the decision of the supreme court, he had no belief; and as a member of the bar, and an American citizen, he felt it his duty to be contrary to the laws of nations, and to the laws of reason; and he regretted it had ever been put forth as the opinion of the supreme court of this state, on affairs growing out of the intercourse of nations.

To that opinion, however, he should, for the purposes of this trial, pay all due deference and respect. Should the result of this trial, however, result in a conviction, he should be no other tribune, as he uniformly does elsewhere, strongly and decidedly opposed that opinion, and have it renewed, and, he doubted not, reversed.

Mr. Spencer then passed to the other branch of the defence—the proof as to the participation of McLeod in the Caroline expedition. He began, of course, from it. Before entering upon a review of that proof, Mr. Spencer adverted to the fact that as long ago as an entire year, the whole testimony for the defence was within the knowledge of the prosecuting counsel and the world; while with him and his learned associates, all was darkness and obscurity, and they were brought to be brought to uphold the prosecution, or who were to be the witnesses; which witnesses had long enjoyed the advantage of communication with each other, and with the prosecuting counsel.

And he moreover believed that these witnesses had been brought together in committee rooms, and then canvassing their own testimony and the testimony and disposition to be brought before the court and jury in support of the defence. In these proceedings, however, Mr. Spencer did not believe the attorney general, or either of the learned gentlemen associated with him had any participation. But if any part of his conduct, or his voice supposed that the learned counsel who appeared here on the part of the prosecution, constituted all the legal gentlemen who had applied their talents and energies to the preparation and support of this prosecution, he would tell him he was woefully mistaken.

Able as these gentlemen appeared, before this court, he constituted but a corporal's guard to the whole array that has been engaged in this labor—the object of which array was not for furtherance of justice as between McLeod and the people, or the taking of the life of McLeod individually, as to the fomentation of disturbances; and the promotion of a war between this country and Great Britain. If proof was wanted of the existence of this legal combination it could be proved abundantly in the number of witnesses that had been brought forward to swear away the life of McLeod, who had sprung up like flies, from where nobody knew, or how collected, nobody could say.

Time and again had this charge been examined by magistrates at the west, and amongst the whole array of thirty witnesses for the prosecution, scarce any of them appeared originally as witnesses against McLeod at those examinations. These facts alone, did no others exist, sufficiently indicated the extent of the combination that had been brought to bear in support of this prosecution—aided by secret societies and combinations with contributions of money, personal services, food, raiment and other necessities that could be found required.

Most if not all the witnesses for the prosecution belonged to these societies, and deserved no credit to the estimation of any intelligent jury or of any reasonable man.

Mr. Spencer then proceeded to a review of the testimony, passing over, at a glance, those who testified only as to the particulars of the destruction of the Caroline. These witnesses, Mr. Spencer contended, were of no interest, at heart for the success of this prosecution; and he dwelt with great severity upon the reluctance with which the witness Wells was compelled, on his cross examination, to admit facts which he assiduously sought to conceal. But even the testimony of these witnesses, and of Mr. Wells in particular, Mr. Spencer contended was not entitled to any credit.

Mr. Spencer then proceeded to examine the testimony intended to connect the prisoner with the murder of Durfee; and he passed in scrutinizing review, and with most ingenious and able criticism, these witnesses and their testimony in the order in which they were called by the attorney general. The whole mass of their testimony, in all its material points, the learned gentleman pronounced, and endeavored to convince the jury, was a continuous detail of perjury upon perjury—interspersed only with an occasional truth, few and far between, to give their falsehoods credence with the jury.

In reference to that part of the testimony of the witness, Parke, relative to the boastful assertions of McLeod as to the fatal agency he had in the burning of the Caroline and the murder of Durfee, Mr. Spencer attributed all the knowledge or belief of Parke, as to such boasts, to what he had read in the newspapers, and to the influence of his own vanity, and to the machinations known to his own personal knowledge.

As to those boastful assertions, Mr. Spencer declared, on the authority of McLeod, had never been made by the prisoner; and the publications of such declarations had at all times been a matter of perfect surprise to McLeod. As the counsel of the prisoner, Mr. Spencer declared, he was obliged to order him, not to reply to and refute those publications while a prisoner awaiting trial; but to leave its refutation to the developments of the trial.

Mr. Spencer was still proceeding with his examination of the testimony, which the court adjourned to dinner.

Second Address.—P. M. The court room, on the reassembling, was densely thronged with spectators, nearly half of whom were ladies, who presented a splendid array of "youth, beauty and fashion," and who paid great attention to the display of eloquence, the anticipation of which had attracted them to the court room. After a few preliminary remarks, Mr. Spencer commenced his criticism upon the testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution, with whom and with which he dealt with the most unsparing severity.

In the course of his remarks upon the character of the witnesses and their testimony, Mr. Spencer introduced a withering rebuke of the "insurgents" and "rebels" who were engaged in the cause of the slave—some of which he directed particularly to certain participants in those troubles here present, and within the scope of his sight—to (to wit) Mr. McKenzie, Dr. Theller and Gen. Sutherland.)

After expressing his full confidence in the jury, and his satisfaction that to the central point of the grand jury, he would have the honor of freeing an innocent man from the fangs of an iniquitous conspiracy, and complimenting his colleagues, the learned gentleman proceeded to comment on the evidence for the defence.

He contended that he had amply demonstrated by the evidence that McLeod was not, and secondly where he was on that eventful night. The result which he arrived at, and which, as he deemed, the jury must inevitably arrive at, was that all the testimony which went to show that McLeod was either in the expedition against the Caroline or at Chippewa on that night, was not only false, but willfully false; and that the testimony which proved that McLeod was on that night miles from Chippewa, and at the house of Captain Morrison, was the only testimony to that point that was true testimony—the only testimony entitled to the credence of the jury, and upon which they were bound to find a verdict of acquittal.

Mr. Spencer then proceeded to address the grand jury the prosecution. He would, he said attempt to go over the whole ground travelled over by the learned counsel for the defence; for he had yet to learn that imaginary facts and fictitious circumstances, instead of the true state of a case, as presented by the facts laid down before a jury in the shape of testimony, were grounds upon which to base an acquittal or a conviction were to be the criterion of judgment for a jury. Indeed, so far had his learned opponent travelled out of the case, as it stood before the court and jury, that for his part he should have thought the learned gentleman had supposed he had been talking to people in England instead of people of America.

With this preface, Mr. Jenkins introduced the character, extent, &c. of the border troubles which preceded the tragical events which gave rise to this prosecution. And here he would remark, in vindication of the character of the people of the United States, that he had been assailed here and elsewhere, by reason of the part taken by comparatively but a handful of her citizens in these troubles, that is a matter as much to the honor of the American public as it is strange in fact, that out of a population of some seventeen millions, only two or three hundred could be found to embark in an enterprise surrounded by so many and so many appeals to the sympathies of the human heart.

Of the facts and circumstances immediately preceding and leading to the running of the Caroline to Navy Island and Schlosser, her almost immediate destruction, and of the probable participation of the prisoner in the event, Mr. Jenkins presented a brief but graphic recapitulation; and then passed to a review of the testimony that has been adduced on both sides, in relation to the alleged participation of the prisoner in that tragedy. The general and wholesale aspersions cast by the learned gentleman who last spoke on the part of the prisoner, upon the able array of witnesses, for the prosecution, was unworthy of reply; but so far as he sought to destroy their testimony by argument and the contradictions elicited from the prisoner's witnesses, he deemed it his duty to meet by such argument as was within the scope of his humble abilities, and such evidence as the witnesses for the prosecution had placed within his reach.

The learned gentleman also alluded to the assertions of Mr. Spencer relative to the number and desperate character of those whom, as he alleged, had taken a deep interest in fishing up testimony to sustain the prosecution, and collecting witnesses to sustain the same. He said, however, and admitting all his learned opponent had said was true—which was not—he contended that, as compared with those who, with the prisoner, were engaged in the Caroline expedition, and, since then, with their colleagues and kindred spirits, in unremitted, reckless and unrelenting efforts to bring about the assassination and crucifixion of the prisoner at the bar—from the hands of justice—in such a comparison, the learned gentleman asked, on which side desperation and recklessness to truth would stand out the most glaring and unquestionable.

Mr. Jenkins was interrupted at the close of this branch of his arguments by an adjournment of the court.

Second Address.—At which hour the court reassembled, and a dense audience collected—of whom, notwithstanding a severe rain had set in, a large share were ladies.

Order being obtained, Mr. Jenkins proceeded with his argument, in the course of which he severely and modestly rebuked the learned counsel for his argument by his learned opponent, (Mr. Spencer) for the intimidation of the jury, that a verdict of guilty, from them, would certainly involve the country in a sanguinary war with Great Britain.

That insinuation, and the intimidation it was meant to produce, the learned speaker assured the jury it was their duty—a duty rendered incumbent upon them by their oath as jurors, by their honors as American citizens, and by their natural pride and sense of national justice—to throw to the winds; and to be governed, in the finding of their verdict, by no extraneous considerations, and be influenced by no consideration not expressed in the oath they had taken—to render a verdict in accordance with the testimony, and influenced by the testimony alone. Their duty owed to their country—they had sworn to their country to perform it—and to their country they must leave the consequences, be they what they may.

From these remarks, Mr. Jenkins passed on to the consideration of the testimony adduced in behalf of the prisoner—pointing out its discrepancies, and arguing upon what he deemed its contradictory portions, its incongruities, and its fallacies. From the restrictions which are placed upon the mode of taking testimony by commission, he showed that, upon the record, there is no ground for taking the documentary evidence in Canada; produced upon this trial, that the prosecution labored under great disadvantage, and that, from the necessary formation of the interrogatories here, it was within the power of the witness to withhold much, very much, of the important matter that a personal examination on the witness stand in court would compel to disclose.

THURSDAY, OCT. 12, 1841, (2 o'clock). As it was known that Judge Gridley would charge the jury this afternoon, the court house was crowded with anxious auditors, a large proportion of them being ladies, who presented an ample display of beauty and intelligence, many of them being fair enough to excite one sigh with every regard; and it was probable we would never again look on their lovely faces.

At a few minutes after two o'clock Judge Gridley rose and delivered the following CHARGE.

Gentlemen of the jury:

On your fatigue at your leaving at length arrived at the present stage of this long protracted trial. After your patience having been drawn upon for six days in listening to the trial, and a day and a half in hearing the arguments of counsel, you have at last arrived at that period where you are called on to discharge the last and deeply solemn duty which devolves upon you. I refer to the duty of pronouncing a verdict. I have instances under which you approach the performance of this duty.

We know, it is true, that a deep and fervid interest is felt in this case throughout the entire land; and we also aware that a portion of the public press has from the commencement of this controversy teemed with inflammatory and passionate articles. We have likewise heard of popular convulsions in various parts of the country where the indictment against the prisoner was found. Still, though these disturbing influences may prevail elsewhere, we can at least say that they have not entered the solemn temple of justice. If we have seen any popular feeling here, we saw it only in other quarters, they have not reached the portals of this building, consecrated as it is to the faithful administration of that justice to which the people and the prisoner alike appeal.

During the proceedings here, it may also be remembered, gentlemen, and auditors in the persons of loyal subjects of Great Britain, have been present, since were in arms in defence of their soil, and, on the other hand, we had the presence of more than one distinguished actor in the scenes of blood and suffering connected with the recent abortive attempt at revolution in the Canadian provinces; yet these individuals, who have been so long and so prominently, must have been deeply interested auditors and spectators of what has occurred, not a single murmur has been heard—not a single ebullition of excited feeling has escaped.

All has been quietness and good order, and a signal proof that here is a place where justice can be purely administered, and that here, in the absence of all other influences, the decision of an upright, intelligent, and honest jury will be acknowledged sovereign and supreme. It is under these auspicious circumstances that I invite you, gentlemen, to the questions connected with this great and important case.

Now, gentlemen, the additional passing remark and it is this: in order to appreciate properly the questions on which you are to pronounce your judgment, it will be necessary that you should keep your minds entirely unembarrassed by the consideration of other matters which have in reality nothing whatever to do with the case.

The counsel on one side and the other, as it was their duty and right, have presented such arguments and discussed such topics as they deemed likely to serve the interests of the parties whom they represent. But the tribunal which tries has also duties to perform, altogether different from those incumbent on the advocates intrusted with the interests of those who are placed at its bar. The case of this prisoner, gentlemen, I may simply say, is to be tried like that of any other person indicted for the same offence.

The first question is, has any murder been committed? and the second question is—is prisoner at the bar guilty of that murder?

On the first question, gentlemen, the supreme court of this state, as you have already learned, during the past session, has passed upon the question of a binding on you and me. We are sitting here to dispense justice in the circuit court, and must be governed by the decision of that superior tribunal, which has sent down this issue to be tried here. That then is no longer an open question, but an adjudicated one, and with it you have no concern.

The circumstances out of which this indictment originates are briefly these: In December, 1837, a body of Canadian refugees and American citizens occupied Navy Island—fortified themselves there, and opened a cannonade upon the Canadian main shore, where some 3,000 men were assembled to suppress the rebellion. It was the intention of the occupants of Navy Island by certain individuals in Buffalo, and one William Wells, the owner of the steamboat Caroline, for the purpose of promoting his own interests, as he swears before you, had the steamboat cut out from the ice where it lay in Buffalo Creek, and on the morning of the 30th of December, the fatal—that boat made her first trip from Buffalo to Schlosser, touching at Navy Island; and that after that, on the same day, she made two trips to Navy Island from Schlosser—that it was instrumental in carrying armed men—arms—provisions—and one piece of artillery to Navy Island.

Earlier than this it does not appear that the Caroline was instrumental in promoting the interests of the occupants of Navy Island. Now the colonial authorities in Canada saw fit to regard this boat as a portion of the armament of the insurgents, and resolved to destroy her. Sir Allan McNab, the commander of the military forces, and a number of volunteers to embark in boats, of which five reached the Caroline, and from thence she was reached, whilst her peaceful occupants were asleep in her berths, and with cutlasses, boarding pikes and fire arms, the attacking party chased the persons on board, wounding some of them, and the others others experienced the same fate we know not, and then having captured the boat, the attacking party sent her over the Falls.

This is a brief history of the transaction so far as it is necessary for you to consider it for the purpose of understanding and disposing of this case. The acts I have described are held by the prisoner's counsel to be necessary and proper for the defence of the prisoner for the reason, first, because these acts were authorized, and secondly, because done in self defence, and again, because the whole transaction has already become the subject of negotiation between the two governments, so as to deprive the court of jurisdiction over the offence.

These arguments have been laid before the supreme court of this state, after great research and deliberation, and after a full and free discussion of the case, consideration, pronounced that this act of the killing of Durfee, although performed in the prosecution of an enterprise like that I have already described, was murder, and it follows then, gentlemen, that all who were engaged in it are guilty of the same offence. It is necessary that you should know that the prisoner has been indicted for the offence that the boat should have struck the fatal blow, to render him guilty. Enough that he was engaged with others in that enterprise. This question then is to be excluded from your consideration. It has, it is true, been dwelt on by counsel on both sides in their opening addresses, and during the progress of the trial. I refer to it however to inform you that it has been already adjudicated on and is set at rest.

Then comes the question, the important question, on which you are to pass—is Alexander McLeod guilty of that murder? The counsel for the people have presented many witnesses before you, the testimony of which you have heard, and I have shown that the prisoner is guilty, and in order, gentlemen, that you may understand and appreciate this testimony, I shall briefly place it reviewed before you. I shall divide it into two classes—the first branch embracing the direct and circumstantial evidence, other than that arising from confessions connecting the prisoner with the crime; the second class of evidence will consist entirely of confessions.

The first witness, gentlemen, who has testified before you is Gilman Appleby. He is the only witness who was on board of the boat at the time of the attack. He was the captain of the boat—he was the prisoner's cabin-boy—he was a Scotchman, a little before midnight, as he thinks by information that there were boats approaching—he arose and partially dressed, made his way up the stairs till he found his further progress arrested—he returned, but again returned, and had opened the door about a foot when it was violently pushed open by some one outside, who then made a plunge at him with a sword, which glanced along two of the vest buttons and struck against the button of his pantaloons.

He was considerably excited, but in that momentary glance he saw the features of the man thus attacking him, and his impression then was that the individual was Alexander McLeod; but with all commendable prudence and caution—for which I honor him—that witness says that and the agitation of that momentary glimpse of his pantaloons, he passed in the twinkling of an eye, he cannot say that it was McLeod. He had once before seen the prisoner in Buffalo, and it struck him at the time that his appearance was similar to the individual who thrust at him, but it was only one hurried glance, and he immediately replied to the question of counsel, when on the stand here, that he could not say that it was Alexander McLeod.

The next witness is Samuel Brown. He resided at Chippewa, and was engaged in tending bar for one Smith who kept a tavern there, and he says he went on the morning of the 30th of December, to a place called the "Cut," and up the Niagara river—that he was at the entrance of this "cut" that he was at the beacon-light—saw the boats passing into the "Cut"—and then he thinks he recognised McLeod among the party embarking in the boats—it was dark—but the witness does not profess the certainty of his belief that he then and there saw the prisoner. He says he went from there to Davis's tavern, where a portion of these persons came, and there by a light which shone from within the bar-room—or by a light out on the stoop, although he cannot remember any light hanging out there—he professes to have seen them again Alexander McLeod.

He then says that the next morning, gentlemen, between daylight and sunrise, he heard some of the men in the tavern talking of McLeod being wounded, and was over on the opposite stoop—the witness looked across, he said, and then thought he again recognised McLeod, and he says he went over to see whether McLeod was wounded—he saw no one there, but he then saw the prisoner, and did not see him. He was then inquired of in relation to the degree of certainty with which he could say that the man whom he saw was McLeod—and he said in reply that "he saw a man whom he called McLeod." Another question was put to him, and he said "I mean to say, I am sure that it was McLeod, as that he now sits before me."

That is, gentlemen, his testimony. He submitted to a long cross-examination; and how far it went to shake your confidence in his statements, it is your province, gentlemen, to decide. There is, however, one consideration which will submit to you. It is this, that witness who are to judge of the credit to be attached to the testimony of a witness, it is right and proper that you should observe his manner on the stand; the degree of intelligence which he exhibits; the amount of powers of observation and accuracy of recollection; and having done so, you are to decide whether his answers satisfy you, and if they do, and on the whole whether his statements are of such a character, when taken all in all, that you can rely upon them; and if not sufficient to satisfy you altogether, you must decide in how far you should allow, what degree of credence you must repose in his testimony, and that you will bestow on it, and no more.

It is argued by the prisoner's counsel that the degree of darkness which prevailed then, and is testified to was such as made it exceedingly rash for this witness to pronounce so confidently that he was able to recognise McLeod as well there as here to day. It is also argued that he stands before you, impeded as to his character for truth and veracity. And to sustain this impeachment a witness has been called and has appeared before you and testified that he lives near the residence of this witness, and he says that he heard him speaking on this subject, I think at some former period, when some person, and among other things he said he knew nothing at all relative to this matter that could do McLeod any harm or any good.

The statement which he makes of what he said is somewhat qualified. It is remarked on the other hand that witnesses who are subpoenaed frequently make careless observations, and that it is better to hear them, might wish to avoid attendance on this trial.—This is a very true fact that persons often make careless remarks, and had Drown made such a statement in presence of any one who could have excused him from attending here, then the plea of counsel would have been entitled to greater regard.

If in truth the facts which he has here stated were remembered by him at that time, then they were all facts material, and he could not have said, consistent with truth, that he knew nothing of sufficient importance to harm or benefit the prisoner. This gentleman, is the extent of that individual's testimony. You are to take it into your consideration, and are to exercise your judgment in reference to the effect it may have in detracting from your confidence in the evidence of Drown. I may add that, in order to restore your confidence in Drown, Bates was questioned, and in reply stated that that individual's character for veracity had latterly improved; that formerly he had been an intemperate man; but he was now reformed.

The next witness, gentlemen, is Isaac P. Carson—he is a native of this state, a competent trader, and he is a Chippewa of this nation in his business; he testifies that he was at Mackin's store on the afternoon of the 29th of December, 1837; that he there saw Megin, Usher, and the prisoner passing out of Davis'; that he also saw him next morning at sunrise with others, on the "barge"; that he was a party to the statements that he could see only his head and shoulders; that he was telling of his exploits, and saying that he had killed a d—d Yankee; that he saw him again two or three days afterwards; that he then said he would like to be on another such expedition, and turn Buffalo.

This is an analysis of this witness' testimony, which will spread over several pages of our paper. You will observe, gentlemen, this witness' testimony, on his cross-examination, and will judge how far that weakened the force of the statements made by him on his niter examination. There is one point, however, that demands, your particular attention. This witness was inquired of as to who else were present when he and McLeod dourning and burning the boat, and he killed a Yankee. At first, the witness could not recollect any one; at last, he said he could name one Caswell.

He was then asked whether he was present at this trial, and he said yes. He was then asked when it first occurred to him that he saw Caswell there that morning, and he confessed that it was that very morning. The cross-examination was protracted, and in the course of it, it came out that he had conversed with Caswell as late as the morning of the day on which he testified on the stand before you; that they talked of the affair of the Caroline, and that Caswell informed him that he was there that morning. It may be that that was all true, and that it really did occur to him that Caswell was there, till the moment the question was put to him. But there you are judge of that.

The next witness is Charles Parkes, barkeeper at Davis' tavern. He testifies that the prisoner went to bed at Davis' tavern early in the day, and got up between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening; that a gentleman called for him, and was not at home; that he had an hour or three quarters of an hour afterwards he saw him between Davis' and the Chippewa creek—that a good many people were on the road—that McLeod went into one of the boats—that at about sunrise the next morning he saw him at Davis'; that he again saw him a few days afterwards in the officers' mess at Fort Snelling, and that he said that he had killed a d—d Yankee—or something to that effect.

At the close of his examination this witness was asked whether he could say with considerable certainty that he saw McLeod at the "cut," and he said he could—he was asked further and he said he had no doubt of it—he also states that it was pretty dark that night—and that the money was paid to McLeod—but although he went as a witness, he cannot recollect the amount of the money paid on the occasion.

It is also argued that this witness tells a very extraordinary story in relation to the manner in which he has been induced to appear here—that he started from home to make himself useful, and that he was called by some one who accused him on the way with the design of arresting him to ensure his attendance as a witness on this trial—that he returned home—again set out, and was arrested in Buffalo before he had time to transact any business—that further, he was ignorant of the laws of this state, and was frightened by the alleged representations of Mr. Hawley that he (Mr. H.) had power to enforce his attendance here, that he consented to come.

All this may or may not be the truth. This witness also testifies that he was solicited to come here by persons religiously opposed to bearing arms. Now, gentlemen, I have no opinion to express on these matters. You are the sole judges of this testimony, and with you I leave it.

The next witness is Caswell—he whom Carson spoke of, and he testifies in substance that he also saw McLeod that morning at Davis' tavern. Then comes Quimby—he is the witness from Pennsylvania—he testifies that he resided some two miles from Chippewa; that he was there on the 29th with a load of hay, which he sold to the government; that he did not get paid for it at the time of the sale; that he remained till evening; and in the course of the evening saw the prisoner at Davis' tavern; that he then went home from 9 till the next morning, when he started for home; stopped at Petu's about a mile off all night; that he then turned back and was again in Chippewa between daylight and sunrise; that he went back to get payment for his hay at the commissary's office; that he was going there when he saw McLeod: that he then went to the "cut" and saw him; that he heard him boast of his exploits on the Caroline, and heard him declare that there was the blood of a Yankee on his sleeve.

He is questioned then as to whether he expected to receive payment for his hay at that early hour, and whether there were any persons on the office, and he said there was not; that he did not get paid in good season; but did not after all get paid, and finally went home.

But, gentlemen, it seems according to the testimony of Mr. Lott, of Lottsville, Pennsylvania, that on one occasion this Quimby came with another person for the purpose of making an affidavit before Mr. Lott, who is a magistrate, and that that gentleman was not that he was a magistrate, and that Quimby was unworthy of credit; that he went to another magistrate by whom the affidavit was taken and sent on.

Lott says that he resides in Lottsville—that the reputation of the witness Quimby, while resident there, was very bad; that he was not to be believed on oath; and that in informing the prisoner's counsel of his character, he (Mr. Lott) was not at all motivated by revenge or malice to gratify. Now it is said, and it is true, that ordinarily a witness, to invalidate the testimony of another, should be called from the neighborhood. But you are the arbiters of this question, and in your hands I leave it.

Justice P. Stephens is then called and sworn. He testifies that he was present on the night in question, and that he saw three boats go out and return, and he distinctly and positively swears that he saw McLeod disembark at the beacon-light.

That is a statement which is not corroborated by other witnesses, and is on the contrary hostile to the statements of all the other witnesses on both sides. And that he was discredited from the stand without cross-examination. He has testified to a deliberate falsehood—a falsehood for which the palpitating plea of the probability of a mistake cannot be offered.

Leonard Anson is the next witness. He swears that he saw McLeod at the bar in Davis' tavern; that there were others there who took part in the expedition, and that he saw the prisoner, and that he committed the greatest crime; that there he saw McLeod draw out his pistol and declare that he had killed a d—d Yankee, and that he pointed out the blood on the stock of the pistol.

This, it is contended on the part of the prisoner is an improbable story—that he could not have seen McLeod at the bar, and that the other witnesses who have been submitted to you in relation to the testimony of this individual which it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon now. You are the judges of their weight and the attention which should be given them.

These are I believe the only witnesses belonging to the first class of evidence against the prisoner. They are the only witnesses who testify from their own knowledge as to facts unaltered with confessions, which go to connect McLeod with this enterprise.

And the prisoner's counsel contends that some of these witnesses have been impeached, and that others have appeared in very doubtful circumstances; that the darkness of the night was a good reason why no other witnesses could be called; that the prisoner's arguments of these testifying so positively that they recognized McLeod with such certainty, and that that they have thus proved is enough to throw some shade of suspicion on the whole. That is the view taken of it by the prisoner's counsel.

Whilst on the other hand the counsel for the prosecution insist that it is a mass of testimony which you must believe, and which believing you cannot doubt the fact of the prisoner's guilt. It is your province to criticise all this and pass upon it.

The other branch of the evidence is that contained in the confessions of the prisoner; and there is a principle involved in the description of this evidence, to which the counsel of the prisoner has directed your attention; that confessions are in themselves the most suspicious kind of evidence—easily fabricated—and difficult to be disproved—liable to be mistaken—partially heard—partially remembered—and, unless corroborated by other testimony, the rule of law is that they are not to be taken into account. All the most distinguished jurists, is, that they are the most unsafe description of testimony.

Nevertheless, they are competent to be weighed, judged of, and passed upon like all the other evidence in the case. I therefore, gentlemen, call your attention to the evidence.

Henry Myers: and would admonish you that one rule by which you are to test the declaration of witnesses is, that you are to see whether they are probable—like what men in like circumstances would do.

The last is that on one occasion whilst he passed Niagara Falls he stopped at a tavern and saw McLeod, with a number of others—that McLeod was accosted by name by another of the party—that he boasted that he had killed one d—d Yankee, or rebel—and that he compelled the witness to "treat" the party.

You will judge of the credibility of this witness' story; but there is one thing he said which has not been noticed by any of the counsel, and what may aid you in passing judgment on his evidence—he said that he marked the features of McLeod well, as he determined to use him in a similar manner if ever he got him on his side of the frontier.

The next witness is Calvin Wilson. He is the keeper of a ferry at Youngstown, in Canada, and he says, that a few days after the destruction of the Caroline he went over to Canada—went into a house where was a person by the name of Rayneock, McLeod, and others whom he named, who had been actors in this expedition, and that McLeod said one of the rebels got shot on the wharf.

This witness has been cross-examined at last, and confessed that though a poor man with a family, he had given two hundred dollars to the "patriot" cause, and declined answering whether or not he had harbored the notorious Lett. To rebuke this testimony, a respectable inhabitant of the town of Niagara, named Hamilton, was produced and testified that he well knew Rayneock, and that that individual was absent in England, at the time specified by Wilson.

The next witness worthy of notice is Timothy Whelan. He was a Canadian, a messenger after prison, and the attorney general, supposing that there had been a reservation in favor of this witness. He deposes that about a year before he had gone from Whitley, Canada, where he lived, to Niagara—was near the ferry—saw McLeod coming up from the water side—and the witness remarked to him that the time had come when he had time to talk of the Navy Islanders, and about their number—that McLeod said they never would have the Caroline there again, and added that he was the second or third man who boarded her, and then some person, a stranger to Whelan, interrupted the conversation by taking McLeod off—that he, the witness, turned from the ferry, reflecting he had not a pass, and went back to the town.

Gentlemen, you are carefully to examine this evidence, and decide according to your conscientious conviction of the truth, as it really is. If you believe this evidence, notwithstanding some objections to it, and notwithstanding some deductions which are to be made—if you believe that it does, after the deductions which are to be made, it is sufficient to call up the prisoner to answer, then you are to take into consideration the defence opened before you. And it is undeniable that, in looking at this mass of evidence, there is much that appears questionable, and much of it remains that is not powerfully attacked. And other words, that have no part or lot, no sort of participation in this enterprise; this, after the disposal of the first question already passed upon, is the only other ground of defence that exists. And in my judgment no degree of suspicion should attach to it as an original defence, because it is, as I just said, ceed, flushed with victory, they will elate themselves with savage ferocity, and will trample on the rights of the weak, and even for a moment trample on the rights of the strong. And then will fall most assuredly the strong pillars that now support and protect public virtue and freedom. I fervently pray that our happy country may not be visited by so direful a calamity.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted. The convention was then further and ably addressed by Mr. Clark, of Jefferson, and Mr. Reynolds, of New York, the latter gentleman paying a handsome tribute to the public press.

Mr. Filmore, of Erie, was called for, and nobly responded to the call, holding fast the convention and audience for some time by an outpouring of eloquent passion.

Hon. N. P. Tallmadge was loudly called for, but had a few moments previously left the house.

A vote of thanks was then offered by a gentleman of the New York delegation to the president and officers of the convention, which was unanimously made by Mr. Patterson, and the convention adjourned sine die.

ADDRESS

Of the Syracuse Whig State Convention.

The delegates to the whig state convention, assembled at Syracuse, this 7th day of October, 1841, for the purpose of electing a candidate for the office of governor, and in the name of those whom they represent, do make and publish the following

DECLARATION:

The whig party, now the dominant party in this country, was formed and consolidated in opposition where its distinctive principles, doctrines and policy were clearly proclaimed, and manifested themselves in the whigs, while in opposition, to propose specific measures. They opposed the prominent measures and policy of the administration then conducting our public affairs, for reasons plainly stated and urged upon the country; and in the statement of their reasons and policy, which manifested themselves in the whigs, were disclosed, in the most explicit manner, the general principles and policy on which the measures of the government would be taken, and its affairs conducted, if its administration should be confined to their hands.

The cardinal doctrines of the whigs, broadly stamped on the course of our political history during a ceaseless struggle running through a series of years, ending with the overthrow of their adversaries in 1840—doctrines read and understood of all men—may be briefly stated as follows:

That the government should be administered for the benefit of the whole people, and not for the benefit of a few; that the authority, and not the power, should be the basis of government; that a rigid economy observed, and a strict accountability enforced in all expenditures, which should be strictly confined to objects of high public utility and importance.

That the constitution is the charter and warrant for the exercise of the civil power and authority, and that to recede from neither a strict nor a liberal, but a common sense construction, and where doubts and disputes arise, they are to be finally resolved and settled—a proper case being made—by the judgment of the supreme court of the United States; and that, as no power can be employed which is not conferred, so no power which is conferred can be employed, and that the exercise is essential to the preservation of the government, or to the public prosperity. That the great danger to our system lies in the tendency, which has been given to it, in its practical operation for some years past, to an excess of power in executive hands, as well by an assumption of authority, as by the exercise of power; and that the great danger to the action of the administrative functions of the government had been so corrupting both to the government and the people, that the virtue which is indispensable to a republican system was fast yielding to dispositions which are favorable to despotism.

That as the president is commander-in-chief of all the military forces, it is highly dangerous and at war with the first principles of constitutional liberty to give him, or allow him to assume the custody and control of the public money, as had in effect been done during the last two administrations from the period of the seizure of the public treasury by the executive in 1828, and that it was indispensable to the safety of the government and the welfare of the country that some better system for collecting, keeping, and disbursing the public revenues, should be devised and established than has prevailed for the last eight years.

That the constitution gives to congress all requisite power for securing to the country a uniform national currency and the due regulation of the exchanges, either as essential to the constitutional uniformity, a proper facility in collecting and paying out the public revenues, or as a necessary part of the regulation due to the commerce between the states; and that it is the duty of congress in devising a plan or system to act in the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenue; to make it always subserve the purpose of supplying to the country a national currency, and of facilitating and regulating the general exchanges. The power over the subject of money and currency, and the management and should be exercised without aid from, or dependence on, state authority; but the government should not itself exercise banking powers, or create bills of credit to circulate as currency.

That the public lands after the payment of the debt for which they were originally placed, should be sold to the government, and the proceeds, among which, the proceeds ought to be divided.

This is an evil of great magnitude and danger, if the government fails to provide, by a proper system of revenue, sufficient means for its current support, contracting a public debt for its ordinary expenditures in time of peace, and that a public debt having been contracted, whether in peace or war, as was the fact under the last administration, if it cannot be shortly and promptly met by increasing revenue, true policy requires that it should be thrown into the form of public stock redeemed in as short a time as may be, without imposing excessive burthens on the people.

On the broad basis here indicated, in general terms, the whigs of the United States stood in opposition; and when, after passing through a long struggle, for the most part in a hopeless minority, but gathering strength with every patient effort, they at last obtained power, they stood before the country, and pledged to carry out their principles and policy in measures of administration aptly and wisely designed for that purpose; and in the illustrious man whom they made president, surrounding himself promptly as he did with a cabinet of noble and approved men, and in the strong whig majority elected with them, they saw the basis of a sure guaranty to the country a sure guaranty that their pledge would be faithfully redeemed.

At the late extraordinary session of congress, which had become indispensable on account of the condition in which the affairs of the government and the country were left by the late administration, the whig members of congress pressed forward their duty expected of them by the country. They accomplished all they undertook, and all which ought then to have been undertaken, with the exception of one most vital and important measure, in which they were defeated by occurrences that had been unexpected. They passed a bill for the redemption of a loan bill, by which a portion of the debt of the late administration was provided for, and necessary means supplied to a falling treasury; a revenue bill, by which additional supplies will be obtained, chiefly from luxuries; a bill giving to the poor a permanent protective privilege in the public lands, and distributing the proceeds of those lands among the several states; a bill repealing the sub-treasury scheme; bills for improving our neglected national defenses, by sea and by land; and a bill, indispensable in a highly commercial country, making uniform provisions for security to creditors and relief to debtors in cases of insolvency. These constitute a body of whig measures, which, as an offering of first fruits, cannot fail to be acceptable and satisfactory to the country.

But while we rejoice in what has been accomplished, we are constrained to express our deep disappointment and regret, that the president, providentially in place as such, by the death of the elected president, has been able to do so much for the co-ordinate branches of the government in the measures proposed by them for the adjustment of the great unsettled questions respecting the management of the public revenue, and concerning currency and the exchanges; and on this subject we propose to give vent to our honest sentiments, as becomes freemen maintaining toward the chief magistrate of the republic the most respectful language and deportment.

It stood among the very first and highest articles in the creed of the whigs, that the constitution and the government were not safe with the public treasury in presidential hands; and that the country never could be placed in perilous, without a radical cure of the evil of exchanges; and we condemned, therefore unequivocally the whole course of action and policy, on the part of both the preceding administrations, touching and affecting these subjects. In this very point it was that Mr. Van Buren fell, and the whigs triumphed, and there was the present in which they were to place the country, for relief from this. To establish a better fiscal system, and to restore a national currency, were duties, required more than any others; and so it was universally understood. When the whigs sought office and power it was that they might be enabled to accomplish this very reform, and they expected to accomplish it, of course, by some appropriate measure to be devised, and through the instrumentality of those whom they should elevate to places of trust and authority.

It was explicitly understood that their object, or rather these two objects, the proper management of the treasury and the restoration of a sound currency, was to be effected through some other agency than such as had been proposed and employed under the two administrations of General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren, and the general expectation and belief was, among all parties and in all quarters, that resort would be had once more to the only alternative to an institution showing a national bank, sanctioned by the authority of congress. It was an institution should be found necessary, in the judgment of congress to the due execution of the power granted by the national charter, as it was almost universally supposed it would be, then such an institution was to be created; and so common was this expectation and belief, that it is hardly conceivable how any person in any quarter, should have accepted a nomination from the whigs for any high office, in which his voice or his action might be required on this subject, without having considered himself virtually pledged to make his course harmonize with that of his party on a national so vitally affecting, and to the faith which that party had pledged to the country, in the event of its success.

When congress, came together in May last, it is understood that there was an opinion and conviction nearly unanimous among the whigs of both houses, that an institution of the sort just referred to was indispensable. This opinion and resolution, once cast into the form of a law, or of an ordinance, would have been conclusive with Mr. Tyler. He was understood to have expressed himself in answer to interrogatories before his election to the vice presidency, in favor of the constitutionality and expediency of a national bank, notwithstanding his former opinions, provided only the condition of necessity should appear. We think that the whigs, in their judgment, were justified in the judgment of congress, and in no manner whatever to the president, who, in the creed of the whigs at least exercises no part of the legislative power.

Besides this, we hold that the question of constitutionality has been definitely settled, if not by precedent and by analogy, at least by the light of the great examples of the fathers of the republic, and especially, which Mr. Tyler, on his accession to the presidency, proposed to govern himself, at least by the solemn judgment of the supreme judicial tribunal of the country, appointed by the constitution itself for this very purpose; so that while the oath and conscience of the president, and the solemn promises made by him (and we must presume in all sincerity) we are forced, in equal sincerity, to regard them as dangerously set up against the authority and sanction of the constitution itself.

We speak on this subject as of all; not as the enemies, but as the friends of the president; bound, however, as whigs, religiously to keep faith with the country, and to maintain the same high moral character by a prompt disavowal and condemnation of all acts, by friend or adversary, at war with the distinctive principles which we maintain. In this spirit, as whigs speaking to a whig, and in no unkindness to Mr. Tyler, do we express our utter disappointment and regret, that he has made so poor a use of the power which he has assumed to exercise. We declare it to be sanctioned by no principle of the constitution, as understood and expounded at the period of its formation, and by no worthy precedent. We think this power has been employed, in this case, without warrant according to any just construction of the constitution, and used to arrest and defeat the just and proper measures for the better administration of the government, in a point where the whole party, the president included, stood pledged to the country by the most sacred obligations.

While we lament the dissolution of the late cabinet, formed as it has been by the skillful hand of our late glorious president, and which would have been a fitting decision to which the retiring members of that body came, in voluntarily resigning their places. It was a matter for themselves to determine under all the circumstances of each case; and considering the peculiar official relation in which they stood to the president as his constitutional advisers, we do not think they were bound to elude to their offices after it had become abundantly manifest, by the open withdrawal of his confidence and in other ways not less significant, that the president desired and designed to bring other persons into their places.

We deeply regret and disapprove of the course of conduct which the president has pursued, and we adopt towards these gentlemen, and by which they have been driven from the service of the country in the posts which they filled with such distinguished ability. We do not deny the right of the president to select his constitutional advisers, but we lament and marvel that he could not have repaid his confidence in those, who have enjoyed the special confidence of the elected president, and who possessed the unbounded confidence of the whole family of the whigs throughout the entire union.

We are anxious to give to Mr. Tyler, in the discharge of the duties of his exalted and responsible office, a hearty support, and it will be wholly his own fault if we do not. He has already compelled the whig party, almost as one man, to meet some portion of its chief conduct, not only with the aid of its own organs, but with the aid of the organs of its own reprobatum. We should have been false to our own natures if we had done less; and the world will find that, if we have no other virtue, we have that of integrity and faithfulness to our own principles. We mean to demonstrate that our integrity cannot be purchased, even by the executive, with all his patronage and power.

As a national party, sustained by the strongest popular majorities, and dominant in the country, having carried into office, in both the great departments of the government, the legislative and the executive, men of our own selection and choice, it is a crying shame that any doubts should have existed, or should arise, whether we really hold power in both these departments, or only in one. We will not admit the belief that the president has designed or desired to betray or desert his party. That the interests of the country, in some eminent particulars, where those interests were in conflict with the interests of the country, have been sacrificed by him, for the time, we must not hesitate to avow.

Our trust is, that all this was not so much his fault as his misfortune. Coming suddenly into office, without expectation or preparation, he wanted time, as he well might declare, "for deep and deliberate reflection." We trust he will faithfully improve this opportunity for that purpose; and finding out his error will correct it. In the future we shall look to Mr. Tyler for better things. We shall hope and expect to find him every inch a whig, in the true, national sense of that term. In this character and capacity he will have the support of the whigs, and in no other, and we shall fairly give him credit beforehand for good intentions. His acts must show us what he means and what he is.

It is understood that Mr. Tyler has declared since the dissolution of the late cabinet, in the most solemn manner, that his administration should be a thorough whig administration; and that he would not be called into his cabinet or his counsels, or appointed in any quarter to the performance of important official duties. Such a course will secure our confidence, and nothing else will. We must see his new cabinet, with Mr. Webster at the head of it—a man the most eminent political philosopher of the age, and the energies of his great intellect, have been devoted to his country in the advocacy and maintenance of whig principles—we must see that the cabinet one and all, so acting as to prove to us and to the world, of the faithfulness with which they shall represent and sustain the whig principles, and the distinctive principles in the conduct of their own departments. We must see and by the faithfulness and success of their advice and counsel to the president in the discharge of his duties, that they not only have been, but are whigs in very truth and deed. So much we hope for—so much we have a right to expect and demand at the hands of any man calling himself by our name, who consents to retain, or take office in the cabinet under Mr. Tyler.

With faithful counsellors around him, enjoying his confidence, without forfeiting ours, we have a right to hope and expect, that the president will look to the maintenance of whig principles, and better judgment and conclusions, into the important subjects, which Congress have differed. The public money, now in his hands must be taken out; a better fiscal system than that of General Jackson, or that of Mr. Van Buren must be devised and created; and as a part of the currency a national currency must be supplied, and the currency laws must be amended. All this must be done by the unaided authority of the general government, and in a way to avoid the monstrous evils of a government bank, in which, we know, the late sub-treasury scheme, by slight modifications, might easily be converted.

With an impressive language, applied to General Jackson, on a memorable occasion, which will, we think, present, we say to the president, that "honor, due regard to the sacred obligations and duties of office, require of every public man to repair the mischiefs which his own unwise policy may have inflicted on the country."

We reprobate and reprobate the abominable doctrine, avowed by our political adversaries, that the public offices belong to the conquering party, after a contested election as the "spoils of victory." Our doctrine is, that a political party coming into power, is at once charged with, and responsible for, the administrative operations of the government, in all its departments and places, and that it is its right and its duty to conduct these operations mainly by the hands of its friends. We respectfully commend this just and necessary rule to the notice of the president, for a more efficient observance and enforcement than it has yet received at his hands.

In the avowed heretofore strongly made by Mr. Tyler in favor of the one term principle, we have the assurance that, in his time, the country will not be subjected to the humiliating spectacle of an administration conducted through a mere form chiefly by a view of securing the succession to the incumbent, or to any particular executive favorite, by the corrupt and corrupting application of government patronage. The whig party, without the aid of executive influence, will designate in proper time, a suitable candidate for the office in 1845.

We offer to Henry Clay, of Kentucky, the tribute of our heartfelt gratitude and thanks for all his eminent public services, never more conspicuous or valuable than in the senate during the recent session of congress; and we devoutly trust that he may long be preserved to his country.

The union and integrity of the whig party, and its continuance in power, are still indispensable, if the constitution and the union are to be preserved, and the welfare and prosperity of the country promoted and advanced. Failing now to maintain our ascendancy, we give up our state and our country to all the untold mischiefs and evils which the unhappy experience has shown is certain to follow the rule of those whom we had only so lately driven from power. The restoration of the late dominant party to power, in this state and in the government of the union, would lead, of course, to the establishment of all the untold mischiefs and evils which the unhappy experience has shown is certain to follow the rule of those whom we had only so lately driven from power. The restoration of the late dominant party to power, in this state and in the government of the union, would lead, of course, to the establishment of all the untold mischiefs and evils which the unhappy experience has shown is certain to follow the rule of those whom we had only so lately driven from power.

As whigs we profess to hold power strictly as a trust for the common and equal benefit of all; we are afraid to see it placed again in the hands of our opponents, where it has been so much abused; and we pledge ourselves here, to one another and to the people, that we will not allow those who we represent, that we will spare no effort to continue and perpetuate the ascendancy of our party both in the state and national governments. Doing this, we may hope all good things for our country, its institutions, its freedom, its prosperity, its honor and its glory—from the permanent establishment of our principles and policy, and the completion and success of all our measures.

TO THE WHIG ELECTORS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Fellow citizens: The state central committee, in discharge of the duties devolved upon it, solicit your candid attention.

We proffer you, fellow citizens, no holiday compliments—no joyous congratulations. Not as when last year we assured you in advance of the triumph of whig principles, here and through the union, in the election of the patriot of North Bend, do we now say so. Since the close of that desperate struggle, resulting in our unprecedented defeat, a gloomy and deep gloom has spread over the face of our public affairs. That inscrutable Providence which deprived us of our beloved president, while the acclamations which hailed his inauguration yet lingered on the ear, has been followed by other calamities which have already been deplored. If we could recall or recite them now—they are living in your memories—they weigh upon your hearts. Enough, that at the close of the first session of congress under the whig ascendancy—a session which has been productive of more wise, beneficent and wholesome measures than all the ten sessions preceding it—a session which added vast and permanent pledges of glory to our own state, and all the states; which has provided ample and justly for the national defence and the national credit—which has rekindled the flame of hope upon many desolate hearths and in very many despairing hearts—a session which, in all respects save one, has already fulfilled the pledges of the whigs to the country, while it has done much for the restoration of national prosperity—at the close of such a session we find the great and patriotic party which has accomplished so much for the general welfare, paralyzed by an inglorious apathy, surrendering to the hands of its oppressors all that has been gained by a twelve years struggle.

We speak frankly to you, fellow citizens, as becomes our character and yours. We know that you may be trusted with the truth, as you know that we are incapable of addressing you in any other language. Fully aware, as you are, that the late locofoco triumphs in our sister states are based on no serious diminution of the whig strength, we are ready and able accession to our adversaries, but solely on apathy and distraction, in view of the recent difficulties at Washington which have paralyzed the exertions of a portion of our friends, and withheld many of them from the polls, we yet say to you, in the sincerity of profound conviction, that a similar course on your part, followed naturally by a similar result in this state, will be virtually fatal to our hopes of maintaining a whig preponderance in the councils of the national administration. And with the overthrow of the whig ascendancy perishes not only the hope of securing the other blessings for which we have struggled, but is restored to power a party pledged to "repeal" the distribution law. These are among the consequences depending upon the issue of your rapidity by approaching election. Freemen of New York! we entreat that your efforts be proportioned to the magnitude of the blessings to be secured—the calamities to be averted.

Electors of the empire state! It has devolved on you in more than one memorable crisis to save the cause of your country from disaster—upholding and sustaining it until feeble hands and hearts were nerved to assist you in bearing it on to victory. It was your earthquake voice which, in 1837, first pealed the popular condemnation of the sub-treasury project. It was your indomitable spirit which, in 1838, when Maine, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Ohio succumbed to executive patronage, first revived and revived the energies of the republic. It was your undaunted firmness—your lofty, patriotic devotion—which, in 1839, when almost every other state surrendered, rekindled the dying watchfires upon the battlements of freedom, and in the breasts of your admiring countrymen lit up an enthusiastic ardor, which the triumph of 1840 was the legitimate result. Freemen of New York! You are they who achieved those glorious victories; your country again appeals for your filial aid in her direct calamity, and if the same spirit still lives in your breast, you can rescue her again. Is she not worthy a generous effort?

At all events we entreat you, fellow citizens, to come forward and vote at the approaching election. Indifference in such a crisis is the blackest treason. If you are tired of serving your country, turn against her and vote the locofoco ticket. If you desire the restoration of servility, venality, and corruption in our state government, vote for the locofoco ticket. If you desire the banking a monopoly in the hands of a central power and the liberty to pursue it sold out in parcels for gold or votes—if you wish to see the business of auctions another monopoly of the central regency, to be doled out by them only to desperate parvenus in payment of purchases of service. But never, we implore you, let your consciences be troubled by the wish to see your superiors overruled by a body of vulgar and uneducated in the appointment of local officers—in short, if you desire the return of that rule which so long rendered New York politics a by-word for corruption through the land, then vote openly for the locofoco ticket, and secure at once the object of your desires and the reward of your efforts. But never, we implore you, let the thought embitter your future years that New York fell supinely into the grasp of her most justly banished Tarquins, when the freeman's weapon in your outstretched hands might have prevented it.

For the venal, the versatile, the timid, the feeble in purpose, we can offer no inducements to engage earnestly in the cause of the people, or in the coming contest. The struggle must be arduous, but its issue need not be doubted. The spoilers, at once smarting under the tremendous defeat of last year, and electrified with sudden and sanguine hopes by recent occurrences, are already in the field with their drilled followers. To their fierce and unscrupulous and unscrupulous calm good sense, the stern integrity, the indomitable patriotism of the majority of the freemen of New York. If these will but devote to their country the few days intervening before election, in the spirit and with the energy of the three last contests, then victory will again be ours. We have no more to say, we thrill the breast of our brethren all over the union. To you, freemen of New York, is committed the great duty of keeping alive the sacred flame of liberty amid the fury of the tempest, when feeble hands have proved unequal to the task. May the result prove you worthy of the high responsibilities with which you are intrusted, and may you be more strongly to the affection and gratitude of your countrymen!

LEWIS BENDICT,
JOHN TOWNSEND,
SAMUEL STEVENS,
JOHN T. TAYLOR,
JAMES HORNELL,
ROBERT THOMSON,
SANFORD COBB,
State Central Committee.

Albany, Oct. 16, 1841.

CHRONICLE.

APPOINTMENT OF A MISSIONARY.—The appointment of a missionary, to travel in the southern states, for the purpose of reorganizing against the sin of slavery. The convention of the American Baptist Convention, and the young school for very properly himself appointed the missionary. He avows his intention to undertake the crusade; but we imagine he will find his valor ebbing out at every pore as he approaches the interior. If not, however, we doubt whether he will make his business known after he gets among us. Indeed, if he will come with his eyes open and his mouth shut, we shall not be surprised if he makes his home among us. He becomes a man of business, and we are sure he is far preferable to the fate which awaits him if he visits us in the spirit of a crusader. (Virginia.)

BANK ITEMS. The Bangor Whig states that the Stillwater Canal bank has been enjoined by the bank commissioners.

The Commercial bank of New York, R. W. Redfield, cashier of the Commercial bank, which was recently enjoined, has disappeared—his accounts are deficient to the amount of about $56,000. They trace the commencement of his default back as far as 1837. It is rumored that he went out in the Acadia. This is a very astounding disclosure. Mr. Redfield having always been esteemed a very exemplary man. His bond for $250,000 is said to be perfectly good.

We are authorized to say that Messrs. E. R. Biddle and Edwin Lord, president and vice president of the Morris canal and banking company, have been removed from office by a vote of the board of directors. We understand that their successors have not yet been appointed. (Newark Daily Advertiser.)

A new counterpart of the following description has been found in this city—$2 bank of Albany—paid for by order—dated August 1, 1841—J. S. Seymour, cashier; Samuel Kellogg, president—engraved by S. Stiles, Sherman & Smith, N. Y. Mr. Kellogg has been dead some two years. (Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.)

A letter from Circleville to the editor of the Ohio Statesman says, the new bank at Circleville has exploded and made an assignment of its assets—there is a good deal of excitement consequent upon this explosion.

The Philadelphia National Gazette says:—There is an increasing demand for money, and the rate in market has advanced. Nine to eleven per cent. per annum, for good notes, is readily obtained.

The ability of the banks of the city to discount is greatly diminished, in consequence of the large amount of their capitals being locked up in the post notes of the bank of the United States. These were received in payment of the sum contributed by them to aid the United States bank to re-assume specie payments.

The following are the amounts held by the banks respectively:—

Bank of Pennsylvania, $1,363,745

Philadelphia, 1,099,514

Farmers & Merchants, 738,745

Commercial, 350,000

North America, 427,485

Mechanics, 521,885

Manufactures & Mechanics, 160,369

Kensington, 21,330

North Liberties, 214,477

Penn Township, 160,537

Total, 55,078,444

BANK ROBBERIES SENTENCED. Brown, Green and Francis, the robbers of the Herkimer county bank, having severely plied guilty to the indictment found against them, were on Saturday sentenced at Herkimer to four years of confinement, and the payment of $544. They were striped for Auburn that afternoon, to enter upon the duties of their new station.

THE WILLIAM BROWN. The grand jury at Philadelphia have ignored three bills for murder against him; one of the season of the unfortunate ship William Brown, which sailed to drive the passenger to America. He is, however, held under consideration, bills for manslaughter.

CHARLES TON. The census of the populi in Charleston, South Carolina, furnishes the following exhibit:—White males 6,256; white females 6,203; total white population 12,459. Free colored persons 534; male 277; total free colored persons 1,561. Male slaves 6,334; female slaves 5,333; total slaves 11,667. Aggregate total, 29,263.

U. S. S. FIDELITY CONSTELLATION. "at sea, lat. 31° 6', 93 N. 133° E. July 31, 1841. It will gratify the friends of science and navigation to learn that the Constellation and Boston, to know that they are in unusually fine health, not having lost by sickness a man or officer on board this ship, and but one man belonging to the Boston."

(Boston Atlas.)

DEATHS during the last week in New York, 153, of which 109 were caused by cholera, 10 by scarlet fever, 10 by typhoid fever, 39 of them from Ireland, 9 from England, 32 by diphtheria by consumption, 10 were caused by persons.

Death of Mr. Forsyth. By yesterday morning's ens from Washington intelligence was received of the death, in that city, on Thursday night, of the hon. John Forsyth, late secretary of state of the United States.

The hon. John Murphy, formerly governor of Alabama, and representative in congress, died at his residence in Charleston, S. C., on the 21st inst.

SENATE. The Prolegation Geo. Purcell (V. R.) made a speech on the 21st inst. will be upwards of 200,000. The house of representatives will have a large Van Buren majority. In the senate it is said the whigs will have a majority of one, the whig candidate in the Albany district having succeeded by a majority of one vote.

In Georgia the majority for M. Donald, (V. D.) is between two and three thousand—in the senate there are 57 Van Buren to 35 whigs, and 1 tie—in the house, 119 Van Buren, 89 whigs. Van Buren majority on joint ballot 53.

In Ohio the elections result in a Van Buren majority of two in the senate and of two in the house—four on joint ballot.

FANEUIL HALL. This structure is just one hundred years old. On the 14th of July, 1740, Peter Faneuil, a distinguished merchant of Boston, made an offer, in town meeting, to build a market hall for his town, being then without one. The offer was accepted by a vote of 367 to 360—by so narrow a vote did Mr. Faneuil secure immortality to his name by connecting it with the cradle of the republic. The building was completed in 1742, and finished in 1743. The generous donor so far exceeded his promise as to add "a spacious and most beautiful town hall over it, and several other convenient rooms," as the description published at that time represents them. In commemoration of his generosity, the town, by a special vote, conferred his name on the hall, and, as a further testimony of respect, it was voted that "the building should be dedicated to the public at the expense of the town, and placed in the hall."

Mr. Faneuil died on the 31 day of March, 1743. The first meeting of the inhabitants of Boston, held in Faneuil hall, was on the 14th day of July, 1740, for the purpose of a funeral oration on the donor. The orator was John Lovell. This discourse has one merit not often to be found at present, in kindred performances—that of brevity. It occupies 2 octavo pages of the Massachusetts Almanac. (Boston Times.)

FIRE. About 7,354 houses were destroyed by the recent fire at Sayraw.

FLOR TRADE. The New York Express of Thursday says:

The receipts of produce down the North river, and particularly that through the Western canal, are truly astonishing. All accounts agree that, along the whole line, the receipts are really large. At Boston, the receipts for three months, compared with 1840, were as follows:

	Arrivals.	Wheat.	Flour.	Corn & Oats.
Aug. 1841	210	155,331	50,612	13,759
1840	310	220,372	67,074	21,745
Sept. 1839	267	163,239	55,927	25,474
1840	423	224,131	62,718	21,515
1841	284	433,362	74,561	44,431
Oct. 1839	221,392	54,015
1840	218	216,009	91,295	10,325

Here is an exhibit rarely given. In September the receipts were 403,362 bushels of wheat, nearly double that of the previous year, and this month will, no doubt, swell the receipts to an equal magnitude. It is to be considered that a much larger quantity of flour has gone from Ohio to Canada, through the Welland canal, than formerly. The surplus produce this year from Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, via Buffalo, will be nearly double what it ever has been. It is only surprising that such an amount of produce as is pouring into the city, can be so easily turned into cash as it is. Flour, wheat and all other grain and ready producers at cash rates. The demand continues for the supplies of the new England markets, the British provinces, and foreign ports.

McLEOD, was acquitted on the 15th instant, and left Utica on the 16th for Montreal, under the protection of the sheriff of Oneida county and two officers of the United States army, who accompanied him to the Canada line. The Montreal Herald announces his arrival in that city on the 16th, by the steamboat Princess Victoria. He was received with open arms, and cheered by an immense crowd that accompanied him to his hotel. He remained a year, and on the 24th of September last, he was arrested upon the 24th September—the second upon the 12th November, 1840, just 11 months prior to his acquittal.

MONUMENTS. The ladies of Wilkesbarre, with commendable zeal, are striving to obtain $3,000 to build the monument of officers and men who were killed at the battle of Gettysburg. They have raised $250 on hand and the balance they started with beginning with the noble enterprise.

The monument on Bunker Hill has become an imposing object. It has risen to the height of one hundred and thirty feet, and may be seen from various points at the distance of many miles. Too spectator in its immediate vicinity the effect of this simple, unembellished column of granite is a sensation of sublimity. From the top of the monument, officers have been looking down on few persons can stand near the base and look at the monument without a feeling of awe and veneration. The work, we believe, is now suspended for the season, to be renewed again in the spring, and is executed with vigor to its completion. The monument, by the way, was dedicated on the 10th of October, 1843, to complete it but, from the rapidity with which he wrought the present season, we have no doubt he will be able to accomplish his labor in the course of the next summer. Twenty or twenty-one countries are now on the point of being completed.

NEW ORLEANS. The deaths reported to the board of health on the 6th inst. amounted to 30—of which 15 were by yellow fever.

THE PROFESSIONS. It is calculated that there are in the United States 14,012 lawyers, 14,680 clergymen and 10,323 physicians.

SHIPWRECKS. At a recent meeting of the British association for the advancement of science, a statement was read, affirming that in the course of the year 500 ships had been wrecked on the coast of that country—the annual loss of lives being 1,200 and of means £23,000,000.

One hundred and ninety odd vessels that have suffered more or less in the late severe gale on the east of New England, have been reported in the Salem Gazette already.

SILK. Since the main spring of speculation in mulberry trees has subsided, many persons, we learn, have turned their attention in a greater or less degree towards the culture of silk. Among those who have entered into the business on a scale perhaps as large as any one in this neighborhood, is Mr. Robert Sinclair, sc. The gentleman, notwithstanding some mishaps, which experience alone will teach him to avoid, produced the past season a fine crop of silk, and on the 21st inst. was able to yield him the sum of $337. The result is very flattering, and satisfies Mr. Sinclair that the business can be profitably pursued, and that if, as in other states, a small quantity of silk is raised, it may be sold at a profit, and would be induced to enter into the business with profit to themselves and advantage to the community.

(Balt. Amer.)

STEEL. The packet ship Wellington, which sailed from N. York last week for London, carried out $120,000 worth of steel, and the ship United States, for Liverpool, takes about $40,000.

The Havre packet ship Sully, takes out $185,000 in specie.

The steamer "Acadia" sailed from Boston on the 16th with $64,000 in specie, from New York, which was shipped through Harden & Co. It is thought that a large amount was sent by private hands, of which the agent had no record.

The steamer Race-horse had arrived at Port Royal from Vera Cruz, with $300,000 for the Commissariat and Colonial bank.

STEAM SHIPS. The Caledonia, for Liverpool, left Halifax on the evening of the 5th inst. after a stoppage of 24 hours, with 63 passengers.

The Acadia left Boston on Saturday, with 61 passengers, and 1000 letters. The Acadia sailed from New York on the 16th inst. She carried out 10,000 letters, and 6 bags of newspapers.

STRAITS. The king of the French has conferred the order of the legion of honor on the celebrated surgeon, Dieffenbach, the discoverer of the operation for the cure of strabismus. Dr. Dieffenbach, it appears, has received the order from the king of the Netherlands, a patient having died to death under his hands. A distinguished English surgeon, Mr. Bennett Lucas, long since demonstrated the danger of this very operation.

CHARGE OF TROOPS. Detroit, Oct. 12. We are informed that an order has been received in this city, by General Brady, informing him that the several companies of the 5th Infantry stationed at this place, Dearborn, Fort Gratiot, and Mackinac, are to be transferred to Buffalo, Niagara, Oswego and Sackett's Harbor; and that the 5th regiment of infantry, heretofore ordered to Florida, are to be stationed upon this frontier—four or five companies in this city, the balance to be stationed to be vacated by the removal of the 5th artillery. The counter order will probably meet the 5th infantry at St. Louis. In this case, they will arrive here early next month. (Advertiser.)

THE LAST VERDICT UPON DEPOSED. Somewhere near Cleveland, Ohio, a suit was brought before the peace. We tell the tale as it was told by the Cleveland News. A jury was empanelled and sworn to hear, determine, and a true verdict to give—according to law, and evidence. The trial proceeded, witness testified, the lawyers argued long and learnedly. The justice gravely considered the jury as to the law involved in the case. The jury retired, and the justice waited for the verdict. The justice mechanically inquired, "Gentlemen are you all agreed?" "All!" He then carefully adjusted his spectacles, and to his utter astonishment, read as follows: "The jury find that this court has no jurisdiction of the case."

WESTERN NATIONAL ARMY. The Madisonian says that in compliance with the provisions of the act passed at the late session of congress, the president has directed the formation of a board for the purpose of "selecting a suitable site on the western waters, for the establishment of a national academy of art, and to designate the following officers to compose the board, viz:—

Brevet Brigadier General W. K. Armstrong, president; Lieut. Colonel S. H. Long, topographical engineers; Lieut. Colonel S. H. Long, topographical engineers; Lieut. Colonel S. H. Long, topographical engineers.

We understand that the board will proceed without delay to the execution of the duty assigned to them.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 9.—Vol. XL.]

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 30, 1841.

[Vol. LXL.—Whole No. 1,570.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 9, VOL. 11.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS—Great Britain—the queen, parliament, corn law meetings, naval equipment, levies, effect of the sliding duties on bread stuff upon American trade, cotton market and prospects, trade. France—quiet restored at Paris, census riots in other parts, naval items, rupture of the negotiation with Belgium. Spain—Mr. Ashmun, bull fight, Portugal—difficulties with Spain. Turkey—renewed discontent of Mehmet Ali. Prussia—experiments in walking on the water, Gerstenburg. China—British attack on Canton, the city ransomed. Africa—Dr. Charles M'clure's travels in. Buenos Ayres—item. Texas—treaty with Yucatan, election.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS—President Tyler's excursion. The Cabinet—Secretary Forward, directed to the post master general, Secretary Upshur on the one left system. Consul-item; seizure of arms; Reeside's suit; statue of Washington conveyed to the rotunda; sarcophagus of the late President Harrison; funeral of the late Secretary Forsyth. President-elect—Scott meeting at Lancaster, Van Buren meeting at Philadelphia. Commerce—tonnage and new shipping of the United States, lumber trade.

ARMY—General orders No. 62 and 64; movement of troops from Arkansas for Florida, of 5th regiment of infantry, of 3rd regiment of infantry; operations in Florida; Tiger Tail's heroic comes in; dragons leave for Arkansas, 7th infantry.

NAVY—The Concord; Decatur; courts martial; the Delaware 74 for Rio, list of officers; south sea squadron; capturing squadrons in Mexico; Florida squadron; death of capt. J. A. Milne.

STATES OF THE UNION—Maine, amendment of the constitution; Vermont, legislature met, official returns of election, governor, &c. elected, Grogan came; New Jersey, legislature assemble, election returns; Maryland, military convention, election of governor, list of delegates elected, recapitulation; Georgia, election; Ohio, slave case; Illinois, cultivation of tobacco.

HOME INDUSTRY CONVENTION—Constitution of the "Home League for the promotion of American industry and reciprocal commerce."

MR. SULLIVAN'S SPEECH ON THE ABOLITION QUESTION.

OFFICE NILES' REGISTER,

BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 25, 1841.

MR. C. W. JAMES, of Cincinnati, Ohio, assisted by M. Meeker and James R. Smith, are authorised to collect money due this office and receive new subscribers for the same. His office and residence is on Harrison street east of Broadway line.

⚡—The very kind intimations of our friend D. J. are duly appreciated, and the hints conveyed will be attended to.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

The steamer Columbia, arrived at Boston on the 21st, in 15½ days from Liverpool, which she left on the 5th, bringing 117 passengers, amongst whom is Professor Harc and his son, and Lord Morpeth M. P. late secretary for Ireland, who designs visiting the principal parts of the union and British America.

Mr. Stevenson the American minister in London is just to leave in the Great Western.

GREAT BRITAIN.

John Bull is still now mightily amused with the hope of shortly having a prince of Wales, as he is to the power to love over him—his present professed devotion to petticoat government notwithstanding.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT. The first session of the parliament which made Sir Robert Peel minister, was to terminate either on Thursday or Friday, the 8th or 9th, by an adjournment to the month of January or February.

Parliament continued its sittings, but the new ministry appeared very much at a loss as to what measures it was best to propose for the relief of the country. Sir Robert Peel finds it much easier to pull down than to build up. The measures were evidently growing impatient, and were beginning to inquire for the tokens of that public prosperity so loudly promised them upon the accession of the conservative administration.

Longings have been held, and continue to be held, in all the principal towns of the kingdom, to memorialize the queen not to prorogue parliament until the existing national distress has been inquired into and alleviated. One was held in Liverpool on Saturday night, the mayor presiding, at which upwards of five thousand people, principally laboring men, were present.

Universal activity prevailed in the dockyards of Chatham, Portsmouth and Plymouth. The line-of-battle ships Formidable, Illustrious, Belvidere, Thalia and Heroine, and the men-of-war Speedy, Pique, Harlequin, Aigle, Syren, Styx and Malabar, were nearly ready for sea. Some difficulty, however, during the harvest, has been carried in in bad condition, and the opinion prevails that the crop is below an average. A serious deficiency is also apprehended in some other articles of food, particularly in potatoes, which in some parts have completely failed.

On the 17th ult. all the foreign wheat and flour in the kingdom, a quantity equal to 1,500,000 quarters of wheat, was released from bond at the lowest rates of duty. This large quantity thrown on the market occasioned a temporary dullness, and a slight depression in prices, but from this the market has recovered, and there is a steady demand for free wheat at 3s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. per bushel of 70 lbs. and for free flour at 3s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. per barrel. For bonded wheat and flour, there are no quotations.

Indian corn is in limited request at 3s. 4d. to 3s. 8d. per quarter, duty paid; the duty this week is 3s. 4d. per quarter. The speculators having attained their object of reducing all the foreign wheat and flour to the low duty, have now no desire to depress the averages; and the new wheat carried in in bad condition, being brought to market, the duty is advancing as rapidly as it fell.

This week the duty is 10s. 8d. and in a few weeks it will again rise to 20s. 8d. per quarter. Should the deficiency in the crop be as great as apprehended, the better qualities of wheat being offered for sale, the averages will rise, and foreign wheat and flour will be again admitted at the lowest duty; thus affording a practical illustration of the admirable and equitable working of a sliding scale.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET, Oct. 4. The whole import of cotton in Liverpool Oct. 1, 984,638 bales. Against same time 1840 1,266,672

Leaving a decrease of 281,974
The imports of American this year 775,181
Against same time 1840 1,101,722

Leaving a decrease of 326,541
The stock on hand, of all descriptions, on the 1st Oct. 1841 535,676 bales.
Do. same time 1840 499,410

Leaving a decrease of 36,266
The stock on hand of American, on the 1st Oct. 1841 395,550 bales.
Do. same time 1840 425,660

Leaving a decrease of 33,080
Showing a decrease in sales of American as compared with last year 293,641
There has been taken, to 1st Oct.

By the trade 775,520 Same time in 1840 922,330
Speculators 157,560 Same time in 1840 190,550
For export 37,620 Same time in 1840 51,290

797,070 1,163,840
Being a decrease of 192,770 bales.
The sales of the week, ending 1st Oct. 1841, were

The current prices have been, of American. Sea Island, ordinary to middling 12½d; fair to good fair 14½d; good to fine 17½d. Stain'd do. ordinary to middling 5½d; fair to good fair 7½d; good to fine 8½d. Upland, ordinary to middling 4½d; fair to good fair 6½d; good to fine 7½d. Middling ordinary to middling 4½d; fair to good fair 6½d; good to fine 7½d. Alabama and Tennessee, ordinary to land, upon the deposits, which it is understood that they provided in case of emergency such as the present, in Paris and Hamburg; for their bullion is actually £322,000 less than represented in the returns of the 17th September.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 1, 1841. Our grain harvest is nearly finished, but it is yet too early to ascertain the extent of the crops. Much of the wheat, owing to the uncertain state of the weather, which prevailed during the harvest, has been carried in in bad condition, and the opinion prevails that the crop is below an average. A serious deficiency is also apprehended in some other articles of food, particularly in potatoes, which in some parts have completely failed.

On the 17th ult. all the foreign wheat and flour in the kingdom, a quantity equal to 1,500,000 quarters of wheat, was released from bond at the lowest rates of duty. This large quantity thrown on the market occasioned a temporary dullness, and a slight depression in prices, but from this the market has recovered, and there is a steady demand for free wheat at 3s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. per bushel of 70 lbs. and for free flour at 3s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. per barrel. For bonded wheat and flour, there are no quotations.

Indian corn is in limited request at 3s. 4d. to 3s. 8d. per quarter, duty paid; the duty this week is 3s. 4d. per quarter. The speculators having attained their object of reducing all the foreign wheat and flour to the low duty, have now no desire to depress the averages; and the new wheat carried in in bad condition, being brought to market, the duty is advancing as rapidly as it fell.

This week the duty is 10s. 8d. and in a few weeks it will again rise to 20s. 8d. per quarter. Should the deficiency in the crop be as great as apprehended, the better qualities of wheat being offered for sale, the averages will rise, and foreign wheat and flour will be again admitted at the lowest duty; thus affording a practical illustration of the admirable and equitable working of a sliding scale.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET, Oct. 4. The whole import of cotton in Liverpool Oct. 1, 984,638 bales. Against same time 1840 1,266,672

Leaving a decrease of 281,974
The imports of American this year 775,181
Against same time 1840 1,101,722

Leaving a decrease of 326,541
The stock on hand, of all descriptions, on the 1st Oct. 1841 535,676 bales.
Do. same time 1840 499,410

Leaving a decrease of 36,266
The stock on hand of American, on the 1st Oct. 1841 395,550 bales.
Do. same time 1840 425,660

Leaving a decrease of 33,080
Showing a decrease in sales of American as compared with last year 293,641
There has been taken, to 1st Oct.

By the trade 775,520 Same time in 1840 922,330
Speculators 157,560 Same time in 1840 190,550
For export 37,620 Same time in 1840 51,290

797,070 1,163,840
Being a decrease of 192,770 bales.
The sales of the week, ending 1st Oct. 1841, were

The Sea Island 160 bales 13½d
Upland 6,180 4½d
Mobile, Ala- 4½d
bama & Ten- 4½d
nessee } 5,980
N. Orleans 9,760 4½d
Surat, 2,640 3½d
Other des. 2,400 5½d

27,190
The sales of the week, ending 24th September, were 342,540 bales.

The current prices have been, of American. Sea Island, ordinary to middling 12½d; fair to good fair 14½d; good to fine 17½d. Stain'd do. ordinary to middling 5½d; fair to good fair 7½d; good to fine 8½d. Upland, ordinary to middling 4½d; fair to good fair 6½d; good to fine 7½d. Middling ordinary to middling 4½d; fair to good fair 6½d; good to fine 7½d. Alabama and Tennessee, ordinary to muddling 4a5; fair to good fair 5c. New Orleans, ordinary to muddling 4a5; fair to good fair 6a7; good to fine 7a8.

On Saturday, the 29 October, the sales were 5 a 6,000 bales, 1,000 of which to speculators. On Monday (4th Oct) they were 6,000 bales, at very full prices, particularly for the descriptions worth less than 6d.

By reference to the published statements it will be perceived, that while the stock of American cotton is valued by 35,000 bales than at the same time last year, that of other countries has increased 70,000 bales beyond what it was at the same time in 1840; and by the following comparative statement, that although the prices of the grades from fair to fine are higher than at the same time last year, those below fair are as much lower than the then rates.

	1841.	1840.	1841.	1840.
Ordinary	4 1/2	4 1/2	4 1/2	4 1/2
Fair	6 1/2	6 1/2	6 1/2	6 1/2
Good	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2	7 1/2

This may appear unimportant to casual observers, but ought not to escape notice, as it proves the opinion expressed in our last commercial article of the 15th instant, that we have already a powerful rival in the East India possessions of England, leaving Egypt entirely out of the question. From our correspondents we learn that East India cotton now yields more money, as it is estimated that the large quantities now on their way, if sold at present prices, yield a handsome profit. Apart from the questions of politics and crop, this must determine the prices of the lower qualities of American for the ensuing season, and we look for lower prices for some months to come.

As regards the finer qualities, prices will depend much on the supplies of the new crop, and as our late advices from the south lead us to believe that the yield this year will be large, for although the plant has been severely injured in some sections, particularly by the drought in the early part of the year, that only extended to the sandy soils, which the black land, which produces by far the heaviest yield, was benefited. The wet weather since has had a contrary effect, but not, we believe, to any thing like the extent apprehended. To this must be added, the quantity of new land put under cultivation, amounting probably to 10 per cent. and we think we are borne out in our conclusions, that the crop this year must considerably exceed that of 1840; and that if our peaceful relations are preserved, present prices cannot be maintained.

It is true that business in Manchester has been better, but the orders are only for a few weeks' work, instead of months. The market for cotton is also very light, but they have been forced off by various sacrifices, and foreign markets are completely glutted. The depression also in the home market, arising chiefly from the inability of the manufacturing population, and those depending on them for supplies, to purchase any thing like their usual supplies, will tend to prevent the consumption of the remainder of the year from reaching the weekly average of 1840.

The high price of provisions, the number out of employ, and of those who for a long time have had only partial employment, together with the stoppage of the mills from the failure of the winter, will all aid in continuing the present depression, and it will acquire a long period of good business to restore things to their former healthy state.

If we are right in our conclusions, prices then must go down to the lowest rate of profit, and in this case our exports must suffer scarcely a commission can be expected to be realized.

FRENCE.

The disturbances in Paris have entirely ceased, and the capital is now perfectly tranquil.

There is no news whatever in the Paris papers, they are chiefly absorbed by arguments on the unusual number of prosecutions to which, of late, the press has been subjected.

The popular commotions still continued in various parts of France—especially in the southern departments. The ostensible cause of the difficulty is the persistence of the government in taking the census, but there is an under current of excitement, kept alive by persons connected with the government, which if not pacified, will ultimately excite the good king Louis Philippe from his throne.

The Toulon papers of the 2d, announced the sudden return of the squadron, in compliance with orders transmitted by the telegraph; a circumstance which induced the people to conclude that the cause of such great haste could not be a slight one.

RUPTURE OF THE NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FRANCE AND BELGIUM. The Debats contains the following "It appears certain that the negotiations between France and Belgium will not, at least for the present, lead to the grand results we should have desired. We were aware that a customs union would, on investigation, be met with many obstacles; but we at the same time hoped that they would, through the kindness and strong good will of both parties be overcome.

SPAIN.

At the diplomatic banquet given by Mr. Ashton in Madrid, his excellency having alluded to the probability of his recall, the Spanish premier observed, "that the regent's government would perhaps succeed in averting the unpleasant occurrence hinted at by Mr. Ashton, as he, (the premier), had written to the new British minister, and stated to him how much it would be gratified by the continuance, in Madrid, of his present representative, who had so completely identified himself with the views and wants of the existing government."

A bull fight at Barcelona, the mob required something that the municipal officers on the spot thought proper to deny. But the rioters, who have made demonstrations not unlike those which in July 1835, ended in the slaughter of a number of friars, the authorities gave way.

PORTUGAL.

The difficulties between Spain and Portugal, so far from being ended, were growing more violent than ever. The tone of El Diario, at Madrid, was decidedly warlike, and seemed to consider the "national honor" at stake—as though Spain still possessed any of that quality worth preserving!

THE EAST.

A letter from Constantinople, dated 1st September, says that much uneasiness is occasioned in the Turkish capital by the continued armaments of Mehemet Ali, and that the convictions produced there are that the pasha is making preparations for declaring himself independent. The sultan on his side is considerably increasing his military forces, and a firm calling out new levies will be published in a few days.

PRUSSIA.

The Prussian government had had its attention drawn to a new and ingenious contrivance for walking on the water—an elaborate account of which is given in the Prussian State Gazette. It is the invention of a pioneer in the garrison at Magdeburg, who several times descended the river with his knapsack and musket, with as much apparent ease as he would travel over a dry road.

A German student, who had been produced at Dresden by certain new facts which had transpired relative to the demise of the young author, Gerstenhaye. It was at first asserted that he committed suicide in a fit of insanity, during the performance of one of his tragedies at the National theatre; but it has been since ascertained that the poison which caused his insanity was administered by a rival author. The case was undergoing investigation before the private police, and the facts already elicited were said to be of the most singular and revolting character.

CHINA.

ATTACK ON CANTON. The arrival of the Narra-gansett at New York, furnishes news from the Celestial Empire to the 1st of June. The British, it will be seen, have added another item to the sad catalogue of outrages upon humanity, which their rapacity for power—or rather cupidity evinced in the determination to secure at any and every price, extended commerce for their insatiable monopolizers of the trade of the world. It is but another leaf in the lessons of admonition for Americans. China and her undisciplined and imbecile world of mortals are to-day the quiet victims—and all Europe stand by with folded arms, not even breathing the cheap objection of a manifesto against this new evidence of rapacity with which the transaction is so deeply dyed.

The expedient to which the unfortunate Chinese have resorted, of ransoming their cities, will but feed the appetite and increase the capacity of their enemy, whilst it is the certain method of impoverishing themselves. Six, eight, or ten millions of dollars is paid to redeem Canton—as much may be exacted from every city in the route of the British to Peking. The English have played this game in India for a century past. They understand it. It would have been better perhaps for China that Canton had been abandoned, like Moscow, to the flames, for the sake of the country.

Our previous advices had met the British fleet approaching Canton. On the 21st, Captain Elliot issued at Canton the following circular:

"In the present situation of circumstances, her Britannic majesty's plenipotentiary feels it his duty to request that the British and other foreigners now remaining in the factories should retire from Canton before sunset."

"CHARLES ELLIOT,

"H. M. Plenipotentiary.
British Factory, 21st May, 1841."

Even without this notice, the warlike preparations made by the Chinese in every direction, were so apparent, that it had been more too palpable that the Chinese contemplated continued hostilities, probably on that very day; in many of the packhouses, and even on their roofs, guns had been planted; every street leading to the river's edge had become a masked battery, and pennons and flags were flying over every corner; the Chinese soldiers were seen every where, and even the Hong merchants' warehouses while crews were being weighed; a party returning on Friday from one of these Hong saw, whilst pausing at the foreign factories in a boat, many of the batteries, the soldiers in which, for amusement's sake, pointed the guns at them, without, however, molesting them.

The flood of river from the Pynades, fully to the most northern end of Canton presented one continuous line of fortification, and a large number of guns were planted on Dutch and French Folies. A new fort had been built at Shamang, and it was known that an immense number of fire rafts had been prepared in many creeks in different parts of the river. In fact the magnitude of the Chinese preparations proved that they were now bent on most determined resistance, and to drive the English out of the river with much greater loss of time, and that to effect this a simultaneous attack on the different positions of the English was intended.

The local authorities, however, published proclamations, and sent messages through the Hong merchants and linguists, assuring all resident foreigners of their perfect safety in Canton.

Pursuant to the above notice of Captain Elliot, all foreign merchants took to Canton, with the exception of two, left their factories, the last one departing at about 6 in the afternoon, and from what occurred after, they intended to surprise all the foreign merchants that very night, and to have carried them off prisoners, had they escaped death at the hands of the infuriated mob. They have indeed had a most Providential escape.

Some four or five Americans, confiding in the assurance of the Chinese, remained in their factories. The same night the Chinese commenced hostilities by sending a fleet of fire boats and rafts against the vessels of war lying near the city, but without doing them any harm.

This act was avenged by the Pylades and steamer Nemesis, that attacked and destroyed a battery near the factories, and about 40 fire boats and as many fire rafts.

On the morning of the 23d an American resident was seized by the Chinese, and taken from his factory; at the same time three boats belonging to the American ship Morrison, with three passengers and seven seamen, were captured soon after leaving the factories for Whampoa, and the party carried prisoners into the city.

From this, the time was occupied by the English, in concentrating their forces near the city, until the 24th, at 4 P. M. The Hyacinth 18, Modeste, Pylades 18, Nimrod 18, Columbia 16, Cruiser 16 and Algerine 10, having taken up their position in front of the city and suburbs, opened their fire upon every point of the Chinese, who returned it with considerable spirit at first, but were soon compelled to desert their guns. At 5 P. M. a body of soldiers, about 400, were landed at the foreign factories, in the vicinity of which the Americans who had been taken prisoners two days before, were examined by the authorities and released.

The firing was continued until about 9 P. M. when the suburbs were on fire in several places and nearly all the batteries on shore in possession of, or destroyed by the English.

While this was going on in front of Canton, Gen. Gough was landing his troops, 1,800 men, at the foot of the heights, in the rear of the city, and on the morning of the 25th he commenced operations parading the day's work was not yet known, other than that, with a loss of some 40 killed and wounded, four batteries were taken from the Chinese, and great numbers of their officers and soldiers killed, the heights commanding the city taken, and the British forces were again upon the river.

The loss of the Chinese on this occasion is variously estimated at from 3 to 5,000, and even as high as ten thousand men—and they now find to their cost and extreme disappointment, that they are unable to cope with European troops on shore as they have before proved themselves in their encounters with British forces afloat.

On the 26th the vessels of war were engaged in quieting and destroying the few remains of opposition, and in the evening mandarins called on Capt. Elliot with flags of truce, to negotiate for the preservation of the city.

Previous to the Narragansett leaving Whampoa, the Chinese had argued to pay six millions of dollars as a ransom for the city of Canton, one million of which had been delivered on board H. M. S. Hyacinth, on the 27th May.

On the 15th June, just before she left Macao Roads, news was received that fighting had again taken place with some newly arrived troops, and that a few foreigners who had returned to land, and some of their property, were again obliged to retire to their boats.

Annexed are a few extracts from the Canton Press of the 12th and 19th June, kindly loaned, to Mr. Low for a few moments by the residents at Angier.

Arrangements made between H. M. plenipotentiary and the three imperial commissioners.

1st. That all troops, except those of the province, quit the city within 6 days and proceed 60 miles.

2d. Six millions to be paid as a ransom for the city within one week, commencing 17th May. One million to be paid before sunset of that day. If the whole sum is not paid within 7 days, to be increased to 7 millions; if not paid within 14 days, to be increased to 8 millions; if not paid within 20 days, to be increased to 9 millions.

When the whole sum is paid, then the British forces to proceed outside the Bogue, and all the fortified places on the river to be restored, but not to be re-armed until all the affairs between the two countries are settled.

Losses occasioned by the destruction of the Spanish brig, Bellefleur, and the factories to be paid for by the Chinese.

"The Qiong-chow-fu shall produce full powers to conclude these arrangements on the part of the three commissioners."

The troops had returned to their ships previous to the 14th instant, after having suffered a great deal of ill-humour in the marshy and back of the city. The Chinese even sent guides to assist in taking their troops to the boats, being glad to help to rid themselves of such troublesome visitors. When the troops were being drawn off, one company was found to be missing, but after a short search were described to their knees in a marsh defending themselves against superior numbers, and the rest of the company, not being able to discharge their muskets on account of the rain which was then falling. They were rescued from their perilous situation by a detachment sent to their assistance with percussion locks.

Sir H. Fleming Semhouse, who commanded the navy forces in the absence of Sir Gordon Bremer, died at Hong-Kong on the 14th June, and was buried at Macao, at his own request, in preference to the former place. It is supposed that his death was occasioned by heat and over fatigue attending the attack upon Canton. Great sickness also prevailed among the troops and seamen at Hong-Kong. Capt. Elliot had been sick a week. Messrs. Morrison and Fearon, interpreters, had also been very ill. Six million dollars had been paid—five in silver, and one in securities.

The forces had left the river, except the Gallopoe, and Herald, at Whampoa. The Nimrod had sailed with despatches for Bengal. Captain Barlow was to proceed from there to England with despatches for the admiralty.

"Persons who suffered losses by the destruction of the factories, requested to hand in an inventory of the same to H. M. plenipotentiary.

"Her majesty's subjects warned that it is unsafe to proceed to Canton, or send ships to Whampoa, and request to go to Hong-Kong, and ratified that any attempt on the part of the Chinese to interrupt freedom of trade and intercourse with Hong-Kong would be answered with a strict blockade of Canton.

"On the 15th June the Chinese were again preparing great quantities of fire rafts, and large supplies of match string and money had been sent to Canton from the different provinces."

"A passenger in the Island Queen from Macao, 20th June, bound to Bombay with despatches to be forwarded to England, informed the residents at Angier that the sickness was so great at Hong-Kong that it carried off 5 principal officers in one day."

The ships Ann McKim, Huntress, Jas. Perkins and Resolute, were at Whampoa on the 19th June. The M. had a full cargo of cotton from Bombay. The Ann McKim had part of a cargo of cotton from Macao Roads. The Huntress had two chops of tea on board. The probabilities were that it would be some time before the vessels would load.

FORCES OF THE EXPEDITION IN CHINA.

H. M. S. Blenheim, 74	Sir H. S. Fleming Semhouse,
Wellesley, 74	K. C. H. senior officer, &c.
Blonde, 44	Samuel Pritchard, com'dr.
Deuile, 44	Captain Thomas Mallard.
Gallopoe, 26	Commander Fletcher.
Conway, 28	Captain F. Bouchier.
Herald, 28	Herbert.
Aligator, 28	C. D. Bethune.
Hyacinth, 18	Nias.
Deuile, 18	H. Kuper.
Cruizer, 16	Commander W. Warren,
Pyldes, 18	38 Gylres.
Columbine, 16	Gifford.
Sulphur, 6	T. V. Anson.
Nimrod, 18	T. J. Clarke.
Starling, 6	E. Belcer.
Hebe, schr. 4	C. A. Barlow.
Louisa, cut.	Lieutenant J. S. Nossin.
Rattlesnake, troop ship,	H. Killett.
A. C. S. Atlanta, armed steamer,	Mate R. R. Qum, Com'd.
Meness, Hall.	T. Carmichael.

We copy the following curious and interesting announcement from the Southern Literary Messenger for October. Authentic accounts from Timbuctoo will put the literary world on the alert.

Dr. Charles Matthews, who left the United States about fifteen years since, with a view to make discoveries in the interior of Africa, writes to a friend in Vermont from Abyssinia that he shall return in the summer of 1842, and that he has been generally successful in his researches. He had travelled from Morocco, across the great desert, to Timbuctoo, and from that capital nearly to the Cape of Good Hope, back to Timbuctoo, and to Abyssinia, besides making several less important journeys, which had added much to his knowledge of the geography of the country and the social condition of its people.

BEYOND THE EYLES.

The brig Oswego, Captain Greaves, arrived at Boston, brings Buenos Ayres dates to the 29th August. Captain Greaves states that the Montevideo squadron, under Commodore Coe, anchored off Buenos Ayres just before he sailed.

TEXAS.

A treaty has been signed between the states of Yucatan and Texas, and Colonel Peraza, the minister of the former power, is now at Galveston, awaiting a Texas ship for his return.

The full returns of the late presidential election in Texas are now in. General SAMUEL HOUSTON received a majority of the popular vote of more than 5,000 for president, and Colonel BURLESON got more than 2,000 majority for vice president.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

PRESIDENT TYLER reached Norfolk on the 21st, and next day visited the U. S. ship Delaware, Com. Morris, lying in Hampton roads, and the public works at Fortress Monroe—on the 23d he visited the navy yard, dry dock and public ships at Portsmouth. Mr. William M. McKim, of Montreal, on that night a ball was given in honor of him by the citizens of that place.

THE CABINET. The U. S. Gazette says: "We do not see, and we are glad it is thus, that there is much animadversion upon the movements of the heads of departments at Washington. Most of them are so recently placed in office, that they have not had time to develop any plans of public good, or acquire credit (in their new positions) for any peculiar fitness, though we think they are not to disappoint their friends."

The office of secretary of the treasury has acquired a species of independence by some means, consequently, probably, upon the peculiar relations of that office with congress, rather than with the executive. Knowing as we do the present head of that department, we shall look to see him present to congress his plans for fiscal arrangements, without that immediate dependence upon executive views, which is sometimes manifested, though of course, not without that proper deference to the head of the nation, which no man knows better how to appreciate and exhibit than Walter Forward. But Mr. Forward is a Pennsylvanian in his views of raising national supplies, and he is, if we mistake not, a friend of protective duties, though we cannot doubt that at the present moment, he will respect existing arrangements in a considerable degree. We shall, therefore, in proper time, look with confidence to him for a plan which will bear upon it the impress of his own mind, and be consistent with the general views of Pennsylvania.

POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bardsworth (Ky.) Gazette, of the 9th, gives an account of a dinner given to Gov. Wickliffe, by his friends and neighbors on his last leaving the seat of government. Mr. Wickliffe's remarks upon the occasion were brief but very good. The annexed extract derives interest from his new and important position in the councils of the nation:

"It shall be my purpose to aid, if possible, to heal the divisions which now afflict and divide the councils of the nation, to further the establishment of such measures as will tend to increase the sound currency and cheap exchange, such as shall give wings to commerce and reward to industry."

"But fellow citizens, we have other difficulties of a more delicate and vital importance to the American people. Our domestic troubles can be settled by ourselves, by the exercise of that enlightened and liberal patriotism which has ever characterized Americans. We have difficulties incident to our relations with a foreign power to adjust."

"At this moment we are threatened with a war by the most powerful nation of Europe. What is the precise state of negotiation at this time between England and America, I am not informed; and if I were, it might not be proper in me to disclose it. So far as I can understand the subject, it does appear to me that the American government has assumed the true position of justice and moral ground—a position she must and will maintain. (Cheers.)"

"Our policy as a nation is to cultivate peace. It is the path which conducts to prosperity and true glory; and I trust that both councils of both nations will be influenced by wisdom; and under the guidance of all-wise Providence, we shall escape that greatest of calamities, civil war. Yet, that great wisdom and proud nation shall not take her councils from wisdom or draw lessons from experience, but insist upon demands inconsistent with our national honor, rely upon it, gentlemen, I will, in the expression of my own opinion in your councils, but echo the sentiment of all who are here, that I know of no other way, I say, war, with all its horrors, before national dishonor! [Loud and repeated cheering.] When this crisis arises, need I ask where will be found Kentucky? I answer for her, she will be on the side of our common country; once more and again maintaining the glory and honor of our United States. [Flaunts.] Ah! and where will be old Nelson? He will send forth her gallant sons, to pour out their life's blood on the battle-field. Other Dums and Murrys will be found in her borders, to offer their lives, a willing sacrifice in the cause of freedom." [Great cheering.]

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY. The National Intelligencer contains the following extract from a work of Judge Upshur, touching the one term principle:

"The re-eligibility of the president from term to term, is the necessary source of numberless abuses. The fact that the same president may be elected, not for a second term only, but for a third, or fourth, or twentieth, will ere long suggest to him the most corrupting uses of his powers, in order to secure that object. At present there is no danger of this. Presidents are not unduly snubbed by free granting of the people, but by party management; and they are always more than one in the successful party who are looking to their own turn in the presidential office. It is too early yet for a monopoly of that high honor; but the time will come when the actual incumbent will find means to buy off opposition, and to ensure an undisturbed term, by free granting of the trusts which belong to it. This is so obviously within the natural course of things, that it may well excite our surprise that the convention should have left the public liberty wholly unguarded at so assailable a point. It is surely a plain dictate of wisdom, and a necessary condition of every free government, that there should be some definite limit to the duration of executive power in the same hands. We cannot hope to be free from the corruptions which result from an abuse of presidential power and patronage, until that officer shall be eligible only for one term—a long term, if you please, but one term shall be rendered more easily and directly responsible to the power which appoints him."

CONSUL. Francis J. Grund, esq. of Philadelphia, United States consul for Bremen, and Italy, sailed from New York for Liverpool, in the Garrick, on Monday.

SEIZURE. The Sandusky Clarion states that E. H. Haines, collector of that port, seized on the 2d inst. at that place, 24 guns, nicely hoisted up, which were supposed to have been destined to aid in the patriot cause.

A SUIT is now before the United States circuit court sitting at Philadelphia, in which Reside, the mail contractor, is plaintiff and the United States are defendant, involving a claim over $300,000.

THE STATUE OF WASHINGTON, has been removed, by Captain Esby, from the navy yard, where it has been since its arrival from Italy, to the rotunda, in the capital. The weight of the statue, and was raised from the weight to the level of the floor of the rotunda—a height of twenty-six feet—in twenty-five minutes, and placed on the way which had been prepared for it. Capt. E. tenders his thanks to William Waters, the boatswain attached to the navy yard for the aid he voluntarily rendered in the elevation of the statue to its required height. The preparation of the shears and the necessary tackle were under his immediate direction.

SARCOPHAGUS OF WM. HENRY HARRISON. A very beautiful and appropriate structure has been sent from Washington to North Bend, for the purpose of enclosing the remains of the lamented Harrison. It is the workmanship and donation of Mr. L. O. Cook, a worthy and ingenious cabinet maker, of the city of Washington. It was mistaken as it would certainly be by almost any person, for natural marble of a superior quality—but we learn by a communication from T. D. Jones, that by a newly discovered art, commingled marble or other rock may be incorporated in a cement in a state of fusion and moulded into any shape, assuming an appearance corresponding to the color or colors of the rocky material, and approaching in a great degree, to the beauty, firmness and strength of the native rock.—By this process was the sarcophagus referred to made, as also a case of similar material enclosing it, of which Mr. Cook was the factor and the donor.

THE LATE SECRETARY OF STATE. The funeral of the Hon. John Forsyth, which took place on the 23d, was attended by all the representatives of the different governments at Washington, by the heads of our executive department, the governor-in-chief of the army and many other officers of the government, civil and military, as well as many private citizens. The religious services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Hawley and the Rev. Mr. Butler, of the Episcopal church.

PRESIDENTIAL. The friends of General Scott in Lancaster have had their adjourned meeting, and resolved to connect the names of Scott and Banks at the election in 1844—the former for the presidency, and the latter for the governorship of the state—one term and reform.

The meeting of the friends of Mr. Van Buren, held on Monday evening, at Holahan's, was numerously attended. John Horn was called to the chair, a committee was appointed, who reported resolutions favorable to Mr. Van Buren, and expressive of the approbation entertained by the democracy of Philadelphia, relative to the course pursued by his administration. The committee also reported a resolution against any present nomination for the presidency, and against any action in regard to that subject. A substitute for these resolutions was offered, which, after some debate, was postponed, together with the report of the committee. A resolution was then adopted, expressive of the undiminished confidence of the democratic party in Mr. Van Buren, but deeming it inexpedient at this early day to take any action as to the next presidency. [Pennsylvaniaian.]

COMMERCE. The registered, enrolled and licensed tonnage of vessels in the United States was, in 1815, 1,366,127 tons.

In 1818, it had sunk to 1,225,184; it suffered occasional fluctuations, but generally rose, so that in 1840, it was 2,180,764.

The number of vessels built in the United States, the year ending September, 1840, was 871, amounting to 118,309 tons.

Of these Maine built 181 vessels, of 38,936 tonnage; Massachusetts 113, of 17,811 tonnage; New Jersey 109, of 6,791 tonnage; Pennsylvania 103, of 8,185 tonnage; Maryland 111, of 11,736 tonnage.

Among the vessels, viz: 50 ships, 56 brig and 75 schooners; while Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, built a greater proportion of sloops.

Pennsylvania built 6 ships and 78 sloops—Ohio built 5 steamers.

In the year ending with September 30, 1840, Louisiana exported $34,236,936, and New York exported $31,264,080.

Louisiana imported $10,673,190, and New York $10,673,190.

The whole exports of the United States were—
Domestic	$113,895,634
Foreign	18,190,312
	$132,085,946

The whole imports of the United States were 107,141,519
Difference
	25,944,427

LUMBER TRADE. Wisconsin appears to be coming into the market with her lumber as well as her lead. She has already sent to market a considerable amount of produce. Heretofore a large portion of the lumber used at St. Louis, has been carried from Ohio, whence it had come from the head waters of the Allegheny. We see by the last St. Louis papers that 150,000 feet of plained lumber have reached there from the St. Croix, in Wisconsin. It is said to be of first rate quality. [Cin. Gaz.]

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 62.

Head-quarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, Washington, Oct. 14, 1841.

Paymaster Elbert Herndon, having failed to turn over a balance of public money in his hands for the payment of the troops, after the reiterated orders of the paymaster general of the army, is, by direction of the president, hereby dismissed from the public service. By command of Maj. Gen. Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, ass't adj't gen.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 64.

Head-quarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, Washington, Oct. 19, 1841.

The following regulation has been received from the department of war, and is published for the guidance of all concerned:

"Paragraph 1,103, general regulation for the army, will be so construed as to embrace soldiers temporarily placed in private hospitals, by competent authority.

"Upon the recommendation of the senior surgeon of any post or detachment, approved by the commanding officer, diseased soldiers may be placed temporarily in hospitals, provided that the charges of each shall not exceed the commutation for rations allowed by paragraph 1,103, general regulations.

J. C. SPENCER, g.

"Department of war, Oct. 15, 1841.

By command of Major General Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, ass't adj't gen.

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS. Several companies of United States troops arrived at New Orleans on the 16th ult. from Jefferson barracks, St. Louis. They were destined for Florida.

The steamboat Little Rock, arrived at New Orleans on Friday, 15th inst. from Arkansas, with about 300 men for Florida. The following is a list of the officers: Lieut. col. J. Garland, commanding, major T. Staniford, 1st Lt. M. C. M. Hammond, adjutant, assistant surgeon B. W. Woods, assistant surgeon H. H. Steiner, brevet major W. M. Graham, captain G. A. McCall, captain C. H. Larnard, 1st lieutenant A. Alvord, 1st lieutenant H. Prince, 1st lieutenant C. Hoskins, A. A. Q. M. 1st lieutenant R. M. Cochrane, 2d lieutenant J. H. Gore, 2d lieutenant E. G. Elliot, 2d lieutenant S. Smith, 2d lieutenant G. O. Haller, 2d lieutenant H. D. Wallen.

We understand that the steamboats Sarah Ann, Mingo Park and Osage, have been chartered to transport the 5th regiment of infantry to Portsmouth, Ohio, whence they will proceed to the posts assigned them in general orders. They are to leave to-morrow (19th) from Jefferson barracks. There are, in all, about 800 men. [St. Louis New Era.]

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS, October 6. The steamer Little Rock arrived September 30th, having on board the 2nd regiment of infantry, seven companies, consisting of about seven hundred men and officers, and also two or three distinguished Seminole chiefs, destined for Tampa Bay, Florida—Lieutenant Colonel Garland first, and Brevet Major Graham second in command. The troops were in good health and spirits.

FLORIDA. A writer from East Florida, October 20, says: "The glad tidings have at length come to hand that Tiger Tail's brother, Enoch-the-brother, has come in to Tampa Bay, and reports that Tiger Tail is on his way in, with the most of his people or band. Should he come in, and there cannot now be a possibility of a doubt but he will, it will be glorious indeed, for the settlements will be immediately relieved from the depredations of the Seminole savages, and it will narrow down the line of operation to but a short space comparatively, the everglades.

Six companies of dragoons are to leave Florida for Tampa Bay and to occupy on the Apalachicola frontier. Their move will be immediately. A company of the 2d infantry relieves the company of dragoons at Trader's Hill; another company of the same regiment relieves the company of dragoons stationed at Fort Moniac."

TROOPS FOR FLORIDA. Lieuts. Arden, Guise and Page, and Surgeon Elwers, with 140 troops of the 7th infantry, left in the steamer Forester for Florida. They arrived yesterday in the ship Samarang from New York. [Savannah Republican.]

THE NAVY.

The U. S. ship Concord was at Pernambuco, Sept. 18th, 1841.

The U. S. sloop of war Decatur, Commander Ogden, arrived at Buenos Ayres, July 29, from Rio Janeiro and Montevideo.

NAVAL COURTESIES. We hear of two naval courts of inquiry and one court martial, being ordered.

A court of inquiry is ordered at New York to investigate the disastrous accident on board the U. S. steamer Fulton, by the bursting of one of the rined out guns, which caused the death of two seamen and wounded several others.

Another court of inquiry, of which Commodore Stewart is to be president, and Captains Biddle and Read members, is to be held in Philadelphia, to inquire into the circumstances under which Captain Bolton, of the U. S. ship Brandywine, returned from the Mediterranean.

A general court martial is ordered at Washington, of which Commodore Kennedy is president, for the trial of such officers as shall be brought before them.

[New York American.]

The U. S. ship of the line Delaware was to have sailed on Tuesday from Hampton roads for the Brazilian station. The following is a list of her officers:

Commodore Charles Morris.
Captain, Charles S. McCauley.
Commander, D. G. Farragut.
Lieutenants, Wm. T. Smith, Benjamin S. Rowan, Charles C. Turner, Wm. McBlair, Steven M. Rowan, Cicero Price, O. H. Berryman, Fabius Stanley.
Fleet surgeon, G. B. R. Horner.
Purser, Edward N. Cox.
Chaplain, Charles Henry Alden.
Commodore's secretary, Geo. W. Lippitt.
Act'g masters, Wm. T. Smith, Benjamin S. Gantt.
Prof. of mathematics, W. B. Benedict.
Passed assistant surgeon, Charles Hassler.
Assistant surgeons, J. Howard Smith, Stephen A. McCreey.

Passed midshipmen, Wm. H. Maccomb, M. B. Woolsey.

Boatswain, Edward Crocker. Gunner, Thomas Robinson. Carpenter, Francis Sage.

Commodore's clerk, Wm. B. Morris.

Captain's clerk, D. St. Leon Porter.

Midshipmen—Wm. B. Fitzgerald, Jas. H. Sperry, Robert H. Getty, Edward C. Sides, Jas. H. Harts, W. H. Jameson, Tenant McLaughlan. Act'g midshipmen—Edward C. Pasteur, Richard L. Law, Jonathan H. Carter, J. J. C. McCook, John R. Parker, W. H. Fawcett, Peter Kemble, T. W. Broadhead, Charles W. Aby, Wm. Gibson, Jesse M. Smith, James W. McCurdy, W. D. Austin, John Wilkes, J. J. McHenry, Albert Almond, Thomas C. Harris, Wm. Mitchell, P. G. Wainwright, Sailmaker, Thomas J. Boyce. Ass't purser, M. De Murea.

Captain marines, Alvin Edson. Lieut. marines, W. A. F. Maddox, Wm. B. Slack.

Passenger surgeon, Charles C. Spencer, and lieutenant Charles Hunter.

THE SIXTH SEA SQUADRON. A letter from a correspondent of the Baltimore Republican, writes from Lima, (Peru) 21st June, that "the U. S. ship Yorktown, captain Aulick, sailed hence about four weeks since, for the Marquesas, Society and Friendly islands and New Zealand; such will probably return here in about six months.

The U. S. ship "Dale," capt. Charles Gann, is here; her destined cruising ground is up and down this coast.

The St. Louis is on a cruise to the Sandwich Islands; and is expected to go home soon after her return here.

The schooner Shark is daily looked for, from the leeward coast. Her commander (Biglow) is expected to return home in the frigate; in which event, Lieut. Carpenter, 1st of the Constitution, will take command of the schooner.

The store ship Relief, Lieut. Com'g Nicholas, is lying here. All the naval stores lately in depot on shore at Callao, have been removed on board of her.

Last accounts from the exploring squadron left them at the Sandwich islands, refitting for a cruise to Columbia river, and the northwest coast.

The schooner Janet, arrived at Baltimore, reports having left at Rio Janeiro on the 11th of September, the U. S. ships Potomac, Captain Storer, Constitution, Captain Turner, and schooner Enterprise, left commanding Goldsborough.

The U. S. sloop of war Decatur, capt. Henry V. Ogden, was at Buenos Ayres on the 29th July.

The Fairfield, Com. Tatnall, arrived at Gibraltar on the 12th Sept. from Medara.

The Consort, after encountering the heavy gale of the 3d, 4th and 5th insts. during which they were obliged to throw their cannon overboard, and lost their boats and anchor, arrived at the navy yard, Brooklyn, on the 16th inst.

FLORIDA SQUADRON. Advances from Key West, to the 16th instants, furnish the following information respecting the gallant little squadron under command McLaughlin, which has been despatched to Florida, to co-operate with the army against the Indians. The service in which they are engaged is an arduous one, and will be performed in a manner worthy of the character for bravery, zeal and intelligence which marks the commodore and his associates in arms.

The U. S. schr. Phenix, Lieut. Comd't Noland, arrived at Indian Key on the evening of the 6th inst. after a boisterous passage of 13 days, and found there U. S. schooners Waver, Van Buren and Osgo. On the 7th, Lieut. Noland left the Phenix, to take command of the barges, and was succeeded in the command of the Phenix by Lieut. comd't C. R. P. Rodgers. During the day Commodore McLaughlin arrived at Indian Key, in the Flier, and ordered the Phenix immediately to Key West, 70 miles distant. The pilot thought he would attempt to make the run at night, as the wind was fair, and the consequence was, that in the mid-watch the vessel struck on Washerman shoal, off Key Sugarloaf, about 12 miles from Key West. She thumped and scraped violently for about eight hours, in a fresh gale and rough sea, and it was expected that she would go to pieces. Lieut. Rodgers and his officers displayed great coolness and skill, and by their exertions succeeded in getting her off before assistance arrived.—Fortunately the schooner was not materially injured, having lost a part of her false keel and had some slight damage done to the rudder.

Acting Lieut. Barney and Assist. Surgeon Broughton have been transferred from the Phenix; the former to the Madison and the latter to the Waver.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the Phenix, at Key West:

"An expedition has started for the everglades since our arrival here; this is merely prelude to the grand expedition, for which all hands are preparing, and which it is expected will result in the capture of Sam Jones and the termination of the war.

DEATH. Captain Joseph Whitney, long and well known as a steamboat commander on Lake Ontario, died at Lewiston on the 11th instant. Capt. W. entered the navy early, and was in the Dartmouth prison during the war. After his release he was with Commodore Warrington in the Peacock when she captured the Epervier. He was a good seaman and an honest man. When his death was announced the vessels on both sides of the Niagara river and at Buffalo displayed their colors at half-mast in honor of his character and memory.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MAINE.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT. The people of this state at their late election decided against altering their constitution so as to elect their governor biennially, aye 8,998, no 26,551; and in favor of the change limiting the number of representatives to 151, aye 23,217, no 6,615.

VERMONT.

THE LEGISLATURE commenced its session on the 21st instant. The following officers were elected in the house of representatives: hon. Charles Colledge, speaker; F. F. Merrill, clerk; Ambrose L. Brown, assistant clerk, and Oel Billings, engrossing clerk.

ELECTION. The official returns as ascertained by the legislature show that for governor 47,942 votes were cast, of which there were for

Charles Paine, (whig)	23,353
Nathan Stullie, (Van Buren)	21,302
Thos Hutchinson, (abolition)	3,629
Scattering	854

For lieutenant governor 47,974 votes were cast, of which there were for

Waitstill R. Ranney	23,776
Edward D. Barber	21,331
Abrah Sobin	2,891
Scattering	66
For treasurer there were 48,027 votes polled, of which there were for
John Spaulding	23,942
Daniel Baldwin	21,345
Harish Hale	2,722
Scattering	18
The returns from four towns were rejected on account of illegality.
None of the candidates voted for having a majority of the whole number of ballots, the joint assembly on Friday proceeded to an election for the officers above named, with the following result:
For governor—Charles Paine, (whig)	146—elected.
Nathan Stullie, (V. B.)	95
Scattering	13
For lieut. gov.—W. R. Ranney, (whig)	151—elected.
E. D. Barber, (V. B.)	85
Scattering	1
For treasurer—J. Spaulding, (whig)	155—elected.
D. Baldwin, (V. B.)	95
H. Hale	3

THE CROGAN CASE. In the house, on Thursday, the following preamble and resolution were laid on the table:

WHEREAS a violent infringement has been made on the right and sovereignty of this state, by a foreign power, exercising dominion in the neighboring province of Canada, by the seizure and unlawful imprisonment of one of its citizens; with a view of instituting immediate inquiry into the cause of such force and imprisonment.

Resolved by the house of representatives, the senate concurring therein, That a committee of—members of the senate be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the late violent procedure of the British authorities in the province of Canada, in forcibly seizing within this state, and conveying beyond the jurisdiction of the same, and of the United States, col. James W. Grogan, an American citizen, depriving him of personal liberty, and incarcerating him in a dungeon in Montreal, and that said committee be authorized to send for any person or papers which may aid them in their investigation, and that they make report of their doings as soon as possible.

NEW JERSEY.

THE LEGISLATURE met at Trenton on the 26th. Parties in the senate (council) being equal, they agreed to divide the officers and JOHN CASSADY, (V. B.) was chosen president, and ROBERT E. HORNES, (W.) secretary.

In the house of assembly the whigs elected all their officers by a majority of 11. 13 votes. James E. W. of Burlington, speaker, and SAMUEL PRIOR, of Salem, clerk.

ELECTION RETURNS. There are six counties of the state in which the majorities are so decided that at the late election no regular opposition was made therein—and in the remaining counties there was a falling off of votes from both parties. We subjoin the returns of the contested counties as compared with the presidential vote in 1840.

	1841.		November, 1840.
	W.hig.	F. B.	W.hig.	F. B.
Middlesex	1,663	1,578	2,114	1,633
Essex	2,942	2,328	4,636	2,832
Gloucester	1,542	1,553	2,338	1,773
Mercer	1,136	1,456	2,022	1,494
Salem	1,347	1,389	1,582	1,302
Passaic	846	899	1,362	962
Hudson	537	394	732	501
Somerset	1,373	1,233	1,721	1,345
Monmouth	2,464	2,350	2,593	2,880
Washington	2,500	2,092	3,117	2,905
Morris	2,195	2,056	2,560	2,150
Cumberland	1,141	1,033	1,497	1,190
	20,056	18,972	26,883	20,517

MARYLAND.

THE MILITARY CONVENTION recently held at Frederick was attended by delegates from forty-two companies in full uniform, making an imposing display.

Major general GEORGE H. STREART, of Baltimore, presided, assisted by ten vice presidents. The Frederick papers contain the proceedings of the convention. One of the resolutions adopted was that an encampment should be held, to commence on the 10th of May next. The place for holding it was a point which required sixteen ballotings to decide—Baltimore finally obtained 26 votes, Frederick had 13 and Washington 16.

VOTE FOR GOVERNOR.

	1841.	1839.		1841.	1839.
JOHNSON, W.	Thos. Op.	Stiles, W.	Grason, F. E.
Allegany	1,035	1,089	872	958
Anne Arundel	1,106	1,361	1,361	1,173
Annapolis	121	112	146	141
Baltimore city	6,336	7,435	6,191	6,074
Baltimore county	1,404	2,318	1,477	2,452
Calvert	436	353	427	344
Caroline	605	551	553	577
Carroll	1,444	1,618	1,337	1,646
Cecil	1,188	1,295	1,251	1,354
Charles	613	430	715	510
Dorchester	1,142	816	1,113	850
Frederick	2,553	2,789	2,532	2,932
Harford	1,114	1,100	1,118	1,236
Talbot	683	486	530	544
Montgomery	909	730	832	742
Prince George's	835	625	776	684
Queen Anne's	702	716	641	686
Somerset	1,134	802	1,042	922
St. Mary's	1,743	450	794	459
Washington	2,196	2,346	1,966	2,236
Worcester	1,294	698	1,207	838
	28,320	28,959	27,409	27,720
		28,320		27,409
Thomas's majority		639	Grason's maj.	311

LIST OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES, DE-CEMBER SESSION, 1841.

	Allegany county.		Allegany county.
*William V. Buskirk	William Shaw.
*John M. Buchanan	Anne Arundel county.
*James S. Owens	*John S. Sellman
*Tristram S. Dorsey	*Edward Hammond.
	Annapolis city.
John Johnson.	Baltimore county.
*John C. Legrand	*Francis Gallagher
*Benjamin C. Prestman	*William M. Starr.
*John J. Graves	Baltimore county.
*Joseph Walker	*Marcus R. Hook
*Thomas C. Ristear	*T. B. W. Randall.
*Thilip Poultny	Calvert county.
Uriah Laveille	James S. Morsell, jr.
Nathaniel Duke	Caroline county.
John Nichols	William H. Downes.
Samuel Culbreth, (Ind.)	Cecil county.
*William Knight	*Amor T. Forward.
*John Owens	Charles county.
John Mathews	Peter W. Crane.
George Brent	Carroll county.
*Jacob Powder, jr.	*Daniel Stull
*John B. Boyle	*Francis F. Davis.
	Dorchester county.
Joseph Nicolas	Levin Richardson
William K. Traverser	J. R. Eleeston.
	Frederick county.
*J. H. Simmons	*Daniel S. Biser
*Cornelius Stanley	*James M. Schley.
*John W. Geyer	Harford county.
*Samuel Sutton	*Henry H. Johns
*Thomas Hope	*Charles D. Bouldin.
	Kent county.
Rasin M. Gale	Samuel M. Sutton.
James H. Gale	Montgomery county.
John W. Darby	John Braddock, jr.
Thomas Gittings	John C. Gott.
	Prince George's county.
J. M. S. Macabubbin	William H. Tuck
Samuel Hamilton	John H. Bayne.
	Queen Anne's county.
*R. H. Carmichael	*Valentine Bryan.
One tie.	St. Mary's county.
J. M. S. Causin	James R. Hopewell.
James D. Sutton	Somerset county.
Joshua R. Handy	Thomas W. Stone
John L. Dashiell	Samuel S. Boggs.
	Talbot county.
*William B. Willis	*William W. Lowe.
*George W. Sherwood

Washington county.
*Joseph Hollman	Jervis Spencer.
*Samuel Lyday	Jacob H. Grove.
Worcester county.
Little Dennis	James Powell
Levi Catell	Edwin Forman.
Those marked with a * are Van Buren men.
RECAPITULATION.
1840. 1841.
Counties.	Whig.	Opposition.	Whig.	Opposition.
Allegany	3	0	1	2
Annapolis city	1	0	1	0
Anne Arundel	4	0	0	4
Baltimore city	0	5	0	5
Baltimore county	0	5	0	5
Calvert	3	0	3	0
Caroline	3	0	3	3
Carroll	0	4	0	4
Cecil	3	0	0	3
Charles	3	0	3	0
Dorchester	4	0	4	0
Frederick	5	0	0	5
Harford	2	2	0	4
Kent	3	0	3	0
Lancaster	4	0	4	0
Prince George's	4	0	4	0
Queen Anne's	3	0	0	2*
Somerset	4	0	4	0
St. Mary's	3	0	3	0
Talbot	0	3	0	3
Washington	4	0	0	4
Worcester	4	0	4	0
60		19	37	41
19				35
Whig majority 41		Opposition majority 6

GEORGIA.

ELECTION. The Augusta Constitutional has received the returns from all the counties in the state, which exhibit the following results:

McDonald, (Van Buren)	36,599
Dawson, (whig)	32,483

Majority for McDonald

Van Buren gain as compared with the election in October, 1840, 8,216
As compared with the election in November 1840, 8,816
As compared with the election in January 1841, 8,816
The Van Buren majority in the legislature will be 44. The vote is probably as large as was ever polled in Georgia, 70,000, though in nine counties we have only the majorities given. The largest vote ever polled in the state before was at the congressional election last fall, and it then amounted to a little over 75,000.

OHIO.

SLAVE CASE. Two colored men were arrested yesterday by officer Watt on a warrant issued by Justice Hoadley, as runaway slaves, on the complaint of a man from Louisiana. The negroes were committed to jail, and were this forenoon brought before Judges Whitley and Barbour, for examination.—Counsel for the claimant, Messrs. Payne & Wilson and H. Foote. On the part of the colored men, Messrs. Bolton, J. A. Foot, Welles, Strout and Sterling. At the instance of the counsel for the negroes, the examination was postponed for two weeks to enable them to procure testimony from the state of N. York that they were freemen. The black law of Ohio requires that the suspected slave shall give bail in case of the continuance of his examination in the sum of $1,000 or stand committed. The negroes, unable to give the bail required, were committed to jail.

One of the arrested, an active, light mulatto boy, we learn was decoyed here from Buffalo, for the purpose of preventing his right to a jury trial under the humane laws of New York. The men were employed to decoy the lad may be spoken of hereafter.

[Cleveland Herald, of Sept. 3.]

ILLINOIS.

Tonawca. It will be seen by the annexed articles from the Chicago American, that a new section of country is beginning to be devoted to the cultivation of tobacco;

We congratulate our citizens upon the great accession to our resources just beginning to develop itself. Our traders generally, we presume, are not aware that tobacco was now grown to a considerable extent in northern Illinois. This, we believe, is its second season. The counties of Winnebago and Ogle have the credit of adding tobacco to the other great staples of the northern portion of the state. Large quantities are raised in and near Bloomington in the former county. Mr. Martin, late of Alabama, now residing about two miles from Rockford, recently cut a leaf from one of his stalks measuring three feet in length by two in breadth. Most of the farmers in the above mentioned counties have engaged in the cultivation of this crop. From two to ten acres is the quantity of land appropriated by those who raise it to its culture. So far it has produced from one thousand five hundred to two thousand five hundred pounds to the acre. The nett profits on each acre are calculated at from seventy to one hundred dollars. Much of the crop raised in these counties has been already harvested and is now drying under sheds, which have been erected for that purpose. With regard to our soil as adapted to its cultivation, both are declared to be as suitable as any portion of the union. It grows luxuriantly as may be readily inferred from the size of the leaf to which we have alluded. Southern men engaged in the cultivation of this tobacco say that our soil and climate are decidedly favorable to its growth. With regard to its quality it may be considered good to say the least. Cigars have already been manufactured from it, and a friend of ours who is both a lover and judge of the weed, says they are superior to the common American article. We anticipate with no small degree of pride, the time when we shall add tobacco to our "Chicago market."

HOME INDUSTRY CONVENTION.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1841. We have already given an account of the first days proceedings of this important convention—twelve states and one territory were represented. General James Tallmadge was chosen president, governor Mahlon Dickerson of New Jersey, J. Brewster, of Connecticut, Judge Harwood, of Maryland, and George Field, of Florida, vice presidents, with Loring D. Chapin, of New York, Melvin Copeland, of Connecticut, and L. A. Sikes of New Jersey, secretaries. A committee of business, consisting of one delegate from each state and territory represented, was appointed, consisting of Messrs. C. C. Haven, of New York, Rankin, of New York, Kellogg, of Connecticut, Johnson, of C. Choate, of Michigan, Fisher, of Virginia, Robinson, of Rhode Island, R. H. Smith, of Florida, Giddings, of Ohio, and J. H. Caldwell, of Alabama, of Vermont, Ide, of New Hampshire, and Wethered, of Maryland.

After transacting some further preliminary business, the convention adjourned to 4 o'clock P. M.

FOUR O'CLOCK, P. M. The following resolution proposed by Mr. J. Blunt, of New York, now came up for consideration:

Resolved, That this convention now constitute itself "The Home League, for the promotion of American industry and reciprocal commerce."

Which resolution was considered and adopted. Ex-governor Duley, of North Carolina, Professor George R. L. Allen, of Messrs. Rogers, of Georgia, and Dwight, of Conn. were severally introduced to, and invited to take seats in the convention.

The committee on business, through its chairman, submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That whereas the war of 1812, and the policy and legislation of the government of the U. States until 1834, have called to exercise number of and extensive manufacturing establishments and afforded salutary aid to agriculture and mechanical trades. Therefore.

Resolved, That the members of this convention identify they owe to their fellow citizens of the United States, to call public attention to this important subject, and believe that no better method can be adopted to accomplish this object speedily and permanently than by the organization of a society devoted to a unity of American interests and formed of representatives from every state in the union.

Resolved, That the primary object of the Home League will be to digest and recommend a national policy for the promotion of the general interests of agriculture, manufactures, commerce and finance, exercising a continuous influence for the benefit of the union, independent of sectional prejudices, also for the free trade, free from vacillating and temporizing expedients.

Resolved, That in the organization and proceedings of this league, no other influence is contemplated than such as will rest on principles and arguments which may be approved by the people and sanctioned by congressional enactments.

Resolved, That the moral, political and mental, is conservative of virtue and the origin of wealth; its interests should, therefore, be the prime object of legislation, while capital is competent to its own protection in the strife of interests and needs little else than to be secured to its proprietors. No nation can be great or prosperous where labor is either dishonorable, or wasted for want of objects upon which it can be bestowed, or meets with no adequate reward.

Resolved, That no independent nation should tolerate any other than a reciprocal commerce; but to receive the surplus products of nations which refuse ours in exchange is only another name for vassalage. Resolved, That a policy which favors the augmentation of our exports, encourages home labor in all its branches, according to the direction our citizens may prefer to give it, and regulates or restricts importations, so as to prevent, as much as possible, the balance of trade being against us, is best calculated to secure a stable revenue to the government, and promote the whole interests of the country.

Resolved, That the establishment and preservation of a sound currency can only be promoted by a steady security to domestic industry, and any system of currency not secured from violent change is liable to paralyze industry, prostrate trade and confidence, and subject the country to revolutions imminently dangerous to our welfare.

Resolved, That the selfish, unjust and uncompromising policy of foreign governments, the more offensive by their professions of free trade, whilst taxing our leading exports with restrictions equivalent to prohibition, demands an immediate and permanent rebuke from the American people, and that a Home League upon the true principles of reciprocal commerce with foreign states and protection to our home industry, is the only consistent means of our mercantile and financial prosperity.

Resolved, That as England is now agitated with the project of modifying her exclusive policy, and Prussia by her North German league has secured the independence of her home manufactures without injury, but by her professions of free trade, whilst taxing our leading exports with restrictions equivalent to prohibition, demands an immediate and permanent rebuke from the American people, and that a Home League upon the true principles of reciprocal commerce with foreign states and protection to our home industry, is the only consistent means of our mercantile and financial prosperity.

Resolved, That the existing laws in regard to the revenue and the present tariff are not only defective in themselves, as well as in the mode of collecting the duties, but by the effect of the compromise act of 1834, have so impeded the progress of commerce, that act coming into operation in July next will, by a change of valuation on imports, varying in different sections of the country, not only be unjust, if not unconstitutional, but by encouraging frauds and neglecting countervailing restrictions will sacrifice the home and foreign industry and pecuniary resources of the country.

Resolved, That in any adjustment of the tariff for the purposes of revenue, due regard should be had to the protection of such articles as may render every portion of the country competent to supply its own wants from home resources in time of war as well as peace.

Resolved, That if a revenue for the economical support of government is to be the measure of protective favor to our manufacturers and mechanics, justice as well as policy demands that such a scale of duties be imposed as will foster an increased consumption of imported raw materials, and labor, when by a higher scale, producing an equal revenue, our own industry may be aided without injury to any home interest.

Resolved, That the adequate protection of the mechanical and manufacturing departments does not conflict with, but does materially aid the agricultural and commercial industry of the country.

Resolved, That a committee of finance of one member from each state be appointed to collect and disburse the amount necessary to meet the expenses of this convention.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to draft an address to the public from this convention.

Which were read, discussed and adopted. The convention was addressed by Messrs. Stone, Simpson and Haven of N. Y.; J. Brewster, Dwight, Kennedy, Dright and Copeland of Conn.; and Fisher of Va. Willard of Tenn. and Aldis of Wis.

Adjourned to 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

SATURDAY, OCT. 16. Mr. Blunt, from the committee on the organization of the Home League, reported the plan of a constitution, which, after some discussion and modification, was adopted, as follows:

Whereas, The agricultural, commercial, manufacturing and financial interests of the people of the United States are materially promoted by the accumulation and diffusion of facts in relation to them, by means of an association extending through and embracing all classes and departments of society therefore, the undersigned do adopt as follows:

*A tie for the third member.

CONSTITUTION.

Article 1st. This association shall be denominated "the Home League for the protection of American labor, and the promotion of reciprocal commerce."

Art. 2. Any person subscribing to this constitution and paying into its treasury the sum of one dollar annually, or at any one time the sum of five dollars, shall be a member of this league, and entitled to all its rights and privileges.

Art. 3. The officers of the league shall be a president and four vice presidents, a corresponding and recording secretary, a treasurer, and a central committee of twelve, to be chosen annually by the members as directed in the by-laws, and the presidents of the state branches shall be ex-officio vice presidents of the Home League.

Art. 4. In each state the league shall form a central association to promote the objects of the league, with auxiliary branches in the principal towns and counties, and at each annual meeting delegates are to be appointed to attend at the annual meeting of the Home League.

Art. 5. The stated annual meeting of the association shall be in the city of New York during the fair of the American Institute, when its officers and central committee shall be chosen by a majority of votes present.

Art. 6. By-laws for the government of the league shall be enacted by the respective associations for their own government.

On motion, the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to prepare an address to the people of the United States, viz: Rufus B. Haven, of New Jersey, of New York, and W. B. Kinney, of New Jersey.

On motion of Mr. Haven, the president of the convention was added.

Messrs. White, of Tennessee, Simpson, of New York, and Hubbard, of Connecticut, severally offered resolutions, which were debated, approved and referred to the committee on an address.

A committee of finance was appointed.

A resolution was passed, requesting the public journals of this city and the whole country to publish the proceedings of this convention.

On motion, adjourned sine die. [W. V. Trihune.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Our practice is to Register the leading speeches upon the principal topics of discussion in congress, so as to afford a fair view of both sides, whatever the question may be. Upon the question for rejecting petitions for the abolition of slavery, so warmly debated during the session of 1840, we selected and published the speech of WILLIAM COST JOHNSON, esq. of Maryland, on the one side, fully intending to follow it with the speech of WILLIAM SLADE, esq. of Vermont, on the opposite side of the question—but the immense length of the latter speech occasioned us to postpone it from time to time, in order to give place to matter of immediate interest that continued to crowd upon our files, still expecting that we should shortly have more room. The presidential election and the political movement of the contending parties occupied almost the whole period from the termination of that session of congress until the next session caught us; and, that was hardly disposed of before the extra session arrived—and now another regular session is on our heels. We are constrained to top off some pages of both the commencement and conclusion of Mr. Slade's speech, not being so immediately relevant to the question in hand, in order to enable us to get it into the Register. By thus pruning we shall be enabled to register this speech in the present and next numbers.

SPEECH OF HON. WILLIAM SLADE,

In house of representatives, 18th and 20th January, 1840.
POWER OF CONGRESS TO ABOLISH SLAVERY AND THE SLAVE TRADE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

I come now, Mr. SPEAKER, to a grave and important question, namely, that of the constitutional power of congress to abolish slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia. The right to adopt the rule before us, and thereby reject all petitions and other papers touching that subject, is claimed on the ground that no such power exists. I have asserted that it does exist, and I will now proceed to prove it.

All power over this subject is derived from the grant of power in the constitution, which declares (sec. 8, art. 1) that "congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession or purchase, be acquired by the acceptance of congress, become the seat of the government of the United States."

What is the extent of the power of legislation here granted?

At the first place, it is "exclusive." There is no other constitutional jurisdiction. To the full extent of its power of legislation, whatever it may be, congress excludes all other legislation; so that the states to whose jurisdiction the territory forming the District originally belonged, have no more power to extend their legislation to it, than to the states of Georgia or Maryland.

In the next place, it extends to "all cases whatsoever." No effort to find language granting all possible power of legislation, could have selected terms more comprehensive than these. "All cases whatsoever"—embracing, of course, a range of objects as wide and a power of action as extensive, narrow and extended as fall within the competency of any legislature.

And this extent of the power of its legislation is in perfect accordance with the exclusiveness of the jurisdiction of congress over the territory. All other legislative and political authority being excluded, there arises an obvious necessity that that of congress should be complete; otherwise the people of the District would be left without a legislature, to the necessary and indispensable purposes of government.

But further. Look at the sweeping language of the grant of power to legislate for this District, in contrast with the specific grants of power to legislate for the country generally. In regard to the latter, this government is one of specifically granted powers. Thus, for example, in the first sixteen clauses of the 8th section of the 1st article of the constitution, it authorizes congress to do many other things, to regulate commerce, to coin money, to establish post offices and post roads, to declare war, to raise and support armies, and to provide and maintain a navy, &c. All the powers (including, of course, the power to pass laws necessary and proper for carrying these powers into execution) not specifically granted were reserved to the states, or to the people.

Now, why was the language changed in the 17th clause of the 8th article, from the specification, as in the previous sixteen clauses, of particular cases in which congress might legislate, to the general grant of power to legislate in all cases whatsoever? Why did not the 17th clause also specify the particular cases in which congress might legislate for the District? No other answer can be given to this question than that it was intended to grant all legislative power—to make no exception to the power, and to leave no control, either of the people of the District, or of any other power; so that the great design of setting apart a separate District for the seat of the government of the United States might be fully answered—namely, that of having it subject to the jurisdiction and control of no other power.

But again: If the power of congress to legislate for the District is limited, who is to determine what the limitation shall be? Why exclude the subject of slavery rather than any other subject? If "all cases whatsoever" mean only some cases, who is to determine what those some cases are? One may exclude slavery, another the subject of coinage—another the prohibition of lotteries—another the suppression of duelling—another of gambling, and another the power to punish crimes. Which is right? Who shall determine? Who can determine?

Mr. SPEAKER, if we leave the plain intelligible meaning of the power in question, and resort to implication, we leave a solid rock for the trembling quakesand, which will sink beneath us.

But do any still doubt with regard to the completeness of the power of congress over this District? If any reasoning has failed to convince them, let me call their attention to the exposition given to this clause of the constitution by distinguished men at the time of its adoption.

Mr. Madison has been justly styled the father of the constitution. In the forty-third number of the Federalist, speaking of the clause in question, he said:

"The indispensable necessity of complete authority at the seat of government carries its own evidence with it. It is a power exercised by every legislature of the union—I might say, of the world—by virtue of its general supremacy."

"Complete" was the simple, significant, comprehensive term used by Mr. Madison to express his idea of the power.

Let me next turn to the debates in the Virginia convention, during its deliberations upon the adoption of the constitution. Virginia authority, I think, must be good here on this subject. On looking into these debates, I find that the clause of the constitution now in question was objected to by several leading members of the convention, expressly on the ground of the unlimited extent of the power which it conferred on congress. Mr. Grayson said that "after mature deliberation, he could not find that the ten miles square was to be looked upon even as part of a state; but to be totally independent of all, and subject to the power of legislation of congress." Mr. Mason said "this clause gives an unlimited authority, in every possible case, within the District." Patrick Henry called it "unlimited, unbounded authority."

Mr. Madison, who participated in the debate, admitted the correctness of the construction to which I have referred, by replying to the argument against the adoption of the constitution, thus drawn from the "unlimited, unbounded authority" which it conferred—that "there must be a particular security by particular states, of the District to congress; and the states may be the cause of the session," and "may make what stipulation they please in it."

I have thus shown—from the express language of the constitution—from the necessary exclusiveness of the jurisdiction of congress—from the language of the grant of power in this case, in contrast with the grants of power by men to men, from the absence of everything from the constitution which can enable us to determine what exercise of legislative power, if any, shall be excepted from the grant in question—and from contemporaneous construction—that congress possess that constitutional power to abolish both slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

And now, Mr. Speaker, let me show you what construction has since been put upon this grant by congress, by committees of congress, by members of congress from slaveholding states, by the people of the United States, and by men now occupying the highest stations in this government.

On the 1st of March, 1816, the house of representatives, on motion of Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the conduct of an inhuman and illegal traffic in slaves, carried on in and through the District of Columbia, and to report whether any, and what measures are necessary for putting a stop to the same."

This resolution, it will be observed, did not contemplate the mere regulating of the slave trade, but the abolition of the whole traffic in slaves, and the restriction of congress which the resolution contemplated did not involve the whole question in slavery here—the power to abolish the slave trade manifestly including the power to abolish slavery.

The committee appointed under this resolution were Messrs. Randolph and Kerr, of Virginia, Mayratt, of S. Carolina, Goldsborough, of Maryland, and Hopkinson, of Pennsylvania. This committee, four of whom were from slaveholding states manifested their concurrence with the house in its acknowledgment of the power of congress over the subject of slavery by asking for authority to send for persons and papers, which the house granted.

The committee on the 30th of April, reported sundry depositions taken by them, which were ordered to lie on the table. And here terminated the whole proceeding! Altho' Mr. Randolph, on offering the report, deposed that he had been authorized by the committee and declared that "if the business was declined by the house he would undertake it himself, and ferret out of their holes and corners the villains who carried it on," yet "the business" was never prosecuted beyond the taking and reporting of the depositions; for, by depositions, by the way, are not now to be found on the files of this house.

The zeal of Mr. Randolph and of the committee appears to have suddenly evaporated! They discovered that they were attacking the "patriarchal institution," and shaking what has since been called "the cornerstone of our republican edifice"—and desisted! But they showed, and the house showed, that they considered the power of congress over the subject of slavery here to be as complete as over any other subject.

On the 11th of January, 1827, the committee for the District of Columbia, by their chairman, Mr. Powell, of Virginia, made a report to the house: "The congress of the United States, by its constitution, exclusive jurisdiction over this District; and has the power upon this subject, (the imprisonment of free negroes as runaways and their sale into slavery), as upon all other subjects of legislation to exercise its power." The word "exclusive" was the very word used by Patrick Henry in the Virginia convention, to express his idea of the extent of the power.

I come now to a still more distinct recognition of the power for which I contend.

On the 9th of January, 1829, the house of representatives, on motion of Mr. Miner, of Pennsylvania, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for the gradual abolition of slavery within the District, in such manner that the interest of no individual shall be injured thereby."

This resolution was passed by a vote of 114 to 66; and it is worthy of remark that, of those who voted in the affirmative, eleven were from the slave states, viz: one from Delaware, two from Maryland, three from Virginia, one from North Carolina, one from Tennessee, and three from Kentucky.

On the 29th of January the committee for the District of Columbia reported a bill providing, among other things, that no slave should be imported into the District; and that, upon such importation, the slave should be free, on leaving the District within thirty days. The committee of seven who then recognized the power of congress over the subject of slavery here, there were four from slave states, viz: two from Virginia and two from Maryland.

It further appears that, on the 20th of April, 1830, a similar bill was reported by Mr. Washington, of Maryland, chairman of the committee for the District of Columbia.

In April, 1836, Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina, chairman of a committee on abolition, reported the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That congress possess no constitutional authority to interfere in any way, with the institution of slavery in any of the states of this confederacy."

"Resolved, That congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia."

Here, again, the power to legislate on the subject of slavery here is clearly admitted, by the marked difference in the phraseology of the two resolutions; the first expressly declaring that congress have no constitutional power to interfere with slavery in the states, while the second merely declares that congress ought not to interfere in this District—omitting all reference to the constitution.

In accordance with these proceedings, which show the recognition, by the house of representatives and its committees, of the power in question, is the presentation, by members of congress from the slave states, of abolition memorials, viz:

By Mr. Chesnut, of Tennessee, January 14, 1822, from citizens of that state for the gradual abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

By Mr. Saunders, of North Carolina, December 13, 1824, from citizens of that state, praying for the gradual abolition of slavery in the United States.

By Mr. Barney, of Maryland, on the 11th of February, 1828, from citizens of Baltimore, for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

By Mr. A. H. Shepperd, of North Carolina, March 30, 1828, from citizens of that state, praying congress to take measures for the entire abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; and

By Mr. Washington, of Maryland, March 5, 1830, from inhabitants of the county of Frederick, in that state, for the same object.

To these expressions of opinion by individual members of congress from slave states, I add that of Alexander Smyth, of Virginia, in the debate on the Missouri question, in January, 1820, in which he said:

"If the future freedom of the black is your real object, and not a mere pretence, why do you not begin here? Within ten miles square you have undoubted power to exercise exclusive legislation."

Foolish a tale to emancipate the slaves in the District of Columbia, if you prefer it, to emancipate those born hereafter."

From these recognitions of the power in question, I turn to admission of the power by the people of this District.

In the year 1802, the grand jury of the county of Alexandria made a formal presentation to the grand jury of the county of the slave trade as a "grievance." Having described the trade with its horrible and heart-rending atrocities, they say: "We consider these grievances demanding legislative redress."

Let us stop a moment to consider the language of this presentation—"grievance." We have been told that slavery and the slave trade are no grievances, whose redress can be prayed for, because congress have no power over the subject. Not so thought the grand jury of Alexandria. And then, again, we are told that slavery and the slave trade are no grievances to the people of the north, because their interests are not affected by them. How are the interests of the grand jurors of Alexandria affected by what they presented as a grievance? It did not take away their property. It did not destroy their health, or endanger their lives. But it outraged their feelings, and therefore it was a "grievance." It outrages the feelings of any constituents; and therefore it is a grievance to legislate over. It is an outrage to the authority of the laws of congress, for which they share a responsibility; and therefore they ask for their relief.

But I have in my hand a still stronger expression on the subject from this District. It is a memorial presented to legislate over the slave trade and the slave trade here, signed by more than seven hundred citizens of the District, presented to congress in 1828—among the signers of which were chief justice Cranch, Judge Morsell and Gen. Van Ness, besides a large number of others of the most intelligent and respectable of the inhabitants of the District. And now, sir, listen to the expression of their opinion upon the power of congress.

After describing in glowing language the horrors of the slave trade here, comparing it with the foreign slave trade, denounced and punished as piracy, and speaking of the reproach of inconsistency cast upon the free institutions established among us, they say:

"We behold these scenes continually taking place among us, and lament our inability to prevent them. The people of this District, have within themselves, the power to legislate over the subject, and we therefore appeal to your honorable body, as the only one invested by the American constitution with the power to relieve us."

Two years after the presentation of this memorial, viz: January, 1830, the grand jury of the county of Fairfax expressed their conviction of the power of congress over this subject, in a communication addressed to the chairman of the committee for the District of Columbia, in which they gave an appalling description of the slave trade, and declared that "the inhuman practice is so shocking to the moral sense of the community, as to call loudly for the interposition of congress."

Let me present you, Mr. Speaker, with the additional testimony of two distinguished men, and I shall have done with the question of constitutional power. I refer to the declarations of the two highest officers of this government.

In the United States senate, on the 1st of February, 1820, in the debate on the Missouri question, Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, said:

"In the District of Columbia, containing a population of 30,000 souls and probably as many slaves as the whole territory of Missouri, the power of congress for their emancipation rests with congress alone. Why, then, this heart-rending sympathy for the slaves of Missouri, and this cold insensibility, this eternal apathy towards the slaves in the District of Columbia?"

And now, I give you the testimony of the present chief magistrate of the United States, when no one will suspect of a want of inclination to please the south by denying the constitutional power of congress over this subject, if it were possible to find even plausible reasons for such a denial. In a letter to a plausible member of gentlemen in North Carolina, of the 6th of March, 1836, Mr. Van Buren said:

"I would not, from the lights now before me, feel myself safe in pronouncing that congress does not possess the power of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia."

This was Mr. Van Buren's way of affirming the power of congress to abolish slavery here.

Is the abolition of slavery within the competency of legislation?

Having thus shown that the language of the grant of power to legislate for this District, necessarily, in the absence of express limitation extends to every possible "case" of legislation, and that this is in accordance with the construction and modern practice, I come to consider some objections which are urged against the exercise of the power.

It is said that it is not competent for legislative power to abolish slavery; and that, inasmuch as the grant of power to congress must necessarily be limited to the "cases" within the competency of legislation, therefore the "case" of the slave trade and the institution, cannot be taken to embrace the "case" of slavery.

No legislative power is, I admit, competent to do every thing. It cannot, for example act, by law, upon the consciences or the faith of men. It cannot compel obedience to the commission of crime. It cannot enact that a husband shall not protect his wives, or that parents shall not provide for their children, or that female chastity shall be exposed to violation; and so of many other cases I might specify. It cannot pass such laws for the very same reason that it could not rightfully pass the laws by which slaves are held here and forbade every reason why it is bound to repeal them, namely, because such laws are contrary to the great law of nature, which no human legislation may violate.

But what is it to abolish slavery? Slavery, it should be remembered, is the mere creature of statute, or positive law. It is unknown to the common law. "It is" (said Lord Mansfield, near seventy years ago, in the celebrated case of the negro Somerset, which every lawyer has, of course read)—"It is so odious that nothing can be suffered to support it but positive law." What is it, then, to abolish slavery? It is simply to repeal the positive laws which sustain it. Lord Mansfield, backed by the key of unjust legislation, and permit the slave to walk forth, and breathe the pure, invigorating atmosphere of the common law. It is to restore to its just efficacy the great fundamental law of natural justice, on which the common law is founded—a law written on every man's conscience and in every man's heart.

This congress is called on to do by the petitions which we are now contriving means summarily to reject. It is by the statute laws of the United States, and by them alone, that men are made slaves in this District. The congress of the United States have passed laws repealing the law of eternal justice; and the petitioners ask us to repeal the repealing laws, and restore the law repealed to its full force and efficacy. They ask us to remove the crushing weight we have placed upon the soul and body of the slave, and permit him to rise up and walk. They ask this in the name of the law, and we have no power to deny them. We have no power to grant their request? Had we power to enact these laws? Where did we get it? If the constitution gave it—which I deny—does it not give us power to repeal them? Have we power to pass a law making men the property of their fellow men, and have we no power to pass a law restoring to them the ownership of themselves?

Will any one talk of vested rights which she should thereby violate? I deny that there are, or ever can be, in justice, any vested rights in such a case. It has been said by a great statesman that "that is property which the law makes property." If by this proposition is meant that what the law makes property is property according to law, I do not, of course, deny it. This would be merely saying that law is law. But if it is intended to affirm that what the law makes property is rightfully and justly property, then I deny it utterly. The law may make the declaration; and the power of the state may enforce it; but property in this way, necessarily, submits; but, after all, it will be the property of the law, not of right; unless, according to the philosophy of the infidel Hobbes, "the sole foundation of right and wrong is the civil law." That is the philosophy for slavery; but not for the freedom which finds the rule of right and wrong in a higher law than that of the state.

Let me test this proposition to which I have referred by an example. Suppose we enact a law declaring that the first red man from the western wilds who may chance to fall within your power shall be your property. Would our law make him property?—Would not the voice of nature and the voice of this nation unite in thundering an indignant no to such an inquiry?

Whence is derived the original idea of property?—It is not the creature of statute law. There are no statutes declaring that lands and houses, and cattle, and the productions of human skill and industry, shall be property. There are statute laws regulating their alienation and descent, but none declaring that they may be the property of any man. We have no law for the best of reasons. There is a law older than all human laws, and above all human laws, which has settled the matter. It is the law of nature; which is nothing more or less than the will of the great original Proprietor. That Proprietor never stamped on man the quality of property. He never authorized one man to own another man; nor did He ever authorize a legislature to make a law giving such ownership. Ownership in man? You may as well talk of owning the stars or the sun. No man was made to be the owner of himself. Every quality of his no nature, and every aspiration of his undying spirit, proclaim it.

Having shown that the abolition of slavery is, upon the principles of natural justice, within the competency of legislation, let me now advert, briefly, to the history of abolition, to show how extensively these principles have been acted on. It may surprise those who habitually regard abolition as the mere fungus of moon-struck fanaticism, to find that the next text to which its "abstractions," as they are called in derision, have been actually made the basis of legislation. I hold in my hand the 5th number of the "Anti-Slavery Examiner," in which I find the following very brief summary of the history of abolition, which I beg pardon for not reciting.

"The abolition decree of the great council of England was passed in 1102. The memorable Irish de-ence, that all English slaves in the whole of Ireland be immediately emancipated and restored to their former liberty, was issued in 1717. Slavery in England was abolished by a general charter of emancipation in 1381. Passing over many instances of the abolition of slavery by law, both during the middle ages and since the reformation, we find them multiplying as we approach our own times. In 1776, slavery was abolished in Pennsylvania. In 1783, in New York, Dominga, Cayenne, Guadaloupe and Martinique, in 1784, where more than 600,000 slaves were emancipated by the French government. In Java, 1811; in Ceylon, 1815; in Buenos Ayres, 1816; in St. Helena, 1819; in Colombia, 1821; by the congress of Chili in 1822; Cape Colony, 1823; in Haiti, 1825; in the southern provinces of Birmah, 1826; in Bolivia, 1826; in Peru, Guatemala and Montevideo, 1828; in Jamaica, Barbadoes, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Anguilla, Mauritius, St. Christopher's, Nevis, the Virgin Islands, (British), Antigua, Montserrat, St. Vincent's, Grenada, Barbice, Trinidad, St. Lucia, St. Kitts, Honduras, Demerara, Essequibo, and the Cape of Good Hope, on the 1st of August, 1834. But, waving details, suffice it to say, that England, France, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Russia, Austria, Prussia and Germany, have all, and often, given their sanction to the complete exercise of the legislative power to abolish slavery.

In our own country, the legislature passed an act of abolition in 1780, Connecticut in 1784, Rhode Island in 1784, New York in 1799, New Jersey in 1804, Vermont by constitution in 1777, Massachusetts in 1780, and New Hampshire in 1781. Here, sir, are the abstractations of abolition, embodied in the legislation of Europe and America during the last five hundred years; and yet we are told that legislative power is incompetent to the abolition of slavery!

To the evidence thus furnished of the recognition of the complete exercise of legislative power to abolish slavery, by its actual abolition, I may add the omission of it clearly implied in the constitutions of five of the slaveholding states of this union—namely, those of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky and Arkansas—all of which expressly prohibit the legislatures of those states from passing laws for emancipating slaves without the consent of their owners—thereby admitting, that, without such prohibition, the power to pass such laws would exist.

To all this I might add the authority of numerous distinguished names from among slaveholding states, among the first of which are the names of Henry and Martin of Maryland, and Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Henry, Pendleton, Mason, Wythe, Lee and St. George Tucker, of Virginia. I shall refer more fully to the declarations of some of them hereafter, for another purpose. I will only here say, that General Washington repeatedly declared that the abolition of slavery ought to be effected "by legislative authority," and that "at a period not remote."

But I have further authority on this point, in the action of this government itself, to which I desire now to call your attention, and in which you will find the authority of abolition repeatedly and expressly asserted, which it is much less clearly authorised than it is in the case before us.

The abolition of the slave trade, no one will deny, involves the great principle of the right to abolish slavery. That trade on the high seas, in American vessels, congress has abolished. And congress has also authorised the commanders of its armed vessels to capture the slave ship, take from its owner his cargo of men, and bring in his vessel for condemnation, and himself for trial as a pirate.

Now, by what authority has congress thus interfered to wrest from the owners of the United States money bought with their money? By what authority has it interfered with "vested rights?" By what authority does it thus take "private property?" Does the constitution say that congress may legislate in "all cases whatsoever" touching the African slave trade? No. It simply declares that "the congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations." It is upon the foundation of this "simple grant of power, that congress has reared its structure of slave-trade-prohibiting legislation, and has brought up, for the top-stone of the noble edifice, the punishment of DEATH.

But further. Congress, by an act passed on the 7th of April, 1798, prohibited, under a heavy penalty, the importation of slaves from any place without the limits of the United States, into the territory of Mississippi; and declared that, upon such importation, such slaves should be free. It also, on the 26th of March, 1803, enacted the prohibition of the importation of slaves into the territory of Orleans, with a similar provision for their freedom.

By what authority were these abolition acts passed? Simply in virtue of that clause of the constitution which declares that "the congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."—A power by no means as clearly reaching the "case" of abolition, as that of legislating "in all cases whatsoever" within and for the "ten miles square." Let it not be said that the prohibitions to which I have just alluded were enacted under the authority of that clause of the constitution which I have just referred to. The abolition of the foreign slave trade, since the authority derived from that clause, to prohibit the importation of slaves, was prohibited to be exercised prior to the year 1808; while these acts prohibiting their importation into the territories of Mississippi and Orleans were passed in 1798 and 1803.

But there is a still more striking illustration of the pushing of legislation to "the verge" of constitutional power in favor of human liberty, in the celebrated ordinance of 1787, "for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio." The sixth of the articles of compact of that ordinance declares that "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes."—This article not only prohibited the future introduction of slaves into the northwestern territory, but in effect prohibited the slavery which then existed there. This is sufficiently obvious from the terms of the ordinance. And such is the effect which has been given to it by judicial decision. I refer to the case of Harvey and others vs. Decker and Hopkins, decided by the supreme court of Mississippi, in the year 1834. It was fully and openly referred to in this case.

This was the case of three slaves who had been taken by Decker from Virginia to the northwestern territory, in 1784, where they remained until after the ordinance of 1787, and until the year 1816. How the case came up for adjudication in Mississippi does not concern us. It was fully and openly referred to in this case, and the court decided that the slaves were emancipated by the ordinance of '87. One of the points made in the case was, that whatever might be the effect of the ordinance, the slaves were emancipated by the constitution of Indiana, adopted in 1816. This was rested on the ground that to give it such an effect would be to violate vested rights. The decision of the court on this point, coming from the highest judicial tribunal of a slave state, is worthy of special notice.

"What (say the court) are these vested rights?—What is the nature of the property or of the liberty of nature? Slavery is condemned by reason and the laws of nature. It exists, and can only exist through municipal regulations; and, in matters of doubt, it is not an unquestioned rule that courts must lean in favor of liberty. Admitting it was a doubtful point in the case, it is wholly and openly referred to in this case, in its operation or not, the defendant says, You take from us a vested right arising from municipal law. The petitioners say, you would deprive us of a natural right guaranteed by the ordinance and constitution! How should the court decide, if construction was really to determine it? In favor of liberty."

That the practical effect of the ordinance was to emancipate the slaves within the territory at the time of its adoption, (and that, too, let it be remembered, without compensation), appears from the fact that slaveholders in that territory paid no attention to that part of the ordinance touching the subject of slavery, upon the ground that it had such an effect. I refer to the memorial of "the inhabitants of the counties of St. Clair and Randolph," Illinois, presented to congress on the 13th of January, 1796. It is an interesting document, embodying as it does the arguments now urged, and always urged, against the emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners; and showing the tenacity with which slavery clings to its wrongful possessions. Let me state the substance of it.

The memorialists declared that the ordinance to be construed to fundamendal principle in all free countries, "that no ex post facto law should ever be made." They stated that they were, at the date of the ordinance, possessed of a number of slaves, which the sixth article "seemed to deprive them of, without their consent or knowledge." They said that "the effect of that article was to deprive them, not only of the slaves held by them at its date, but—what was a great grievance!—of the children of those slaves born after that date; their right to whom they affirmed—and, as if that, with great truth!—to be as indefeasible as their right to the parent." They said that they were, at the date of the ordinance, as respected them, the ordinance was altogether ex parte; and that if they had been consulted, they would never have made a compact depriving them of their most valuable property.

Such was the ordinance of 1787—an ordinance passed unanimously, with the exception of a single vote. It is worthy of remark that, although this ordinance was drawn by a distinguished member from Massachusetts, (Mr. Dane), yet the idea of abolishing slavery in the northwestern territory was originally brought on by Mr. Jefferson, having been suggested by him in 1784, in his report, as chairman of a committee of congress, of a plan for the government of the territory.

And now, by what authority did the congress of '87 thus abolish slavery in the northwestern territory? Was there any power to do it conferred by the articles of confederation which will at all compare with the authority given to congress in the present constitution to abolish slavery here? None will pretend it. And yet the ordinance was passed, and slavery abolished—so strong was the anti-slavery feeling at that day—so ready were the men of the revolution to strain authority to the very utmost, for the purpose of banishing slavery from the land which freedom's blood had been profusely poured out to redeem from oppression's power.

Objection—property cannot be taken without process of law, nor without compensation.

But it is said that the power to legislate "in all cases whatsoever," is restrained from abolishing slavery, by the fifth of the amendments to the constitution, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law." My reply to this is, that the term "property," as used in the amendment, cannot be there taken to mean slaves, because the constitution itself calls them persons, and not as such. They are described in the 23d section of the 4th article, as "persons held to service or labor;" and in the 2d section of the 1st article, which provides for their being represented in this body, they are spoken of as "all other persons." If, then, it had been intended to prohibit the taking of slaves "without due process of law," the amendment should have so described them. The constitution must be made its own interpreter; and it calls them "persons." No mere intendment, therefore, can include them within the meaning of the term "property."

If it be said that this construction would not make the constitution prohibit individuals from depriving slaveholders of their slaves without process of law. I admit it. The guaranty extending, for the reason mentioned, in no wise to slaves, their "owners" are, of course, left to their rights as existing independent of the guaranty.

But I have another member from Georgia (Mr. Cooper) refers to that clause of the amendment which prohibits the "taking of private property for public use without just compensation," and finds in that an argument against abolishing slavery. "Is it pretended (says he) that this government has a 'public use' for this property?" Sir, I admit that abolition does not take for "public use." But at the same time maintain that it does not take at all, within the meaning of the constitution. It performs a nobler work than taking slaves for public use. It takes off from them the crushing weight of laws which consign them, without other consideration, to the hands of their stores them to the use of themselves. This is abolition.

But I have another reply to the argument drawn from the amendment to the constitution referred to. It is, that the government of the United States has always refused to recognize slaves as "property" for which "compensation" might be claimed under the constitution. In numerous cases in which they were taken into the service by their masters as waiters, and killed in the service, has congress refused compensation, though it has uniformly made it for horses and other property employed by the enemy while employed in such service.

But what is more directly to the point now before us, congress has, in passing laws providing compensation for property impressed into the service—"taken for public use"—expressly refused to include slaves. Thus, when the act of the 9th of April, 1816, authorizing the payment for property lost, captured or destroyed by the enemy, while in the military service of the United States, was under discussion, Mr. Maynard, of South Carolina, moved to amend the section which provided payment for impressed horses, carts, &c. &c. so as to include slaves. The amendment was negatived by a large majority. A similar motion was made by Mr. Maynard, in 1825, to amend the bill authorising further payment to sufferers during the war, and with a similar result.

In addition to all this, the house of representatives repeatedly refused, upon the most pressing and urgent applications of Francis Pickens, to make compensation for his lost, injured, and killed slaves at New Orleans, in the winter of 1814-15, and killed in the service. A report of the committee of claims in this case may be found in the third volume of Reports of Committees, 1st session, 21st congress, No. 40; in which numerous cases of rejected applications for compensation for slaves killed in the service are referred to.

Consent of the people of the District.

It is, in the next place, said that congress may not abolish slavery here without the consent of the people of the District. This objection has received the sanction of my venerable friend from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams), in an address to the people of the District, since the last session of congress, and deserves, for that reason, if for no other, to be well considered. I understand the venerable member to have placed this objection on the ground that it is against the great leading principle of our institutions—that of self-government—that the people should be consulted in legislation, without their consent. I admit the correctness of the principle, but deny that it sustains the objection. It will not certainly be claimed that the consent must, in all cases, be expressed. There are very few now on the stage, who expressly assented to the constitution when it was adopted; and it is not probable that they would have done the virtue of an assent, implied. And is not the assent of the people of this District to our legislation implied, upon the same principles? When the territory composing this District was a part of Virginia and Maryland, the assent of its inhabitants to that constitution which gave us congress to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, was, in effect, given by the adoption of that constitution by Virginia and Maryland; and the present inhabitants of the District are bound to submit to that legislation upon precisely the same principle that obliges any of the states to submit to the legislation of congress constitutionally exercised.

If this reasoning be correct, the assent of the people of this District to the constitutional action of congress is implied; and to require that it be expressed asserts a principle which would dissolve the people of the whole country from all obligation to obey the laws either of the states or of the nation. And here it should be borne in mind that the objection does not apply solely to legislation for the abolition of slavery, but that, from its nature, it is applicable to all subjects of legislation affecting the interests of the people of this District. It would be equally applicable to strikes at the whole power of congress supposed to be conferred in the clause of the constitution we have been considering.

But let us see how the principle contended for is to be carried out. How is the new piece of timber to be put into the building which has been so "illegally framed"? There must, first, be a meeting of the assent of the people of the District. How is that assent to be obtained? By what authority? Shall meetings be called? How and by whom? And when they are called, and come to act—upon what principle—by virtue of what organic law shall the decision of the majority bind the minority? Shall they be allowed not to choose to attend? And then, in what form and under what circumstances is the assent to be given? Must the law which we may pass be submitted to the people in their assemblies for their sanction? Or shall they meet beforehand and give congress power to exercise legislation in certain cases or upon certain subjects? And if congress has the power to settle the details of its own action?

Congress has hitherto always proceeded on the ground that its power to act was derived from the constitution. And when the inquiry has arisen, what are we authorised to do? what we learned men have given us no answer to the question to determine the question. But, under the new doctrine, the case is entirely changed; and our wise men must lay aside their spectacles, shut the book of the constitution, and go about to inquire, what power do the people of this District think we have a right to exercise? Or whether we are authorised to exercise the power we used to think we must inquire of the constitution to know what we might do, especially as we were solemnly sworn to support it; but now we must inquire of the people of this District? Who ever heard of such a government as this would be if the doctrine I am contending should prevail? Surely I need say no more to prove what every body must see—that it puts an end to the government of congress over this District, and abolishes the 17th clause of the 8th section of the constitution as completely as some of the "men and women" of the north desire to see slavery and the slave trade abolished.

Implied faith to Virginia and Maryland.

It is further objected to the exercise of our power of abolishing slavery and the slave trade here, that it would be a violation of the "good faith to Virginia and Maryland, implied in the cession and acceptance" by congress of the territory which forms this district.

"Good faith implied in the cession and acceptance." What does this mean? It must mean this: that there was something in the cession and acceptance, or in the circumstances connected with them, that raised a confidence in Virginia and Maryland that the government of the United States would not abolish slavery, or the slave trade in the District—this confidence, from whichever of these sources derived, carrying with it a corresponding pledge on the part of the United States that such action would not take place. Now it is manifest that there could have been no such pledge implied, because there is no abolition slavery, or the slave trade in the District—Congress had no power to make such pledge. It would have been utterly void, if made, because the constitution having given to congress the power to "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the District, no congress can, by any act, or resolution, or subsequent consent, to the exercise of that power in some cases only; if it could, it would have the power to alter the constitution by act of legislation.

But, waiving this, let us look into the acts of cession and of acceptance, and see whether any thing can be found from which the supposed confidence could be raised on one side, or the supposed pledge implied on the other.

The acts of cession, one dated December 8, 1789, and the other December 19, 1791, are as follows:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly, That a tract of country not exceeding ten miles square, or any lesser quantity, to be located within the limits of the state, and in any part thereof, as congress may by law direct, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and required to be ceded, sold, or otherwise disposed of the United States, in full and absolute right, and exclusive jurisdiction as well of soil as of persons residing, or to reside, thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the 8th section of the 1st article of the constitution of the government of the United States."

Such were the cessions. "Full and absolute right and exclusive jurisdiction of soil and persons residing or to reside thereon." And that there should be no hesitation on the part of the United States to accept the cessions, on account of any supposed failure to make the grants they contained, co-extensive with the grant of power to congress in the constitution, it was added, "in full and absolute right, and effect of the eighth section of the first article of the constitution of the United States."

The acts of congress accepting these cessions are mere acts of acceptance, containing nothing which has the slightest bearing on the present question.

Now, what is there in these cessions and their acceptance, which could raise in the minds of the people a pledge on the other, that the power to abolish slavery was to become a practical exception from the "exclusive jurisdiction" expressed in the cessions, or from the authority to legislate "in all cases whatsoever," given in the constitution to which they were added? It is not in the face of so plain a grant of all power, excepts, without any language expressing or implying such exception, the important power now in question? Could not the ceding states have incorporated in their acts a proviso that nothing herein contained shall be construed to vest in the United States any right to recognize in any manner, the power to abolish slavery in the ceded territory? And shall they, having failed to make, or attempt to make such stipulation, now claim that it was implied "in the cessions and acceptance of the territory"? This omission to accept the cession of the abolition of slavery is the more significant because there was, in these acts, a reservation really made, namely, that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to vest in the United States any right of property in the soil, or to effect the rights of individuals therein, otherwise than the same shall be transferred by such individuals to the United States."

Now, what was not there connected with this reservation the stipulation I have suggested in favor of slavery? It could not have been for the want of caution in the legislatures of Virginia and Maryland; for there was a very extreme caution exercised in making the reservation as to the soil—since it is quite obvious that, without such reservation, no property of individuals in the soil could have passed to the United States. Nor could the omission have been the effect of an impression that the grant of power by the constitution to congress was not full and complete, so as not to require an express exception to the power of congress to legislate in all cases, subject of the extent of the powers granted to congress over the District had then recently been discussed, as I have shewn, in the Virginia convention, where it had been maintained that the power was "unlimited," extending to "every possible case." It would be absurd to suppose that the reservation, the omission, that, as the constitution had granted to congress power to legislate "in all cases whatsoever," it would be incompetent for Virginia and Maryland to make the stipulation that it should not legislate in a particular case—since it had been expressly declared in the original constitution, by Mr. Madison, the father of the constitution, "that the ceding states might settle the terms of cession," and "make what stipulation they please in it." Nor could the omission to make the stipulation have resulted from an impression that it was unnecessary to stipulate against the exercise of a power not within the competency of legislation; since the competency of legislative power to abolish slavery was then universally conceded.

Whence, then, the very significant and important omission to settle this question by a stipulation in the acts of session? There can be but one answer to this question, and that is, that the ceding states did not intend to make such a stipulation; they did not, in fact desire to make it. The subject of the power of congress, under the general grant of power to legislate in cases whatsoever, did not escape the attention of the leading men in those states. They knew that by the act of cession they were to give up the territory; that congress was made its exclusive legislature; and that legislative power was then relied on as a legitimate means for abolishing slavery; and yet with their eyes thus wide open, they ceded the ten miles square, and expressly confirmed the ample powers over it granted with all jurisdiction by the constitution, without the slightest attempt to impose any limitation whatever upon the exercise of that power in the abolition of slavery.

While the supposition of an "implied faith" to Virginia and Maryland is thus clearly negatived by the terms of the cession, and the significant omission of any stipulation to them in favor of slavery, there are other considerations which render it manifest that no such limitation can be implied.

What is the ground of the supposed "good faith" to Virginia and Maryland? It is the assumption that the abolition of slavery, and the slave trade here would injuriously affect the interests of those states. But is legislation on the subject of slavery the only legislation which the principle of this objection would reach? Is there, in fact, any legislation capable of affecting the interests of the neighboring states, to which it might be applied? It might it not, for example, be applied to the territory of the neighboring states, the District, or the licensing of lotteries or gaming establishments in it? or our legislation upon the subject of currency here?

Does not the principle of this objection strip us of all power, not only over the subject of slavery, but over every other subject our legislation on which might affect the interests of the states of Virginia and Maryland, and send us, cap in hand, to those states, in the attitude of inquiring what we may do in the exercise of our powers of legislation? Who is willing to take this attitude? Who dreamed at the adoption of the constitution, that the federal government would be thus reduced to the position of asking it?

And, then, the same difficulty would exist in case the people of the District should—as it is contended they must do—give their assent to the action of congress abolishing slavery; for the abolition would be just as injurious to Virginia and Maryland, if effected by congress as if effected by the people of the District, without it. Indeed, the principle of the objection would be just as fatal to the right of the people themselves to abolish slavery here, as to the right of congress to do it. The objection, in fact, places both congress and the people in the same position, in regard to abolition, as are the individual citizens of Virginia and Maryland. It is one of the most unjust and oppressive features of their slave systems, (a feature which marked the cruel and sanguinary systems of Spartan slavery), that individuals are prohibited from emancipating their slaves, except upon coalition of the banishment of the emancipated, through a dispensation may be, and sometimes is, granted by special act of legislation.

The cruel policy which compels the citizens of those states, (where the rights of conscience are carefully guarded in other respects, but flagrantly violated in this) to hold their brethren in bondage, against their private conviction of duty, and the noblest impulses of a generous nature, is thus extended even to the government of the United States; so that although under a conviction of the claims of justice, it might desire to abolish slavery here, and thus cease to stand before the world in the character of a slave state, it is yet prohibited from doing so, going, with the slaveholders of Virginia and Maryland, to the legislatures of those states for the enactment of dispensing statutes.

Such is the humiliating position in which the slave power seeks to place the government of this republic! It is better that we should have the "good faith in the cessions and acceptance" implying the "good faith in the which is relied on; and that such implication, carried out, would subject congress to an absurd and degrading subservieny to Virginia and Maryland; the question reurs, where shall we find this mysterious "good faith" which is in every body's mouth, but which nobody can define, and nobody seems perfectly to understand.

Mr. Speaker, there never was any such thing as the "implied faith" that is contended for. It did not enter the conceptions of either of the parties when the sessions were made and accepted. Virginia and Maryland now desire to limit the action of congress on the subject of slavery. They then desired no such thing.

If the objection were placed on the ground of the present wishes of Virginia and Maryland, then I save them all the effect to which the desires of those states are fairly entitled; but when they place it on the high and imposing ground of a breach of implied faith, my reply to them is, that there is not and never was such implied faith as they contend for, that the change in their minds since 1789 does not change the character of the enactment and acceptance of the cessions; and that they must, therefore, be content to abide by them according to their fair import.

Induced, I go further, and say that the state of public sentiment on the subject of slavery at that period, and the universal expectation then entertained that slavery would, at no distant day, be abolished, not only afford a sufficient basis for a fair and ample compensation, but furnish the strongest ground for an apologia. I shall presently, for a more general purpose, produce such evidence of that public sentiment and expectation as will, I trust, satisfy the most incredulous that, instead of objecting to the action of Congress in the purchase of the territory of Florida, Virginia and Maryland were bound, in good faith, long since, to abolish slavery within their own limits; and that their neglect to do so is just ground of complaint on the part of the United States. In no part of the union were there louder and more bitter denunciations of the slave trade and of slavery than in Virginia and Maryland when the territory was ceded and accepted. It was not only universally admitted, as I have shown, that the abolition of slavery was within the competency of legislation, but that it must have been effected, to use Washington's language, "at no distant day." It was so in this territory, that there it must be apparent, all eyes were turned by congress with the expectation well understood by Virginia and Maryland that the District about to be set apart for the seat of government would soon cease to be surrounded by a slave population—a consideration which may well be supposed to have had great weight in inducing the action of congress to locate the seat of government here.

Instead, therefore, of the present agitation of the subject of slavery and the slave trade here being justly to be regarded, (to use the language of Mr. Van Buren to the North Carolina committee), "as a surprise upon the people of Maryland and Virginia," the surprise should be on the other side; and, instead of "being confident, (to use his language), that, if the state of things which now exists had been apprehended by these states, the cession of the District would not have been made," so to speak, consider the state of things and expectation in regard to slavery at that time, without being confident that "if the present state of things had been apprehended by" the middle and northern states, "the cession would not have been" accepted.

Such being the true state of this case; such the "faith" really "implied" in the history and spirit of the time to which I have referred, is it not amazing to witness what is now passing? Instead of the redemption of the slave, we are now witnessing an attempt to perpetuate the curse of government the curse of slavery; it has been permitted greatly to increase; and this very city has become the great slave mart of large portions of these states—inasmuch that the representatives from the free states, and their constituents who come to the city, are daily made witnesses of the same, and are compelled to witness the driving of columns of slaves through its principal avenues, and by the very doors of this capitol—to witness, in fact, the slave trade, with all its infernal machinery of prisons, whips, chains and slaveholders—a trade little less horrible than some of the most infamous and infamous of man's transactions; and that the laws of our country, which protect on the high seas our laws have been subjected to the punishment of death.

And now, to crown the whole, the very petitions—prayers of citizens of the United States, asking in the name of humanity, the abolition, not of slavery in Virginia and Maryland, but of slavery and the slave trade here, are sneered at, and rejected without a hearing; while the petitioners are branded as “desperate and despicable fanatics” on this floor.

Mr. Speaker, need I ask who has the right to complain of a violation of “good faith” in regard to the matter of slavery here?

Implied pledge of the north to the south in adopting the constitution.

I come now to another branch of the subject of implied faith to a more general nature; I mean the "implied faith" that congress will not legislate on the subject of slavery here, and that the people of the north will not agitate the subject—draw from what is called the compromise which lies at the basis of the constitution. I do not mean to say that congress will not legislate on "slavery," as it exists at the south, is guaranteed by the constitution," because such an assertion has never been plausible enough to entitle it to notice in a grave discussion; though there are thousands, probably, who really believe that there is such a guarantee. But I mean to say that congress will not legislate on a subject which is so generally considered as being so wickedly violating. But I state the objection as it is expressed by Mr. Van Buren in his North Carolina correspondence. He did not place it on the ground of a guaranty in the constitution, or inferable from the constitution, but of a faith implied in "the compact" between the states at the time of the federal compact. This is surely sufficiently indefinite for the largest convenience of non-committalism.

The compromise? Where is it? And what is it? Those who rely on it profess to infer it from the history of the proceedings on the question of slavery in the convention that formed the constitution. What is that history? Briefly this:

Slavery existed in a portion of the states. A desire existed in the north to introduce an express provision into the constitution for its abolition. This the south resisted; and the constitution was adopted without such provision.

These are the facts. What then was the compromise? A compromise involves a mutual concession.—What did the north concede? She conceded the point in dispute. And what was that? Simply whether the constitution should abolish slavery. How did this concession pledge the north not to speak, write, print or petition against slavery?

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this simple statement of the ease makes it almost too plain for argument. The mind is actually compelled to labor to find even plausible ground for the inference of the guaranty relied on; and yet that inference is maintained with great pertinacity. It is said that slavery was an exciting subject, and that the convention, having agreed to drop it, and make no provision to abolish slavery, there therefore arose an implied guaranty that it should be no more discussed; but that the north should forever after hold her peace!

Now, however incredible this may appear to men of common sense, it is really true that there is a sort of sense uncommon enough to draw such an inference. I have no doubt it will amaze many a farmer, when he first reads or reads his newspaper, to find that there is that of a man who has been with logic as I does with human rights. What! says he; a guaranty that I shall say nothing about slavery, because the slave is a man? I have no objection to his saying that it is vile, stopped talking, and made a constitution that didn't abolish it! This is strange doctrine. I do not agree to it; for, in the first place, these slaves if they are black, are my brethren. The good book says that all men are created equal, and that all men and these slaves are men; and they have feelings, too, as well as I, and rights, as well as I; and I can't help feeling for them, and saying what I think about their being held in bondage. In fact, I don't see why their feelings should be any less than mine. I can't pretend to own me, and come here and take me. And, indeed, I had almost as lief they would, as to stop my talking about their enslaving the black men. How can a man be so much against slavery, and yet not much more than I? And then, if I have said to write and send it to the printer, I should be glad to know why I may not do it, if I do give the slaveholders a little scoring. But my speaking and writing will go for nothing, if I don't get the printer to print what I write.

And I further understand that there are six or seven thousand slaves in the District of Columbia, and that there are penes there, right in sight of the capitol where slaves that have been bought are shut up, until there are enough of them got together to send off to market, away to the south, where they will never see their husbands, nor wives, nor parents, nor brothers, nor sisters, any more. And I understand that Congress has a right to say that these six or seven thousand slaves shall not be slaves any more; and also, that slaves shall not be bought and shut up there any more, to be sent away to the south. Now I am told here, in this newspaper, that because the men that made the constitution stopped at this point, and Congress has no right to do anything, my petition to Congress asking it to exercise its power about slavery and the slave-trade in the District of Columbia.

I know it is said I may petition; but I do not see what use there is in sending my petition to my representative, if, the moment he gets up with it in his hand, it is to be considered as objected to, and the question about its being received is to be considered as laid upon the table. Now, I consider that it all amounts to saying, in a short of back-handed way—and I dislike it the more for that—that my petition shall not be received, considered; and I would as lief they would say that I should not send it, as that it is to be so; for if they will not hear me, what's the use in sending my petition, and asking my representative to present it?

Now, as I said, I do not agree to all this. These rights of speaking, and writing, and printing, and petitioning, are great rights, which I am thinking these constitution-makers would have had no business to stop the exercise of, even if they had put it in the constitution; and certainly that it cannot be stopped merely because they stopped talking about slavery; nor, if I understand the matter, that stopping out meant that they would say no more about abolishing slavery by the constitution; and what shows this is that they went to talking about slavery, and writing about it, and printing about it, and having societies about it, and petitioning about it, right off after the constitution was formed.

And, besides all this, the constitution, if I remember right, says that congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people to petition for a redress of grievances. Now, I think it is pretty essentially abridging these rights to say that I shall not speak nor write, nor have any writing printed, about slavery; and that I shall not petition against slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia; for if there ever was any thing that grieved me, it is that slavery, and that buying and selling, and driving and shipping to market of men, women and children in that District.

The good book, again, tells me to remember those that are in bonds as bound with them; (and this—as bound with them—I take it, means something); and yet I must not say, or write, or print a word about my feelings, because the constitution-makers stopped short at that point, and they were making the constitution. And then again, I am to pray every day, to my Heavenly Father for the rulers, and His ears are open to my prayer; and yet, congress shuts its ears, and won't hear me, because the constitution-makers stopped talking about slavery while they were hammering out the constitution! How absurd it is to suppose an implied guaranty against slavery in the constitution, when the constitution itself declares that they shall not be bridled, and I cannot make any exception of the case of slavery! I am told it was Virginia that was the means of putting this into the constitution; and I thank Virginia for it. Now, it seems to me that, if they had meant to except the case of slavery, they would have said so right out, and then left it to this loose sort of understanding, which, after all, I do not see was any understanding at all.

The fact that it's a pretty great affair to take away these natural rights of speaking and printing and petitioning; and especially to take them away in such a case as this. And then, to take them away by implication, too. Why, if I had seen it in the constitution itself, I should hardly have believed my eyes; and even if I had seen it in the laws, I should have said, "Implication!" Now, it seems to me that in such a case as this, if there is to be any thing implied, it should be the other way; that is, in favor of my natural rights, and especially in favor of the rights of the poor slave, that I think about just as much as I do about my own rights. I don't think that it is any of my business, or my opinion that this implication ought to be taken in any other end foremost. That's the natural way; and, besides, I have heard it said that when the constitution was made, every body expected that slavery would be abolished in a little while; and, as I don't think that the framers of the constitution were to be allowed to speak and print against it, that was the evidence that the understanding was that way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, look at this ploughman, as he lays down his newspaper, takes off his spectacles, and thus reasons, and tell me if his argument is not conclusive and unanswerable.

Such, sir, is the common sense which is at work in posing the question, which slavery has so much mystified; and this is the way that the very arguments that have been elaborated for its protection are swept away. You will perceive that my farmer has brought his reasoning to a very important conclusion, namely, that all implication in such a case should be in favor of natural rights; and, therefore, should, in this case, be exactly the reverse of what is commonly supposed. Is it not, sir, perfectly correct? Is it not demanded by the common sense and unperturbed feelings of all men, that implication shall never be permitted to take away or abridge such important rights as those of speech and the press, and petition, or be used to sustain such a position, that that which is the most natural justice revolt at it? Does not humanity, in her breathless struggle for victory over oppression, after a contest of ages, cry out against it? And yet this very implication is now claimed to "lie at the basis of our federal compact!"

An implicit pledge that the rights of speech, and the press, and petition, should be sacrificed in favor of slavery? What, sir, would have been the sensation in the convention of '87 if such a pledge had been presented for its action, in the form of an article of the constitution? What expressions of amazement and indignation would have followed! How would the names of Washington and Madison and Franklin upon its annunciation; and how would its adoption have shaken the country with a very earthquake of indignant feeling! And yet now! "the compromise of the constitution" and "the guaranty of the constitution" and the implicit faith of the nation in the favor of slavery are as familiar with southern gentlemen, in their discussions of this subject, as household words. Sir, it is time this delusion were dispelled, and the constitution, in its true relation to this great question of slavery, properly understood.

Though, Mr. Speaker, the ploughman's common sense argument seems to me quite sufficient to settle this question, yet there are other reasons, not, of course, so readily occurring to him, which greatly strengthen the conclusion to which he arrives, namely, that the implication, instead of being against the exercise of the rights of speech and petition, was, clearly in its favor. This implication necessary grows out of the union itself—that very union from which the contrary implication is attempted to be drawn.

The union gave to the north a new and deep interest in the question of slavery. Without the union, the people of the north would have felt the strong impulse of motives to which no heart can be insensible, urging the consideration of a subject so deeply interesting to the human race. But, when the union was formed, they came to sustain a slave very real relation, involving interests and rights having important bearings on the present question.

In adopting the constitution, the north entered into a stipulation to deliver up fugitives from oppression—a stipulation whose execution is abhorrent to humanity, and from which the whole soul of a freeman is revolted by necessity. Provisions also were contained whereby the power of the whole union was pledged to protect the states from invasion, and to put down domestic violence. The relation of all these stipulations to slavery is obvious. The burden they imposed is obvious—a burden rendered severer by the unusual character of the stipulations to sustain slavery. Nature itself dictates that such stipulations should never, by any construction, be extended beyond the strict "letter of the bond"; and that, while a literal compliance is yielded, the largest liberty should be allowed to the burdened party to use all lawful means to free himself from the onerous and oppressive burden.

Thus, for example, if I were bound by specific obligation to deliver up to my neighbor his fugitive slaves, and to assist him in putting down their efforts to regain their natural rights, and to defend him from attacks which might be invited, and rendered more hazardous, and to assist him to defend his family, every body would say that this very obligation would give me a peculiar claim to use all reasonable means to persuade him to emancipate them, and thus release him from the burdensome and unnatural obligation.

The north is, moreover, bound to assist in providing "for the common defence," as well as specifically to defend our shores, and to defend the country from domestic violence. And will it be asked what has the north to do with slavery, when it is considered what an element of national weakness exists in the two millions and three-quarters of slaves within the limits of the nation? The south now says—lands off!—lands off!—lands off!—and thus, by the combined pressure of foreign war and domestic insurrection—which may Heaven avert!—should not we at the north be bound by the constitution to pour out our blood and expend our treasure in grappling with slavery? It might be, in its strongest paroxysm of despair and desecration. And shall we not be permitted to ask our southern brethren to avert this danger, by converting these millions of natural enemies into grateful friends, and thus turning this element of weakness into an element of strength? Can any thing be more reasonable than this?

And the speaker proceeds to despise these stipulations of the constitution, and says, we ask none of your help—we can take care of ourselves. But who does not perceive the use which a foreign enemy might make of the slave population, now numbering a little less than three millions—a fearful number—but rising, it may be, to ten, fifteen or twenty millions? Who can calculate the strength of the inducement that might be offered to the freedmen? What allies would this word raise up, and bring to the aid of an invader! And where then would be the boast, we want none of your help—we can take care of ourselves!

Think not, Mr. Speaker, that this is the mere creation of an excited fancy, introduced here to help out an argument for abolition. It is as impossible to contemplate the existence of a rapidly increasing slave population in our country without such forebodings as it would be to be unmindful of a magazine in presence of an enemy, with bomb-shells charged for the purpose of exploding it. Mr. Speaker has read the debates in the Virginia convention, in 1788, upon the United States constitution, will remember the glowing picture of this danger drawn by Patrick Henry, and the argument he founded on it, that the obligation imposed on the general government to "provide for the common defence" carried with it a right not only to "that every black man must fight," but a right actually to abolish slavery within the states. It is not to my present purpose to discuss that question; but it is to ask whether there is not enough in the basis on which he founded his argument to justify the people of the north in the utmost exercise of their rights of speech and the press, and petition and legislation against slavery.

If there are any still disposed to regard with indifference the argument I have drawn from this source, I will commend to their special attention the extract which I have already read from the proceedings of the first congress, in 1789. Speaking of the abolition of the slave trade, he says:

"I should venture to say it is as much for the interests of Georgia and South Carolina as of any state in the union. Every addition they receive to their number slaves, tends to a more dangerous and dangerous them less capable of self-defence. In case of hostilities with foreign nations, they will be the means of inviting attack, instead of repelling invasion. It is a necessary duty of the general government to protect every part of the empire against danger, as well internally as externally. Every thing, therefore, which tends to increase this danger, tends to be a local affair, yet, if it involves national expense or safety, it becomes of concern to every part of the union, and is a proper subject for the consideration of those charged with the general administration of the government."

You see, sir, that the very father of the constitution, the man so eminently distinguished for his intelligence, his sound judgment, and his sober, practical views—perceived and yielded to the force of the argument drawn from the weakness and danger of slavery.

And Mr. Speaker, how greatly is this argument strengthened by the rapid increase of the slave population; and especially by the obstinate determination evinced to resist all attempts to persuade to its abolition, accompanied even by studied vindications of it as an institution to be sustained and cherished. And how much more deeply impressed with a sense of this danger when he reads such declarations as the following from a governor of one of the slave states of this union:

"Domestic slavery, therefore, instead of being a political evil, is the corner-stone of our republican edifice."

It is not, I am justly estimates our privileges will tolerate the idea of emancipation, and will, however remote, or on any condition of pecuniary advantages, however favorable. I would as soon open a negotiation for selling the liberty of the state at once, as for making any stipulations for the ultimate emancipation of our slaves."

Having spoken of the attempts of those whom he calls "the friends of freedom" to reason the south out of its suicidal attachment to slavery, he says:

"It is a my deliberate opinion that the laws of every community should punish this species of interference by death without the benefit of clergy, regarding the authors of it as enemies of the human race."

It was declared in the institution of slavery? In a message to the legislature of Governor McCallin in 1834; and it has since been followed by the notorious threat of hanging, made on the floor of the senate of the United States.

Can any body fail to see, in the infatuation of all the slaveholders, danger in the institution of slavery?

But, Mr. Speaker, aside from all considerations of national hazard, or of mere constitutional obligation of defence and protection, how strongly must the north feel impelled to take an interest in the matter of slavery by the simple reason of brotherhood resulting from the fact that the members of the race described, but is nowhere better described than in the simple, touching declaration: "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." Is it impossible to extinguish this feeling?

But besides let it be considered that, by coming into the union, the north made slavery in a sense different from that which the express stipulations to which I have referred. And it has since become emphatically its own, to the extent of slavery in this District, and a slave-trade which as horrible and disgraceful as is to be found in Christendom. Has not the north, as well as the whole country, thus assumed a high and noble position, and the express stipulations may not the people of the north, and of every part of the United States, seek to discharge that responsibility by any and all the means which the full extent of power recognised in the constitution shall warrant?

In asking as is so often done, "What has the north to do with slavery?" it seems to be supposed that, because the north have no power to legislate slavery out of the slave states, therefore they have no right to attempt to reason it out, without reflecting that, while legislation by the congress of the United States is limited by the grant of power in the constitution, there is, and from the nature of the case can be, no such limitation to the exercise of moral power. Its legislation, so to speak, is not the creature of constitutional grant. It has a higher origin; it rests on a deeper foundation. Its jurisdiction is the world. It is limited by the guilt of power in the constitution, and with a mightier than the civil arm—with an energy which no such arm can resist. Wherever mind can come in contact with mind, through the agencies of speech and the press, there, restrained by nothing but truth and justice, it puts forth its energies, and accomplishes its victories.

While the constitution gave to "the people of the United States" no authority to repeal the slave laws of the states and banish slavery from their borders, it left truth—omnipotent truth—truth unfettered—free as the spirit of man—to take the wings of the morning, and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth. Instead of attempting the impossibility of binding it, the constitution guaranteed it to a tongue and a press, and left it to go forth to its mighty conflict with error.

It seems to me that those who deny this freedom to truth, and claim that it is bound by constitutional fetters, do not reflect on the strange, anomalous condition in which they thus place the free states of this union. To most of the civilized world we may freely utter the voice of truth on the subject of slavery, (for by what lines of latitude, or mountains, or oceans, can that voice be confined?) while to our southern brethren we may not speak, because—they are our brethren—and we are bound to be silent. And yet, to be bound to bear on them—as Great Britain has, through her West India emancipation, upon the southern states of this union—an anti-slavery influence which they would find it difficult to resist. Nothing but a wall reaching to Heaven, and penetrating to the centre of the earth, could exclude the influence. And yet the union of these states has reared upon "Mason's and Dixon's line" that wall of separation! It leaves, indeed, a gate through which the north may pass, and must pass, when danger threatens; but when we have poured out our blood to aid in protecting and securing slavery, we must retire, without uttering, on pain of death, one word of admonition against a continuance of the institution. We must fight and pay to suppress its insurrections, but may not reason and remonstrate to put an end to its injustice, and relieve the country from its danger. And this is the position in which we are placed.

I have sometimes heard it said that, in forming the union, the north took the south with the incubance of slavery, and must patiently bear its evils. But the south it may with equal propriety be said, took the north with the incubance—if such it may be called—of freedom. Each necessarily subjected itself to the influence of the other—an influence exerted by the official intercourse growing out of common government, and the facilities of social and commercial intercourse resulting from the union.

And, sir, the north has felt that influence, and still feels it! It has, as I shall soon show, felt it ever since the government went into operation, in the contest with the nullifiers, and the nullification of the tariff. Where the balance of influence will ultimately fall remains to be seen. If the free states are true to themselves and the great principles of freedom, standing firm in their defence, there can be no doubt that these principles will finally triumph. But, to second that result, there must be a better understanding of those principles, and more firmness in maintaining them, than I have ever been permitted to witness here.

There is, Mr. Speaker, something monstrous in the idea that this union was formed to perpetuate slavery. Yet it is the only union that has ever been formed to be sustained; for the union is, in effect, there by thrown around slavery as a shield of defence against the power of truth, which might otherwise be brought to bear against it. Before the union, we might have spoken, and spoken with great effect. If without the union, we might not not forth our vocal power in union with the anti-slavery cause. —But the union has been formed, and —we must be silent! While the rest of the world is moving on this great question of human rights, we must be silent because we have formed the union! This whole land is to be shrouded in the darkness of Egypt, and hushed in the silence of death on the great subject which is moving Christendom, because we have formed the union!

Mr. Speaker, if this is to be the effect of the formation of this union—if it is thus to become an instrument of perpetuating slavery, then should the preamble to the covenant of silence, the compact of the union be bent to read, "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish injustice, ensure domestic discord, provide for the common weakness, promote the general injury, and secure the curse of slavery to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America."

Such, sir, should have been the preamble to the constitution; for it would be perfectly descriptive of it if the union, of which it is the compact, is to become what the claims of the south would really make it—an instrument of perpetuating slavery.

It would be urged, as an argument for suppressing freedom of speech and the press, and petition on the subject of slavery, that the free exercise of these rights will have the effect of dissolving the union. Now, sir, I maintain precisely the reverse of this. I maintain that this very suppression, if it could be effected, would itself dissolve the union. You might as well expect that the stopping up of Ætna's crater would not produce an earthquake, as that a dissolution of the union would not follow such a suppression. Every man who knows any thing of the nature of the human soul, and the power of its agonizing sympathies, and its unquenchable and overpowering remonstrances. Beware how you trifle with these sympathies! Call them weakness—brand them as fanaticism—denounce them as incendiary. Yet they exist, and will exist, and ought to exist; and your contempt and abuse of them will only increase their intensity.

But, if you would preserve this union, cease to treat thus contemptuously the best feelings of the human heart. Cease to hurl back in the faces of the men and women of the north their humble petitions, praying, in the name of our common humanity, that you would repeal the laws which oppress and oppress them.

Sir, you owe it to them—you owe it to the constitution—you owe it to the great principles of liberty which this nation drew in with the first breath of its existence, and which send the pulsations of health through every part of our republican system, not to abridge the liberty of speech, and of the press, and of petition in connexion with the subject of slavery. If you will assail these rights, let it be in connexion with some other subject, but never—in connexion with this! Guard them with vestal vigilance. If slavery suffers from them, it must suffer. If it falls in its contest with "truth and free," then let it fall. Its fall will be the safety of the country and the perpetuity of the union.

Mr. Speaker, is slavery to be put in competition with the freedom of speech, and of the press, and of the right of petition? Which shall be surrendered, the slavery of the black man, or the noblest freedom of the white man? Must we choose between slavery, which shall die? Who can doubt—who can hesitate on such a question? And yet, sir, we are told that this contest between freedom and slavery was settled fifty years ago in favor of slavery—not by the constitution—that would have been monstrous—but by implication, by the growing out of compromise legislation on the basis of the federal compact! Sir, if this implication lies at the basis of the compact of our union, then was the union placed on a mine, to be shattered into a thousand fragments by its inevitable explosion.

And, sir, what I say of the effects of the abridgment of the freedom of speech and of the press, and of the right of petition, which is insisted on as a part of the compromise, must also apply to slavery. Its permanency is utterly incompatible with the permanency of this union. Who can expect that a free people can be held in fraternal embrace forever with a community where slavery is cherished and proclaimed as "the corner stone of republican institutions?" The union is incompatible with the slave. It can grow in social proximity, but liberty and slavery delight in separation." Such was the sentiment of Pinkney, uttered in the Maryland house of delegates fifty years ago. And, sir, what is thus uttered as a general truth will, as sure as man is man, be our history, if the compromise is maintained. It will be against the feelings of the north, and against the enlightened judgment and enlarged humanity of the civilized world. If the framers of the constitution had attempted to form a compact of union specifically providing for the perpetuity of slavery, they would have sought to make the most complete and avowed slave now hear of "the guarantees of the constitution," and "the compromise of the constitution," in favor of slavery! Sir, the guarantees were all the other way—guarantees drawn from the very nature of the union, from the spirit of the times in which it was formed, and from the most common sense, which "lie at the basis" of all our cherished institutions.

While looking at the objection to the exercise by congress of its power of abolishing slavery here, drawn from a consideration of the indirect influence of such legislation upon the institution of slavery in the states, which seems to exert the burden of the objection, I have been reminded of the view taken of the indirect influence of congressional anti-slavery legislation by Mr. Madison, in the debates in the first congress, to which I wish to call the particular attention of the house.

Congress, when so collected, was prohibited by the constitution from abolishing the slave trade prior to the year 1808. In the debate upon a petition of Dr. Franklin and others—to which I shall by and by more particularly refer—praying that congress would "step to the very verge of the power vested" in it for discouraging the traffic in slaves, and such objection was urged against the action of congress which is now urged.

On that occasion, Mr. Jackson of Georgia, said: "I apprehend it, through the interference of the general government the slave trade was abolished, it would be the end of the matter, and the burden of total emancipation, and they would hold their property in jeopardy. I hope the house will order the petition to be laid on the table, in order to prevent alarming our southern brethren."

And what said Mr. Madison to this? "He said, sir, in a report of that debate) that the action is restricted by the constitution from taking measures to abolish the slave trade. Yet there are (said he) a variety of ways by which it could countenance the abolition; and regulations might be made in relation to the introduction of them into the new states, and the slave trade would be well worthy of consideration."

Thus, though congress could no more then abolish the slave trade than it can now abolish slavery in the states, yet, in Mr. Madison's opinion, it might very properly so exercise its admitted powers of regulating the introduction of slaves into the new states, and the slave trade in the states of Georgia and South Carolina, were then as jealous of the action of congress upon the subject of slavery, lest it should countenance the abolition of the slave trade, and place "their property in jeopardy," as they now are lest the action of congress in abolishing slavery should countenance the like abolition in the states. But Mr. Madison was not to be deterred by this from going, in the language of Dr. Franklin's petition, to the "very verge of the power vested in congress" over the subject of slavery. The modern nervousness in regard to this matter seem not to have entered his mind. Then, indeed, slavery did not stand so much higher than any other interest in the country, as to reverse all the ordinary principles of legislation for the purpose of its security and protection. On the contrary, it was considered right to exercise "the power of congress over the subject of the slave trade," "with a view to 'countenancing' what congress could not then directly accomplish—the abolition of the slave trade. If Mr. Madison were now in this hall, and should advance such a doctrine in regard to the abolition of slavery and this slave trade here, he would be branded as a "desperate fanatic," and an enemy of the union. What "a change has come o'er the spirit of" this nation since the congress of eighty-nine!

While considering the subject of congressional action in cases in which it may indirectly exert an unfavorable influence upon slavery, the abolition, by congress, of slavery in the northwardly extending territories, which are already under the dominion of slavery, cannot escape attention. The ordinance of 1787 decreeing that abolition, was expressly ratified by the first congress under the present constitution. But who can read that ordinance, and especially the preamble to the "six articles" embodied in it—to which I shall hereafter more particularly refer—without perceiving the immense anti-slavery influence it was calculated to exert? But the truth was, the country was not then afraid of that influence; for it was, as I shall presently show, in full accordance with the strong anti-slavery feeling of those times.

It was in the spirit of the times that the right of the north to exert, by all constitutional means, and to the full extent of constitutional authority, an anti-slavery influence on the south, I have drawn an argument from the union itself, and the fraternal relation which that union created. But, sir, while I thus reason from the union and its fraternal relations, in favor of the right of action on the southern question in regard to slavery, I desire to declare most emphatically the deep sense I entertain of the peculiar obligation which this relation imposes upon the north to act in this matter in the spirit of fraternal kindness and good will. This obligation would extend to the entire union, for it is uniformly and most loudly insisted on by the north. We do not address ourselves to strangers and foreigners, but to our fellow-citizens—our brethren—to whom we are bound by a thousand endearing ties and patriotic recollections. If we claim to address them on the ground that they are our brethren, then are we solemnly bound to do so in the spirit of fraternal kindness and charity. In that spirit, if I know myself, I now speak; in that spirit I have ever spoken, and in that spirit I desire to assure the south I shall always speak, here and elsewhere, on this subject.

Implied pledge of the south to the north.

I have thus endeavored to show that congress has power to abolish slavery and the slave trade in this District, and to meet the objections to the exercise of that power, drawn from a supposed implied pledge to Virginia and Maryland in accepting the cessions, and an implied pledge to the whole south, in the act of coming into the union.

Thus far, however, I have occupied a defensive position, endeavoring, as well as I was able, to vindicate from the charge of violating pledges and discrediting compromises, the action which I have asked congress to abolish slavery and the slave trade here, and have exercised what they believe to be their just freedom of speech and of the press, for the purpose of convincing the southern states of the duty of abolishing slavery within their limits.

But, sir, I am not disposed to act merely on the defensive. I wish to show that while the south charges the north with a violation of implied pledges in regard to slavery, she has herself violated her own clearly implied pledges on this very subject.

Whoever will look into the history of the period when the constitution was formed, will find that it was then the universal expectation and expectation excited by the slave states themselves, especially by Virginia and Maryland—that slavery would, at no distant day, be abolished by their own legislation.—Abolition, as I have already intimated, and will now show, was emphatically the spirit of those times.—Slavery was regarded as a necessary and inevitable destined to be "of few days," and declared to be "full of evil." It was considered and treated as a dangerous intruder, that was to be allowed, from necessity, to hold, temporarily, as a tenant at sufferance, but by no means to be permitted to enjoy a safe tenure in this soil of freedom. This feeling pervaded the country; it pervaded the convention that formed the constitution, and must necessarily have formed an essential element in the compromises which led to its adoption.

Anti-slavery was the prevalent feeling of the revolution. It was the first principle of this nation, drawn in abhorrence of slavery in every form. The colonial policy of the mother country, by which it had been introduced, was the subject of almost universal execration. It was then held to be "self evident" that all men were "created equal, and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, the pursuit of happiness." This great truth—not slavery—was regarded as "the corner stone of our republican edifice." Nor was it held to be exclusively applicable to the Anglo-Saxon race; but the descendants of Africa were to enjoy its benefits and blessings, and the regulations of the slave trade and emancipation early commenced under its influence. Vermont took the lead by declaring in her constitution in 1777 that there should be no slavery within her limits. Massachusetts and Pennsylvania followed in 1780, and New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island in 1784. The noble and pure spirit of these great movements are well set forth in the preamble to the abolition act of Pennsylvania; a part of which I beg permission to read.

Having recognized the dangers and deliverances of the revolution, and expressed "a grateful sense of the manifold blessings unreservedly received from the hand of that Being from whom cometh every good and perfect gift," the noble and pure spirit of these great movements are well set forth in the preamble to the abolition act of Pennsylvania; a part of which I beg permission to read.

"Impressed with these ideas, we conceive that it is our duty, and we rejoice that it is in our power, to extend a portion of that freedom to others which has been extended to us. * * * We esteem it a peculiar blessing that we are this day enabled to do more for the perfecting of our civilization by removing as much as possible the sorrows of those who have lived in undesired bondage. Weaned by a long course of experience from those narrow prejudices we had imbibed, we find our hearts enlarged with kindness and benevolence toward men of all conditions and nations; and we conceive ourselves, at this particular period, extraordinarily called upon, by the blessings we have received, to manifest the sincerity of our professions, and to give substantial proof of our gratitude." "And whereas the condition of those persons who have been heretofore denominated negro and mulatto slaves has been attended with circumstances which not only deprived them of the common blessings they were, by nature, entitled to, but of that protection and aid which should have been afforded them by the laws of the land, and by an unnatural separation and sale of husband and wife from each other, and their children—an injury, the greatness of which can only be conceived by supposing that we were in the same unhappy case. In justice, therefore, to persons so un happily circumstanced, and to those who, having no other remedy, were in they may rest their sorrows and their hopes, have no reasonable inducement to render the service to society which they otherwise might; and, also, in grateful commemoration of our own happy deliverance from that state of unconditional submission to a power which we would not have tolerated had it been enacted, that no child hereafter born shall be a slave," &c.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is exhibited the spirit of these times. Let this precious preamble be borne in mind as we proceed.

It was in accordance with the spirit which dictated the emancipations of Pennsylvania and other states, was the ordinance of 1787, to which I have referred.—Let me call your attention to the preamble to the six articles in that ordinance, the last of which abolished slavery in the northwestern territory. It declares, "and for other things, that we deem essential to the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis wherein these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected, to fix and establish these principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be enacted," &c. It said thereby, "that it is hereby ordained," &c.

Such was the preamble to that act abolishing slavery. Then abolition was regarded as extending "the fundamental principles" which lay at the basis of our republican institutions. Now, slavery is held to be "an avowed stone of our republican edifice."

In 1774, Patrick Henry, in a letter to Robert Pleasants, afterwards president of the Virginia abolition society, said:

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

"Is it not amazing that, at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty, in a country professing a religion the most humane, mild, gentle and generous, adopting the principles so repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Every thinking, honest man rejects it in speculation; how few in practice, from conscientious motives!"

the purpose with great care; and I would never cease moving till it became a law, or I ceased to be a member. I believe God governs the world; and I believe it to be a maxim in His, as in our court, that those who sue for equity ought to do it.

Drawing nearer to the time when the constitution was adopted, and the "compromises" made which "guaranteed" the perpetuity of slavery! we come to the celebrated letter of Mr. Jefferson to Dr. Price, of London, dated at Paris, August 7, 1785. Dr. Price, when a pamphlet on the subject of slavery, and Mr. Jefferson's letter was in reply to one from the doctor on the subject of his pamphlet.

Mr. Jefferson begins by speaking of the manner in which he thinks the pamphlet—which, it seems, had been extensively circulated in America—will have been received. "Southward of the Chesapeake," he thinks, "it will find but few readers; concurring with it in sentiment." From the mouth of the head of the Chesapeake it would be received more favorably—"the bulk of the people approving it in theory"—slavholding keeping "the consciences of many uneasy;" while northward of the Chesapeake the oppressed, who would be as ready as rats to eat "robbers and murderers." He then proceeds to say:

"In Maryland I do not find such a disposition to begin the redress of this enormity as in Virginia. This is the next state to which we may turn our eyes for the interesting spectacle of justice in action. The sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

But, with avarice and oppression as a capital, wherein the sacred side is gaining daily recruits; and the influx into office of young men grown and growing up. These have sucked in the principles of liberty as it were with their mother's milk, and it is to them I look with anxiety to turn the fate of this question."

In an address by hon. James Campbell, before the Pennsylvania society of Cincinnati, on the 4th of July, 1787, he said:

"Our separation from Great Britain has extended the empire of humanity. The time is not far distant shall turn their vastness into fields for our example."

The convention that formed the constitution—whose "compromises" have imposed perpetual silence on the subject of slavery!—was then in session in Philadelphia, and attended on the delivery of this address, with General Washington at their head.

and submitted to the people of the states the constitution, and September, 1787. For further evidence of the public sentiment at that time, let me now refer to the debates in some of the state conventions to which it was submitted for ratification.

In the debates in the North Carolina convention, Mr. Iredell, afterwards a judge of the supreme court of the United States, said: "When the entire abolition of slavery takes place, it will be an event which must be pleasing to every generous mind, and every friend of human nature." Mr. Galloway, said: "I wish to see this noble principle made put an end to. I apprehend the clause (touching the slave trade) means to bring forward manumission."

Luther Martin, of Maryland, a member of the convention that formed the constitution of the United States, said: "We ought to authorise the general government to suppress such regulations as shall be thought most advantageous for the gradual abolition of slavery and the emancipation of the slaves which are already in the state."

Judge Wilson, of Pennsylvania, one of the convention that framed the constitution, said in the Pennsylvania convention that ratified it: "I consider this clause (that relating to the trade) as laying the foundation for banishing slavery out of this country. It will produce the same kind of gradual change which was produced in Pennsylvania. The new states which are to be formed will be under the control of congress in this particular, and slaves will never be introduced among them. It presents us with the pleasing prospect that the rights of mankind will be acknowledged and established throughout the union."

In the Virginia convention of 1787, Mr. Mason, author of the Virginia constitution, said:

"The abolition of slaves weakens the states; and it is a principle which is as destructive to the manhood. * * * As much as a valid union of all the states, I would not admit the southern states (South Carolina and Georgia) into the union, unless they agree to the discontinuance of this disagreeable and our countrymen. We were totally annihilated, it would do much good."

Patrick Henry contended that, by the constitution, congress would have power to abolish slavery as indispensably necessary to the safety of the country, whose "general defence" was committed to its care. In addition to this argument, he said, all "nothing thing" will contribute to bring this event about which is desired. We feel its fatal effects. We deplore it with the pity of humanity."

In the Massachusetts convention of 1788, General Heath said that "slavery was confined to the states now existing. It could not be extended. By their ordinance congress had declared that the new states should be free, and have no slavery."

Judge Dawes, said: "Although slavery is not suited by an apoplexy, yet it has received a mortal wound, and will die of consumption."

Such are some of the expressions of opinion in the conventions that adopted the constitution, in regard to slavery, and its probable speedy abolition. The expressions are all in favor of the public mind, by its own in the brief and significant language of Judge Dawes—slavery "has received a mortal wound, and will die of consumption." This, indeed, was public opinion of that day; and yet we are now told that the constitution, which drew its first breath in the atmosphere of that public mind, by its own implied guaranty, or had connected with its own promises as implied a guaranty, for the secured an rights, even at the expense of a sacrifice of the rights of speech, and the press, and petition! Every fully understood that slavery was morally wronged, and destined to be removed by the strange necromancy of constitutional implication, that at that very time thrown around it the shield of the union for protection against its great enemies—freedom of speech and freedom of the press!

THOS. JEFFERSON.

Proceeding in the order of time, I come to the declarations of Washington. In writing to Robert Morris on the 12th of April, 1786, General Washington said:

"There is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do to see a plan adopted for the abolition of slavery; but there is only one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is, by legislative authority, and this, as far as my suffrage will go, shall never be wanting."

On the 10th of May, 1786, he thus wrote to Lafayette:

"[Abolition] certainly might and ought to be effected, and that, too, by legislative authority." In a letter to John Fenton Mercer, of September 9, 1786, he said:

"I am among my first wishes to see some plan adopted by which slavery in this country may be abolished by law."

To John Sinclair he wrote:

"There are in Pennsylvania laws for the gradual abolition of slavery which neither Maryland nor Virginia have at present, but which nothing is more certain than that they must have, and at a period so remote."

These strong expressions of sentiment by General Washington, it should be observed, were uttered only a year before the session of the convention, himself at its head, which formed the constitution that "guaranteed" the perpetuity of slavery! But let us come a little nearer to the adoption of the constitution.

Let me now refer to a few expressions of opinion going to show the state of public sentiment soon after the adoption of the constitution.

In the Maryland house of delegates in 1789, Wm. Pinkney, said:

"But it is possible that this body should not feel for the reputation of Maryland? Is national honor unworthy of consideration? Is the censures of an enlightened universe insufficient to alarm us? The character of my country among the nations of the world is as dear to me as that country itself. I would be silent, if in what Maryland bosom does it now beat, in reference to slavery and the slave trade here, for which this nation is responsible to 'an enlightened universe.'" "What a motley appearance (continues Mr. P.) must Maryland at this moment make in the eyes of those who value the rights of freedom. It is to stand, once the fair temple of freedom and the abominable nursery of slaves—the school for patriots and the foster-mother of petty despots—the asserter of human rights and the patron of wanton oppression? Here have emigrants from a land of tyranny found an asylum from persecution, and here also have those who came as rightfully from the winds of heaven found an eternal grave for the liberties of themselves and their posterity. * * * Sir, by the eternal principles of natural justice, no master in the state has a right to hold his slave in bondage a single hour. * * * So the thing is impossible; never will your country be productive; never will its agriculture, its commerce, or its manufactures flourish so long as they depend on reluctant bondmen for their progress."

What must have been the state of public sentiment which could in the legislature of a slave state bear such an indignant, burning rebuke, of slavery as this? Did slavery or the body which had addressed it believe that there was in or about the constitution of the United States any "implied" prohibition of freedom of speech on the subject of slavery?

Let me now turn, for further evidence of public sentiment, to the debates in the first congress. On the 15th of February, 1793, a memorial to the Pennsylvania abolition society, setting forth in strong language the injustice of slavery, its inconsistency with our institutions, and the duty of all to labor to effect its abolition; and asking congress to take into consideration the traffic in slaves, and "the very verge of the power vested" in it for "discouraging every species of traffic in the persons of our fellow men."

The reception of this petition was neither objected to, nor "considered" as objected to; but it was respectfully received and considered. In the debate that arose upon it, Mr. Parker, of Virginia, said: "I cannot help expressing the pleasure I feel in finding so considerable a part of the community attending to matters of such momentous concern to the future prosperity and happiness of the PEOPLE OF AMERICA. I think it my duty as a CITIZEN OF THE UNION to espouse their cause."

Mr. Page, of Virginia, (afterwards governor), said: "It is a fair part of the constitution. He hoped that the designs of the respectable memorialists would not be stopped at the threshold, in order to preclude a fair discussion of the memorial. He placed himself in the case of a slave." [This is the true position; to make the slave's case our case; to "remember the weak and bond with them." Mr. Page, in this, as in all that shall go, was Franklin asked the first congress to go, to "the very verge" of our power to abolish, and where we cannot abolish, to "discourage" slavery. But to propose with the quotation.] "He placed himself in the case of a slave, and said that, on hearing that congress had refused to listen to the memorial, the residents of the respective parts of the community, 'how the petitioners are 'despicable fanatics!'" "He should infer that the general government, from which was expected great good would result to every class of citizens, had shut their ears against the voice of humanity."

Mr. General, of Pennsylvania, said: "I cannot, for my part, conceive how any person can be said to acquire property in another. I do not know how far I might go, if I was one of the judges of the United States, and those people were to come before me, and claim their emancipation; but I am sure I would give it as I could."

Mr. Burke, of South Carolina, said: "He saw the disposition of the house, and he feared it would be referred to a committee, maugre all their opposition."

Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, said: "That on entering into this government, they (South Carolina and Georgia) apprehended that the other states would, from motives of humaneness and benevolence, be led to vote for a general emancipation."

In a debate at the previous session of congress, (May 13, 1789), on a proposition to impose a duty of ten dollars each on imported slaves, Mr. Parker, of Virginia, the mover of the proposition, said: "He would be glad to see the government use its power to restore to human nature its inherent privileges, and, if possible, to wipe off the stigma under which America labored. The inconsistency in our principles, with which we are justly charged, should be done away, that we may show by our actions the pure love of mankind, and the desire to do good to the world in our Declaration of Independence."

Mr. Jackson, of Georgia, said: "It was the fashion of the day to favor the liberty of the slaves."

Mr. Madison said: "The dictates of humanity, the principles of the people, the national safety and happiness, and prudent policy require it of us. * * * I conceive the constitution, in this particular, was formed in order that the government might be restrained from laying a total prohibition, might be able to give some testimony of the sense of America with regard to the African trade. * * * It is to be hoped that, by expressing a national disapprobation of this trade, we may destroy it, and save ourselves from reproach, and our posterity the imbecility ever attendant on a country filled with slaves. * * * If there is any one point in which it is clearly the policy of this nation, so far as we constitutionally can, to vary the practice abounding under some of the state governments, it is this."

Mr. Madison's strong anti-slavery feeling manifested in the first congress. And it is worthy of remark that the question of slavery was treated as a national question—arguments for national interference, to the full extent of constitutional power, and with a view to varying the practice under some of the state governments, "being drawn from considerations of national honor, national strength and national safety."

Pursuing the order of time, let me give two additional and pointed reprobations of slavery by distinguished men of that period. In 1794, Dr. Rush declared:

"Domestic slavery is repugnant to the principles of Christianity. It prostrates every benevolent and just principle of action in the human heart. It is rebellion against the authority of a common Father. It is a practical denial of the extent and efficacy of the Christian religion. It is a carnal gratification of the prerogative of the great Sovereign of the universe, who has solemnly claimed an exclusive property in the souls of men."

In 1796, Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, judge of the supreme court of that state, and professor of law in the college of William and Mary, in a letter to the general assembly of that state, gave the substance of slavery, said: "Should we not, at the time of the revolution, have broken their fetters? Is it not our duty to embrace the first moment of constitutional health and vigor to effectuate so desirable an object, and to remove from us a stigma with which our enemies will never fail to upbraid us, nor our consciences to reproach us?"

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to another, and, in some respects, much stronger evidence of the prevalence of anti-slavery sentiments at the period to which I have referred. I do not allude to expressions of individual opinion, but to considered opinion and associated effort in favor of the abolition of slavery. In 1790, so strongly was the public mind moved in the subject of "abolition" that abolition societies were actually formed in Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. The Pennsylvania society was formed in 1790, and incorporated by act of the legislature in 1797—Benjamin Franklin, president; Dr. Rush, secretary. The New York society was formed in 1785—John Jay, president, afterwards Alexander Hamilton. The Maryland society was formed in 1790—John Jay, president, afterwards Judge Chase and Luther Martin. In 1790 the Connecticut society was formed—Dr. Stiles, president, and Simeon Baldwin, (late Judge Baldwin) secretary. In the same year the Virginia society was formed—Robert Pleasants, president; and also the New Jersey society, which had an acting committee of five members in each county. The first American general convention for promoting the abolition of slavery, was honorable Uriah Tracy, United States senator from Connecticut; hu-norable Benjamin Swift, chief justice of the supreme state; honorable Cesar A. Rodney, attorney general of the United States; honorable James A. Bayard, United States senator from Delaware; Governor Bloomfield, of New Jersey; hon. William Royle, the late venerable head of the Philadelphia bar; Messrs. Foster and Tilgham, of Rhode Island; Messrs. Ridgely, Buchanan and Wilkinson, of Maryland; and Messrs. Pleasants, McLean and Anthony, of Virginia.

For the purpose of showing the principles and objects of these societies, let me refer briefly to the constitution of two of them, and the memorials to congress of two others. The following is the preamble to the constitution of the Pennsylvania society:

"It is the duty of every citizen of the world to make of one flesh all the children of man; it is their duty to consult and promote each other's happiness, as members of the same family, however diversified they may be by color, situation, religion, or different states of society. It is more especially the duty of those persons who profess to maintain for themselves the rights of human nature, and who acknowledge the obligations of Christianity, to use such means as are in their power to extend the blessings of freedom to every part of the human race and in a more particular manner to such of their fellow creatures as are entitled to freedom by the laws and constitutions of any of the United States, and who, notwithstanding, are detained in bondage by fraud or violence. From a full conviction of the truth and obligations of these principles—from a desire to diffuse them wherever the miseries and vices of slavery exist, and in humble confidence of the favor and support of the Father of mankind, the subscribers have associated themselves under the title of the 'Pennsylvania society for promoting the abolition of slavery and the relief of free negroes unlawfully held in bondage.'"

The following is part of the preamble to the constitution of the New Jersey society:

"It is our boast that we live under a government wherein life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, are recognised as the universal rights of man. We abhor that inconsistent, illiberal and interested policy which withholds those rights from an unfortunate and degraded class of our fellow creatures."

The Connecticut and Virginia societies sent memorials to congress. The following is an extract from the former:

"From a sober conviction of the unrighteousness of slavery, your petitioners have long beheld with grief our fellow men doomed to perpetual bondage in a country which boasts of her freedom. Your petitioners have seen the millions of wretched, of general philanthropy (now it is "fanaticism") to associate ourselves together for the protection and assistance of this unfortunate part of our fellow men."

The memorial of the Virginia society is headed, "The memorial of the Virginia society for promoting the abolition of slavery."

Your memorialists fully believing that slavery is not only an odious degradation, but an outrageous violation of one of the most essential rights of human nature, and utterly repugnant to the precepts of the gospel," &c.

It would seem to be an appropriate closing of this mass of testimony to read, as I will now beg permission to do, an extract from a sermon of President Edwards, the younger, preached before the Connecticut Abolition society, September 15, 1791.

"Thirty years ago (said he) scarcely a man in this country thought either the slave-trade or the slavery of negroes to be a crime; but now, how many and able advocates, in private life, in our legislatures, in congress, have appeared, and openly and irreversibly pleaded the rights of humanity, in this as well as other instances? And if we judge of the future by the past, within fifty years from this time (the fifty years are about to expire) it will be as shameful for a man to hold a negro slave as to be guilty of common robbery or theft."

Upon the testimony thus presented, I cannot, Mr. Speaker, find time for an extended commentary. Nor do I deem it necessary. It seems to me impossible that it should be so failed to convince all who have been that, so far from there having been any implied pledge on the part of the free states that the subject of slavery should not be agitated, there arose necessarily, from the common sentiment of that period in regard to slavery, from the perfect freedom with which it was every where assailed, and from the general expression of opinion in favor of its abolition, an implied pledge on the part of the slave states that no obstacles should be interposed to the freest action of public sentiment in regard to it; but that they would, in fact, continue to co-operate, as they were then co-operating, with the philanthropists of the north, in producing abolition. And this, I should, "not a distant day," put an end to the evil.

[TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

[Vol. LXI.—WHOLE No. 157].

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

The North American gives a brief outline of the testimony of one of the witnesses, Samuel L. Gouverneur, (former postmaster of the city of N. York), which is worth copying:

"With regard to the cash payments to a large amount alleged to have been made by the government to defendant, it was proved by Mr. Gouverneur that there were payments of accommodation paper loaned the department by defendant—that the department had sued for the same amounts; and that the postmaster general had offered credit him with the amounts, if he would inform whom he should charge to; he also stated that the department could not raise money on its own credit, and he should regretfully have failed had not Mr. Reeside and others extended assistance in this way. The credit of the department was bad, and to any extent. I have a letter from the department, stating they would be bankrupt unless I raised them $30,000 by next mail. These drafts of Mr. Reeside's were issued in June, and I do not believe they were charged on any books of the department. As to the mode of keeping accounts, I can state, from own knowledge, it was for the purpose of deceiving and preventing an investigation by the committees of congress, then expected. Government paid two per cent. a month for the use of its money. Under Mr. Barry there was no bag-in under Mr. Keudall, every thing thing they could find.

SEIZURES ON THE COAST OF AFRICA.—

The Salem Register publishes a correspondence between Mr. Isaac Chase, American consul at Cape Town, Africa, and Rear Admiral King, commander-in-chief of the British naval forces at that station, relating to the treatment of Captain Webb, of the Salem brig Cherokee, which was very roughly overhauled some time ago by a boat from the British brig Curlew, on the old suspicion of being engaged in the slave trade.

Mr. Chase forwarded a copy of Captain Webb's statement to Rear Admiral King on the 20th of March. The answer, which is all that could be hoped or expected, we give below:

H. B. M. S. Southampton Simon's bay, March 23, 1841.

Sir: I have had the honor to receive to-day your letter of the 20th inst., and with its inclosure, regarding the reprehensible conduct of an officer belonging to her majesty's brig Curlew, while boarding and examining the brig "Cherokee," under the flag of the United States, and feel extreme regret that any officer under my orders should have acted in the manner complained of by Mr. Webb. A strict investigation of the matter shall be made on the earliest opportunity; and, should I find the complaint established, I shall certainly inflict a severe reproof upon the offender, my instructions to the squadron on assuming this command being that every proper moderation and courtesy should be observed in performing the unpleasant duty of boarding and examining vessels of friendly nations, and especially those of the United States.

It is gratifying for me to observe the temperate language used by Mr. Webb in his representation, and the friendly consideration you have expressed for Lieut. Ross, while bringing the subject under notice. I will have the honor to sign my obedient servant,

E. D. KING.

Rear admiral and commander-in-chief.

THE GROGAN CORRESPONDENCE. The Montpelier Watchman publishes the correspondence between Governor Jenison of Canada, and Sir Richard Jackson, acting governor of Canada, on the subject of the arrest of James W. Grogan.

Governor Jenison wrote on the 20th of September, briefly describing the outrage, and requesting immediate investigation and the release of Grogan.

Sir Richard Jackson wrote in reply on the 6th of October at Kingston, that immediately on receiving intelligence of the transaction, and before receiving the letter of Governor Jenison, he had directed the matter to be investigated, with orders for the immediate release of Grogan, if it should appear that he had been seized within the United States.

On the same day Sir Richard wrote again, as follows:

Government House, Kingston, October 6, 1841.

Sir: Since I addressed to your excellency my despatch of this morning, I have received from the law officer of the crown at Montreal a report, from which it appears that the evidence which they had obtained on the subject proved that Grogan's arrest took place, as was alleged, within the territory of the U. S. In conformity, therefore, with their instructions, they had taken steps for setting Grogan at liberty, and conveying him to the frontier in the neighborhood of which he was arrested. I am informed that Grogan left Montreal accordingly on the 4th inst.

I beg to assure your excellency that I shall nevertheless continue the investigation which I have directed; and if the information conveyed to your excellency that officers or soldiers in her majesty's service were implicated in this affair should prove correct, I shall not fail to visit the officers with the strictest rigor. I have the honor to be, &c. R. JACKSON.

His Excellency S. H. Jenison.

FAILURE OF THE TREATY NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE SACS AND FOXES. The

St. Louis Republican of the 19th ult. says: "By the return of Mr. Crawford and other gentlemen from the agency of the Sioux and Foxes, on the Iowa river, we learn that the attempt of Gov. Chambers and Gov. Doty to treat with them for their lands within Iowa territory was unsuccessful. The Indians positively refused to even entertain the proposition for a sale, although they were deemed liberal. A good deal of feeling prevailed amongst the citizens in the State, as the treaty excludes all present hopes of enlarging the territory of Iowa, and leaves the frontier exposed to annoyance from the Indians; and the Indians, in their turn, are exposed to all the corruptions and impositions of a frontier settlement. A company of dragoons was left at the agency to preserve order and protect the Indians for a time. Their salaries for two years, amounting to eighty-two thousand dollars, were paid them."

THE ARMY.

DEATHS IN FLORIDA. The Savannah Georgian, of the 1st inst. brings the melancholy intelligence that it was very sickly at St. Augustine, and that some of our officers have fallen victims to the disease.

Major Brown, paymaster, a promising officer, and son of the late Gen. Brown, of the army, died on the 24th of October.

Captain Garner, of the 3d artillery, died at Philadelphia on the 23d October, and was buried on the 24th ult.

Colonel Downing, late Delegate, also died at St. Augustine on the 24th ultimo.

Two soldiers have also died.

The U. S. steamer Newbern, Capt. McNulty, arrived at Savannah, on Saturday the 30th ult. from Florida. The correspondents of the Savannah Republican writes:

St. Augustine, Oct. 26, 1841. GENTLEMEN: I have no military intelligence to give you. Our latest information from Tampa is favorable. Lieut. B. Bragg and his company E, 3d artillery, left yesterday morning in the Gaston for Fort Pierce. To-morrow the Clas Downing will have fallen victim to the disease. J. L. Vinton's company to the same place. These movements are preparatory to a scout in the direction of Mr. Samuel Jones' head quarters, if his whereabouts can be ascertained.

Palatka, October 28, 1841. GENTLEMEN: We have good news from Tampa—very good news. Tigertail was the principal portion of his people has come in, and the remainder of his band are on their way to Tampa. Tigertail, accompanied by Alligator, who has recently arrived from the west, has gone out after those who broke off from him.

The 4th infantry, under Lieut. Col. GARLAND, has arrived at Tampa with an important Creek chief. This regiment has gone to middle Florida, to take part in the collection of the refugee Creeks now about the Osage-locks. The prospect of closing the war continues bright and a few months more will decide the long mooted question. In haste, yours, &c.

THE NAVY.

BOOKS DRY DOCK. It is gratifying to learn that arrangements are making in the navy yard for the construction of the long contemplated dry dock.

The late efficient secretary of the navy, has evidently made an excellent selection of civil engineer, Charles H. Courtenay, esq. a very intelligent and scientific gentleman, in all respects worthy the best regard of our citizens.

The business of making contracts is devolved by the commissioners of the navy upon the navy agent, Robert C. Wetmore, esq. who is alone responsible for fidelity in this department.

The dock will probably be completed in about five years with an expenditure of about twelve hundred thousand dollars. [Brooklyn News.

FROM THE PACIFIC. Arrival of the Constitution—old Ironsides.—We learn from the United States Gazette that the U. S. frigate Constitution, (late the flagship of the late Commodore CLAXTON,) arrived in Hampton roads on Thursday last, 110 days from Lima, Peru via Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 45 days from the latter place. Mr. DuRoi, Brazilian minister to Peru, came passenger in the Constitution to Rio de Janeiro.

The Constitution left Callao on the 11th of July last. The U. S. ship Dale, and schooner Shark accompanied her two days out. The Dale returned to Callao, and the Shark sailed for Valparaiso and Talcahuana. All well.

The following changes of officers took place previous to the vessels separating—Lieut. James P. Brown, exchanged with Lieut. W. M. Brewster, of the Dale. Lieut. B. exchanging with Lieut. W. A. Wirt, of the Shark; Lieut. W. joining the Constitution. Passed midshipman M. Hunt, of the Shark, exchanged with midshipman J. Cooper, of the C.

Midshipman J. S. Maury, ordered from Shark to Constitution. Midshipman W. W. Fisk joined the C. from the store ship Relief. The Shark was left at Callao, all well. The St. Louis was on the west coast of Mexico. The Yorktown had sailed for Sandwich islands.

At the time of the Constitution's leaving Peru, the political state of the country was quiet, the "Evenco revolution" having been put down by Gen. Gamara and his party, with the army at their command, amidst much bloodshed; the year, though the opposition was gaining strength.

A revolution had taken place in Bolivia, whence more placed Gen. Santa Cruz as president of that republic.

The Constitution left Rio Janeiro on the 15th of September, left there the U. S. frigate Potomac, sloop Marion and schooner Enterprise, all well.—The two latter just in from a cruise.

Commodore Charles G. Ridgely, late commander of our naval force on the coast of Brazil, and his secretary G. P. Stevenson, esq. came passengers in the Constitution from Rio Janeiro.

The Commodore had been on a commission since January, 1839, and has returned home, that his crew may be paid off and discharged at the expiration of their three years' enlistment. Although a large number of her crew's term of service is out, there should be no complaints, as the term expired, generally, on the passage home.

We are glad that the government is paying attention to the important subject of having our vessels of war at home in time to discharge their crews when their term of enlistment (three years) has expired. It will tend to make the naval service popular. Our naval service is one of voluntary enlistment—therefore, when our seamen faithfully comply with their contract with the country, the government should not fail in theirs with the seamen, unless under very extraordinary circumstances, for which the law of congress of March 2d, 1837, provides.

The C. has been employed in the gulf of Mexico, West Indies, Brazil and Pacific oceans—has been at sea about four hundred days, and sailed over 50,000 miles. She has been an active cruiser, giving protection to our citizens and commerce wherever she went. We take occasion to welcome the return of the favorite old ship, and hope that ere long, the officers and crew will be with their families and friends. Attached to the ship is a list of the officers now on board the Constitution.

Captain—Daniel Turner, esq.

Commander—Edward W. Carpenter.

Lieutenants—Thomas D. Shaw, 1st; Wm. Smith,

2d; Peter Turner, 3d; William A. Wurts, 4th; Alexander Gibson, 5th; George M. McCreary, 6th.

Surgeons—Thomas Dillard.

Purser—McKean Buchanan.

Acting master—Lewis C. Sartori.

Lieutenant marines—Jabez C. Rich.

*Acting chaplain—John F. Girard.

Passed midshipman—M. Hunt, F. S. Haggerty.

Assistant surgeons—C. Maxwell, S. Jackson.

Midshipmen—W. C. B. Porter; C. Smith; C.

R. Jones; S. Bent; T. R. Keulock; J. P. McFarland;

W. W. Roberts; J. S. Maury; C. Hays; A. K.

Hughes; H. S. Arnold; *W. E. Hopkins; J. Day; R.

S. Renshaw; W. W. Polk; *E. Simpson; F. P. Wheel-

lock; J. F. Sperry.

Acting master mate—E. F. Olmstead.

Captain's clerk—G. Walker.

Boatswain—R. H. O'Neal.

Gunner—G. Newman.

Carpenter—J. Cahill.

Sail maker—N. B. Peed.

Purser's assistant—George C. Cordwell.

Note.—The officers marked thus * joined the Constitution at Rio Janeiro, from the United States frigate Potomac.

Herold office, New York, Nov. 1 & 6 P. M. The U. S. ship Cyane, commander Stridling, bound to the Pacific, got away from her naval anchorage on the 1st, with a fine breeze, and proceeded directly to the following is a list of the officers attached to the Cyane:

C. K. Stridling, esq. commander.

Lieutenants—J. L. Lardner, Alberto Griffith, Roger

Berry, C. B. Barton, B. F. Shattuck.

Surgeons—George Glynn.

Purser—J. D. Gibson.

Master—F. E. Baker.

Assistant surgeon—A. T. B. Garnett.

Midshipmen—Wm. F. Spicer, F. B. Brand, W.

D. Whiting, J. A. Forrest, J. K. Wilson, M. P.

Jones, H. G. D. Brown, Thomas H. Brown,

Foney, J. H. Russell, J. M. Brooke, Charles Latimer.

Professor of mathematics—John Clair.

Captain's clerk—H. Roberson.

Master's mate—Alexander Ramsay.

Boatswain—Elezur Foster.

Sailmaker—Eletius Middleton.

STATES OF THE UNION.

MAINE.

LEGISLATURE. The Augusta Age furnishes the following tabular account of the political character of the legislature of this state.

	No. of members.	F. B.	Whig.	No choice.	Not heard from.
York	31	17	3	1	0
Cumberland	27	19	8	0	0
Lincoln	25	12	12	1	0
Kennebec	22	5	15	2	0
Waldo	17	15	0	1	1
Hancock	12	11	1	0	0
Washington	11	9	2	0	0
Penobscot	19	12	6	1	0
Piscataquis	6	4	0	2	0
Somerset	14	7	5	2	0
Franklin	8	6	1	1	0
Oxford	15	11	2	2	0
Aroostook	3	2	0	0	1
SENATE	100	130	55	13	2
	31	25	4	2
	231	155	59	15	75

Van Buren majority in the house, thus far
Do. do. senate
Do. do. in joint ballot, about

Of the Van Buren members elect, more than a majority of the whole house were chosen on the first trial.

The nomination of Judge Weston, as chief justice of this state, has been rejected by the executive council, by a vote of six says to one. The nomination of John S. Tenney, as associate justice, was confirmed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

A WHIG STATE CONVENTION was held at Concord on Thursday, 15th ult. at which gen. Joseph Low presided. The hon. Enoch Stevens, of Charlestown, was nominated as the whig candidate for governor, at the ensuing election.

An extensive ship builder at Portsmouth has failed for nearly 70,000 dollars. He shows bad debts to the amount of 45,000 dollars.

VERMONT.

BANKS. We subjoin the statements of the bank of Bennington, and of the General Bank and Bankers, from the report of the bank commissioner, who was appointed to examine the situation of the several banks of this state, not subject to the provision of the safe fund act:

BANK OF BENNINGTON.

	Liabilities.
Capital stock	$87,770 00
Bills in circulation	169,962 00

$257,732 00

Resources.

Notes discounted	$158,965 53
Specie and bills of other banks	4,676 45
Due from other banks, and funds in Troy, New York, and Albany	88,400 04
Due on book	6,155 88
Banking house	3,992 34

$258,190 24

August 23, 1841.
Of the notes discounted, there is the sum of $25,722 00 in notes of long standing, some of which were secured by mortgage of real estate which has depreciated in value, and it is believed that the principal part of that amount will be lost.

BANK OF ORANGE COUNTY.

	Liabilities.
Capital stock	$70,000 00
Bills in circulation	114,573 00
Deposits and unpaid drafts	4,935 99

$189,508 99

Resources.

Notes discounted and due on book	$126,097 72
Suspended debts	17,965 20
Specie and bills of other banks	14,250 21
Deposits in Boston	37,250 75
Drafts on Boston forwarded	11,100 34
Stock in Market Bank	4,500 00
Real estate	2,000 00

$203,164 22

Oct. 12, 1841.

BANK OF BURLINGTON.

Bills in circulation	110,877 00
Deposits unpaid	827 76
Deposits	25,392 47

$137,097 23

Resources.

Discounted notes and bills of exchange	$252,043 02
Due from state of Vermont	5,000 00
Deposits in Boston, Troy and New York	24,640 92
Bills of other banks and specie	25,766 69
Banking house	10,558 42

$316,009 55

Sept. 2, 1841.
The bank of Windsor has not done any business for the past year, except in the collection of the debts due the bank, and the redemption of its bills presented for payment. A severe failure is now pending in Windsor county against the bank, and a final judgment thereon may be expected at the next term of the supreme court in that county.

From the message of Governor FARNIS, to the legislature of this state, now in session, we copy the following paragraphs, relating to the institutions and politics of the union:

"The attention of the people of the whole union has been directed, by events which have occurred within the last few years, to certain amendments which are deemed essential in the federal constitution. The undue stimulus to ambition which is thought to be supplied by the prospect of the presidential office being enjoyed by its occupants for a second term of four years, has created great alarm at the balance of the powers of the general government. Experience has certainly proved that if there is any danger of that balance being destroyed, it arises from the constant efforts of the executive department to extend its patronage and power. That such efforts have frequently been made to enable the president to secure a re-election, can hardly be doubted; and it is to be feared that they will continue to do so often made, so long as human nature remains unchanged."

"A general complaint, arising from the same well-grounded apprehension, exists as to the president's power of removal from office. The constitution directly gives him no such power, but he has been allowed to take it by implication. It is difficult to imagine how it should ever have been derived from that provision in the constitution which authorizes him to nominate, "and by and with the advice and consent of the senate to appoint," all officers."

"The president and senate are jointly made the appointing power, and in the absence of all other provisions on the subject, one would have supposed they must also be jointly the removing power. But the president claims to exercise it alone, and more frequently exercises it without any cause, except for the political opinions of those removed, than from an impartial regard to the faithful performance of the public service, which forms the sole argument in favor of its existence. For if the constitution designed to give such a power to the president, it must have been for the purpose of enabling him to make removals required by the public good. But that has been perverted to a totally different purpose—that of enabling him to reward his supporters, strengthen his influence, and secure his own re-election."

"Another similar subject, to which I would invite your particular attention, is the power of the president to veto bills which have been passed by both houses of congress. This is the only monarchical feature in our form of government, and it is difficult to understand how it should ever have been conferred upon republican institutions. It was probably taken without much reflection as to its consequences, from the British constitution, which vests a similar power in the king, but only to protect his own prerogative from encroachment. Even for this purpose, however, it has not been exercised by him for more than two centuries. The early settlers of Vermont were too jealous of liberty to allow such a power any place in our constitution."

"To form a just notion of the magnitude of the veto power, as it may be exercised by the president, we must keep constantly in view that to prevent the passage of wholesome and necessary laws is as bad to mankind as laws might be as properly entrusted to the president as the power to prevent all laws. The history of all legislation proves that a majority of two-thirds can seldom be obtained on disputed questions; and to allow the president to resist the enactment of such laws as he pleases, unless passed by so large a majority, is in effect to repose in one man the power of the entire power of legislation. But the president not only claims the right to exercise the veto power whenever he pleases, but to exercise it as he pleases. The power of the president is not to be controlled by his predecessors. He appears to be uncontrolled in his exercise, either by law or precedent, and to have nothing to consult but his own conscience, and nothing to regard but his own character for consistency."

"If he is right, we may bid farewell to all stability in our institutions. Every four years the laws of the country may be changed, and its business embarrassed and destroyed by the constitutional scruples of a new president. The bank of the bank the distribution of the revenue from the public lands, internal improvement, all the great measures for the welfare of the country, will be constitutional or unconstitutional just as the president may happen to be selected from one part of the union or the other."

"I submit to your consideration whether it is not expedient to propose an amendment of the constitution, which shall render the president ineligible to a re-election, and which shall modify his powers of removal from office, and of preventing the passage of laws by congress."

"For myself, I confess that I cannot doubt that, if such an amendment should be adopted by the requisite number of states, it would greatly contribute to perpetuate our free government."

RHODE ISLAND.

The general assembly of this state adjourned on Friday last, after a session of three and a half days. The business transacted was principally of a private nature. One of the most exciting topics discussed was upon the bill to repeal a portion of the act passed last June, in relation to the rights of married women in certain cases. It was alleged that this act was passed by improper means; that the general assembly had been imposed upon by its passage; and that, under the guise of a general law, it was framed to apply to the case of Madame d'Hauterville, and that this lady had, immediately after the passage of the law, taken up her residence in Newport, in order to avail herself of its provisions.

NEW YORK.

ELECTION. The annual election for representatives and a portion of the senators of the state legislature took place on Tuesday and Wednesday last. The returns have reached us to make it certain that a majority of Van Buren members are elected to the house—the Van Buren senators are elected in the city of New York by about 90 majority, and probably the whole of their ticket. Albany gives a Van Buren majority of over 300. The river counties have all increased their Van Buren majorities.

ASSESSED VALUE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATE IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK. From a statement prepared by Alfred A. Smith, esq. comptroller, we derive the following schedule of real and personal property in this city, as assessed in 1840 and 1841.

	Assessment of 1840.		Assessment of 1841.
	Real estate.	Personal estate.	Real estate.	Personal estate.
	Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.
1	32,502,000	27,976,549	32,141,785	27,540,404
2	14,927,600	1,928,812	15,015,500	1,932,583
3	12,105,500	5,155,610	12,134,900	5,871,610
4	8,485,005	1,390,550	8,733,440	1,880,037
5	9,460,235	1,046,193	9,456,190	2,856,106
6	7,735,600	2,362,378	7,979,750	1,824,900
7	10,621,425	4,670,421	11,209,656	4,766,295
8	10,908,100	2,340,658	11,384,100	2,073,707
9	8,652,450	1,129,135	8,991,590	1,194,100
10	6,139,830	718,800	6,163,000	736,400
11	3,824,400	1,096,800	3,921,660	956,800
12	9,112,200	2,952,500	7,622,953	1,766,150
13	961,350	9,000	564,376
14	4,347,000	307,054	4,883,800	236,154
15	6,844,800	1,917,473	6,899,300	1,835,535
16	14,130,700	8,632,467	14,361,590	8,669,524
17			11,832,090	682,306
18	17,054,500	863,630	11,650,600	5,000
19			2,570,943	44,000
20			9,708,700	1,429,621
21	187,130,464	54,721,697	186,347,166	65,430,456
Aggregate of 1840			$252,842,161
1841			251,777,702

Total decrease, $1,064,459 of which $783,215 is in real estate, and $281,244 in personal estate.

In 1839, the valuation of real estate was $266,940,134 dollars, and personal, $65,942,297. Total, $322,882,431. Excess above the valuation of the present year, $15,104,729.

In 1836, when speculation was at its height, the value of real estate was $3,409,500,920; being an excess of $57,723,218 over the valuation of the present year.

In 1835, the assessed value of real estate was 143,732,425 dollars; personal, 74,991,378 dollars.—Total, 218,003,603; being $33,053,999 less than the valuation of the present year.

The increase of valuation in 1836, compared with 1835, was $90,777,217.

The following table shows the aggregate assessed value of real and personal estate in this city in each year from 1805 to the present time:

Years.	Valuation.	Years.	Valuation.
1805	$5,641,000	1825	$3,057,676
1806	26,529,320	1826	101,160,046
1807	24,938,955	1826	107,477,781
1808	25,118,720	1827	112,211,936
1809	24,782,267	1828	114,019,313
1810	25,496,370	1829	112,336,016
1811	26,045,720	1830	125,285,518
1812	26,245,049	1831	129,230,214
1813	27,640,290	1832	146,302,619
1814	82,301,497	1833	166,491,552
1815	81,636,042	1834	166,548,511
1816	82,074,200	1835	188,733,703
1817	78,295,735	1836	308,500,920
1818	80,245,091	1837	263,747,350
1819	79,113,061	1838	264,152,941
1820	69,530,753	1839	267,883,431
1821	68,285,070	1840	252,842,161
1822	71,289,144	1841	321,777,702
1823	70,940,800

In looking at this table, one cannot fail to be surprised at the rapid increase of value from year to year, though with occasional fluctuations, as was to be expected. The valuation of the present year, notwithstanding the depression in prices so much complained of, is larger than in any year prior to 1820; it is double that of 1806, and more than treble that of 1824, or any previous year. It is ten times the valuation of 1809. So much for the "ruined city," which, by the very process of being ruined, has become the financial, as it long had been the commercial centre of the country. Its population has increased nearly as fast as its wealth; having more than trebled in the last 30 years.

[N. Y. Jour. of Com.]

MILITARY CONVENTION. The Albany Argus of Friday contains the proceedings of a military convention held at Rome, in this state on the fifteenth instant. One object of the convention was to take measures for the more efficient action of the militia system.

The general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church of the United States, which convened and organized in this city on the 6th inst., will, in all probability, terminate its session this day. Their next meeting, we understand, will be held in the city of Baltimore in the year 1844.

The pulpits of the Episcopal church throughout our city were yesterday filled by distinguished clergymen and bishops from abroad. The venerable Bishop Moore, of Virginia, formerly rector of St. Stephen's, in this city, and upwards of eighty years of age, preached in Christ's church, in Anthony street, in the morning, with the same vigor, earnestness and pathos which we are told, characterized his discourses thirty years ago. Bishop McIlvaine, from Ohio, preached in St. Stephen's in the evening, with the usually impressive and eloquent manner; but what may be considered very improper treatment to a stranger, had his overcoat stolen from the vestry-room of the church while he was preaching.

In the evening several interesting addresses were delivered in St. Paul's on the subject of education on Christian principles, among the distinguished speakers on the occasion were Bishops DeLancy from western New York, Otey from Tennessee, Folk from the south western states, and Drs. Hawks, Wainwright and Eastburn. [Tribune.]

HEAVY DAMAGES. In the supreme court in New York, on Saturday, before Judge Oakley, Peter Fawcett recovered of the Richmond Turnpike corporation a verdict of $4,600 damages; sustained by the loss of his child, caused by an accident on board the steamboat Sampson, in the harbor of New York, on the 4th July, 1839.

NEW JERSEY.

GOV. PENNINGTON'S MESSAGE. We have before us the message of Gov. Pennington to the legislature of this state. It is a document worthy a distinguished chief magistrate.

Gov. F. recommends that the constitution be so altered as to separate the office of governor and chancellor, but he expresses a doubt whether any advantage would result from any other alteration in the constitution.

Attention is asked to the relations of the state with the Camden and Ansbury rail road company, touching a misunderstanding as to the amount payable to the state for transit duties. There is also some misunderstanding with the New Jersey rail road company, arising out of the connection of the two rail roads.

The Morris canal and banking company have not paid their tax, because they have not been acting as a banking company.

Reference is then made to the state of the banks of that commonwealth, which appear to be influenced by those of Pennsylvania or New York, or according to some, by the latter. He thinks more personal responsibility should be imposed upon the directors or stockholders of banks.

The governor refers to the subject of resumption with caution. It is desirable that all the banks should resume as early as possible, but care should be taken not to produce mischief by sudden coercion—at all events, the circulation should be limited.

It is deemed best not to dispense with the state tax; but when the proceeds of public lands shall be distributed, there can be no doubt that the law imposing such tax, (very small at present) may be repealed.

The state prison has been admirably managed.—Its income now exceeds its expenses by five hundred dollars a month.

Kind reference is made to the subject of public schools.

Reference is then made to certain national subjects, and to certain bigoted claims of land in East Jersey—and the message thus graciously closes.

"As no subject of a political character seems likely to arise to disturb the harmony of your session, I cherish the hope that you will be able to discharge the responsible trust confided to you without any unnecessary delay, and bring your labors to a speedy close. I respectfully suggest that you turn to the former user of holding but one session is desirable and in accordance with the wishes of your constituents. It is my fervent desire, gentlemen, that your deliberations may result in promoting the best interests of the people, and that the same kind Providence which has protected the commonwealth in whom is all our hope, will still continue to bless and prosper our efforts for the security and advancement of our common country."

—WM. PENNINGTON.

"Trenton, Oct. 26, 1841."

THE CORRESPONDENT of this state happening to have at an equal number of whigs and Van Buren members, the parties agreed to compromise for selection of officers, a Van Buren member was elected president of the council, a whig elected clerk, and so on—but this temporary harmony was of brief existence. The governor and several of the principal officers of the state are elected by joint ballot of the two branches. On a resolution being proposed to go into joint meeting of the two houses for that purpose, the Van Buren members in council joined by one of the whigs, which gave them a majority in that body, negatived the proposition and for several days continued to resist all attempts to go into joint meeting. On an adjournment being taken, the whigs, however, negatived the executive duties of the governor, in the council. A difficulty persisted itself however, in the fact that the constitution of the state makes "the governor and council" constitute the court of appeals; the absence of the governor left the court unable to act, a very unpleasant feeling between the parties ensued. Some of the Van Buren senators at length abandoned their opposition to a joint meeting, and on Tuesday evening last the two houses met and proceeded to ballot.—Governor PENNINGTON was re-elected by a majority of 14 votes.

For Pennington

For Voorhoeve

44

30

We take from the Newark Daily Advertiser of last evening the following postscript, announcing the proceedings of yesterday morning at Trenton.

Joint meeting this afternoon. We stop the press to announce that the council resolved this morning, by a vote of 12 to 6, to meet the house in joint meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock, for the appointment of a governor and other officers.—Messrs M. D. Canfield, of Atlantic, S. D. Canfield of Passaic and Mr. Newell, of Salem, in opposition, insisted on voting for it, and Mr. Scott also voting this time for the whigs. Dr. Canfield of Atlantic, when the resolution was offered by Mr. Iwick, of Burlington, rose and unequivocally declared his solemn conviction that he was bound by his oath under the constitution to vote for a joint meeting, and that he should discharge his duty, though it was as he knew, as to desert his party, and might be regarded as a desertion from the democracy, of which, nevertheless, he was still, as he always had been, and always expected to be a firm adherent and advocate.

But he would not—could not violate his solemn conviction of an inalienable duty, and if any thought he was driven to do so by intimidation they would find themselves, to their amazement, mistaken in the man. His manner was deliberate, firm and dignified. Dr. Lilly said he was individually in favor of a joint meeting, but as a representative of democratic Hunterdon went go against it. Whereupon Mr. Patterson, of Monmouth, announced that he was virtually instructed to go against it, and to reject Gov. Pennington, and was called to order several times in the midst of the most abusive tirade, by Major Chetwood, but was nevertheless permitted by the chair to discharge his venom.

Colonel Scott's name having been favorably referred to by Mr. Patterson, he rose to say that he was still compelled to vote for the meeting and regretted the use of personalities. The vice president (Mr. Cassedy), remarked that he was not ready to go into joint meeting, and then put the question.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ELECTION. But the special returns from the whole state, with the exception of McKean, in which we have merely the majority. The entire vote, it will be seen, is about the same as at the governor's election of 1838.

	1838.	1841.		1838.	1841.
Countries.	Porter.	Ritter.	Porter.	Banks.
Adams	1,535	3,301	1,589	1,941
Armstrong	2,781	1,519	1,822	1,066
Allegheny	4,505	6,038	4,281	5,098
Beaver	1,931	2,457	1,751	2,158
Bedford	2,384	2,290	2,550	2,261
Berks	7,301	3,215	7,495	2,925
Bucks	2,450	2,219	2,765	2,143
Bradford	4,553	4,147	4,412	4,066
Butler	1,653	1,700	1,674	1,716
Cambria	844	762	874	810
Centre	2,589	1,467	2,300	1,126
Chester	4,527	4,971	4,565	4,711
Clelland	792	474
Clinton, (new county, part of Lycoming and Centre)			886	619
Clarion, (part of Armstrong and Venango)			1,500	555
Columbia	2,616	1,088	2,569	1,103
Crawford	2,304	1,857	2,815	2,099
Cumberland	2,743	2,316	2,721	1,897
Dauphin	1,944	2,243	2,249	2,649
Delaware	1,263	1,731	1,289	1,578
Erie	1,565	2,747	1,855	2,956
Fayette	2,788	1,984	2,749	1,812
Franklin	2,815	2,560	2,779	2,636
Greene	1,192	1,160	1,763	949
Huntingdon	2,761	3,687	2,551	3,258
Indiana	1,262	1,723	1,195	1,557
Jefferson	591	421	678	447
Juniata	1,049	863	971	868
Lancaster	5,503	8,558	4,914	8,085
Lebanon	1,553	2,222	1,542	1,840
Luzerne	2,460	3,340	2,553	2,929
Mechanic	3,132	2,592	3,426	2,194
Lycoming	2,496	1,556	2,261	1,393
McKean	219	127	100
Mercer	2,325	2,935	2,318	2,762
Monroe	1,223	366	1,293	269
Montgomery	4,438	3,71	4,402	3,414
Mifflin	1,177	1,109	1,234	1,124
Northumberland	2,144	1,164	2,162	1,143
Northampton	3,635	2,566	3,467	2,302
Perry	1,916	883	1,827	870
Philadelphia city	3,155	7,303	4,380	5,930
Philadelphia co.	7,982	6,187	11,099	7,348
Pike	586	117	541
Potter	276	68	365	145
Schuylkill	2,271	1,508	2,408	1,415
Somerset	883	2,244	792	1,853
Susquehanna	1,530	1,964	1,962	1,152
Tioga	1,448	594	1,598	575
Union	2,570	1,567	2,568	2,132
Venango	1,765	828	1,208	754
Warren	700	542	963	628
Washington	3,460	3,528	3,434	3,291
Wayne	1,062	538	1,167	553
Westmoreland	4,561	2,315	4,080	2,135
York	4,196	3,825	3,825	2,429

130,916 122,230 136,435 113,374

122,230 113,374

Porter's maj. 8,686 Porter's maj. 39,961

IRON ORE, of a superior quality, has been found below Lewisburg, on the west branch of the Susquehanna river. The Miltoonia justly remarks—

"The resources of Pennsylvania are immense, and when her mineral wealth is fully developed, she will be superior in these respects to any country on the globe. The wealth of our state has not been half told; and centuries will pass away, before her mountains—her hills and her valleys, will fully reveal the extent of her treasures."

PHILADELPHIA COMMERCE. Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of our commercial relations for the last year or two, it is consolatory to know, that there has been a manifest improvement in the commerce of the city. The commerce has upon the whole been good, and the foreign may be judged of from the fact, that the duties paid or secured at the custom house for the first three quarters of the present year, exceed the amount so paid or secured during the whole of last year (1840). [U. S. Gazette.

MARYLAND.

MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL. The first experiment of this kind in this country which we know of in this state, was commenced about a year since by an association formed for the purpose of establishing a Baltimore Manual Labor school for orphans. The directors purchased a farm of 135 acres about six miles from the city, lying between the Washington and Frederick turnpike roads, on which there was a good stone house; not more than sufficient however to accommodate a family of moderate number. Notwithstanding the narrow accommodations, the directors have received children in peculiarly destitute circumstances, (one a fine boy of about twelve years of age, having literally no home to sleep in but the school house; the number of fourteen; have employed a competent teacher to instruct them; and it is confidently believed that no subscriber can visit the school, and contemplate those children in their present state, and learn the condition from which they have been rescued, without projecting in the thought that he has contributed to the redemption of results so beneficial to the community, and so grateful to every feeling of humanity.

The farm has also been manured and cultivated, and considerable crops of vegetables and other articles suitable for the consumption of the school have been produced. A house calculated to accommodate fifty boys has just been completed, and will be ready for occupancy as soon as the plaster shall have dried sufficiently. This building is not near as large as the directors wished, but they thought it safer to consult their limited means, than to venture into debt and thus jeopard the whole enterprise.

The report of the directors represents the enterprise as well worthy of public countenance and certainly as worthy of objects seem to present more claims to support. The agricultural improvement of the country will at no distant period owe as much to such nuclei as for a scientific education in that healthiest and happiest of human pursuits, as the military will owe to the academy appropriated to their pursuit, or the navy to the schools recently instituted for the instruction of apprentices in that department of life. In agriculture how wide is the field for improvement—how vast the advantages that science may be made to contribute towards its product of blessings.

IMPORTANT TO MAGISTRATES. The county court for Allegany, at its late session, has decided that all warrants of a general nature are illegal, that they must run thus: "before the subscriber, and the undersigned plaintiff, to be returned before any other magistrate, his name must be inserted in the body of the warrant instead of "me the subscriber."

VIRGINIA.

ELECTION. The special election for a state senator in the northwestern district of the state has resulted in the election of the Van Buren candidate by a majority of 53. The returns are all in, and they stand as follows in the several counties.

Brooke county	113	323
Ohio "	896	267
Marshall "	854	423
Tyler "	198	393

1,356 1,409

By this result the senate will remain equally divided between the whig and Van Buren parties.

EXPORTS. Total value of foreign and coastwise exports from the ports of Richmond and City Point, for the year ending September 30th, $9,313,089—much the greater portion being tobacco. That article exported in hogheads alone, and valued at the rate of $125 per hoghead, was shipped to the extent of $4,305,312. The flour exported, amounted to $237,287.

UNIVERSITY. The unfortunate events which marked the last session, in the vacation, with short an interval, of the three principal chairs, and the embarrassments inseparable from the appointment of such a number of new and untried professors, united with the extraordinary difficulties of the times, which are especially felt in the southern states, whence so liberal a quota of students is always supplied, might have been expected to exert an influence peculiarly unfavorable to the prospects of the session which has lately begun. We are gratified, however, to find that these causes have not operated materially to the prejudice of the institution. There are, we learn from the proctor, one hundred and fifty-eight matriculates, besides others in attendance, who may be expected formally to enter at an early day. This is, we learn, but little if at all below the average, at any early period of the session. It is more compatible with the convenience of many to enter in January, and hence the highest number is usually found to be in attendance just subsequent to that period. The new professors have entered upon the discharge of their respective duties, with the exception of Professor Sylvester of London, appointed to the chair of mathematics, whose arrival is no doubt protracted in consequence of the late period at which his election was communicated to him, and the arrangements incident to his removal to a residence so distant. We believe he is daily expected. [Virginia Herald.

LOUISIANA.

EPISCOPAL BISHOP. Among the interesting proceedings of the Episcopal convention, lately held at New York, there was one of especial moment to the church in the diocese of Louisiana, of which we do not recollect to have seen any notice in the press. The church in that diocese has hitherto been deficient in the number of the clergy, though it is believed that a large proportion of the population emigrant to that state, especially to New Orleans, is attached to the Episcopal form of religious worship.

Under this impression, the diocesan convention in Louisiana, at its late session, as we are informed, held in May last, memorialized the house of bishops to appoint a bishop for that diocese,—and the request having met the cordial and unanimous approbation of both bodies composing the convention,—the right rev. Leonidas Polk, late missionary bishop to Arkansas, was unanimously appointed bishop of Louisiana. It is to be noted that this appointment will be particularly acceptable to the diocese of Louisiana.—Bishop Polk has lately become a citizen of that state; and his zeal, intelligence and devotion to his sacred calling, give promise of extensive usefulness.

[Philad. Nat. Gaz.

THE NEW ORLEANS BANKS. The situation of the banks in New Orleans on the 2d of October, was as follows:

	Discounts and Loans.	Circulation.	Specie.
N. O. Canal and banking company	3,921,958	450,940	164,426
Carrollton R. R. and banking co.	1,395,174	257,030	44,163
Citizens bank of Louisiana	9,988,992	494,540	604,143
City bank of New Orleans	2,785,532	445,350	371,280
Commercial bank of N. Orleans		693,895	195,117
Consolidated association	3,342,929	561,620	346,710
Exchange and banking company	743,280	292,570	82,367
Gas Light and banking company	2,266,877	12,600	3,928
Improvement and bkg company	1,193,348	519,770	30,372
Bank of Louisiana	4,774,962	193,725	351,944
Louisiana state bank	2,651,351	390,111	325,034
Mechanics' and Traders' bank	2,522,563	547,530	94,461
Merchants' bank
Bank of Orleans	874,100	245,436	58,521
Union bk of Louisiana	9,105,012	729,390	453,761
Atchafalaya bank	906,000	297,950	82,087
Total	46,333,088	6,105,373	1,305,309
Deduct notes held by different banks			1,555,092
Actual circulation			4,550,371

ARKANSAS.

HORRID OUTRAGE. Some Texas marauders lately crossed over the line and took forcible possession of a citizen in the parish of Caldas. After they had carried him into the territory of Texas, it was proposed to bury him alive. With this intention a grave was dug—the unfortunate man being a witness to their proceedings. He stood helpless, counting each shovel full of earth at the quick termination of his life surrounded by a gang of desperadoes ready to crush him beneath the elod, and from whose sentence, escape was death. Overpowered with the frightful fate before him, he bounded from his keepers into an adjacent thicket, and there he lay, and there he lay a lifeless corpse, a victim to the insecurity of our border protection. His body, after being cut up, was hung upon the branches of the neighboring trees, there to meet the gaze of the traveler and tell him of a new mode of punishing the bounds of law, or of human authority; but like the howling beasts of the wilderness, would snap the fragile cords of life, if interest once stirred up the fatal ire of their wrath upon him whose voice dare rise against their iniquities. The deceased man, whose name was Boatright, had thus offered himself to his death, with other of his fellow citizens, declared himself to be openly opposed to them, and as might have been expected in a country like ours where from the sparseness of frontier population, the avenues to the wrath of banditti are wide open, the unfortunate man had to forfeit his life and a portion of his property to the hands of these citizens of our border country have witnessed these men under the name of regulators and moderators, committing in the territory of Texas some of the most barbarous cruelties of the 19th century.

The country on our border towards the 33d degree of latitude, is the principal scene of action, and it is but a few years since that a man, an American, who had shipped to New Orleans to one of their towns, a large assortment of groceries and dry goods, was routed out, and his goods forcibly taken off the act. Nothing was ever done about it, and the act is now almost forgotten. A while ago, one of the captains of the regulators, and a man that was with him, was shot in a small village by the name of Tugansport. The captain and the person with him, had not long been gone from the store where they had been making a purchase, when a discharge of muskets was heard by the storekeeper. He rushed out, and soon discovered the two bodies lying on the ground;—where they lay he stood, and he was left to enquire the cause of their death. Examining minutely the place around, it was not long before he discovered on the earth, beneath two fallen trees, the impress of five or six men; and it thus appears that these two men had been shot down without quarrel or fight, without any intimation of their most cruel determination. In view of their crimes we cannot wonder why Boatright, or any other American citizen should have expressed their dissatisfaction.—But we shall not seek arguments to prove what the bare facts evince; and we call upon the friends of this man and the citizens generally, to bring this act before the government, and let it claim their attention. The subject is one certainly that ought to demand its highest consideration. [Natchitoches Herald.

JUSTICE TO ARKANSAS. A wrong impression has gone forth, and has been circulated throughout the union, that the citizens of Arkansas were engaged in the horrid massacre on the islands between Arkansas and Mississippi, when the facts are, that not a citizen of Arkansas was in any way or at any time concerned in the dreadful and appalling outrage. It is unjust that Arkansas should suffer disgrace from the criminal deeds of her neighbors. We are aware that the name Arkansas has long been, by the humorists, associated with big bear stories, eccentric feats of border heroes and hunters, among the wild animals of our prairies; and by the ignorantly serious has been, in their rehearsal of wonderful tales, the place of deeds of lawless barbarity; until, among the more wise and better informed, impressions are almost established permanently, that Arkansas is a place where no law is recognised but Lynch law, and no rights acknowledged unless maintained by brute force.

The following statement of facts has been furnished us by one whose domestic life is devoted to duty, and who resides in Desha county, Arkansas, near the place where the bloody deeds were perpetrated.—He states that the sheriff of Coahoma county, Mississippi, Mr. Poindexter, came along in Mr. Burgess' trading boat, bringing with him a posse of the citizens of that county, and stopped at a house near the mouth of the river, when, upon the request of the sheriff, three more persons from there, and one from the head of island No. 66, went along with him to assist in taking Hugh Tully and his accomplices; and after they were taken, they (the four men) returned up on this side to their homes, leaving nine prisoners in the boat. In the evening the sheriff and his posse, at Lunfords landing, at the head of island No. 68, where the sheriff proceeded with his prisoners to the mouth of Stoke's bayou, in the bend, opposite island No. 69, where an altercation took place between the sheriff and this mob about the manner of disposing of their prisoners, when the legal process was wrested from the sheriff by force, and he and part of his posse, citizens of Concho county, were compelled to leave the place, and his prisoners in the hands of a lawless mob; who by this time had seized two more men as culprits, at a Mr. Hennington's on the Mississippi side of the river, about three miles below.

The principal male heads of this mob were, Hector McNeal, Charles B. Harrod, J. W. Lunsford, W. J. Howerton, Jos. Miller, Jos. McCloy, Dank Richmond, Farrow & Spears, (two justices of the peace.) Keats, McNeal's overseer, Mr. Parker, a Mr. Tanner and his two sons, John and Simon. These compelled others to join them whose names are not known.

And after deliberating some time on the course to pursue, they took all the prisoners but eight, whose names are Hugh Tully, Hugh Elliot, Joseph Meritt, Andrew McLaughlin, Lophus Kingston, Joseph Cotton, Hunter, (Tully's son-in-law), and a man by the name of Pollock, (whom they left in the boat), on shore, to the bridge on the county road, where they whipped some of them and turned them loose; and then the mob returned to the boat in which were the eight remaining prisoners, and rowed it out from shore and threw them overboard, hand and foot, and drowned the whole of them. Since which time, the same men have been before the eyes of the mob, have collected a band of drunken outlaws, and are now patrolling the country, riding up and down burning houses, and committing outrages upon those of the inhabitants that did not join them in their acts of villainy. They have driven many away from their houses and lands, and plundered their goods, dividing the spoils, setting them up at auction under mock executions, and distributing the proceeds among themselves after the manner of freebooters.

They have written several letters to some of the most respectable citizens of Desha and Phillips counties, in this state, even to Judge Lacy, associate chief justice of the state of Arkansas, threatening them with death if they should attempt to demand justice, or even complain of the outrage, or in any way attempt to expose them in their crimes. All along the river the people are apprehensive of nightly attacks from the murderers, who have twice crossed the river, to execute their threats, and threaten them with too much on the alert, and had no doubt of mutual defence. On one occasion, however, they burned a house in which there was nobody but a woman and her child. Many of these men who are engaged in this marauding horde are well known to have been the former associates and accomplices of the freebooter Hugh Tully, and are no doubt equally deserving of public execration. [Arkansas Gaz.]

OHIO.

WHEAT CROP OF 1842. The Cincinnati Republican of the 23d ult. says:—We learn from a friend who has been spending a few days at different points in the Great Miami Valley, that the wheat crop has been sown the present fall in this fertile section of the state, amounts to about three times the usual quantity. If the farmers in the other principal grain districts of the state have sown any thing like as much wheat, when the season, the wheat crop of 1842 will be very large. The country along the Miami has come up well, and the fields present a beautiful and healthy appearance. The fly has shown itself in some districts, but as yet does but little damage. Entire exemption from its ravages is not to be expected, but the present indications are that it will be far less destructive than it was last fall.

TENNESSEE.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The house of representatives of this state adopted a resolution on the 16th ultimo, to go into an election for two United States senators, on Saturday, the 23d ultimo.

The following is the official vote for governor, as declared by the legislature:

TENN. SENATE.

Committee.	853	649	Greene.	Johns.	Polk.
Roane	853	649	Greene	894	1,574
Sullivan	313	1,336	Blount	1,065	1,274
Marion	431	320	Morgan	153	125
Meigs	1,842	385	McMinn	955	884
Knox	84	574	Clarborne	462	756
Rand	379	Polk	194	345
Bledsoe	590	227	Washington	1,353	1,432
Carter	729	123	Hawkins	193	345
Monroe	847	985	Garringer	1,063	524
Jennings	1,605	176	Cooke	821	100
Sevier	869	88	Hamilton	518	560
Anderson	540	265	Johnson	372	70
Bradley	409	846
Aggregate			17,691	14,141

MIDDLE TENNESSEE.
Hardin	510	196	Lawrence	522
Fentress	144	329	Robertson	960
Lincoln	728	3,504	Humphreys	433
White	1,158	511	Bedford	1,853
Wilson	2,246	971	Warren	476
Williamson	1,805	809	Montgomery	925
Davidson	1,768	1,236	Dickson	319
Sumner	702	1,621	Franklin	603
Smith	2,309	630	Jackson	1,109
Warford	711	1,374	Overton	328
Mauzy	1,367	2,487	Stewart	375
Giles	1,110	1,239	Wayne	666
Hickman	247	9371
Aggregate			24,371	26,911

WEST TENNESSEE.
Ferry	707	388	McNairy	741
Henderson	1,100	322	Henry	721
Haywood	655	554	Carroll	1,185
Hardman	624	858	Seale	509
Obion	274	387	Gibson	1,017
Shelby	829	736	Benton	258
Dyer	324	219	Madison	1,046
Fayette	1,003	864	Tipton	519
Aggregate			11,534	8,991

RECAPITULATION.
	East.	Middle.	West.	Total.
Jones, (Whig),	17,691	24,371	11,524	53,586
Polk, (V. B.)	14,441	26,911	8,991	50,343

Majority, J. 3,250 P. 2,540 J. 2,533 J. 3,243

The message of Governor Polk was transmitted to the legislature on the 7th instant. It is a long document and so exclusively devoted to the general concerns of the state as scarcely to afford matter for a paragraph of general interest.

The banks are believed to be in a solvent condition, and capable of resuming specie payments permanently, on reasonable notice, without inconvenience to themselves or oppression to their debtors; and the legislature is urged to appoint a day on which they shall be required to resume, and at the same time to impose on them additional restrictions in order to avoid suspensions in future.

The whole public debt of the state amounts to but little more than three millions of dollars, as follows:

State bonds issued and proceeds invested in stock of the Union bank of Tennessee, bearing an interest of 5 per cent. which is paid semi-annually by the bank, $500,000

State bonds issued and proceeds invested in capital of the bank of Tennessee, bearing an interest of 6 per cent. $646,600

State internal improvement bonds, bearing an interest of 5 per cent. 263,166

State internal improvement bonds, bearing an interest of 5 per cent. 1,253,750

Exclusive of $300,000 of state bonds, bearing an interest of 5 per cent. issued for the improvement of rivers, but not yet sold. $4,016,916

This debt has many years to run before it falls due, and in meet it the state owns:

Stock in the Union bank of Tennessee, $646,600

Capital in the Bank of Tennessee being proceeds of bonds sold, and exclusive of the school fund, 1,000,000

Stock paid into internal improvement companies by state bonds issued, $1,916,016

If the surplus revenue of the U. States now on deposit with the state should not be recalled, that sum may be added $3,163,516

With these means added to the annually accumulating profits of the State Bank of Tennessee, which is owned exclusively by the people, and is under the immediate control of their representatives, it is supposed there can be little danger that a resort to taxation will be necessary to enable the state to meet its liabilities at maturity.

The comptroller of the state reports the expense of the government for the past year, including all departments, its gratuities, rewards, school funds, election expenses, &c. at $170,748 75.

The following is an aggregate of real estate:

Acres.	Value.	Value.	Value.
Ensl. 6,749,515	16,885,543	2.53	3,471
Mod. 8,286,991	19,071,619	4.84	1,953
West. 3,053,333	15,725,016	4.19	3,776
			1,916,246

Total 19,170,974 71,029,678 3.84 1,100 8,986,243

The following is an aggregate of the number of slaves, their value, carriage and poll:

Slaves.	Value.	Carriage.	Value.	Polls.
East.	8,267	3,815,825	140	30,323
Mod.	46,555	25,999,708	684	204,621
West.	21,817	13,235,257	399	116,800
Total.	76,639	43,073,670	1,923	351,754

The cost of criminal prosecutions in the state was $50,529 37.

The contributions to the purposes of education were—

School fund,	- - - - -	$191,576 80
Academy,	- - - - -	24,230 00

Education, - - - - - $215,816 80

The whole legislative expenses were $64,831 00. Of the school fund expenditure, there were paid by the bank a bonus of $100,000.

The report of the treasurer exhibits the finances of the state in a rather satisfactory condition—receipts $666,339 22; disbursements $470,744 75—balance in the treasury $189,590 47.

GOVERNOR JONES, the high successor of Governor Polk, was inaugurated at Nashville on the 14th ult. in the presence of the members of both branches of the legislature. The constitution on which occasion he delivered an address, of which the following passage is extracted by the National Intelligencer as a correct representation of the opinion of a majority of the people of that state on the subject to which it refers:

"So long as the federal government shall keep itself within the limits prescribed by the constitution, and the state yield a ready acquiescence, in the exercise of the powers delegated we may confidently hope to see our country crowned with all the blessings that flow from a well regulated government."

It is freely conceded to be one of the highest duties of the state to watch, with the most scrupulous and jealous care, any encroachment on the rights, and to rebuke, in a proper spirit, any usurpation of power on the part of the general government.

When differences originate as to what power may be exercised by the general government, or what has been reserved to the states, (as will doubtless sometimes occur,) the constitution has wisely provided for the adjudication of all such questions, and a resort to open resistance can only be regarded as the result of a reckless and wicked infatuation, destructive alike to the interests of society and degrading to the national character.

Among the various questions that have arisen during the brief but brilliant existence of our government, the power of congress to establish a national bank seems to be destined to an ever varying conjecture and conflict of opinion.

That there is no express grant in the constitution for the exercise of this power is freely conceded. Its advocates have never claimed for it any higher authority than that of incidental power.

If it be an incident, necessary to the faithful execution of some specific grant, the constitutional power to create and establish such an institution cannot be successfully controverted.

It is made the duty of congress to provide for the collection, safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenues. In discharging this delicate and important duty it is not sufficient that congress may employ an agent of comparative utility and success; but it is imperative that they should adopt the best expedient, and one that will secure the objects contemplated in the most efficient manner. The spirit of the constitution, the honor of the nation, the rights and interests of the people, demand the establishment of the best system; and any compromise between an inferior and superior agent is to discharge the sacred injunctions of duty and convert the government into an agent of new expedients, and thereby to insult the public intelligence to adduce arguments to prove the superiority of a national bank over any other fiscal agency that has ever been devised by the ingenuity of man. The experiments of our own government stand as an undeniable monument of the imbecility of those who have attempted to do otherwise, and regard the lessons of experience. So far as precedent can be relied on in the adjustment or settlement of questions of dispute, this must be regarded as beyond the limits of all reasonable cavil. The different departments of government have, on various occasions, sustained the wisdom of their action, and are sustained by the most brilliant array of genius and talent. Amidst the bright retinue of its advocates and supporters, stand out in bold relief the names of Washington and Madison—names dear to freedom, dear to every American. It has on different occasions received the most unqualified approval of the popular will.

If the testimony of the learned, the virtuous and patriotic, from the earliest formation of the government down to the present time, is to be disregarded, where are we to find examples of our opinions and actions?

If high and solemn adjudications that emanate from the temple of justice are to have no influence in setting questions of doubt and dispute, where are we to find an arbiter?

If the decisions of a still higher tribunal, the popular will, are to be set at naught, who talk about the popular sovereignty? If all these are to be disregarded, and made subservient to the general wrongs and tender cruelties of the conscience of one man, then is government a fiction, and freedom a mere mockery.

Believing that this is the only means of furnishing a sound currency, and that it affords the last finger-hold of reviving the elements of a once prosperous and happy country, and restoring it once more to that proud eminence from which it was madly hurled by party despotism, I shall use my humble influence in securing to my fellow citizens the blessings it would confer."

IOWA.

MOVEMENT FOR ADMISSION AS A STATE OF THE UNION. The people of Iowa territory are already manifesting a disposition to form a state government, preliminary to making application to congress for admission into the union as a state. One of the chief reasons in favor of the enterprise is, that it will enable her to avail herself of the benefits of the distribution law. Thus, while this most beneficent law is assailed with great violence by a party in this quarter of the union, its practical benefits are so apparent that the same party in Iowa are anxious to place themselves in a position to profit by its provisions. [Nat. Int.

THE HON. JOHN FORSYTH.

Mors sola fatetur

Quantulæ sint hominum corporcula.

Again the illustrious Archer has sped his unerring dart, and another victim of his darts lies beneath his fatal shaft. Each day's revolution illustrates the solemn truth that man is dust, and to dust he must return. The most exalted as well as the most lowly are alike subject to the inevitable decree which has gone forth from the throne of Omnipotence, and, whether in the highest or the lowest of the spheres, all revolves in the highest and most brilliant circles of society, the grave awaits him; and from that last resting place of man there is no escape.—The most inordinate ambition and the lowliest aspirations—the most illustrious actions as well as the most obscure and humble—are all tend to the same end—all await the inevitable hour that closes forever the changeable drama of life.

"The paths of glory lead but to the grave"

But what, at last, are the most splendid efforts of successful ambition? What all the distinction that rank, or fame, or wealth can bestow? The mere avarice of air—the brilliant dreams of a few fleeting moments—the delusive ignes fatui of life—all ending in the awful reality of death, and demonstrating, in the language of Pliny, that "we are shadows, and the dreams of shadows are all our fancies imagine." Where are now the illustrious Egyptians who figured on the stage of life two thousand years ago, who erected pyramids whose

"Mass indestructible à l'époque le temps."

and who caused their bodies to be embalmed that they might be preserved till their immortal spirits should again return to reanimate them? Sir Thomas Brown has told their history in a few words: "Many may have become merchandise; Mizraim cries wounds, and Pharaoh is sold for balm."

It was about 27 years ago that I first saw the distinguished individual whose name heads this article.

That changes, what revolutions have occurred, and what vicissitudes have passed away from the stage of life and sunk into the oblivion of the grave, since then! I was standing in the gallery of the house of representatives when Mr. F. rose to address that body. It was his first parliamentary effort, and I listened, like all present, with deep interest to the speech he then delivered. He was in the thirty-fourth year of his age, with a countenance of great beauty and benignity, and a figure well proportioned and graceful.—His eye was blue, soft and expressive, his complexion fair, his features regular, and his hair light and glossy. His fine talents and agreeable manners gave him at once a prominent stand in the body to which he belonged, that he was retained, and he rose rapidly in the estimation of his countrymen. He was then unharmed in the tortuous ways of the politician, and had all the warmth and nobleness of heart which belong to the south. He stood forth the bold and ardent defender of his country, and the eloquent advocate and supporter of the republican principles he had embraced.

In 1817 the following sketch of Mr. Forsyth was written and published in a work entitled "Letters from Washington:"

"Mr. Forsyth has, like most of the members of the American congress, been educated for the bar, at which he has practised for some years with considerable success. He received the rudiments of his education in the university of Maryland. Mr. Cresswell (afterwards secretary of the treasury) acted as usher, and completed it at Princeton. He first distinguished himself in a case of impeachment, instituted by the legislature of Georgia against the commissioners employed to dispose of some public lands belonging to that state, and on this occasion, though but a stripling, he displayed much ability and acquired no little reputation. It was the means of making him known through his adopted state, (being a native of Fredericksburg, Virginia), and of bringing him into public life as a member of the great national council.

The practice of the law has, therefore, for the present, been relinquished, either from necessity or inclination. Legislation, however, seems to be better adapted to his habits and feelings, and it is scarcely probable he will ever return to his profession, if he should be so fortunate as to succeed in the difficult and arduous duties of a legislator and statesman in this country. I think he is a very sensible, unassuming, and is solicitous to render himself conspicuous in political life. His talents are of no ordinary character, and, were he to devote more of his time to the improvement of his mind and the acquisition of that various and general knowledge so essential to a statesman, he would have few or no superiors in this country. He is a brilliant and sometimes an eloquent speaker. His voice is harmonious and susceptible of great modulation, but not sonorous or powerful. He wants impetuously and vehemence, but supplies this deficiency by a constant, regular and uninterrupted flow, which resembles a stream where no rocks or eddies of placid water interfere to disturb the gentle motion of its current. His style is not figurative or ornate, but sufficiently flowing and oratorical to gratify the ear and please the mind. He is, however, more of a debater than an orator; his elocution flows, but never gushes; his phraseology is sometimes fully selected and arranged, and his arguments ingenious, if it not always consistent. He possesses the "dazzling power of argument," though he wants the epigrammatic point and graceful antithesis which are observable in Grattan and the Irish orators," &c.

This sketch requires little alteration. Time and experience matured his faculties, and his enlarged knowledge of the world gave him greater power over the workings of the human heart. As a debater few excelled him. He was always prepared, prompt, ready, courteous and gentlemanly. His keenest shafts were dipped in rose water and never rankled. A smile irradiated his countenance even when his reports were tinged with bitterness, and his arguments were constrained to assume a courteous while he felt the force of his blow. Mr. Forsyth continued in public life till a few months before his death. He passed successively through the high stations of member of the house of representatives, senator of the United States, minister to Spain, governor of Georgia, and secretary of state, in which he displayed the splendid talents with which he had been endowed, and exercised his faculties for the welfare and glory of his country. Though devoted to party, he was not blinded to the merits of those who opposed his political tenets, and though often exposed to the battery of the press, and denounced as a conservative, and sometimes as a traitor, he was nevertheless supported, he suffered no feeling of hatred or animosity to disturb the tranquillity of his mind, or to embitter his intercourse with his fellow man.—In the social circle, he was not less conspicuous for the ease, grace and suavity of his manners and the amiability of his disposition, so that he could be familiar without being undignified, and reserved without being offensive. He was always self-composed, and always at his ease. It was but rare that any thing had power to disturb the apparent serenity of his mind, or to throw into agitation the habitual placidity of his temper. He could be roused at times, however, and then his indignation was not easily subdued. At personal or national insult he felt deeply; and he manifested that feeling both in his language and manner, but it was an ebullition which reason as well as virtue would justify.

Mr. Forsyth has filled a considerable space in the public eye for the last quarter of a century. His career has been a brilliant and useful one. He has rendered important services through life, and has rendered important services to his country—and he has sunk into the silent tomb covered with honors. For-"Letters from Washington on the constitution and laws of the U. S. &c. by G. Watkinson.

ture and his own merits had placed him where the high gifts with which his Maker had endowed him might be employed in promoting the glory and welfare of his country; and it cannot be said that he did not employ them successfully to that end. He has won a niche in the temple of immortality, and secured a page in the history of the republic. He has now passed from the form of the funeral services, the toils and agitations of life, and sleeps, with those who have gone before him, the long deep sleep of death. Could a voice from the tomb be heard, what would be his language now?

"Ye living vanities of life!

"Ye ever-trembling, ever-cheating vanity!

"Where are ye now? And what is your amount?"

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

LETTER FROM GENERAL JACKSON. The committee of invitation, having sent a letter inviting the great and good old patriot, to attend a public dinner, to be given to him by James K. Polk, of Tennessee, he returns the following answer, which breathes the sentiments of one whose love for his country outweighs all other feelings: [Balt. Rep. Hermitage, October 30, 1841.]

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter, inviting me to be present at a public dinner to be given by the legislature of Tennessee, on Saturday the 23d inst. by the democratic republican members of the legislature and citizens of Nashville and Davidson county.—Should the weather be fair and the state of my health such as to render it prudent for me to travel so far from Nashville on that day, I will avail myself of the pleasure of attending.

The "hearty congratulations" which you tender to me upon the signal triumphs of "democratic republican principles" as evinced in the late voices of Maine, Massachusetts, and other states, are received with the most grateful consideration. No do you misconceive my sentiments, gentlemen, in supposing that these evidences cannot fail to strengthen my conviction that the people were not insincere in their support of my administration.

I cannot say that I did not expect this re-action. I did not expect that notwithstanding the events of 1840, the mighty truths of republicanism would rise again in triumph; but I cannot say I was fully prepared for the revolution at so early a period. Speculative considerations are giving way to the power of principle. Cool reflection has quickly kindled in the hearts of the people, and has caused them to turn from those aberrations from the path of rectitude which are as common to masses as to individuals. A long and intimate acquaintance with the character of the American people inspired me with the most implicit faith in their disposition to pursue and maintain truth, virtue, patriotism, and independence with a single purpose. And at this late day of life, it gives me joy to say that faith is unabated.

Among the causes that have produced this awakening in the public mind are to be found the unjust and imprudent measures of the late extra session of congress, the tyranny of a dictatorial majority over a large and respectable minority. Nor can it be supposed that the effects of these causes are exclusively confined to those states where elections have just taken place.

The distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands without constitutional authority—the system of monopolies established by law throughout the United States—the provision for a loan within the range of twelve millions, &c.—are acts so palpable and unauthorised that the people, as I believe, anxiously desire their repeal. And I entertain a most sanguine hope the hour for reconsideration, retrenchment and reform is at hand.

I congratulate you, gentlemen, as I do our country at large, on having at the head of the government a president who, upon one question at least, has a strict and conscientious regard for the constitution, who has not swerved from his integrity in the discharge of one of the highest duties devolving by law throughout the preservation of his own consistency by averting the blow aimed at our liberties through an attempt to establish another moneyed corporation with powers enough to destroy individual freedom in elections and to overshadow the blessings of our republican institutions—who has fearlessly asserted and successfully exercised his constitutional prerogative—that this free and most perfect system of civil government may be administered by MEN and not by MONEY. And gentlemen, I may add that in the ability and determination of the president to maintain the government on principles purely republican I have the most abiding confidence. Accept, gentlemen, of my assurances on my representation my best wishes. Your fellow citizen,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Messrs. J. P. Hardwick, and others, committee.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE. Let-

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE. Letters of invitation were addressed by the corresponding committee of Ulster county and New York city, to many distinguished democrats throughout the union, to several of which appropriate answers were returned by those who were unable to attend the convention. Nicholas Sickles read to the convention letters from T. H. Benton, M. Van Buren, J. C. Calhoun, J. S. Dickinson, Levi Woodbury, James Buchanan and Morgan Lewis, the three first of which we publish.

Kinderhook, Oct. 4th, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive your letter, inviting me in behalf of the democracy of Ulster county, to attend the mass convention to be held at Kingston, on the 7th inst.

You cannot gentlemen, be more deeply impressed than I am by the alarming tendency of the acts and designs of the dominant party, as indicated by the proceedings of congress at the extra-session, or more alive to the importance of a general and vigorous exertion of the rights and the defense of the constitutional rights and best interests of the people. No experienced observer can have failed to perceive in those proceedings incurring evidence of the revival of the old federal spirit, not only unmitigated, but greatly increased in bitterness by the restraints under which the people were laboring, and the selfishness and patriotism of the American people. Passing by other great enormities, there was nothing done or attempted by the federalists of 1798, which was more hostile to the letter and spirit of the federal constitution—more destructive of the best principles of our political system or capable of exerting a more deleterious influence upon the rights and liberties of the people, than the distribution bill of the extra session.

If, therefore, I had no considerations to respect other than such as relate to my own feelings, I would not fail to be in the midst of you, and assist in proceedings, from which so much good may be expected. It has however appeared to me, that I should be more useful to the cause of the rights of our institutions, as to the democracy of the union, by whose favor I was raised to the office of chief magistrate, when I limit my personal agency in the political conflicts of the day to the exercise of the right of suffrage and the unserved expressions of my opinions upon public questions when the same are invited by the public press, than by being present and respect them. Having come to this conclusion upon the most mature consideration of many similar applications from my political friends, I allow myself to hope that my failure to be with the democracy of the river counties on the 7th inst. will be regarded with the same kind indulgence that I have so often and so long received at their hands, and for which I am, most grateful.

and thank you, gentlemen, very sincerely, for the friendly spirit which distinguishes your communication, and the democracy of Ulster, for the favorable opinion they have been pleased to form of my public career. The time can never come when I can cease to regard with any other sentiments than those of profound respect and lively gratitude, ennoblements like those which you have communicated to me on behalf of a portion of my fellow citizens, so long and so justly distinguished for steady perseverance and untiring patriotism. With great respect, your friend and obedient servant,

M. VAN BUREN.

To the corresponding committee.

Washington City, Sept. 24th, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: I make you many thanks for your kind invitation to attend the democratic mass convention at Kingston, New York, on the 7th proximo; but the rule which I have long followed, not to attend political meetings out of my own state, would prevent me from attending, even if my speedy departure for the west did not render it impossible.

You are puffed, among other kind expressions, to give me credit for firmness in breasting the storms of political adversity; and while I acknowledge my sensibility to the compliment, permit me to extend it to the great body of the American democracy, who, as we all before, seem to have taken for their motto, the Roman motto, Non parvum est deus in re publica. If ever there was reason for any way to despair, and beginning to doubt the capacity of any man to govern for self-government, it was just one year ago, when the democratic candidate for the presidency—and that candidate such a man as Martin Van Buren was beaten, and doubly beaten, by a conglomeration of half-rogues and miscreants, cemented by no principle, and held together by no ties, and no objects, but clamoring for "change," like a jockey, who, pushed on by the application of means which could not give the dignity of man, to the purity of the elective franchise, and to the preservation of republican government, must look back upon with sorrow and regret.

That such a man—representing such a cause—assailed by such means—should have been so badly beaten, was indeed cause of alarm to many, and enough to dishearten all who did not confide in public virtue and intelligence, and in the redeeming virtues of the “sober second thought of the people.” But our democracy did not despair. They took courage from defeat—breasted the storm—grappled the foe again; and before the moon has twelve times “filled her horns,” the tide of battle is turned—the foemen fly—and democracy is herself again.

The extra session, which was called for the purpose of consolidating federalism, and erasing democracy, has ended in the rout of its authors, and in the triumph of its intended victims. Never did the end more disappoint the beginning than in the case of this short session. In three months, the position of parties is reversed; the victors, vanquished—the vanquished, victorious.

The summer has been eventful. Large deeds have been done. Events have taken their course; and henceforth the march of democracy will be onward, triumphant and glorious.

Federal wergery has had its reign. An hundred days it reigned in the halls of legislation, and rioted in the abuse of power. In expiration of its enormities, it has chained itself down for an hundred years in the dark chamber of the dead. To tax, squander, and squander, and squander, and squander, and squander, one millions in money and means which were left them, they found insufficient for ten month's service, and to make it still more insufficient, they take away the land revenue from the treasury, and bestow upon British capitalists. Twelve millions were borrowed, and it was not sufficient to pay the interest to pay back. A tax bill has been passed, which inflicts a burthen of eighteen or twenty millions per annum on the people, to raise eight or ten millions for the government, to supply the place of the three or four millions bestowed upon the British. Many millions have been expended in the past, and it is likely to have been subjected to a burthen of fifty per cent. to the government, in order to raise twenty per cent. for the consumer, among those many articles of necessity and comfort; and the few which have escaped now, are to be recaptured, (like fugitives from justice), to be more heavily loaded at the next session. The salt tax—that impious imposition, the revival of which, in England, by sir Robert Walpole, was one of the specified causes for which the English house of commons demanded and obtained his dismissal from office—this impious tax not only cannot be repealed, but it is to be increased, and increased, and perpetuity. A deficit of sixteen millions is revealed for the coming year—a new loan of ten or twelve million announced for the next session of congress—five millions of new appropriations at the late session, besides Indian treaties which cannot be named, and which will be the cause of the vast expenses hereafter resting on their own resources, were intruded upon the treasury—a general abolition of debt at the will of the debtor, under the violated name of a bankrupt law—legislation reduced to legerdemain, by a system of bargain and trickery which made the passage of a bill depend upon equivocations, and jugglery of words, and the most unscrupulous and deepest woe given to our form of government that it has ever received, in the prodigal distribution of money from the public treasury—a new edition of Biddle's law, desperately struggled for by the devoursers of the old one, and saved only then from their grasp, when it was applied to the new one, by the restraining retentively administered by the hands of their own physician. Such were the fiscal operations in a three month's session of the party which was to carry on the government for "thirteen millions" of dollars in a year, and which called congress to the aid of such violent haste "to relieve the distress of the nation."

Such were the legislative operations, and the mode of operating was worthy of the work done, and of the workers. Gag—gag—gag—was the law and the word. In the house of representatives democracy was gagged down and the bill driven through. There the genius of the old sedition law reigned supreme, and indemnified itself by new modes of attorneyship upon the floor of speech, for the long exile of the speaker, in which it had no part, and the tyranny was intended for the senate, but the courage of the "liberty-bell" saved the chamber and prevented that profanation. Their courage prevented it, for they resolved to resist the tyranny which would destroy the freedom of the chamber, come in what shape it might—whether as the bayonets of a military, or the mandate of a civil tyrant. They determined to resist, and to that determination the senate was indebted for its escape from the tyranny and degradation to which the house of representatives was subjected.

The debate of the senate during the thundered days, the speeches of the democratic senators during this arduous time, who were called up early in the morning, and kept late every evening, that fatigue might break down those whose minds were an overmatch for numbers—these debates, if justice could have been done them in ample reports and careful records, would have furnished an era in the history of parliamentary history, leaving out my own, and I can say of the rest that they would have marked the time in which we live, and constituted an era on which the future patriot would have looked back with pride and instruction. But justice could not be done them. The few reporters, out of those accumulated notes, could only furnish disjointed and abbreviated sketches. The speakers themselves, exhausted with day-long heat and prolonged sitting, made no use of paper, and no preparation, and showed that they were weary at that, and often made them sit late against their will!—the speakers could but imperfectly sketch the outline, and collect the substance of some part of their incessant efforts. Much was lost, but not all. Part got to the country. The sound of the struggle at least, was heard, and the people were waked up to the consequences of the momentous issues. The people were not left in the dark, and gratified. Every citizen felt that patriotism required him to do his duty; and the result is seen in the "state of the polls" in Indiana, Tennessee, Alabama, Vermont and Maine. What these have done, others will soon do, and we look to your noble state for a great example. New York saved democracy in the time of Jefferson, and she must not teach us to do without her. Let her come into line once more, and open her harbor to the fleets of free persons. The time of the slave trade has passed, but her long and deep federal bank sinks to the bottom of the sea. Very respectfully, gentlemen, your obliged fellow citizen,

THOMAS H. BENTON.

Committee, &c. Kingston, New York

Fort Hill, 29th September, 1841.

GENTLEMEN: The last mail brought me your kind and flattering invitation of the 17th instant, to attend a mass convention of the democracy of the counties along the North river, and of Long Island, to be held at Kingston on the 7th of next month.

The great distance and the shortness of the notice will be, I hope, sufficient apology for not attending. I am much gratified with the high estimate you place on my services in the great cause of American liberty; and nothing, I assure you, has given me more pleasure, or done more to strengthen my confidence in the success of your cause, than to find in this the approval of one so distinguished and so sagacious as your friends both as to principles and measures. I am of our wide spread and diversified territory. It was, indeed cheering to behold all in every section in this hour of danger, when our opponents flushed with victory in the recent presidential struggle, rushed forward to raise the fallen standard of federalism, and simultaneously rally under the old republican state rights party of '98. When I saw that glorious banner waving over our country, and the line to uphold it, all apprehensions for the result of the contest vanished. As numerous, and bold, and united, as were our opponents—as confident as they were of carrying all their measures at the late session, I never doubted, if they did succeed, but that the period of their victory would be short. I could not believe, when the real issue was made, as it was, between the parties, and the people were called on to decide between them, that the masses of dissatisfied voters and consolidation, democracy and an artificial moneyed aristocracy, engendered and fostered by the government, that they would not long hesitate. Already have events proved that my confidence in their intelligence and patriotism was not misplaced. The recent elections have shown an mighty change in public opinion. That change will go on, if we but prove ourselves worthy of our cause. Let a rigid adherence to principle and consistency be the rule of our friends, and their cause shall be completely overwhelmed by the swelling tide. With great respect, I am, &c. &c. J. C. CALHOUN.

J. C. CALHOUN.

TENNESSEE POLITICS. Correspondence be-

TENNESSEE POLITICS. Correspondence between the Van Buren members of the senate of Tennessee and Mr. FOSTER of that state.

enate Chamber, Nashville, Oct. 19, 1841.

TO THE HON. EPHRAIM H. FOSTER:

Sir: The undersigned, members of the senate of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, now in session, being a majority of that body, understanding that your name will be presented to their consideration as a candidate for the senate of the United States, respectfully request you to inform them in writing, what your opinions are on the following subjects, to wit:

tenth of their commerce. And now, he adds, at least one-third of our commerce is in the hands of foreign vessels. We say that Virginia, and every other slave State, growing states ought to be protected the same as the north in relation to wheat and wool. But tobacco that is worth 10 cents a pound here is assessed in England nine shillings a pound; a duty on American production of 2,000 per cent. Thus, this American production is almost ruined. By the way, I do not think you talk of free trade men in impost.

The American Institute are advocates of the only true principles of free trade. What should be the policy of our government? We ask for and offer free trade. When that is rejected, we ask for a proper reciprocity, and the American Institute does not ask for higher duties on free trade imports; but we say "let our tobacco on equal terms." If they refuse that reciprocity, we say that we'll put a duty on your broadcloth equal to what you put on our tobacco. (Cheers.) Our path and hope and desire is peace. With a clear head and an open field we ask no favors of the world. But with the eagle-eyed foreign policy of a keen and vigorous government abroad on one hand, and parties and rulers here at home all intent upon nothing but making presidents and getting into office, on the other, it is no wonder that our agricultural interests, manufactures and commerce are all going to ruin as fast as they can. (Laughter and cheers.) Look at our rice if that goes to England, it is met with a duty of $3 or $4; and so it is with everything that they can grow in their colonies. And therefore we say put their goods on the same footing as they place ours. (Cheers.) The American Institute holds to no party—supports no party—wishes no man to rise as fast as they can. We wish to support our agriculture, commerce and manufactures, and to procure such a system of legislation, as will soon put us on an equality with other nations in all our commercial pursuits. On our pork, there is a duty of $6 a barrel in the West India market. And is not some retaliation due? Take the article of lumber go to our mountains, and see the superabundance; and yet see the vast majority of foreign vessels in our ports carrying this away to sell in foreign markets. On the Savannah river I met eleven foreign vessels, thus loaded, where I did not see one American vessel. There is something wrong in this. We have never seen a vessel from the other world, where there is a hard dollar to be earned by honest industry. (Cheers.) As Hudibras said,

"For every why there is a wherefore."

(Cheers.) Then there are shingles. There is a duty of $3 25 on every 1,000 shingles in the West India market; an American vessel goes from here with a load, and by the side of her in Jamaica shall be a vessel from New Brunswick, or even Maine, selling shingles at $3 00, 25 cents less than the duty. Thus, our commercial marine cut up, and in case of war, this strong arm of our defence will not be found; you may blow your trumpets and beat your drums, but your naval heroes will not be within hearing. Take our silk trade. Look at France. She sends us all her gew-gaws, which she and her writers and daughters are used to adorn themselves with, and we feel pleased to see them do so; France takes $500,000 of our specie from us for these gew-gaws every month, but takes not a dollar of our produce free in return. And thus our government has gone on until an empty treasury has obliged them to put a tariff on our raw materials in order to restore something like equality. Gen. F. then went on to speak of the movements made by Great Britain, in buying our cotton seed and gins, and sending out these and our planters to India, all which we have once detailed. He added—She is also encouraging its growth in Egypt, Brazil and Texas. She takes to the Virginians the lovely Texas, and the lovely Texas, every acre of whose soil will produce cotton. "This like the poet's lines—

"Nature there had done her part,
The body only wanted art."

(Laughter.) And Great Britain is teaching her art, and Patterson and Lowell are at work making machinery for her. And even Colombia has sent to this city orders for quantities of our Sea Island cotton seed, in order to restore something like equality. We see by that unequalled production of the world. We see by the last British prices current, that 70,000 bales of cotton had arrived from India, and that had lessened the price of cotton in the American market. Why then slander us because we want protection? We see all parties and all writers and daughters are used to adorn themselves with, and we feel pleased to see them do so; France takes $500,000 of our specie from us for these gew-gaws every month, but takes not a dollar of our produce free in return. And thus our government has gone on until an empty treasury has obliged them to put a tariff on our raw materials in order to restore something like equality. Gen. F. then went on to speak of the movements made by Great Britain, in buying our cotton seed and gins, and sending out these and our planters to India, all which we have once detailed. He added—She is also encouraging its growth in Egypt, Brazil and Texas. She takes to the Virginians the lovely Texas, and the lovely Texas, every acre of whose soil will produce cotton. "This like the poet's lines—

By the Gladiator, to London, . . . $230,000
By the Louis Philippe, to Havre, . . . 346,000
By the Great Western, to Bristol, . . . 2,340
By the Aeolus, for Canton, . . . 250,000

$1,097,340

We say then, put these gew-gaws and things, upon the same principle as you put ours, and we'll take as many as you please, and you take beef and mutton, and grain on the same footing. But no, says grand-mother England, our books on free trade are for you to read and obey, but not for us to act up to. We put it on to you tobacco; and by and by, when we get other countries to raise plenty of cotton, we'll take it on to that, and you may whistle and fiddle all you tire—'we've got you'! (Great cheering, and much discriminating laughter.) Why the shipments from Savannah, by the tables, in American bottoms, in one year, was 22,668 tons; in foreign bottoms, 41,383 tons. Upon Lake Erie, at Detroit, there were in that commerce thus:

American	Vessels.	Tonnage.
British	152	12,000

I think this too great to be correct. But at Ontario it is thus:

American	Vessels.	Tonnage.
British	509	63,517
British	1,011	215,000

Thus five-sixths of the commerce of that lake is in the hands of your great rival. In vain did Perry fight and conquer if this is the result. Again, at Cleveland, we find that in one day 8,000 barrels of flour, equal to 40,000 bushels of wheat was sold, deliverable in Kingston, at the same price charged to New York. The stores in Kingston are not large enough to hold the American produce sent there to be re-shipped, and compete with us in a foreign market. And nearly all the produce from 11 States and territories goes thus; by checking the free commerce of this city and country, trade is thus diverted and goes to aggrandize our rival.

Why, in one year after the late treaty was made with Great Britain, the tolls on the Welland canal rose from $12,000 to $50,000. Before this treaty, on your own canal, there were 753,000 tons deliverable at tide water; this would require 1,400 vessels, of 500 tons each, to carry it abroad; and this is diverted to the stores in Kingston, and cripples commerce. What, then, is to be done? Let us do justice to commerce, agriculture and manufactures, and we ask no favors of the world. We go for free trade, but when we don't get it, the American Institute is too modest to boast of it. (Cheers.) Gen. T. then spoke of the conduct of trade of English with a Brazilian vessel, worth $27,000,000 of goods and taking nothing but cotton in return, which caused Brazil to say the treaty should be void after 1844. Also the conduct of England in the tea trade, in the 10 per cent. duty, then throwing it open to the world, and sending out 10,000 tons to this country for fresh tea. "If we don't get free trade, or reciprocity, we lay duty on 10,000 per cent. on our tobacco and 2,000 per cent. on our rice." Great Britain has three-fourths of all our commerce, while many of our large vessels are lying idle. Look at the statistics of ship building for 1841:

In Maine there were built,	Vessels.	Tons.
Massachusetts,	181	38,936
New Jersey,	109	17,811
Pennsylvania,	103
Maryland,	111

"Think of this gradual consumptive decay which awaits the commerce and agriculture of our country. Yet there is no defect in our institutions; we stand elevated in the eyes of the world for capacity to produce. When Russia wants to build a vessel she sends to New York, buys one of our vessels, takes it home, and puts on a stove, as a model to build after. Does she want a steam vessel, New York is the place that she sends to for one. Is a cotton factory wanted, America furnishes it. Does Prussia want a mill to grind her grain with, she sends to Rochester for it, and to Baltimore for an engineer and machinery. When Austria wants a locomotive, she sends straight to Philadelphia to get one. When Egypt wakes up from her Pharaoh like sleep, and finds that her bull mills are not the best in the world, she sends here for a steam engine. When Texas wants machinery, she sends to Lowell and Patterson for it. And even England sends to Philadelphia for a locomotive, she sends to Philadelphia—dear Philadelphia—sends to Philadelphia sent one over to us, for we can build nothing to equal it. (Laughter and applause.) Oh! then, protect your laborers—protect your agriculture—protect your manufactures, and when you want a spur to a protective duty take out tobacco and rice for an example.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

SPEECH OF HON. WILLIAM SLADE,

In house of representatives, 18th and 20th January, 1840.

[CONTINUED FROM PAGE 143.]

Fidelity of implied pledge of the south to the north.

And, Sir, Speaker, let me look a little at the manner in which the implied pledge of the south to the north has been redeemed; or rather, I ought to say, at the extent of its violation. If you will accompany me in a brief examination, I will show you how slavery has increased its numbers—acquired new territory—enlarged its power—claimed exemption from all opposition to its extension to the coast of Africa, and freedom, in its march to uncontrolled dominion.

In 1790 the slave population amounted to 697,897. Now mark its increase:

In 1800 it was . . .	893,041
In 1810 it was . . .	1,191,364
In 1820 it was . . .	1,536,061
In 1830 it was . . .	2,002,093
In 1840, probable number, . . .	2,700,000

Slavery was to be abolished "at no distant day" and yet it has increased to two millions seven hundred thousand! And in that very state from which Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Henry and others predicted the speedy and complete extermination, are slaves now actually raised for exportation.

[Mr. Garland, of Va. here interposed, and denied the truth of the assertion. Mr. S. perceiving that the remark had excited some sensibility, and desiring to avoid seeming to cast reproach upon Virginia, passed over by remarking that the District of Columbia was notorious for the market for the surplus slaves in the neighboring counties of Virginia and Maryland, and that slaves thus purchased were annually shipped in large numbers to southern markets. On the day following, Mr. Garland, in his reply to Mr. S. having spoken of his allusion to slave-breeding in Virginia as "the reputation of a base slander of that prince of demagogues, Daniel O'Connell," Mr. S. asked permission to read, in proof of his assertion, the following account of the declarations of distinguished Virginians which he found in "Jay's View of the action of the Federal Government in behalf of Slavery:"]

"In the course of this State, in 1832, Thomas Jefferson Randolph declared that the Virginians converted into 'one grand menagerie, where men are reared for the market like oxen for the shambles.' This same gentleman thus compared the foreign with the domestic traffic. 'The trader (African) receives the slaves, a stranger in aspect, language and manner, from the merchant, who has brought him from the interior. But here, sir, individuals whom the master has known from infancy—whom he has seen sporting in the innocent gambols of childhood—who have been accustomed to look to him for protection, he tears from the mother's arms, and sells into a strange country—among a strange people—subject to cruel taskings. In my opinion, it is enough to worse."

"Mr. Gholson, of Virginia, in his speech in the legislature of that State, January 15, 1831, (see Richmond Whig), says: 'The legal maxim of partus sequitur ventrem is coeval with the existence of the rights of property itself, and is founded in wisdom and justice. It is only on the justice and inviolability of this maxim, that the master's force and the slave's woe, the female slave, has her nursed and attended during the period of her gestation, and raises the helpless and infant offspring. The value of the property justifies the expense; and I do not hesitate to say that in its increase consists much of our wealth.'"

"Professor Caldwell, now president of the college of William and Mary, Virginia, in his review of the debate in the Virginia legislature in 1831-2, speaking of the revenue arising from the trade says: 'A full equivalent being thus left in the place of the slave, this emigration becomes an advantage to the state, and does not check the black population as much, at first view we might imagine, because it furnishes every inducement to the master to attend to the negroes, to encourage breeding, and to cause the greatest number possible to be raised. Virginia is, in fact, a negro-raising State for other states.'"

"Mr. C. H. Merrell, in his report to the Virginia convention of 1829, on the tables of the natural growth of the slave population demonstrate, when compared with the increase of its numbers in the commonwealth for twenty years past, that an annual revenue of not less than a million and a half of dollars is derived from the exportation of a part of this population."

Mr. Slade proceeded. With the increase of slaves from 697,897 to near two millions and three-quarters, have the number of the slave states increased from six to thirteen; three of the new slave states being formed from territory purchased with the common treasure of the nation; so that the north has actually paid her money to purchase new fields to be moistened with the sweat and blood of slavery, instead of having the promised aid of the south in getting rid of the national evil.

The number of representatives, on account of the slave population, has increased to twenty-five; and will probably rise to thirty after the next census. Let me show you, Mr. Speaker, the strange results of this principle of "slave representation" on this floor:

The slave states with a free population of 3,823,000, have one hundred representatives; while the free states, with a population of 7,003,000, have but one hundred and forty-two. Look at this in some of its details.

Virginia, with a population of 741,000, has twenty-one representatives, while Ohio, with a population of 947,000, has but nineteen. The free state, with a free population of 206,000 more, has a representation of two less.

Pennsylvania, with a population of 1,347,500, has twenty-eight representatives, while South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, with a population of 912,000 being 435,800 less than Pennsylvania, have the same number of representatives. In comparison, but I have gone far enough to show the great disadvantage to which the free states have been subjected by yielding to the south a slave representation, for which they obtained, in the compromise, no substantial equivalent, as I will now show.

The constitution provides that "direct taxes and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states which may be included within this union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons—three-fifths of all other persons," that is—three-fifths of the slaves. This est a burden of taxation on account of slaves was regarded as some compensation to the north for the extra advantage to the south of a slave representation. Now, sir, let us see how this consideration for the concession has failed.

By a letter of the 26th of January, 1838, in reply to a call for information from the register of the treasury, it appears that the whole of the receipts into the treasury of the United States, from the 1st of March, 1789, to the 31st of Dec. 1836, had been:

From customs	$68,952,754 47
Internal revenue	22,253,045 38
Land sales	1,093,237 37
Direct taxes	12,742,284 64

$719,045,352 01

The receipts of the last three years have been

$61,731,262 48

$95,776,614 49

It thus appears that of more than eight hundred and fifteen millions of receipts, about twelve millions and three-quarters only have been from direct taxation, and, even of this, the north has, of course paid her proportion. Such is the practical equivalent which has been received for a concession which has enabled them, by the representation of slave property, to control the destinies of the country for fifty years—a concession which no one now believes would have been made, but for the assurance which I have shown was felt, an assurance encouraged by the slave states themselves, that slavery should, "at no distant day," be abolished throughout the country.

But with the rendering of the constitutional equivalent for the slave representation has thus been avoided when money was to be paid, we find the compromise fully carried out when money is to be received. Thus the ratio of representation, including the representation in the senate, was made the basis of the distribution of the surplus revenue by the act of 1836, giving, of course, a disproportionate amount to the slave states. The thirteen free states, with a population of 7,003,000, received $21,410,777 12; while the thirteen slave states, with a free population of 3,823,000, received $16,038,082 83. So that there was received for each inhabitant of the free states a sum of five for each inhabitant of the free states there was received but $3 06.

While considering the subject of the concession to the south of a slave representation, one can help inquiring what—since so much is said of implied consent—and the compromises of the constitution in connexion with the subject of slavery? What did each party actually concede to the other?

There was conceded to the south the stipulation to deliver up fugitive slaves—protection against domestic violence—a continuance of the slave-trade twenty years—and the three-fifths representation of slave property. Surely these are large concessions to be made in favor of slavery! And what concession was made to the north in return? None! except the stipulation just referred to, in regard to direct taxation; which has, as I have shown, amounted to nothing.

Does not this glaring inequality of concession give irresistible force to the argument which I have drawn from the history of those times, to show that it was the general expectation that slavery would be soon abolished? Is it possible to believe that such concessions would have been made in favor of slavery (concessions to wrong, not to right) if any body had suspected that it was not to be abolished, but to be cherished, increased and made permanent? Did any body dream that the concession of a "three-fifths" representation, within fifty years, bring into congress thirty representatives for the representation of two million seven hundred thousand slaves? But, more than all—could it have been thought of, or, if thought of, could the idea have been endured for a moment—that that concession was to be used as an engine of political power that the destinies of the country were actually to be controlled by a representation which slavery should bring into this hall, and the votes it should give in the elections of the chief magistrates of the country?

Mr. Speaker, the history of slavery in this country for the last thirty years has been a history of enormous wrongs, of unparalleled, even of unexampled, as gross a violation of implied pledges as can well be conceived. Let facts speak on this subject; and, that they may speak in the best manner and to the best effect, let me read to the house an extract from a speech delivered in the senate of the United States, by the Hon. Charles Sumner, Governor of Massachusetts, whose sound, practical sense, for which he is so much and so deservedly distinguished, seized upon the strong points of this matter of southern encroachment, and presented them in the following language: "This interest (slavery) has ruled the destinies of the country for the last thirty years. It has given us a president from its own territory, and of its own selection. During all this time it has not only had a president sustaining his own peculiar views of public policy, but, through him, has held and used in its own way the whole organization of all the departments, and all the vast and controlling influence incident to that office, and to aid it in carrying on its views and policy, as well as to protect and secure it to every advantage.

"Let us explore a little further, and see how the two houses of congress have been organized. For thirty years out of thirty-six that interest has placed its representatives in the chair of the other house, securing the organization of committees, and the great influence of that station. And, sir, while all other interests have, during part of the time, had the chair (vice presidency) in which you preside assigned to them, as an equivalent for these great concessions, that interest, when a president is elected, who, upon the contingencies mentioned in the constitution, will be the president of the United States, that interest has invariably given us that officer. Look, I beseech you, through all the places of honor, of profit and of privilege; and there you will find the representative of two years from the north, and one of two years from the south. Does not, then, this interest rule, guide and aid public policy to its own views, and fit it to suit the action and products of its own labor?"

In connexion with the view thus presented by Governor Davis, let me refer to the progress of the influence of slavery in the elections of the presiding officers of this body, for the last twenty years. The next congress will complete fifty-two years from the organization of the government. During the first twelve years the speakers were from Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey and Massachusetts; during the next six years from North Carolina; the next four years from Massachusetts; the next nine years from Virginia and South Carolina; the next four years from New York; the next four years from Virginia and Kentucky; the next two years from New York; and the last fourteen years from Virginia and Tennessee.

Dividing the whole term, as near as may be, into three equal periods, it appears that, for the first seven years, the speakers were from twelve years from the north, and five years from the south; for the next seven years, five from the north, and twelve from the south; and for the last eighteen years two from the north, and sixteen from the south!

Such a result as this needs no comment. It speaks for itself, and speaks a language not to be misunderstood. For further evidence of the power of slavery and its disposition to encroachment, I might, if I had time, refer to numerous important questions which have been decided in congress, in which the power of the three-fifths representation has had a controlling effect. I might also speak of the extraordinary claims of Georgia and Virginia in connexion with slavery. I might refer to the frequent threats of violence—to the scenes of lynching—to the violation of the mails—and to the violation of the constitution, in denying to the free colored citizens of the north the privileges of citizens in the southern states of this union. But time would fail me.

Upon this latter topic, however, I cannot refrain from dwelling, for a moment, for the purpose of calling the attention of the house to the laws which have been given, at the south, to the laws prohibiting the emigration within their borders, and even a sojourn among them, of free colored citizens of other states, I allude to the execution of these laws upon the citizens of a foreign country, forced by the dangers of the sea into a southern port of this union, which, in my hand the following from a Jamaica paper, (the Despatch), published in the year 1838, which I beg permission to read:

"We have been politely favored with a Haytian paper, L'Union de Port-au-Prince, of the 19th ult. by which it would appear that this republic is highly indignant at the treatment experienced by the crew of a Haytian vessel, which was forced, by stress of weather, to enter one of the United States ports, (Charleston). L'Union, after detailing the circumstances that obliged the vessel in question, L'Arbitraire, to put into Charleston, remarks: 'So soon as she arrived there, the whole of the crew (captain allowed to remain) were seized and thrown into prison, where every assistance or comfort was denied to our unfortunate mariners, whose incarceration lasted the whole time that the vessel was being repaired. This was an outrage against the Haytian nation. The day may yet come when it will be in our power to cause the name of Haytiens to be respected abroad, and particularly so by our arrogant neighbors. Until that period arrives, however, we have in our hands the means of retaliation. Already if we judge rightly, a spirit of deep vengeance against the Americans manifest itself, and seems to pervade all classes of our citizens, and so indignant do we feel at their conduct towards our countrymen, that we are almost inclined to denounce and hold them up to the hatred of the nation.'"

Now, Mr. Speaker, what but a want of power on the part of the Haytian government has prevented a demand upon this government for redress for this outrage on the rights of the Haytian citizens? There is, it is true, no danger of a war with Hayti. Her weakness is our protection! But may not our extensive and profitable commerce with that nation be made to suffer from such outrages on the rights of its citizens? And shall we still ask, What has this nation to do with slavery?

There is one fact, placing in a very strong light the tenaciousness of the slave power, and its disregard of the implied pledge to which I have referred, which I cannot omit to notice; and to which I ask the special attention of the house. It is this: that the slave state shall be admitted into this union, without the simultaneous admission of a slave state. It is even urged as an argument for the division of Florida, and its admission into the union as two states, that it must be done in order to balance with two new slave states, two new free states—sooner said than done. Wisconsin and Iowa. To give plausibility to this demand of slavery, it is asserted in an article in a late Virginia paper, (transferred to the Globe) that "from the time that new states began to be admitted in addition to the 'old thirteen,' from that time it has been the fixed policy of the slave states to admit a slave state and a free state at the same time. Thus Kentucky and Vermont came in together; Ohio and Tennessee followed; Alabama and Illinois, Louisiana and Indiana, Missouri and Maine, Arkansas and Michigan. Thus the union kept its parts even, and, to do so, twice have the New England states formed their small republics, and Iowa, New Mexico, and Maine were both divided from other states to make new ones to balance, in the senate at least, the new large slaveholding states."

Aware of the startling character of such a claim in favor of slavery, the writer of the article says, "it has been the policy of the slave states to admit a slave and a free state at the same time. This I deny. The states mentioned by him as having come into the union on the 'balanced' principle, have been admitted as follows:

Slave.	Free.	Free.
Kentucky,	1791	Vermont,	1791
Tennessee,	1796	Ohio,	1802
Louisiana,	1812	Indiana,	1816
Alabama,	1819	Illinois,	1818
Missouri,	1821	Maine,	1820
Arkansas,	1836	Michigan,	1836

Now, the fact in the first place, is, that no slave state (admitted in 1817) from his account current between the slaveholding and non-slaveholding states. The introduction of it throws his balance sheet into

* Since this speech was delivered, one of the senators from Arkansas (Mr. Sevier) has declared, in the senate, that he would never vote for the admission of another free state into the union, unless there should be a new slave state to balance it.

confusion, besides showing the advantage which slavery has gained over freedom in the admission of new states.

It is independent of this, the list furnishes no evidence of the "fixed policy" of which he speaks. Thus, sir, all know that the political "balance" between freedom and slavery, now contended for, was entirely unthought of when Kentucky and Vermont came into the union. The well known state of public feeling on the subject of slavery at that time shows this conclusively. Indeed, the notion that slavery, which it was then declared had "received a mortal wound, and would die of consumption, "was to run a race with freedom, is absolutely ridiculous.

The idea of a division of "small states of New England to make a balance" is an equally worthless foundation. Maine was separated from Massachusetts proper, by the territory of New Hampshire; and her political separation was, therefore, dictated by her natural position, as well as by other obvious considerations, having no relation to the "balance" now contended for. As for Vermont, the "Green Mountain boys," driven by the injustice of New York, declared themselves independent, and formed a state constitution in 1777, fourteen years before their admission into the union; and having maintained their independence against New York, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, the friends of the most consummate skill and noble daring, they finally came into the union in 1791.

I might go through the list, and show that the controlling reasons for the admission of all the new states into the union, have had no connexion with the idea of the "balance" suggested. I know the admission of Missouri, as a slave state, was urged upon the ground of the admission of Maine as a free one; and if I am not mistaken, the claim now formally insisted on was then for the first time brought forward. It was, I regret to say, successful; and it has again been successful in the admission of Arkansas as a slave state.

I do not complain that new states at the south have been admitted into the union—not even that seven have been admitted from that section, while six only have been admitted from the north. But I do complain that they have been admitted as slave states; and especially that there are among them those whose territory formed no part of the "old thirteen," and which have therefore brought into the union an addition to the burden and weakness and curse, from which, at the adoption of the constitution, it was universally expected the country would soon be delivered.

But more especially do I complain that it has come to be avowed as a settled principle of national policy, that the slave power is to be maintained in its existing relative strength, by the admission of new slave states. How strongly does this contrast with the public sentiment and policy at the time of the formation of the constitution. Slavery, which was then, by the general consent of the nation, to be speedily destruction—the subject of almost universal execration—now raises its brazen front, and claims to be regarded as an essential element of, and to have its relative political power carefully maintained in, this union of freedom!

It is not all. Fearing that, in the vast territory west and north of Missouri, the indomitable spirit of northern enterprise may raise up new states to add to the empire of freedom, and diminish the relative strength of slavery, the south turns its eyes to the wide domain and fruitful soil of Texas, and aims to add to her dominion a territory which may be manufactured into half a dozen slave states, to maintain the balance in favor of slavery! Yes, sir; slavery has actually entered upon a system of colonizing—colonizing by conquest—colonizing from a land of freedom—colonizing to bring under its dominion a country from whose soil, in the advancing power of free principles, it has already been banished.

Thus, as slavery sinks in other countries, it rises in this. As its limits are contracted elsewhere, they are enlarged here. At the moment that its iron sceptre is broken in the British West Indies, American schemes are devising means to strengthen and enlarge its dominion in the land yet reddened with blood poured out to assert and maintain that "all men are created equal!"

Where is to terminate this progress of the slave power? Where shall its southward movements cease, until, to keep pace with the westward march of the free states, it has reached the Pacific, and desolate the fields of Mexico and Guatemala, and defile the limit of the same ocean as the Isthmus of Darien? But, Mr. Speaker, slavery is not content with a multiplication of its victims or an extension of its territorial dominions. It sees the gathering storm, and it endeavours to use the power of free discussion, and seeks to suppress its outbreaks. For this purpose it penetrates the free states—it surrounds peaceable assemblies with mobs—it destroys printing presses—it kills or follows with persecution their conductors—it violates the city of Peñx, the city where yet stands the "Hall of Independence," and applies the torch to a noble edifice dedicated to free discussion. And, sir, it has finally come to the halls of congress, and assailed liberty in these her most sacred temples, by striking down the constitution, and solemnly guaranteed right of petition, and imposing silence upon the representatives of freemen here.

But this is not all. Slavery has found its way into the executive department of this government, introducing, and giving efficacy, through that department, to a new element of power unknown to the constitution—its conductors—it violates the city of Peñx, the city where yet stands the "Hall of Independence," inasmuch that the president, while admitting that congress has constitutional power to abolish slavery and the slave trade in this District, declares, in advance, that he will give his official sanction to no bill for such abolition, "against the wishes of the slaveholding states." The "wishes" it is observed are not the arguments—of the slaveholding states are to govern the executive action! With arguments he has nothing to do. He throws from himself all responsibility of judging, and makes the simple fact of the "wishes" of a minority of the people decisive. No more inquiry, no more advance, such a claim. In all the struggles about a protective tariff, the manufacturing states set up no such presentations; and if they had, they would have found no president willing to give such effect to their "wishes." Thus, slavery asks and obtains what would be yielded to no other interest in the country.

But slavery is not content with all this. When the people of the north, in the strength of their feeling for their brethren in slavery, and under a sense of the national responsibility for its continuance, with the abominations of the slave trade, in this District, send their petitions here for its abolition, slavery sends its infernal legion of honorable members on this floor, and threatens to disorder the union! Yes, sir; slavery, that very slavery that, fifty years ago, was declared to have the consumption, and to be struck with death, has "got well," grown fat and lusty, talks of living forever; and absolutely threatens the dissolution of the union if he is not "let alone," and permitted to continue his course of honorable members on this floor, and threatens to disorder the union! Yes, sir; slavery, that very slavery that, fifty years ago, was declared to have the consumption, and to be struck with death, has "got well," grown fat and lusty, talks of living forever; and absolutely threatens the dissolution of the union if he is not "let alone," and permitted to continue his course of honorable members on this floor, and threatens to disorder the union! Who can find words to express the amazement which this is calculated to excite?

Thus it is, Mr. Speaker, that slavery has, ever since this union was formed, been gradually augmenting its power, moving on especially during the latter half of its existence, and now, in the present decade, with giant strides in the march of encroachment, constantly gaining power, and constantly asking for more, never saying enough, but always crying, give! give! give!

And now, Mr. Speaker, let me entreat gentlemen to review the subject in the light which I have endeavored to throw upon it, and tell me if it is not the height of injustice, and the height of the nation's degradation, that the subject of slavery, at the north, with a violation of implied pledges in favor of slavery, when it is manifest beyond the power of contradiction that the south has violated, and is, at this moment, flagrantly violating its own most clearly implied pledges to the contrary?

Sir, as I have already intimated, the south, so far from encroaching on the rights of the north in this matter, are but resisting the encroachments of the slave power. They are standing on the very confines of the constitution, battling, not merely for the rights of the slave, but for the dearest rights of free men. And any man who, on the point of honor, no; not a hair's breadth. They cannot, without surrender of every thing. It is time the south should understand that the north is no longer to stand still and witness the encroachments of slavery with arms folded, eyes closed and mouths shut; but that, while they will not transcend, by the breach of a hair, the limits of the constitution, they owe it to themselves, to their country—to its honor abroad—to its safety at home—to humanity—to justice—and to the world, struggling for victory over time-honored oppression—to stand firm upon the ground of constitutional right, and not surrender to any compromise now. The weapons of fair and honest warfare are the sword, the freedom of speech—freedom of the press—and freedom of petition.

But I may be told that, though there might have been, at the adoption of the constitution, no such compromise in favor of slavery, as is now contended for, yet that there should be such a compromise now. But, since the south is so excitable on the subject, it is not best to agitate it; but to refrain for the sake of preserving the union. Sir, I am willing to yield much for the sake of peace—whenever none can prize more highly than I do—and for the union—whose benefits are, by no means, to be lightly put at hazard. But I am not willing to yield every thing. There is a point where yielding must stop, or every thing will be demanded in surrender.

Compromise! What is a compromise but a mutual concession? And what is the south preparing to concede? Nothing! As usual in the contest between freedom and slavery in this country, the concessions must all be on one side. While slavery is reaching forth the arms of her power in every direction—lengthening her cords, and stretching her stakes, and grasping, by a bold and daring policy, the entire control of the union, the people of the north must stand still—shut their mouths—throw away their pens—break their presses—and sit down in silence, without even the poor privilege of praying for deliverance from slavery, and from slavery's empire. All in the spirit of compromise; for the sake of peace! and the union! Sir, it is enough to sicken the soul of a freeman to hear this cant of compromise—a compromise of silence! of death! not the death of slavery, but the death of freedom!

Abolition—its aims—and the means of their accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker, I have do with "the compromises of the constitution." I regret that I am compelled to leave this branch of my subject while so much remains to be said to do it justice. But I must forbear.

Returning to the question more directly before the house, let me remark that there is another reason, besides the one already mentioned, why I urged against the reception of petitions on the subject of slavery. It is, that they come from "abolitionists."

I have been amazed, while sitting here, to witness the strife on this floor, in denouncing the men and women whose prayers come here for the abolition of slavery—"religiose knives"—superstitious fanatics—"evile fanatics"—desperate and despicable fanatics—are specimens of this denunciation. Sir, I promised, when I began, that I would indulge in no retorts; and surely I cannot find it in my heart to indulge any suited to such attacks. Not that I do not hold in high estimation the many excellent and intelligent of my constituents who thus assailed; but it is because I do thus esteem them, that I make no reply to such denunciations.

"Abolitionists!" What is abolition? At what does it aim? By what means is it sought to accomplish its objects? These are questions which I propose, briefly, to answer.

Abolition, among the noblest of the objects which can engage the efforts of man. It is the deliverance of men from the ownership of others, and restoring them to the ownership of themselves. It is to take away whips and tortures as incentives to effort, and to substitute for them the instincts of self-support, and the nobler and more important ones of care for the support of others. It is to substitute for promiscuous cohabitation, the marriage relation, with its sacred rights, its hallowed privileges, and its countless blessings. It is to emancipate mind from complete human dominion, and raise it to freedom of thought, freedom of purpose, and conscious responsibility to the God of the universe. It is to open the Bible, now shut to millions of human beings, and to give them the privilege, and aid them to enjoy it, of "searching the scriptures," and are "able to make them wise unto salvation."

This is abolition. Who ought to be reproached for it? Who ought to be derided? or who ought to be sneered at and derided; and may come to be used as a name of reproach. But who cares for a name! Who that is capable of understanding what principle means, will tremble at the name of abolition! Here is the thing. Look at it. Is there a nobler end never achieved than there is—than the emancipation of the body and the soul of man from such dominion, and his restoration to such rights?

These great purposes abolitionists aim to accomplish to the extent of their power throughout this country, and throughout the world. Their benevolence is bounded by no lines of latitude or longitude; and their sympathy is universal, embracing the whole globe. Wherever there is a human being suffering from oppression, there does it find an object of kind regard and anxious solicitude. It feels for those in bands, "as bound with them." The fetters which gall the limbs of the slave leave its own spirit. Impelled by the love of God, it crosses oceans, climbs mountains, traverses continents, encounters dangers, faces death, for his redemption from oppression, and his elevation to freedom, intelligence, virtue, happiness, hope and heaven.

Such is abolition. But some may say abolition, thus explained, is an effect which we would indeed like to see, but it is not in this sense, we are abolitionists; but we are opposed to abolitionism—that is, to the means that are used to produce that effect.

I use the word abolition, in this discussion, both in its popular sense, as descriptive of the present great movement in favor of emancipation, and, also, in its literal significance, as being a sacrifice sought to be accomplished by that movement—leaving to those who hear me to give it a significance appropriate to the occasion, in which it is used. But generally, I say of abolition, as an effect, I would substantially say it as descriptive of the present great movement to produce that effect. By this, however, I do not intend to sanction every thing that is done by every body engaged in this movement. I have seen, I have heard, many things to disapprove. But I regard them as spots in the sun, which, after all, gives a glorious light.

In approving of the present abolition movement, I speak in reference to the principles that give it vitality, and the great agencies by which it is sought to give them efficacy—namely, free speech and a free press—a freedom restrained by truth, and the spirit of the Christian of Christ. Disproving as I do, of precipitation and ill-directed measures, and the indulgence of harsh and bitter zeal in this case, I feel, nevertheless, bound, in sincerity, to say, that I had much rather see even this than to witness a continuance of the nation's death slumber over this great question. The principles and the great agencies of purifying the atmosphere are not infrequently sustained by "harsh thunder." But the thunder storm is nearly over—to be followed, I trust, by a steady and refreshing rain, which shall nourish the thirsty earth, and finally bring forth an abundant harvest of good to our country.

But make me not abolition seek to accomplish its purposes. By the power of reason, shaking not at night of the Goliath of slavery, it marches fearlessly to meet him. Trusting in the power of truth, and showing their respect for slaveholders by confidence in its practical efficacy, abolitionists patiently and kindly, and perseveringly urge upon them its demands, and press them with gentle and kindly. Perhaps not always so. Better always—far better! But slavery is slavery! Not to feel, when the full import of that word enters their minds, would do credit to their hearts, though it might secure for them the reputation of prudence, and save them from reproach.

By the power of truth, abolitionists seek to create, wherever they meet, an atmosphere against slavery. They see the nation drugged with the opiate of wealth and pleasure, rilling in present abundance, and grasping after still greater; while the slave treads the same everlasting round of labor unperpetual, and of toil unblest, his mind brooding in perpetual darkness, his eye and spirit, craving an elevated aspiration, and entering into none of the exultations of its noble nature and high destiny: while the nation, like the priest and the Levite, have passed by, in cold, selfish indifference, leaving him to perish, without help and without hope. By patient and untiring effort, do abolitionists seek to make the people of this nation from their guilty slumber over the wrong of slavery, and produce a conviction that the time has come when something should be done for its abolition.

To the extent of the constitutional power of congress over this subject they ask its action. They pray it to abolish slavery and the slave trade in this District, over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and prohibit, as it clearly has a right to do, the slave trade between the states, and to admit no more slave states into the union.

But their great, leading object is to create such a public sentiment in the south as shall effect the abolition of slavery in the slaveholding states by their own legislation. To do this, they labor, in the first place, to gain the consideration of the south, and to exert to the end that it may speak out in clear and decided language its condemnation of slavery, and then to exert upon the south a strong moral influence in favor of its abolition—believing that the south will not pertinaciously refuse to yield to the calm and enlightened voice of the north, even when especially when it is in accordance with the judgment of the great mass of the civilized world.

While speaking of the means by which abolitionists aim to accomplish the abolition of slavery in the United States, I deem it proper to disabuse them of the charge of aiming to abolish slavery in the states by the legislation of congress—a charge which is, I am firmly believed by many at the south to be well founded.

I hold in my hand "Jay's View of the action of the federal government in behalf of slavery"—a work published by the American anti-slavery society, and, of course, expressing its views on the topics of which it treats. While I ask the attention of the house to that treatise, I leave the book which you about to read, I take the occasion to say, may be able to obtain it, as containing facts and views worthy the attention of all the members of this house, and all the people of this nation. The author says, (p. 216):

"Every state possesses all the powers of independent sovereignty, except such as she has delegated to the federal government. All the powers not specified in the constitution as delegated are by that instrument reserved. Among the powers specified, that of abrogating the slave codes of the several states is not included. On the contrary, the guaranty of the continuance of the African slave trade for twenty years; the provision for the arrest of fugitive slaves; and the establishment of the federal ratio of representation, all refer to and acknowledge the existence of slavery in the United States. If, therefore, the abolitionists, unmindful of the guaranty and repeated disclaimer of all power in congress to legislate for the abolition of slavery in the states, should, with unexampled perfidy, attempt to bring about such legislation; and if congress, regardless of their oaths, should ever be guilty of the consummate folly and wickedness of passing a law canceling the slaves held under state authority, the union would, most unquestionably, be rent in twain. The south, would, indeed, be craven, could it submit to such profligate usurpation. It would be compelled to withdraw, not for the preservation of slavery alone, but for the protection of the rights of the liberty-loving whites of the north, who would be jeopardized under a government which, spurning all constitutional restraints, should assume the omnipotence of the British parliament. But it is scarcely worth while to anticipate the consequence of an act which can never be perpetrated so long as all its members retain an ordinary share of honesty and intelligence."

British abolition.

And now, Mr. Speaker, let me show you the relation which this movement, at the north, bears to abolition elsewhere. Let me show you that it is but part of the great abolition movement of this age—a movement, in regard to whose principles and prospects, no man of common sense and feeling, and especially no southern statesman can be indifferent. Let me especially call your attention to British abolition, which forms so prominent a part of it; and from whose origin, progress and termination both the north and the south may draw lessons of the deepest practical importance.

The British slave trade had existed for near two centuries, when David Hartley moved, in the house of commons, in 1776, a resolution declaring "that the slave trade was contrary to the laws of God and the rights of man." It met the fate which a resolution making the same affirmation of a similar trade carried in the house of commons would presently now meet in this hall. It was promptly rejected.

In 1783, a petition against the trade was, for the first time, presented in the house of commons. It met the fate which the petitions I have in my drawer before me will meet, if the rule I am opposing shall be adopted, and the discouragement was repeated.

The Quakers, with whom these unsuccessful efforts originated, were not discouraged. On the 7th of July of that year, six of them met in London "to consider what steps they should take for the relief and liberation of the negro slaves in the West Indies, and for the discouragement of the slave trade on the coast of Africa."

What a sublime spectacle is here presented! Six men meeting together to devise means for wakening the British nation from the guilty slumber of two hundred years! Six men conspiring to overturn a system of injustice and oppression which had received the sanction of the laws, and the acquiescence of the interests, the prejudices, and even the religion of the whole British empire! Nothing can exceed it in moral sublimity, but the going forth of the twelve fishermen at the command of the "Despised and Rejected," to assail an empire of Pagan idolatry and superstition, and to overthrow the throne of the emperor, and what was the principle, and what the spirit of this mighty enterprise? They were the great truth which this nation had just triumphantly maintained in a seven years' war, and the benevolence which had sent forth to all nations the twelve disciples of the Christian faith, seventeen hundred and fifty years since.

Six Quakers! I cannot leave him! How prompt to yield to the "inward light!" How steady to the noble purpose it dictated! Well did Patrick Henry say, "I shall honor the Quakers for their noble efforts to abolish slavery." And who will not honor them for their patient, untiring devotion both to the cause of Britain and in this country, in behalf of their oppressed brethren of the African race? How valuable the "testimony" they have uniformly borne against the great iniquity!

The six Quakers! Let none, henceforth, be dishonored in the cause of truth and righteousness, though few and feeble, and despised. It was not by night, nor by wisdom, but by the power of truth, that these men went forward and verified the prediction that "one shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight." The six Quakers! Let us remember them, and be faithful to humanity, to justice and to truth.

The six Quakers were soon joined by the same number of philanthropists of other Christian denominations. "The twelve" held meetings in London to devise means for revolutionizing the sentiment of an empire! Agents were appointed by the government, the celebrated Clarkson, to rouse the public attention to the great subject. The pulpit and the press were enlisted. Books, pamphlets and newspapers were freely circulated. Within a few years petitions to parliament were multiplied, inasmuch that a commission was at length appointed by the government to inquire into the African slave trade; and, finally, on the 9th of May, 1788, the house of commons voted that they would, at the next session, take the subject of that trade into consideration.

Without pursuing further the details of this matter, suffice it to say, that the ball put in motion continued to roll on, until the slave trade was abolished by act of parliament in the year 1807.

But the great anti-slavery movement, begun by the six Quakers did not end here. If it had thus terminated, it would have been in the end, little less than a failure; for, while slavery, the great evil of the age, is cherished, it will be in vain to attempt a complete suppression of its offspring. The great principle of opposition to the one can never be satisfied without the destruction of the other. This principle continued to operate with augmented power, and by various means, until the whole of the African slavery in the British dominions at length tumbled into ruins. The result is before us, even at our doors, in the full and complete emancipation of more than eight hundred thousand slaves in the British West India islands, on the 1st of August, 1838.

It might seem that the victory of this great movement of British philanthropy, should show you what bitterness and violence its projectors and supporters were assailed; and with what strange assurance slavery and the slave trade were defended by their advocates. But time will not permit. Suffice it to say, that the men who urged on the movement were denounced as "hypocrites and fanatics," and their project as visionary and delusive. It was declared in parliament that it was "the intention of Providence from the beginning, that one set of men should be slaves to another." The abolition of the trade, it was confidently predicted, would ruin the colonies, would fill the land with beggars, and would, while the trade itself was actually vindicated on the ground, "its conformity with the principles of natural and revealed religion, as delineated in the word of God!" "We had to contend," (says Clarkson, in his history of that struggle), "and almost to degrade ourselves by doing so, and to sustain an argument of the humanity and holiness of the trade!"

And now, Mr. Speaker, can you consider the principles which lay at the foundation of that great movement—can you reflect upon their mighty moral power, and mark their triumphant result, and wonder at the course taken by the abolitionists? Wonder why, sir, would it not be among the greatest wonders of the world that the people of the U. States should, with this history, and these results before them, have continued to sleep over American slavery?

French abolition.

Sir, look at the influence which the British example has exerted upon other countries besides our own. Look at the example which is now going on in France. Abolition is engaging the attention of some of the greatest minds in the empire. Societies are formed, and the subject is undergoing a thorough investigation. I have before me a summary of a report recently presented to the French chamber of deputies by the Commissaire de la marine, and the commissaire charged with examining the question of the abolition of slavery in the French dominions, which I beg permission to read. It is as follows:

"The report passes lightly and contemptuously over the arguments in favor of slavery, and takes for granted the error on every mind that it ought to be done away with. It does not propose the question of its being necessary to prepare the slave for emancipation previous to liberating him. M. Tocqueville, in the name of the commission, asserts that all attempts to improve, enlighten and prepare the slave, as long as he is a slave, are impossible. The slave must first be a free man, and then the sacredness and morality of that tie—but incapable of being made to appreciate it, as long as he is a slave. There is antipathy between marriage and slavery—between slavery and the paternity which accompanies marriage. The slave's children are his equals, and he is ignorant of the name which he bears. None of the prudence and other virtues attending paternity accompany it in the slave. Christianity is equally incompatible with slavery—equally unintelligible. The minister of religion appears either as a support of the master's rule, and is thus based on daily violence to the conscience of the nation; and therefore, abandons the idea of preparing the slave for freedom by any regulations for his treatment would still be a slave. Emancipation, it adds, cannot be deferred.

After this summary which I have seen of this important report represents it as saying: "The idea of emancipation is already present to the minds of all in the colonies. The approach of this great social change, the natural fears and the lawful hopes which it inspires, penetrate all bosoms, and produce a deep agitation. The recent cruelties in the neighboring British islands have brought the idea of coming emancipation home to the planters."

The report concludes by proposing that, in the session of 1841, a law for the abolition of slavery shall be presented, determining the amount of the indemnity which is to be paid to the owners of the property of the emancipated negroes—the labor of the latter to be secured by an express law.

Here is the effect which the principles of abolition, illustrated and enforced by the British example, are producing in France.

Present concerns—revel of our early abolition, and the progress of the great movement of Christendom.

Do you still wonder at the feeling which exists at the north on this subject? Go back for a moment, to the early history of abolition in our own country. Consider the nature and extent of the anti-slavery feeling of the early years of the century, and you will see it. Consider how wide, and deep, and strong was the current of this feeling when the constitution was formed, and the present government was organized; and then think how natural it is that the example of Great Britain, who has gone forward, in the very spirit of our own early abolition, while we have gone backward, should shake our recency to our own principles, and make us haste to redeem ourselves from its reproach. How is it possible, with such associations crowding upon the national mind, that we should not catch some of the inspiration of the times when our fathers, looking up to heaven for deliverance from oppression, thought of the slaves, and promised to deliver, as they themselves prayed to be delivered—of the times when Washington and Jefferson, Martin and Pinckney, Franklin and Jay, with a host of others, distinguished as statesmen, jurists, and divines, united in declaring slavery to be a violation of the "law of eternal justice," and a curse to the country.

Mr. Speaker, look yourself at all this, and tell me if you do not find your own spirit moved a little on this subject—if the fire of abolition does not begin to kindle even in your own bosom, and its impulses begin to move you, and give you a new feeling, and tell me if you can any longer wonder at the anti-slavery movements of the north; or if you can find it in your heart to denounce as "desperate and despicable fanatics" the men and women whose hearts, happily free in this respect from the prejudices of your own education, sympathizing in the great movements of humanity in behalf of the African race, and feel the inspiration of the principles which have wrought out such happy results.

Sir, the present anti-slavery movement in this country is but part of the great movement of Christendom against slavery which has been going on for centuries, and will continue to go on for centuries. Ever since Christianity emerged from the ages of oppression's dark and iron reign—raising her majestic form, and reaching forth her open hands with healing for the nations—has emancipation gone forth with protection for the weak, help for the helpless, comfort for the heart of sorrow, healing for the crushed and bleeding, and life for the dead. It has poured oil and wine into their wounds—given deliverance to the captives—opened the prison doors to them that were bound—broken the fetters from the body—given freedom to the mind—and raised man to the dignity and glory of his immortal nature. On his head it has been inscribed—emancipation of mind—emancipation of man—emancipation of the press—emancipation of speech.

Progress of emancipation onward and resistless.

And is it, sir, thought to impede the progress of emancipation by the puny efforts that are made here? Vain attempts! Can you hold the winds, stay the clouds, or stop the course of universal nature? Then why will you seal up the fountains of life in the human soul, extinguish the sense of justice, and arrest the onward march of human emancipation? Stop emancipation! As well might the seafarers at Noah's ark-building have undertaken to slant the windows of Heaven, seal the fountains of the deep, or fill back the tide of life from the fountains of life as they track their last refuge from the rising flood.

There are some who, faithless as to the efficacy of gag resolutions and gag rules, talk of a reception and commitment of the petitions, and a report thereon;

but they need a remark I would wish to add. A gag speech was made in a certain place, that that speech would put down abolition. Sir, you might as well attempt to blow out the sun as to put down abolition by a speech or a report.

Gag resolutions, gag rules, and "put down" speeches in reports, will be like putting down a walking stick in the Mississippi to stop its current. You think only of a rivulet, when there is a mighty stream. Turn your eyes to the southeast. Behold the gulf stream sweeping by your shores with its resistless and never-ceasing tide. Can you stop it? Try, and you will be saved from the Charybdis of what is the result? The gulf stream moves on! And there is an emblem of the stream of abolition which is rolling in upon the south from the British West Indies. Within a short time it will be swollen by the stream of French emancipation; and then, is the course of a few years by that of Spanish emancipation.

And then, sir, you do not think of the extent and power of abolition sentiment in our own country—Stop up the crater of a volcano, and soon the trembling, heaving earth reveals the mighty agency at work within! Sir, the human heart is full of abolition; and sooner or later it will come forth! There is that in reports which seize hold of the deepest sympathy of the human soul, and gives to it the most intense activity. It is not mere animal sympathy. It is not excited alone by accounts of bodily suffering, nor soothed into indifference by its mitigation. It is a sympathy with the nobler nature of the soul, which weighs in the balance of affection, and indeed, to see him any where comfortably fed, and clothed, and housed; but it, nevertheless, sees him a slave!—his mind darkened, and his heart insensible to any higher emotions than the hopes and fears which are bounded by the narrow space of his earthly existence. It is sympathy of slavery generally—there are exceptions. It is sympathy of the noblest nature, a duty to God and man above the brute that labors by his side. It sees, in short, his soul transfixed with the iron of slavery.

The feeling produced by the contemplation of all this is deep, and will be enduring. And, sir, it is to take possession of minds that have hitherto directed little attention to this subject. It has now, indeed, taken the very life of our minds, and men have connected themselves with no anti-slavery associations, and have manifested no forwardness in anti-slavery movements; men who may, perhaps, never join an anti-slavery society; but whose influence will, by and by, tell against slavery with great effect. Under the moderating influence of such men, northern abolition is destined to settle down into a calm, steady, deep and restless current of abolition sentiment and feeling, which will make it more terrible to the south than an army with banners.

And then, sir, while abolition shall thus progress at the north, it will begin to be manifested elsewhere. Sir, before you are aware, it will make its appearance in the very heart of the south itself. Hitherto the anti-slavery feeling in that quarter (and there is a great deal of it there) has been absorbed by the scheme of colonization. The delusion that colonization can be made a complete remedy for the evil of slavery, by removing the whole of the slave population to the west, and settling them in the colonies, is an utter impossibility; and the egg under the hen at the south are to be thrown upon the simple alternative of abolition or slavery—slavery with a fearful increase of numbers, and slavery without end!

When the southern mind shall be brought to look that alternative full in the face, (and the sooner it is done the better,) then will "abolition" begin to make its appearance in that quarter. Indeed, sir, it is now the time to reach the extent that man can advance. And well it may be; for there has long been an abolition agent traversing the whole southern country—an agent of surpassing ability and power—an agent who will soon give your Calhouns and Thompsons something to do besides framing gag resolutions for these slave States. He is a most powerful and successful agent, and he is the only one who has the confidence against the artifice of northern abolition. Do you ask me the name of that agent? I will tell you. It is conscience—the most unyielding, uncompromising abolitionist the world ever saw. He has been lectured at the south with various success. He never fails to visit the bed of death, and there often speaks with great effect! He has lectured in England for the cause of the slave, and he is preparing to visit Spain, and Portugal, and other countries in Europe and America. I warn my southern brethren to look out for this abolitionist—for the purpose of catching and punishing him—for they can do nothing—but to see him as he is—to measure his dimensions—to study his character—to respect his authority—and to yield to his power.

Such, sir, are the foes, external and internal, with which slavery has to contend. And is it thought to restrain them, carrying out the threat to dissolve the union? Sir, it would be like jumping into the crater of a volcano to escape its smoke and cinders. A dissolution of the union to escape the influence of abolition! Why, sir, the moment you do this, there will be enlisted under the banner of the great anti-slavery agent now within your borders a thousand auxiliaries more powerful than all the Birneys and Blanchards, the Stewarts and Stantons in the land. A dissolution of this union for the purpose of saving the institution of slavery! And that in the middle of the nineteenth century of the Christian era! Was ever infatuation like that! Would a dissolution of the union for the purpose of saving the power of abolition? Would it not, therefore, act with tenfold energy? Would not a severance of the union instantly awaken throughout the whole south an oppressive sense of the evils of slavery! And a still more oppressive sensibility to the deep disapprobation of the slave trade, and the slave trade itself, which is prepared to quit this fair land of promise and of hope, and launch upon the deep, in search of regions beyond the reach of civilized and Christian man, then, but not till then, let it talk of dissolving the union to save the institution of domestic slavery.

Disposition towards slaveholders—responsibilities of pious slaveholders.

In discussing this subject I have spoken, as I felt bound to do, with great plainness of the character, the encroachments, the deserts, and the doom of slavery. In doing this, I fear that, though intending to avoid harshness, I may have been unconsciously betrayed into it. With slaveholders I have no personal controversy. To them, as to all, I would be respectful and kind, and as I must stand up and decided in my hostility to slavery. Of their motives in sustaining the institution of slavery, I have nothing to say. I am not constituted a judge of their hearts. There is one that judgeth. I assume no such office—standing here not to lecture on morals, but to speak of human rights. Nor would I insult any man by saying that he is an atheist or an infidel. They are foreign to my feelings as they are to the properties of the place and the occasion. Let those who choose, wield such weapons. My business is to reason, not to rail; to censure, not to denounce. For the slaves I have pity; for their masters no other than feeling, truth, and goodness. They are all my brethren; and I would no sooner insult the feelings of the one than I would apply the lash to the backs of the other.

Among slaveholders there are men of great personal worth. I see such around me. But I must be permitted to say to them, and to all that stand in this relation, that they know not what they do. They avoid, doubtless, what are called the cruelties of slavery, and are regarded as kind masters. But they do reflect that they, and such as they, constitute the very pillars of slavery—that the whole system, with its admitted cruelties and undeniable outrages, is upheld by their aid and approval. They are allured to withdraw from their countenance and support. That such would be the effect is undeniable. How much longer they can, under the increasing light of the rising day, continue their present relation to the institution, or whether any longer, I will not take upon me to say. But I do say, that there are responsibilities connected with a continuance of this relation, which have something to do with the consequences of that relation; something to do with the enormity of the system of which it forms a part, and which they are endeavoring to clothe with the sacred garb of Christian principle. The truth is, the whole system of slavery is wrong, unchristian, and unjust. Slaveholders avoid what they deem oppression and cruelty, without reflecting that, in its widest forms, slavery contains the great essential element of all oppression and cruelty—namely, injustice.

Expediting and justice.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I beg permission to consider, briefly, an objection which is urged against granting the prayer of the petitions which the contemplated rule would reject, drawn from considerations of expediency. Admitting, says the objector, that congress have the power to abolish slavery and the slave trade here, yet it is inexpedient to do it. Sir, this is a question of expediency, and I do not illustrate. I take a man's horse and put him into my

* Since the delivery of this speech, there has appeared the issue of Pope Gregory XVI., against the slave trade, and the Convention of 1839, in London, has expressed very clearly that there is hereafter to be an interference from that quarter, which will tell with tremendous effect against slavery—an influence that will enter the very heart of the slave in Brazil, the Spanish West Indies, and the United States.

stable as my property. Justice comes and says, open the door to the slave, and let him in.

But the law has ever been a law of expediency, and the edicts of justice. No. Then let the door be opened at once, and let the law be repealed without delay. Who will say that expediency may resist truth?

But let us vary the case. Instead of taking the man's horse, I take the man himself, claim him as my property, drive him to my fields and compel him to labor without compensation. Justice meets me, and says, lay down that whip, and cease to claim that man as property. But the law has authorized me thus to claim and use him. No matter for that, I say, let him go; and the law-makers I say, repeal your law immediately. Would not expediency blush to be seen countermarching either of these orders?

Take another case. There is a man riding through Pennsylvania avenue, and there are fifty men in chains marching before him. What is he doing with them? Driving them to market? Justice comes along and asks. By what authority are you doing this? By authority of the laws of the United States, is the answer. Have these men committed crimes? asks justice. No, is the reply. Then knock off those chains and manumit them. What is he doing with them? To chain and drive these men, and I shall do it; cease your impudence. And what next do we see? Why, sir, justice turns from the scene of horror, and, lifting up his trumpet voice, says to the nation, cease this injustice; command that these victims of oppression be manumitted; command that these chains be broken off. Justice cries the slave driver, it is impracticable! impracticable! impracticable! exclaims justice, break these chains and let them not, for another moment, bind the limbs that God Almighty made for freedom.

Who, sir, will dare stand up, and in the name of expediency resist this command? None but those whose minds have never grasped the great idea of justice; who have never considered the nature and authority of its claims upon human obedience. Justice! How deep and comprehensive its meaning! How inflexible its decisions! How inexorable its demands! How watchful is its guardianship of human rights! How deep does it lie in the foundation of our civil institutions! The English common law, the inheritance and the blessing of our country, rests upon it. It gives stability to our state constitutions; and here it is, the very "corner stone" of the federal constitution. "To establish justice!" How prominent is this in both our national mottoes, and the assigned purposes of its adoption; and with what singular appropriateness was it made to precede and stand in immediate connexion with another great purpose, namely, "to ensure domestic tranquillity," forming, in fact, the true and only basis upon which that tranquillity can rest.

Justice! Sir, it is the noblest attribute of the Almighty, immutable as his own nature, and firm and enduring as his everlasting throne—high as heaven, deep as hell, and broad and boundless as the universe. Justice! Let that word be engraved on the pillars that surround these halls of legislation, and upon the wall of the executive mansion; let it blaze from the dome of every temple in the union, let it be written in stars on the expanse of the American heavens; and let it be deeply furrowed with the ploughshare of truth upon the broad face of our country, from ocean to ocean.

But I am asked—with all your veneration for justice, would you now vote to abolish slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia? I say, yes, "public opinion throughout the union against it." And is it not "utterly impracticable?" That may be; though I think the public opinion is less opposed to it than the objector imagines. But it is not impracticable for me to vote for it, or at least, to declare that I will do so. I can find an opportunity. Possibly my vote might stand alone, though I do not deem that quite certain. But the vindication of many a right has had as small a beginning as this. None that I ever heard of was vindicated by beginning with the declaration that nothing could be done, and, in the end, it being found that nothing could be done, he believes that justice demands the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in this District, let him say so by his vote. If he begin alone, he will not long remain so. How small was the beginning of abolition in the British parliament—small, I mean, in numbers and immediate influence, though greater in principle. I can find many an opportunity for the measure. It was WILBERFORCE—possessing a soul as large in its benevolence as the universe, and a mind that grasped the mighty subject in the profound depth of its great principles, and in its vast bearings on the destinies of the race whose rights he and we were deliberating upon—whose spirit elevated his devoted life. WILBERFORCE! A name I feel unworthy to pronounce, and which I never can pronounce but with the deepest veneration for his memory, and with great awe.

When Wilberforce moved, for the first of the ten times he did move, the abolition of the slave trade, he was denounced, even by name, on the floor of the house of commons, as a "hypocrite and fanatic;" a rock of truth and justice he stood unshaken, and the magnitude and threatening aspect of the system of injustice which he assailed. And think you he would have been less earnest and less persevering in that cause, if, instead of a trade in slaves between Africa and India, the trade had been between London and Liverpool as it is here, between Washington and New Orleans?

It is said, I know, that the abolition of slavery here is but a small matter. It is, however, small only in comparison, with the great work which is to be done in the states beyond the reach of our legislation. Yet, sir, it is, in an absolute sense, that involves a question of justice. Justice listens as attentively to the claim of one man for the rights that God has given him as to the clamors of a thousand. Here, within our exclusive jurisdiction, are men who claim justice at our hands; and shall we refuse it? Can we refuse it? So far as my humble voice can go, it shall not be refused for a day or an hour.

But if a majority of this house are not ready now to vote for the abolition of slavery here, will they vote for the abolition of the slave trade? That the abolition of the slave trade is prepared to be done will not, admit, until I am forced to do it by something more conclusive than "doughface" predictions that it will dissolve the union. Sir, it is a foul libel on this nation to say that it is not prepared to abolish the slave trade here. It is not, then, in the name of expediency, I say, let it repeal its laws against the foreign slave trade, and permit the dealers in human flesh to disgorge their cargoes of living death upon the shores of the republic.

You will perceive, Mr. Speaker, that I make the demands of justice imperative. We are so constantly in the habit of consulting expediency, and very rarely, if ever, in the ordinary course of our proceedings, we are prone to forget the perpetual character of the claims of justice. We are often afraid to justice, because of supposed consequences. Nothing can be more false in ethics than this. We should "be just and fear not." "What do the Lord thy God require of thee, but that thou do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?" Is it not the duty of our nation under heaven upon whom the obligation of this requirement does not rest with perpetual, unmitigated force. Are we to oppose our short-sighted apprehensions of danger to the demands of justice? Are we to withhold the authority of the Giver of this law of justice and mercy, and that the world may be converted, not by blind chance, but by his meriting Providence; and shall we not trust to Him to take care of the consequences of a compliance with his own commands?

But if our faith is not satisfied with reasoning a priori, shall we not be convinced by the reasoning from facts? What nation or individual ever suffered from doing justice? Take, for example, the cases of emancipation. Although they have often been preceded by gloomy predictions of evil, of massacre and blood, yet what single page of history has recorded any such fulfilment? St. Domingo has often been cited as an exception. But if it were an exception, it would prove the rule. It is not, however, an exception, as I could easily show if I had time—the massacre and blood having resulted from the cruel attempt of Bonaparte to force the emancipated back to bondage—an attempt which they nobly and triumphantly resisted.

But even if St. Domingo were an exception, it would prove nothing to the objector's purpose, since emancipation there was in the midst of a revolution in the mother country, distinguished, as all know, by cruelty and blood, and by an entire absence of all religious scruples. All who know any thing of the history, especially of modern emancipation, know that it lives and moves and has its being in the benign and peaceful spirit of the Christian religion—a spirit that acts at once on the emancipators and the emancipated. Let those who are filled with apprehensions of evil from emancipation, consider that, in the words of our scriptures, that at any time heretofore, is Christian principle to become the master spirit of abolition, exerting its hallowing influence upon both the white and black races, giving a healthful and wise direction to the measures of the one, and chastening the feelings, elevating the purposes, and increasing the awakened energies of the other.

Emancipation, immediate and simultaneous.

But, I am asked, must emancipation be immediate? Is it not necessary to prepare the slave for freedom? Experience has shown that one of the most successful means of preparing the slave for freedom is to place him in a state of slavery so utterly incompatible with preparation for the enjoyment of freedom. Thus the operation of West India emancipation has been found more favorable in those islands where the emancipation was immediate, as in Antigua and the Bermudas, than in those where the system of apprenticeship was adopted. Those concerned in the present movement in France have, it seems, fully considered this subject, and have arrived at the conclusion, as in the report of M. de Tocqueville to the chamber of deputies, to which I have referred, that immediate is preferable to any form of gradual emancipation.

The truth is, that the need of preparation is on the part of the free, rather than the enslaved. By this I mean that the success of all attempts at emancipation must depend upon the promptness and freedom of the act—having reference to the effect upon the feelings of the emancipated—and the kind and paternal legislation which shall be afterwards adapted to their peculiar situation; legislation which shall bring to bear, systematically, upon their roused energies and quickened intellects the conservative influences of a pure religion and an uncontaminated literature.

And, sir, shall not all this be done? Can it be withheld? Is it not a debt long, long due to this unfortunate and oppressed race? Has not their degradation been the result of the success of those to whom have they labored? Whose fields have been manured by the sweat of their brows? Whose tables have been spread with the fruits of their toil?

There are many who are strongly wedded to the old but soon-to-be exploded system of emancipation upon what is called the post ad principium—that is, emancipation which takes effect only on the after-birth. No system can possibly be worse than this. It leaves the training of the free children in the hands of slave mothers; and brings into perpetual contact the free and the enslaved, each to exert the worst possible influence on the other. To this cause, with the cruel neglect of legislative provision for the education of the emancipated, is to be traced the degradation of the free black population in the slave states, as well as in those states—Pennsylvania, for example—in which emancipation has been effected on the principal just mentioned.

The true system is, to emancipate all at once—to place the freedman upon a level like one of noble generosity—and thus—by the example of the free Indians—excite a common feeling of gratitude in the emancipated, and rouse them to common and simultaneous efforts, and emulation, in the march of improvement. Who can fully estimate the results of removing the crushing weight of slavery, and leaving the common man of an emancipated race to find its way, by the aid of wise and beneficent legislation, onward and upward in the march of intellectual and moral improvement?

Effect of abolition on the south.

Impressed, as I am, with a conviction of the decided advantage of immediate and simultaneous, over gradual emancipation, I cannot doubt that when the south shall come to emancipate, as they will one day do, they will nobly strike for immediate and simultaneous emancipation. There is a promptness and generosity in the southern character which is a sure guaranty of this. I know it is said that abolition has thrown a weak emancipation half a century. There are one kind of emancipation that abolition fear the back; and that is, gradual emancipation, with colonization as a remedy for slavery. In doing this, it has done a great service to the cause of genuine emancipation, because it has prepared the way for the adoption of a system founded on true principles. It is drawing the patient from a pernicious and deceptive reliance on an inadequate prescription, to the true and only remedy.

It is said that the north had better be quiet on this subject, for that the south will not listen even to truth coming from that quarter. Sir, this suggestion involves an imputation upon the intelligence and love of truth of the south, too dishonorable to be endured for a moment. There is an opportunity for feeling there, I know, which seems to justify the assumption. But it will not be enduring. The involuntary homage of the human soul to truth, checked for a moment by a feeling of independence—a noble impulse, rightly directed, will yet break out in the south, and, overcoming the selfishness of the prejudice, the ignorance of education, and the misdirected feeling of independence, will produce results that will astonish the world. The struggle may be long, but the triumph of truth will one day crown it. I may not live to see that day; but as surely as the wheels of time roll on, so certainly will that triumph come to bless

CHRONICLE.

ADVENT CONFERENCE. A series of religious exercises are taking place at the Broadway tabernacle, N. York, having reference to Christ's second advent upon earth.—The following are understood to be the heads of the doctrines, which the conference design to put forth during the course of their deliberations.

1.—The kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

2.—The millennium will be preceded by the personal appearance of Christ upon earth, to call the quick and the dead to judgment.

3.—The promised restoration of the Children of Israel is not to be understood in a literal sense, as referring to the return of the Jews to Palestine, but to the final resurrection of the saints.

ARKANSAS BONDS. The commissioners of the state of Arkansas, last year appointed a certain number of sales lands, for certain purposes, with a banking company of New York. The commissioners now caution the public not to trade for these bonds, because the bank has no authority to sell or pledge them. Thus is the sad and open avowal of repudiation, backed by some half dozen or more failures to meet the payment of principal and interest as it fell due.

AUTHORS COMING. Charles Dickens, esq.—Boz—in-ten, it is stated, is visiting the United States in January, says Professor Wilson—Kit North of Blackwood—in May.

BANK ITEMS. United States versus U. S. bank of Pa. This suit tried in Philadelphia recently, for moneys withheld from the United States to pay the damage on the French bills of exchange. Judge Baldwin decreed in favor of the United States. The law of the law of the bank is like any individual; their sovereignty being parted with, pro hac vice.

2. That the claim of the defendant to damages must have been by the sale of the Maryland, the place where the bill of exchange was drawn.

3. That, by this law, damages were only allowable to the actual holder of the bill of exchange at the time of the protest, or to an endorser who has paid the damages sustained upon it.

4. That the bank was not the holder of the bill at the time of protest, nor an agent for the holder; and that no proof had been given to show that it had paid the damages sustained by the protest.

The defendant's claim for damages was therefore rejected by the court, and the jury gave a verdict for the United States for $251,243 54 damages and six cents cost.

The circulation of the whole of the banks in the city of Baltimore was on 1st January, 1841, $2,195,267, on 1st Jan. 1841, $1,781,996; and at this date, $1,159,000. Being a diminution of over one million, or of nearly one half of the circulation.

This however has been more than succeeded by Baltimore and Ohio rail road now in operation, upon city faith, and of which there is no end in circulating new $1-50 and 50-cent and constitutes the almost entire common currency, the high at a discount of from eight to ten per cent. for bank paper at present. Attempts have been and are yet urged to induce the banks to take these notes at par. It would place it out of their power to resume specie payment's soon.

The Still Water Canal bank at Oran. We learn from the Newburyport Herald that an injunction has been placed on this bank. The report of the bank commissioners of Maine says this bank has been in the hands of New York speculators, introduced by Mr. Cyrus Moore. The bills are nearly all in circulation in distant states. The amount of the circulation is $25,229. The bills are in the Y. S. $18,212, and are of small value, principally in executions, and $8,354 due from the New York speculators, of which $18,557 was paid for stock, and $24,195 bills paid out. There is a deposit of $6,000 in the Y. S. bank, New York, to redeem the circulation, of which is supposed to be exhausted. The bank also owned a dwelling house, which has been destroyed by fire, and the real estate is nearly worthless or nothing. The bills are, of course, of no value, except upon what may be obtained of the New York speculators.

The North American Trust and Banking company, it is said sent his lawyer ten thousand dollars for drawing up its articles of agreement; and that the Commercial Bank has been in the practice of helping to influence with the other banks by handing over every morning the checks of certain brokers to the amount of fifty or sixty thousand dollars. These checks were procured in exchange for an equal amount of Commercial Bank notes, which were paid out at the brokers' counters during the day, and the brokers allowed a commission. [N. Y. Jour. of Com.

The two banks of Circleville, Ohio. The recent failure of one of these banks, generally called the new one, elapsed in 1841, renders it necessary, for the safety of the public, to state that the notes of the broken bank are variously signed by S. G. Kenick, E. Brown, and J. Darst, its president or vice president; and by H. H. Wain, J. M. Wain, and W. W. Wain, its directors; and that none of the sound and specie paying old bank, are signed only by Jos. Olds, president, and H. Lawrence, cashier.

Furness' Bank vs. Colburn and others. The decision in this case was given on Monday last, by Judge Smith, against the bank, and in favor of the defendants, Messrs. Rockingham, & Co. Register.

COAL. A deposit of Kennel coal, in free supply, has been discovered near Pittsburgh.

It has been stated that the Welch coal-fields extend over 1,200 square miles, and that there are twenty three millions of workable coal, having an average thickness of ninety feet thick. Each acre will yield about 100,000 tons, being at the rate of 65,000,000 tons per mile. If from this we deduct one-half for waste and the minor extent of the upper beds, this will leave an average of 50,000,000 tons per square mile. Let it be conceded that 5,000,000 are equal to one-third of that consumption in England, then each square mile of the Welch coal field will meet a proportionate consumption of 16,666,666 tons in this district, it would supply England with coal for 2,000 years after all the English mines were exhausted.

COTTON MANUFACTURERS. Ship Henry, of Newburyport, lately cleared at Liverpool for Ostend, there to be laden with machinery and fuel for the manufacture in cotton, to be conveyed to Vera Cruz and put into service in Mexico. The machinery was made at the Phoenix works in Ghent.

THE CRANBERRY CASE. The Post says, that at the supreme court held in Plymouth last week, the famous cranberry case, was argued, and the court was equally divided, and decided in favor of Yarmouth; the court determining that the right to pick whortuberries, cranberries and wild fruit on lands owned in common, and not private property, was no trespass.

[Boston Journal.

DEATHS. During the last week in New York 154, of which 51 were under two years of age, and 26 died of consumption.

ELECTION. This morning's mail furnishes us the official returns from the city of New York.

For senators the vote stands, VARIAN (Van Buren) 16,341; Taylor (Van Buren) 16,207; Lord (wing) 16,119; Parry (Van Buren) 16,112. One Van Buren and one wing elected.

For assembly. Ten Van Buren and three whigs elected.

The counties—so far as accounts are received, the whigs loose in Ulster 2; Albany 3; Rensselaer 3; Schoenectady 1; Fulton 1; Saratoga 2; Oswego 2; Jefferson 3; Madison 3; Chenango 3; Cayuga 3; Wayne 2; King 2; Richmond 1—31. Whig gain in Montgomery 1; N. York 2.

FIRES. Property to the amount of $30,000 was destroyed by the late fire at Georgetown, S. C.

The main building of the Jefferson college at Washington, Mass. took fire on the morning of the 29th, and was consumed. About 500 volumes of the library were destroyed, and the archives of the Mississippi territory. Loss estimated at $30,000, besides the archives, which money cannot replace.

FLOET has been in demand this week in New York at $64.06 for Genesee, $6.25 for Brandywine.

NEW ORLEANS. On the 19th ult. there were 20 deaths, 9 by yellow fever.

The New Orleans physicians state that during the 24 hours ending on the 23d ult. there were 13 deaths by yellow fever. The whole number of deaths in that city during the week ending on the 23d, was 149, of which 96 were by yellow fever. A white fruit was visible at New Orleans on the 23d.

TEMPERANCE REFORM IN CANADA. A cross has been recently erected on the Beaufort or Champlain Mountain, Lower Canada, as a memorial of the great and successful exertions of Count Barthelemy, bishop of Nancy, in France, for the advancement of religion and temperance in that province. The Montreal papers say that the count, who is a Frenchman, and a member of the Mississippi present at the ceremony. The mountain on which the cross is erected is about 2,000 feet high, and from whatever spot the eye may embrace it, there will this memorial of the bishop's mission in Canada be visible.

PRINTING OFFICE. The capital employed in the printing establishment of Messrs. Glover, London, is nearly a million and a half of dollars. They employ three hundred and fifty workmen, and use five hundred thousand dollars worth of paper a year.

"THE PARTISAN LEADER" is the title of a novel published a short time since, and which is now exciting some attention. It is the work of the editor of the New York Courier and Enquirer having introduced the authorship to the present secretary of the navy, Judge URSURE. This being denied by the Madisonian, the Enquirer next alleges that Judge URSURE revised the book, and that it was from the pen of a near neighbor and friend of his (Judge Tucker). The Madisonian of the 26th intimates that neither Judge Upshur nor Judge Tucker wrote the book.

SANTA FE TRADERS. The Missouri of the 9th ult. contains a letter from Santa Fe, consisting of three paragraphs and three hundred and fifty miles, left our town a short time ago, on route for Santa Fe. The expedition is superintended by Signers Amador, Chaves, and Montoya. They are taking with them a large quantity of goods. Our town now is comparatively quiet, and the traders who occasionally cleared the dull monotony of our village have generally left, either for the mountains, or the rocky mountains. May success attend them in their various enterprises.

SPRUE. The effects of the British system of pushing commerce, are demonstrated. H. B. M. ship "Orontes," arrived at Rio de Janeiro on the 5th September last, from the Pacific, bound to England, with 5,000,000 dollars on board in specie and bullion. She sailed from Rio for England on the 13th September. Left on the west coast for Mexico, H. B. M. ship "Electra" waiting the arrival of a conducta of specie for England, of 3,000,000 of dollars.

About 5,000,000 New York by the last packets for England and France.

The London packet ship Philadelphia takes $35,000 specie, chiefly sovereigns. The Havre packet ship Oueda takes 500,000 francs, chiefly Mexican dollars and American notes.

STATES. The Texian congress have directed a marble bust of Senator Walker, of Mississippi, who made the motion in the United States senate for the recognition of the independence of Texas, and a portrait of Senator Preston, who seconded the motion, to be placed in the capitol of that republic.

STEAMBOAT. The Bankerhill, Captain Huntington, belonging to the Connecticut River Steamboat company, on her passage from New York to Hartford, ran ashore about 10 o'clock Sunday morning in the fog, on the Connecticut Point, and was so damaged that she could not run. The passengers and freight were landed in safety. It is thought that the machinery will be saved; if so, the loss will be about $20,000. No insurance.

STEAMERS. We learn from an article in the United States Gazette the single item of cost required for each of the British steamboats now in operation on the Pacific is $18,064. The average cost of steamers for Hulls and 33 for Liverpool. Mr. Barrow, charge d'affaires to Portugal, was among the passengers.

The Cunard Steamers had, up to the 17th July last, made 19 voyages to Boston, averaging 14 days 10 hours per voyage. The longest voyage was that of the Acadia in March and April last—18 days 12 hours; the shortest that of the Columbia in June—12 days 2 hours. The voyages made in 12 days 10 hours, and in 12 days 12 hours. The time is calculated from the hour of departure from Liverpool to arrival in Halifax, without deducting time of detention at Halifax.

STOCKS have declined in price this week, both in New York and Philadelphia markets.

TEA. Tea exported from Canton to Great Britain, from July, 1840 to June 1841
Baba	288,017 lbs.	Thyank	1,237,278 lbs.
Congou	19,759,745	Hwain	1,012,197
Caper	7,121,353	Hysen Skin	115,721
Lo-chung	5,042,431	Lo-chung	7,622
Sors	83,969	Gunpowder	75,535
H. Mney	137,953	Imperial	819,549
Pekoe	2,029,888
Orange Pekoe	709,971	Total	27,197,073
Cargoes not despatched, estimated			2,000,000
			29,197,073

THANKSGIVING. Governor Seward has appointed Thursday, the 9th of December next, to be observed in New York as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

The 25th November was observed as a day of thanksgiving in Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire.

TOBACCO TRADE OF PHILADELPHIA. The Philadelphia American states that the number of screw presses in the tobacco manufactory in this city, is now nearly completed one hundred and fifty headsteds can be sampled and inspected daily. The following statement will show the rapid increase of the inspection at this warehouse, since the 1st of July.

In 1839, 2,532 lbs. 40 boxes and 50 bales tobacco and 73 lbs. stems.

In 1840, 5,293 lbs. 33 boxes tobacco and 10 lbs. stems.

In 1841, to November 1st, 6,103 lbs. 136 boxes, and 77 lbs. stems.

WEATHER. Snow fell on the 22d of October in Benart district, S. C. and to the full depth of four inches on the 23d October at Geneva, N. Y. and on the 21st to the same depth upon the mountains in Allegheny county, Md. Ice formed on the morning of the 26th at Charleston, S. C. On the 27th the forenoon was clear, with much clearing in the morning. The weather in Maryland, and continued until the 4th of November, when it clouded up and became cold and blistering, then came literally the "fall of the leaf." The farmers who had assumed the splendid attire of an American autumn, rapidly were stripped of their colors—the "scar and yellow leaf" relinquishes its frail hold upon distinction and now returns to enrich the mould of its mother earth for reproduction.

WHAT IS SELLING at Green Bay at 70 cents a bushel and our at $7.50 a barrel! Should like to have a mill there.

WIDOWS. It is calculated that there are fifteen hundred widows in Boston. We were about to give some advice on the premises, but forbear. The scriptures say, if any have widows, let them relieve them.—[Atlas for widows.

NILES' NATIONAL REGISTER.

FIFTH SERIES.—No. 11.—Vol. XI.]

BALTIMORE, NOVEMBER 13, 1871.

[Vol. LXI.—Whole No. 1,572.]

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—THE FUTURE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, EVERY SATURDAY, BY JEREMIAH HUGHES, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, AT FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CONTENTS OF NO. 11, VOL. 11.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.—Apprehensions in England in relation to the McLeod and Grogan affairs. Great Britain, the queen's command, precaution of parliament, distress among the people, meetings on that subject, appointments, steamers, deaths, various items, preparations, emigration, marriage, the McLeod case, advice on comets, America, war with America, revenue trade, money market, France, items, funds, loan, bourse. Spain, danger insurance suppressed. China, progress of the British war with India. British control of.

STATES OF THE UNION.—New York, list of members elected to the legislature, votes of the city of N. Y. for several years, rail road from Rochester to Albany completed. New Jersey, list of members elected to the legislature, extra session, proposed Pennsylvania, list of members elect to the legislature, appointments; Maryland, election statistics; Georgia, election of governor; Alabama, legislature meets; Mississippi, election; Louisiana, yet few statistics; Tennessee, item, legislature, appointments, Gov. Polk's validity; Ohio, list of members elect to the legislature, state of parties, Cincinnati bank statements; Indiana, R. W. Thompson.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.—"President" return to Washington; appointments; western army; American whale fishery. A. ARMY.—General orders Nos. 62, 63, 66, 67, 69; operations in Florida; recruits; list of cadets appointed 1871. Mr. RAYNER's address to the Senate, 10th day of the naval school, Brooklyn; the Potomac and Enterprise.

JUDICIAL TREATY GROUND.
PRESIDENTIAL.—Letter from General Scott.
Mr. RAYNER's speech on abolition topic.
CHRONICLE.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

The Great Western steamer left Liverpool on the 23d ult. and reached New York on the 8th instant. She brought over one hundred passengers, amongst whom were Mr. STEVENSON, American minister, and family—Major Thorp, and a valuable cargo of woollens and silks.

The Britannia steamer was detained two days by the British postmaster general in order to bring out despatches. She left Liverpool on the 21st ult. and reached Boston on the 4th inst.

These two arrivals furnish us with later European intelligence, but nothing of material importance. There was very considerable excitement in England in relation to the McLeod and Grogan affairs, and many of the French papers speak of a war being inevitable, in which France of course calculates to be involved. The New York papers state that private letters of the latest date received from England evince more apprehension that war was inevitable than even the public journals—and they were teeming with the topic. Certain it is that war-like preparations are actively going on in England—but we have full faith that the general disposition is averse to hostilities with the United States.

We regard the feverish condition of foreign feeling in relation to the posture of affairs between England and the United States as indicative of the excessive sensibility of the stock jobbers on one hand, and the fury of political partisan newspapers that live upon excitement on the other. The two governments, and the great body of the people of the two countries are but slightly affected by their ebbs and flows. Whilst all were upon tiptoe when the steamer left to ascertain the result of the McLeod and Grogan affairs—the people of the United States are quietly pursuing their peaceful course and but little apprehensive of peace being further disturbed on those topics at least. A calm will be found to prevail in Europe on their receiving the information which they must have done in a few days after the steamers left.

The Sheridan, Caledonia, Monongahela and Gladiator had arrived out—the latter in sixteen days. Vol. XI.—Ste. 11.

nine hours—said to be the shortest passage on record.

The Russian steamer Kamschatka which left New York on the 29th September, reached Southampton (British channel) on the 21st ult.

The packet South America beat the Caledonia steamer out.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE EVENING was expected to be confined in a day or two. On the 10th and again on the 17th some alarm was excited and the physicians were summoned. Fears were needless. The queen and court left Windsor Castle for London on the 19th ult. where she intended to remain till after accouchement.

THE LAST DULCETIN. The queen continues in excellent health, but understands her majesty's accouchement is daily expected. Yesterday afternoon orders were given by Sir James Graham for messengers to be in attendance at the home office night as well as day, and if any information of her majesty being indisposed were received, that expresses should be immediately forwarded to all the cabinet ministers, whether in town or country. [Standard.]

PROLONGATION OF PARLIAMENT. House of Lords, Oct. 7. On this day parliament was prorogued by commission. At a quarter past two the Lords commissioned, viz: the lord chancellor, the duke of Wellington, lord Warrcliffe and the earl of Shaftesbury and the commons having been summoned, the royal assent was given to the following bills—the exchequer bill, the poor law, continuance bill, and the population payments bill. The lord chancellor then read the following speech from the throne:

"My lords and gentlemen. We are commanded by her majesty to acquaint you that it appears advisable to her majesty to bring to a close the present session of parliament.

In conformity with the advice of her parliament, and in pursuance of the declared intention of her majesty, her majesty has taken the requisite measures for the formation of a new administration, and the arrangements for that purpose have been completed by her majesty.

"Gratitude of the house of commons. We have it in command from her majesty to thank you for the supplies which you have granted to her majesty for those branches of the public service for which complete provision had not been made by the late parliament.

"My lords and gentlemen. The measures which it will be expedient to adopt for the purpose of equalizing the public income and the public expenditure, and other important objects connected with the trade and commerce of the country, will necessarily occupy your attention at an early period after the recess.

"Her majesty has commanded us to repeat the expression of her deep concern at the distress which has prevailed for a considerable period in some of the principal manufacturing districts, and to assure you that you may rely upon the cordial concurrence of her majesty in all such measures as shall appear, after mature considerations, best calculated to prevent the recurrence of that distress, and to promote the great object of all her majesty's wishes, the happiness of her people."

The distress among the inhabitants of many of the towns in England is dreadful. Public meetings continue to be held for the purpose of adopting some measures for their relief. The deputation appointed by the magistrates of Reufreshire and of the town of Poole, to lay the distressed state of the inhabitants of that part of the country before government, had an interview with Sir Robert Peel at his official residence in Downing street.

Mr. Hastie, the member for Paisley, introduced the deputation, and Sir Robert Peel expressed much sympathy with the sufferings of the unemployed people. The principal object of the deputation was to solicit the patronage of the government to a metropolitan subscription, but to this proposal Sir Robert Peel declined giving his consent, at the same time he expressed his readiness to support such a subscription but as a private individual.

A public meeting was to be held at the London Tavern, on the 23d ult., for the purpose of taking into consideration the alarming distress existing among the operatives of Paisley.

Lord Ellenborough has been unanimously appointed governor-general of India, in pursuance of an intimation from the board of control, that the noble lord had been selected by her majesty's government to fill that high and important office.

It is currently reported in the professional circles that Lord Lyndhurst will relinquish the seals at the commencement of January term, and that Sir W. W. Pollett, the solicitor-general, will be his successor. In connexion with this arrangement, it is also said that Lord Alinger will, at the same time vacate the chiefship of the exchequer, and that Sir Frederick Pollock will be his successor therein.

The Great Western arrived at Bristol on Friday morning, Oct. 8th, having made the passage in 12 days and 12 hours. From our private letters we learn that there was a most extraordinary interest manifested among all the leading merchants of London and Liverpool at the non arrival of the Caledonia at her usual time. She encountered very severe weather, and did not reach Liverpool till the evening of the 19th ult.

DEATHS. Lady Amelia Lennox, sir H. Wyvatt's lady, and lady W. Jordan, sir H. Martyn, and the bishop of Killmore, are dead.

The first of the West India steamer packets is to be the Clyde. She is to leave Southampton for Barbadoes on the 13th inst.

The steam frigate Styx, with sir Charles Bagot the new governor general of Canada, was detained at the Cove of Cork, awaiting the arrival of the Caledonia, with the news of the McLeod trial, and the facts of the seizure of Grogan—that he could have the final instruction of the home government.

The Styx left on the 21st.

The London Times of the 15th says—"His excellency Col. Todd, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia, from the United States, arrived at Weymouth house, Portland Place, last evening, from Liverpool, en route to St. Petersburg. Mr. Everett the American minister had not reached England."

The lottery system is to be revived in England.

The sea is making terrible inroads on the south coast of England. Great damage was done by the high tide of the Thames, Oct. 18. The streets were overflowed and all the sewers and drains choked up. The adjacent thoroughfares and houses could be reached only in boats.

APPOINTMENTS. The following official announcements were made in the London Gazette of Oct. 19, viz: of the appointment of rt. hon. Henry Lord Cowley, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the king of the French; rt. hon. Charles Lord Stuart de Rothsay, ambassador of the same rank to the emperor of all the Russias; rt. hon. sir Robert Gordon, the same to the emperor of Austria; rt. hon. sir Stratford Canning, the same to the sublime Ottoman Porte; and the rt. hon. Lord Burgersh, the same to the king of Prussia.

M. de Bonapourcy is appointed French envoy to Constantinople in place of M. de Pontois.

Mr. O'CONNELL has been elected lord mayor of Dublin, and has accepted the office.

NAVAL PREPARATIONS. The dock-yards of Woolwich, Sheerness, Chatham, Portsmouth, Plymouth and Pembroke present quite a warlike appearance, as for the last three weeks the greatest activity prevails in getting ready immediately for active service no less than twenty-five ships of war, of different classes, in consequence of the unsettled state of our relations with the United States of America and China.

EMIGRATION TO AMERICA. Yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, the large American emigrant ship St. James, capt. W. S. Sebor, commanding, was hoisted out of St. Katharine's Dock, well filled both with goods and passengers. The emigrants are 315 in number—viz. 170 storage passengers, 12 chief cabin passengers and 29 in the second cabin. The storage passengers are principally from Kent, and consist of small farmers, who intend to settle in the state of New York. Many are from the neighborhood of Ashford, and there are 70 from the parish of Blackley, in that vicinity. The vessel leaves Portsmouth this day for New York. A great number of persons assembled on the pier-head to witness the departure of the emigrant.

Captain Canfield, of the United States army, was married yesterday at Trinity church, Portland-place, to Miss Mary Cass, daughter of his excellency Gen. Cass, minister of the U. States at Paris. Amongst the company present were Col. Todd, Mr. Stevenson, Mrs. Stevenson, his excellency U. S. minister to St. Petersburg, &c. London Herald, Oct. 23.

THE McLEOD CASE. The preliminary proceedings in this case had reached Edinburgh, and of course, the occasion for much remark. The tone of the papers generally is unexceptionable, although some few of them were disposed to make trouble, if possible. The whig papers vindicate the course of the late administration, and, in so doing, of necessity justify to a great extent the proceedings of our government, while the Tory journals, in their anxiety to throw blame on Lord Palmerston and his colleagues, of course, are forced to admit that all our proceedings had their justification in the proceedings of the British government.

Meantime a writer in the Times, conjecturing that there must be war has been moving himself and the public with a long dissertation on the proper method of carrying on the war—the substance of which is conveyed in the following propositions:

1. The breaking up of the union, by detaching the southern states from the northern and middle states.
2. The destruction of the resources of the northern and middle states.

Great Britain, he adds, should immediately prepare to ally herself with the southern states, and wage war upon the resources of the northern.

The other journals attack these propositions without mercy, as well on the ground of impracticability as of feasibility. The Herald, in particular, devotes and denounces their author as "in heart a freebooter and buccanier."

REVENUE. The account of the revenue for the quarter ending Oct. 10, exhibits an increase on the quarter compared with the produce of the corresponding quarter of last year, amounting to £241,721. The income of the year amounting to £4,913,946, which was an increase of £248,148, compared with the produce of the preceding year. There was a large increase in the duties on the excise, and on taxes, and decrease of £467,522 on the customs, and £265,000 on the post office.

TRADE. More failures have occurred in Glasgow. London, 20th October, 1841.

There is still little improvement to notice in the state of the trade generally since our last advices.

The payment of the dividends was naturally expected to have made money easier; but the accounts from the U. States of the 20th September, of the war with much apprehension, and the great uncertainty existing as to our relations with your government, has depressed our funds and the same high rate of discount is continued.

MONEY MARKETS. London, October 21, 21 o'clock.

The general tenor of the advices received yesterday from America is considered more satisfactory than the previous reports, and people here are disposed to be in better heart about the settlement of our differences with brother Jonathan. There is no longer immediately at the stock exchange, but it also exercises a certain degree of influence on other channels of business.

We have before had occasion to notice the unexpected pressure which has prevailed in our money market since the payment of the October dividends. As the pressure appears to have been chiefly derived from a heavy drain for bank notes and gold, which were carried off from London by many of the country banks which were subject to a run, or expect a run upon them, in consequence of the late failures of some of their class and whilst our market was in a state of exhaustion from the same cause, it was further depressed by the necessity for repaying the Bank of England, on or before this day, the whole amount of the loans advanced by her as usual at the end of the quarter. In fact the currency appeared to be inadequate to meet the necessities of commerce.—This coming to the knowledge of the bank directors, it appears they have taken the proper steps to relieve immediate pressure, so that affairs will be restored to a healthy state again shortly, as the cause of depression have also ceased to operate.

The new French loan maintains its premium of 2 to 2½ per cent. The minister has resolved to propose the formation of many new lines of rail road in France; particularly one from Paris to Lyons, and from Lyons to Marseilles.

The import duty on foreign corn is now raised to 22s. 8d. per quarter, which will act as a prohibition for some time to come; but the speculators promise to reduce it again in the spring.

Stocks are firm: consols money 87½ to 88, and for the account 88½ to 88½; 3 per cents 97½ to 97½; exchequer bills 10s. to 12s.

Two o'clock. Consols have improved to 87½ to 88 for money, and 88½ to 88½ for account; exch. 3 per cents. 97½ to 97½; and exchequer bills, 10s. to 12s. Cite, 12 o'clock, October 22. We do not find the same pressure for money as was felt during the time for the repayment of loans at the bank; but nevertheless cash is still very scarce, and where parties are compelled to find it, they are obliged to pay very full rates of interest. Many persons are applying to the Bank of England for discounts, but experience difficulty in obtaining them out of doors, unless they will pay extravagant rates. It is not supposed this unpleasant state of affairs will continue for many days longer, but this must depend in some measure upon the demands from the country bankers; if they should begin to return to us the extra services which they have lately taken off, we should soon come into a wholesome state again in London.

Notwithstanding this pinch, there seems to be a favorable opinion entertained by the public regarding the value of English funds, which are quite firm, and might probably advance rapidly if the trial of McLeod and Favorable.

The quotations are: Consols for money 87½ to 88, and for the account 88½ to 88½; 3 per cents. 97½ to 97½; exchequer bills 10s. to 12s.

Two o'clock. Consols have received 1 per cent. since the opening; they are now worth 87½ to 88 for money and 88½ to 88½ for account; new 3 per cents. 97½ to 97½; and exchequer bills 10s. to 12s. premium.

CORN MARKET. The average of the prices of wheat for the week ending Oct. 8, was 61s. 6d., and of the six weeks 60s. 4d. The duty on foreign wheat was 20s. 8d. Oats 13s. 9d. and rye 11s. 6d.

THE CROPS. The season continues to be wet beyond all precedent, an interval of twenty-four hours without rain being a rarity. Although all the corn crops are gathered in the lower parts of this county, there is still a considerable quantity of oats and some wheat out in the hilly districts, much of which will never ripen, whilst that which does will only be fit for feeding cattle and pigs. The potato crop is suffering severely from the continued wet, thousands of acres being quite rotten, or so soft and watery that they will not keep through the winter. No one can wonder at this who is acquainted with the wretched drainage which generally exists in Lancashire and Cheshire, and who remembers that we have hardly had a week of dry weather since June.

The only thing that seems to flourish under this incessant fall of rain is the aftergrass, which is more abundant this year than it has been at any time for many years preceding.

COTTON MARKET. Liverpool, Oct. 6th. The market is less buoyant to-day, the sales amounting to 4,000 bales.

Oct. 8th. During the first day or two of the present week the market was firm, with a tendency to advance, in consequence of the state of the Manchester market on Tuesday we may consider that on the whole business of the week no improvement has taken place. A public sale to-day of Sea Islands, Stained ditto, and Surats was fairly attended; the Sea Islands for the most part sold readily at the previous prices, Stained and Surats also well, and the Surats also met a fair demand, supporting previous rates. The sales to-day amount to 5,000 bales, and the sales for the week 27,000; 4,000 being American on speculation, and 300 American and 600 Surats for export.

Oct. 19. The quantity sold to-day is estimated at from 2,000 to 3,000 bales, a few hundred (some say 500) of them on speculators' account. Prices without change from yesterday.

Oct. 20. Although the excitement (consequent upon the supposed critical state of our relations with America) has for the present subsided, yet the demand for cotton is very general and good. The trade are willing buyers at late prices, but on the whole decline giving the advance of 4d. quoted on Monday.—Henceforward the market will be more quiet, and 5,000 bales have been sold, principally consisting of American descriptions, a few hundred to speculators.

Oct. 21. Our market is rather quieter to-day, and the amount of business is not estimated at more than 3,500 to 4,000 bales without any change in prices.—Speculators have been in the market to-day, and have carried to the extent of 1,000 bales. The accounts from the States are such that it will only be an average one will tend to keep the market steady at present prices.

Liverpool Cotton Market, Oct. 22. The whole import of cotton into Liverpool Oct. 22.

1,023,316 bales.
Against same time 1840, 1,291,915

Leaving a decrease of 268,599
The imports of American this year, 759,501 bales.
Against same time 1840, 1,111,283

Leaving a decrease of 351,779
The stock on hand, of all descriptions, on the 22d Oct. 1841, 507,080 bales.
Do. same time, 1840, 470,000

Increase, 37,080
The stock on hand of American, on the 22d October, 1841, 357,210 bales.
Do. same time, 1840, 395,150

Decrease, 37,940
There has been taken, to 22d October,

Bales. Bales.
By the trade 840,910 Same time in 1840 976,840
Speculators 170,760 193,400
For export 38,890 51,330

1,050,560 1,221,570
Being a decrease of all descriptions of 172,010 bales.

The sales of the week, ending 22d Oct. 1841, were

Sea Island	200 bales	13a21
Upland	7,850	5a67
Mobile, Alabama &c	3,600	5s347
Tennessee		4s457
New Orleans	10,700	5a77
Surat	2,200	3s357
Other descriptions	1,690
		26,340

The current prices have been of American. Sea Island to middling 12½d; fair to good fair 14½d; good fine 17a30. Stained do, ordinary to middling 5½d; fair to good fair 7a77; good to fine 8a10. Upland, ordinary to middling 5½d; fair to good fair 6a67; good to fine 7a77. Mobile, ordinary to middling 5½d; fair to good fair 6a67; good to fine 7a77. Alabama and Tennessee, ordinary to middling 4a57; fair to good fair 5a. New Orleans, ordinary to middling 5a57; fair to good fair 6a37; good to fine 7a87.

By the above tables it will be perceived that the consumption of American cotton for this year has been by

Against in 1840, 432,314 bales, 716,133

Decrease, 283,819

Or about 40 per cent.; while of other descriptions the consumption this year is Against in 1840, 83,942 105,782

Decrease, 21,840

Or about 20 per cent. Thus proving that these cottons are materially affecting the sale of ours in the English market.

Had prices been higher during the year, the difference would have been greater, as manufacturers have been induced by low rates to use better descriptions than they otherwise would have done. Liverpool, 20th October, 1841. After our advices of the 4th inst. there continued to be a steady demand for cotton, without alteration in prices.

The accounts from Manchester, during the same time, reporting a fair business in yarns at low rates, but only a limited demand for goods, and some anxiety as to the result of the political questions pending between this country and the United States, together with the intelligence from New York of the 28th ult. caused a speculative demand, and the withdrawal of some lots from the market.

The sales of the last three days have been 14,000 bales, at the average of 1 per bale, in common American, 3,500 being taken on speculation. The advices by the Caledonia have, however, quoted the market, and the sales to-day are 4,000 bales, and not quite at steady rates.

October 22d, 1841. Nothing of interest has occurred in the market during the last two days. The sales of cotton for the week ending to-day are 36,240 bales, of which 5,700 are on speculation, and the market closes quiet but steady; prices of common American being rather higher than the previous week's quotations.

FRANCE.

The Louis Philippe, from New York, arrived at Havre Oct. 13, carrying out the latest intelligence from the United States.

The Nations agree that the war between Great Britain and the United States is inevitable. It is reported that the probability of some sudden circumstances will arise before the war to explode. No one can tell what consequences may result from such a war—it may set the world on fire; but at all events France will of necessity be compelled to take part in it. What then is to be thought of our ministry, who, in the presence of such events and the danger of a maritime war, is disarming our fleet and disbanding our seamen?

The new fall of the funds which took place on the Paris Bourse, on Wednesday, was ascribed, as we stated yesterday, to the anxiety and alarm suggested by the hostile aspect of Great Britain and America. The National of Thursday denies, however, that that was the sole cause, and attributes it to the reports propagated on the Bourse, that in an enquete which took place at Madrid, the hotel of the French embassy was attacked and partly plundered, and that the papers seized and carried away from it implicated the ex-queen regent and the French government in the insurrection.

The French loan of 150,000,000 francs was taken on the 18th. There was but one offer, but by three parties, viz. the Rothschild, Hottinguer, and the receiver general by M. Baudouin. The offer was at 75 5/2; for 3 per cents. It was lower than was anticipated, but the offer was accepted. The funds rose considerably after the arrangement was known. The 3 per cents, closed on the same day at 79 60, and the new 5 per cent at 50 75, 4 per cents, 85 50, and 5 per cents 115.

The payments of the loan are to be made at the following periods: On the 28th instant, 7,500,000 francs; November 28, 7,500,000 francs; Jan. 7, 1842, 11,250,000 francs; March 7, 11,250,000 francs; April 7, 11,250,000 francs; May 7, 11,250,000 francs; June 7, 15,000,000 francs; July 7, 15,000,000 francs; August 7, 15,000,000 francs; September 7, 15,000,000 francs; October 7, 15,000,000 francs. Total, 150,000,000 francs. The loan bears interest, from the 22d of June last.

BOCKLE. Paris, Thursday, Oct. 21. Half past three. There has been but little business done, and it is not improbable that the market will remain in a somewhat inactive state until further accounts are received from America. For the account the three per cent, opened at 79f. 10c. advanced to 79f. 15c. and closed at 79f. 3c. a fall of 15 cents. The five per cent, opened at 114f. 75c. and last, 114f. 75c. an improvement of 15c. New York reports, of the 10th, to 80f. 35c. and closed at 80f. 25c. being a fall of 10 cents. For money, the three per cent, are 25c. the five per cents, 5 cents lower, and new loan, which for money has been extremely limited, unaltered.

SPAIN.

There has been a horrible riot at Madrid, and an attack on the palace. A letter in the London Times of October 23d says: "You may regard the insurrection in Spain as at an end. The principal chiefs of it are either arrested or have taken refuge in France. Among the former is M. Montes de Oca."

The regents which had taken part in the revolt have submitted to the Regent, and have taken anew the oath of fidelity to the present government—of these the Regent de Bourbon is the most important.

"The entire population of the country through which the army of Rodil passed submitted."

"I wrote you to day that by arrivals of the 17th inst. from Barcelona, the revolutionary movement in that city continued to be repugnant to the government."

INSURRECTION. Madrid, Oct. 10. The part of the grand military conspiracy against the liberties of Spain, which was to have been executed in Madrid, has proved a signal failure. The result leaves one in doubt whether to admire most the baseness and wickedness of the attempt, or the cowardly and stupid way in which it was sought to be executed.

With half a dozen generals of the highest reputation in Spain, a thousand men at their command, and in complete possession of the avenues of the palace, up to the very doors leading to her majesty's apartments, they were not only not able to secure their prize, but have the greater part of them already fallen into the hands of justice.

The night before last two squadrons of cavalry, who were ordered to proceed, on the morning after the relief of the palace, in search of the leaders of the conspiracy, who were known to have taken the road of the castle, conveyed back General O'Donnell and the two Fulgencio's prisoners, whom they overtook near Colmenar Viejo, about five leagues from Madrid. They were immediately handed over to the custody of the National Guards, and remained in close confinement in the central guard room of that force in the convent of St. Thomas, in the street of San Juan.

General Leon was taken in the uniform of a general of Hussars, and carrying upon his person all his crosses and orders. In his possession was found an autograph letter of Maria Christina, giving him full powers to establish a provincial government till the 1st of April in the next year. The letter is besides said to have contained instructions for the securing of the young queen's person, the execution of Espartero, Arguelles, the existing government, whoever they might be, and all the members of the late provisional regency who could be found.

The gallant general Don Diego Leon—the Murat of Spain, whose waving plumes so often floated by the side of Espartero, in the field of battle—was shot at Madrid on the 16th inst. for his insurrectionary attack on the palace on the night of the 7th inst. Be the blood of this brave but misguided man, who thus fell a victim to the intrigues of an infamous woman, visited upon the heads of Christina Munoz, and her co-conspirators in the French capital. At his death he confessed that Christina had charged Don Ramon Narvaez was said to have entered Andalusia the province of Huelva. Tanuith had broken out at Valladolid, and a revolutionary junta had been formed at Burgos. In the midst of these rumors, it is not extraordinary that government took precautionary measures against the dangerous ferment of the public mind. The military posts are everywhere, and the artillery has been ordered into Madrid from the neighboring garrisons.

The regiment of the Princess and the regiment of Majorca had already arrived. The regent dismissed several colonels of whom he was not quite sure, and more than fifty officers of the guards, among them Col. Puig. He also has dismissed. The latter is supposed by Velarde.

It was reported that as soon as government should have assembled a sufficient force, it intended to disarm the whole of the guards who had shown a hostile spirit towards the regent. The palace is to be in future guarded by the national guard.

The attention of government was not, however, without causing the appearance of danger from some important creditors touching the treasury. The stamp duty had been farmed to M. Salfout for more than seventeen millions of reals; the salt duty to M. Salamanca, for fifty millions ditto, payable in four months. The five per cents were, on the 7th, at 29 for cash.

At eight o'clock in the evening of the same day Madrid was in the greatest agitation. The drum beat to arms in all quarters. It was soon ascertained that the royal guards at the palace had made a demonstration in favor of Queen Christina. The shops and cafes closed. The night was stormy and dark, and some houses in the neighborhood of the palace illuminated their windows; this example was followed, and the night was heard; it was prolonged, and then total silence prevailed.

At one o'clock in the morning, Generals Diez, Leon and Concha, seeing that their efforts to bring over the troops were unavailing, and that the game was lost, sallied out of the town at the head of forty horsemen, and fled towards the provinces, where they intended to have carried the young queen.

At the same time, the numerous arrests took place on the 8th. The only personage of importance among the prisoners, is Brigadier Nobzageray. He was taken with arms in his hands. The police is seeking for several generals compromised in the movement, especially Diego Leon, Concha, Aspriz, &c. &c. Some reports are to be relied on, that the chief efforts to penetrate into the queen's apartments were vain. The combat lasted more than an hour. It was warm work. Both parties left many of their men on the floor of the palace. The halberdiers having been speedily reinforced, repulsed the insurgents in every point.

The troops sent the night of the night, from the 7th to the 8th, under arms. The duke of Vittoria gave the example of vigilance. We have just learned the events of the night. A battalion of the regiment of the princess, and a detachment of guards on the palace, obeyed the instructions of the generals, Diego Leon and Concha, who made them proclaim the regency of Queen Christina. The conspirators, whose intention it was to carry off the queen and the infant, did not expect that the halberdiers would make the heroic resistance they did. The efforts to penetrate into the queen's apartments were vain. The combat lasted more than an hour. It was warm work. Both parties left many of their men on the floor of the palace. The halberdiers having been speedily reinforced, repulsed the insurgents in every point.

A battalion of the regiment of Luchana is in guard of the palace of Buen Vista occupied by the regent. Most of the editors and writers of the newspapers, having been under arms the whole of the night, the Gazette of Madrid alone appeared on the morning of the 8th.

EAST INDIES.

The New York American says the accounts are a week later than those received here by the Narragansett and Huntress. They were brought by the ship Cat Huntley, which reached Bombay just as the steamer was leaving with the mail for Suez. Papers of the 26th June, and letters of the 27th and 28th, are the latest received. It does not appear that the British have made any important gains on either side, though the Chinese were actively repairing the defenses of the river.

At Canton all was quiet, the Tartar troops not having returned there; but no business could be done, the Hong merchants refusing to buy imports, and the few thousand tons of tea had been made into Whampoa, and those were chiefly great teas for this market. A few English Americans were at Canton, but were leaving daily.

The settlement at Hong Kong seems to be going on vigorously.

The London Press of the 26th has the following paragraphs, which are not without interest:

We have nothing but conjecture to offer on the probable destination of the force which, it is said, will move to the northward in the latter days of next week. Amoy is generally reported to be the next place of rendezvous. The occupation of that town and island cannot fail to be a sensible blow to the imperial government, and may possibly be followed by consequences of the most serious nature in the disorganization of the country; nor should we at all wonder soon after to hear of a revolution in that province at least, the inhabitants of which have always had, and are now, said to have a reputation for disorder and turbulence. Indeed, the Fokien people have but a slight affection for the Tartar dynasty, having been the last to submit to its sway. The Fokien people are above the Chinese of other provinces distinguished for a spirit of liberty and commercial enterprise; and the frequent insurrections in their country, which they do not tamely submit to the tyranny of their government.

The Chinese were, in violation of all their treaties, manning and arming their batteries, collecting troops and making every exertion to prepare themselves for the most vigorous and protracted resistance.

The arrival of Sir Henry Pottinger was anxiously looked for. We submit an outline of his instructions from government:

His excellency is to demand 15 millions of dollars, as an indemnity for the opium seized by Lin, the expenses of the Hong Kong debts. He is to demand immediate payment of a portion of the above sum, equal to the estimated value of the opium, is to be required; the remainder to be paid by instalments within five years, and to bear interest in the meantime at the rate of five per cent. per annum. Sir Henry has further been directed not to negotiate with any man who does not hold plenary powers from his sovereign. He is also to insist on a British envoy being allowed to reside at Peking, and hold direct communication with the emperor. All the principal ports to be thrown open to foreign trade, and at each of them ground sufficient in extent for the erection of factories, to be ceded to the English. The Hong Kong is to be retained by the British as a permanent settlement.

Macao, July 20. Her majesty's ship Nimrod carries 50,000,000 dollars to Calcutta as part of the ransom of Canton.

A very angry edict had been received from the emperor, forbidding British trade and ordering the Tartar troops back to Canton. No movement to the northward on our part was expected, until the arrival of the reinforcements from India.

Nussier Khan, the master-spirit of the opposition manifested against the English in Upper Sindh, had succumbed to fatigue and sickness, and his sickness prevailed extensively among the British troops, and it was reported that the army was to be broken up and return to India. The annual outlay of three millions sterling, consequent upon the invasion of Afghanistan, is said to have put the directors of the company in a fury.

THE PESHAWAR. It is said that the Peshawar, won by Runjeet Singh from the Afghans, and stored to Shah Soojah, and that the latter has been gently compelled to make it over to the British in part payment of the twelve millions expended by them in placing him on the throne of Dost Mahomed.

It is reported, moreover, that Lord Auckland has recognized Shere Singh as the rightful sovereign of the Punjab, and that a British force is to be maintained in his dominions—of course at his expense.

The intelligence from China, of the capture and subsequent release of Canton, reached London on the 7th of October.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

PRESIDENT TYLER returned to the seat of government on Thursday last from a visit to his residence in Virginia.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY has returned to Washington, from his recent brief visit to Boston.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

Andrew Palmer, to be deputy postmaster at Toledo, in the state of Ohio.

John L. Yantis, to be register at Lexington, Missouri.

William P. Durell, to be receiver at Chillicothe, Ohio.

William F. Sturgis, of Tallahassee, to be law agent in the territory of Florida.

General Daniel Parker has been appointed chief clerk of the war department. The Army and Navy Chronicle says: Gen. Parker held that station during the last war with England, and was afterwards appointed assistant and inspector general of the army, but upon the reduction of the army in 1821, he was left out, and has not since been in public life. To a thorough knowledge of the duties of the post, he adds business habits of the first order.

INDIAN ANNUITIES. We are pleased to see that the government has made a blow at that species of iniquity heretofore practised in paying Indian annuities. In time past, and especially under the late administration, the great body of the Indians were mere ciphers in these payments. The payments were made to a few of the chiefs or principal men, some of whom had shrewdness enough to keep it, or at least a portion of it, but in most cases it passed directly into the hands of the trader. In fact, in most cases the money never touched the Indian's palm but went directly into the custody of the trader. No one not fully acquainted with the Indian character, has any idea of the most absolute influence of these traders over the Indians. They exert in all manner of ways the chiefs and principal men,—always have them debt to a very large amount, and the payment of these annuities is nothing more than the settlement of the extortions of the trader. Whilst the chiefs or principal men's bills are, from time to time, thus liquidated by the government, a large portion of the tribe are left to starve or eke out a miserable existence by whatever chance may throw in their way. Whilst the chiefs, the principal men of the nation, and the traders, are revelling in plenty, and often growing enormously rich at the expense of the nation, the great body of the tribe are suffering for the most common and necessary comforts. These reflections have been induced by the following paragraph which we cut from the Green Bay Republican, of the 2d inst.

We learn that the payment to the Menomonee Indians will be made until Monday or Tuesday next. Some difficulty is expected to arise, as the postmaster has refused to take the money, which he says he will make any change in the mode of payment, which he heretofore has practised. His instructions are to divide the money equally among all entitled to receive. The chiefs and a few others, have heretofore received more than the others of the tribe. Should Mr. H. attempt to carry out his instructions, it is thought the Indians will take the money, and pay themselves. Mr. H. has no military force to protect him.

[St. Louis Repub.]

WESTERN ARMY. There is a very animated feeling going on in the west relative to the site to be selected for the new army. The commissioners at the last date were in session at the board here, we presume, was a mere matter of convenience. We suppose they will visit the other principal points also. But the people of St. Louis do not rely upon the presence of the board to secure her claims a consideration of her superior advantages for commercial and manufacturing.

In some of the writers of this letter is compelled to admit our superiority; and the only frontier St. Louis cannot reach as easily as Cincinnati or Louisville, is Lake Erie, about one-twentieth part of the frontier which is to be supplied. Well, if nineteen-twentieths will not outweigh one-twentieth, we are willing to give up, and say nothing of our route through Chicago and the lakes, by which we can speedily reach the whole lake border.

Our Illinois neighbors are making a struggle for the location of the army; and we confess that, if St. Louis is not the spot, we hope they may be successful. Yesterday, a committee from St. Clair, Madison, and several other counties came over and visited upon the board. The committee consisted of the hon. John Reynolds, col. John Thomas, J. L. D. Morrison, William Kinney, Augustus Hassel, Dr. Butler and Adam W. Snyder. It is a strong committee, and entirely capable of doing justice to the country they represent.

AMERICAN WHALE FISHERY. The following is condensed by the Philadelphia Inquirer from a valuable article prepared for the Nantucket Inquirer, showing the number of vessels, the place to which they belong, and the amount of oil on board, up to October 1st, 1841:

No. of Vessels.	No. of Brls. of Oil.	No. of Vessels.	No. of Brls. of Oil.
Nantucket, 22	1230	Warren, 22	7,850
New Bedford, 200	59,796	Newport, 11	4,280
Fairhaven, 47	21,265	London, 13	6,432
Falmouth, 6	7,420	Mystic, 6	4,300
Worcester, 12	5,334	New Bedford, 48	25,400
Holmes Hole, 4	2,380	Bridgeport, 3	1,300
Wilmington, 2	460	Son Harbor, 34	8,060
Westport, 11	1,682	Gold Spring, 2	unk'd
Sagadahoc, 9	2,100	Newark, 4	650
Martha's Vineyard, 10	1,200	Greenport, 6	105
Wardham, 6	730	Janesport, 1	unk'd
Provincetown, 9	2,730	Hudson, 5	3,773
Plymouth, 9	unk'd	Paughkeepsie, 5	650
Newburyport, 2	1,400	Newark, 3	30
Gloucester, 1	unk'd	Wilmington, 3	2,550
Boston, 5	175	Duxbury, 1	unk'd
Lynn, 2	1,450	Freetown, 1	unk'd
Quincy, 2	1,100	Quincy, 1	unk'd
Portsmouth, 1	1,400	Fall River, 1	unk'd
Somerset, 2	150	New York, 1	unk'd
Fall River, 6	3,040
Providence, 7	1,700	Total, 636	214,302
Bristol, 9	1,510

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 62.

Head quarters of the army, adj't general's office.

Washington, October 15, 1841.

The following order has been received from the department of war:

Department of war, October 14, 1841.

"In compliance with the provisions of an act of congress, approved September 9, 1841, the president directs the formation of a board of officers for the purpose of selecting a suitable site on the western waters for the establishment of a national armory."

The board will be composed as follows:

Brevet Brig. General W. K. Armstrong, president.

Surgeon General Thomas Lawson, 1 member.

Lt. Col. H. H. Lang, top engineers, 1 member.

William S. Henley, esq. secretary.

The board will assemble on or before the 1st of November next, at St. Louis, Mo. where they will receive their instructions.

JOHN C. SPENCER, secretary of war.

By command of Major General Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, adj't gen'l.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 65.

Head quarters of the army, adj't general's office.

Washington, October 27, 1841.

By direction of the president of the United States, a general court martial will convene at the city of New York on the 4th of November, 1841, or as soon thereafter as practicable, for the trial of Capt. John H. H. of the 4th regiment of infantry.

The court will be composed as follows:

Brevet Colonel J. B. Walbach, 1st artillery.

Colonel J. Bankhead, 2d artillery.

Colonel H. Stanton, assistant quarter master gen'l.

Major M. M. Perry, 3d artillery.

Major John Erving, 3d artillery.

Major J. E. Mackay, quarter master.

Captain G. S. Drane, 3d artillery.

Captain C. S. Drane, 2d artillery.

Captain S. Ringgold, 3d artillery.

Captain J. Dimick, 1st artillery.

Captain J. C. Hart, 3d artillery.

Captain W. C. De Hart, 3d art'ry advocate.

A greater number cannot be assembled without manifest injury to the service.

Should any of the above named members fail to attend on the day specified for the assembling of the court, it will nevertheless be organized and proceed to the trial, provided the number present be not less than nine.

By command of Major General Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, adj't gen'l.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 66.

Head quarters of the army, adj't general's office.

Washington, October 28, 1841.

"The following instructions have been received through the secretary of war, from the president, and are published for the guidance of all concerned."

"Major General Scott, Colonel Totten of the engineers, and Lieutenant Colonel Talcott, of the ordnance, will compose a board to inquire into and report upon the propriety of establishing some safe depot for the preservation of the whole force of the United States, where it will not be exposed to the ordinary accidents of a neighborhood, and where no injury could be sustained by other buildings or persons in case of explosion."

"The board will examine Constitution Island, in the Hudson river near West Point, and such other positions as may be deemed expedient, and give an opinion which should be preferred. A statement of the quantity of powder to be stored and an estimate of the expense of establishing and maintaining the depot will accompany the report."

"The board will assemble on the 8th of November at West Point, N. Y. and Capt. Schriver is detailed to record its proceedings."

By command of Major General Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, adj't gen'l.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 67.

Head quarters of the army, adj't general's office.

Washington, Oct. 30, 1841.

On the arrival within the 3d military department, of the 6 companies of the 23d regiment of dragoons ordered for the present by general orders No. 58, containing the names of the companies, and of the companies G. I. and D. now at Fort Gibson, will be put in motion for Fort Leavenworth the head quarters, of its regiment.

By command of Major General Scott:

W. W. S. BLISS, adj't gen'l.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 69.

Head quarters of the army, adj't general's office.

Washington, November 4, 1841.

The following instructions have been received from the department of war, and are published for the guidance of all concerned:

"The president of the United States directs that the military force at any post or station in the Indian country, or its vicinity, shall be employed by the commandant of such post in the apprehension of every person who is guilty of an offence in the Indian country in violation of any of the provisions of the 'act to regulate trade and intercourse with Indian tribes, and preserve peace on the frontiers,' approved June 30, 1834; and in the conveyance of such person to the civil authority, as provided in the 23d section of the said act; and also, in the examination and seizure of stolen goods, packages and boats, as provided in the 20th section of the said act; and the preventing the introduction of persons and property into the Indian country contrary to law. The provisions of the act are so full and explicit that no other regulations are deemed necessary."

J. C. SPENCER.

Department of war, November 2, 1841.

By command of Major General Scott:

L. THOMAS, Assistant Adj't Gen'l.

LATEST FROM FLORIDA. The Savannah papers of the 6th inst., contain the following cheering intelligence:

East Florida, November 2, 1841.

The Tampa mail gives us cheering hope that every thing on that side of the territory in regard to the coming in of the Indians is favorable to the speedy termination of the war, without the necessity of firing another gun. On the 25th ultimo, the chief of the Tallahassee arrived at Tampa Bay with twenty-eight of his people. On the same day arrived there the United States schooner Fleet, from Colosatchie, with a chief of one of the bands of the everglades, and thirty-two of his people.

A sub-chief, with eight of his people, belonging to the southern Indians, are at Fort Meigs.

Report gives a gratifying intelligence that the league of the chiefs in the everglades is broken up; Sam Jones and the Prophet having quarrelled; that Sam is left with only twenty-seven warriors, and has gone out to the everglades to the Lochi-lalache, where Halleck Tus-tu-mug-gee is with a small band. Two of the principal chiefs in the everglades are willing to make peace with the people, and will do so in a short time without doubt.

Lieut. Sprague, adjutant 8th infantry, in charge of Tiger-Tail and Alghior, arrived yesterday at Fort King, on their way hunting for the Indians that are out in that neighborhood. They are expected at Palatka in a day or two, to pursue their hunt up to St. John's, and around the mouth of the Ochlocknee. On the 19th ult., the chief of the Florida tribe, Fionta-Rossas, that swept over the camp and stores—destroyed every thing. The men and of-feers escaped only with the clothes they had on; but one life lost. The steamer Isis was driven up into the middle of the camp, and now lies high and dry; nothing injured, and will soon be got off without damage.

FLORIDA RECRUITS. The ship Nicholas Biddle has arrived at St. Augustine, from New York, with 110 recruits for the 2d infantry, on service in Florida.—They are under command of Capt. Julius Kingsbury.

MILITARY ACADEMY. List of cadets appointed and admitted into the military academy, 1841.

—Maine, 3.—Thos. Montgomery, Albert Rowe, John L. Davis.

—New Hampshire, 2.—Solon Thornton, Benjamin P. McNeil.

—Massachusetts, 7.—William H. Wood, Marcus A. Moore, Edmund G. Allington, Charles F. Stone, Nelson H. Davis, John C. Dodge, Jr., Benjamin F. Hawkes.

—Connecticut, 4.—Lewis D. Welch, Henry Remington, Frederic Myers, George A. Bissell.

—Vermont, 2.—Wm. P. Smith, Edward C. Boynton.

—New York, 13.—Delaney F. Jones, Del Van Denberg, Hayes, Clement Best, George Edwards, Jos. M. Trowbridge, Orren Chapman, William S. Haskell, Francis Collins, Gordon Granger, Matthew R. Stevenson, James H. Brady, David A. Russell, Edward B. Hunt.

—Rhode Island, 5.—William W. Fark, William H. Swift, Joseph Douglas, Joseph F. Ferry, Geo. W. Morgan, Clement S. Fayssou, Wm. Forry, John A. J. Lewis, Robert C. Wallen, John P. Linderman, Christian Dealinger, Thomas F. Castor, Richard H. Rush, Patrick A. Farrelly, William N. Barker.

—Maryland, 4.—William H. Johnson, Cumberland D. Hollins, William A. Dashiell, Walter A. Jenifer.

—Virginia, 13.—George Pendleton, Lewis C. May, Richard C. W. Radford, William H. Tyler, James N. Davies, James R. May, William T. Allen, Rie'd Crump, Wm. N. Blow, Hamilton L. Shields, Henry C. Logan, James McConaghy, James C. Smith.

—North Carolina, 7.—Samuel A. Young, George P. Andrews, James M. Smith, Thos. C. Davis, Samuel M. Weathers, Preston Bynum, Franklin Faison.

—South Carolina, 6.—James M. Galbraith, Joseph J. Brown, Daniel H. Gailard, Proctor W. Sereven, Samuel L. Rook, Thomas G. Rhett.

—Georgia, 7.—James Camack, Jr., Henry Coopee, Joel A. Alexander, A. Alexander, A. Alexander, James N. Ward, Edwin Salisbury, Anthony D. Hill.

—Alabama, 2.—George M. Wharton, Martin Cummings.

—Louisiana, 2.—Louis Hebert, Thomas C. Moore.

—Kentucky, 3.—Thomas J. Wood, N. W. Brown, John T. Fickitt, James H. Haws.

—Tennessee, 2.—Jacob R. Groves, Wm. Rhea, John B. Cobb, Jas. C. Gentry, P. T. Turley, John Adams, Samuel H. Chester, James T. Armstrong.

—Ohio, 9.—B. W. Armstrong, James H. Suelling, William H. Stokes, Alexander P. Browne, Charles L. Weller, Philip N. Luckett, Alexander Rietlie, Henry M. Fennell, James Farrall, Harrison.

—Indiana, 3.—Newton C. Givens, Wm. H. Smith, Thomas G. Fitcher.

—Illinois, 2.—Wm. B. Reynolds, Newton R. Casey.

—Arkansas, 1.—William Fort.

—Florida, 1.—Edmund K. Smith.

—District of Columbia, 3.—Thompson F. Mason, (since dead), J. R. Foinsett Mechin, Lafayette Caldwell.

At large, 10.—R. Murray Morris, Henry B. Clitz, Francis S. K. Russell, Alexander P. Rodgers, Henry H. Green, William H. C. Whiting, John W. Davidson, Fitz John Porter, Washington L. Elliott, Bernard E. Bee. (Army and Navy Chron.)

The last accounts from Florida state that the following six companies of the 2d U. S. Dragoons, have received orders to proceed immediately to Baton Rouge, La., via Mount Vernon Arsenal, Alabama, viz:

Company E, commanded by Capt. May.

Company A, " Capt. Blake.

Company G, " Lieut. Merrill.

Company D, " Lieut. Torrey.

Company I, " Capt. Beall.

Company F, " Lt. Thornton.

The companies to rendezvous at Mount Vernon Arsenal—ultimate destination, Fort Jessup and Townson, some 400 miles up the Red river. Col. Harney to command the four companies remaining in Florida.

THE NAVY.

THE NAVAL SCHOOL. One hundred and twenty-five boys of the naval school of Brooklyn, with the proper officers and the band of the North Carolina, visited the fair of the American institute in New York a few days ago. Gen. TALLMAGE, president of the institute, made them a short speech which concluded thus:

"Take as your example the great men of your profession, men who from positions as humble as yours you now fill, have raised themselves to eminence and fill the world with the glory of their acts.

The path of promotion is open before you. Remember ever that—

"Honor and shame from no condition rise,
"Act well your part, there all the honors lie."

Obedience, implicit and unquestioned, should be your first rule. He who would learn to command must first learn to obey.

By obeying your officers you will best be enabled to fly your flag. That flag which your country looks to you to protect, when you have become older, and have learned to bear it to glory and to triumph.

That flag which your country expects you to hold aloft in its steady march upon the mountain wave—it lies in your hands.

When you have looked through the fair you will arrange yourselves here again, and return under charge of your officers.

The American institute wishes you all health and happiness, and is glad to see such a hearty set of youngsters among its visitors.

The boys replied by three hearty cheers, which were joined to by the other visitors present. The Courier says: "It was gratifying to see the spirit and life with which the lads went through the various rooms, and the order and discipline which were observable in all their movements, showing the perfection of this system of education." For ourselves we have so high an opinion of this naval apprenticeship institution, and feel such interest in its success, that we take pleasure in alluding to the young tars whenever occasion offers.

The United States ship Potomac and schooner Enterprise remained at Rio de Janeiro, September 20.

STATES OF THE UNION.

NEW YORK.

LEGISLATURE. We give below, a complete list of the members of the next legislature, (except the member from Rockland), arranged according to their political character. Senators marked with an asterisk (*) were elected this year; members of the assembly designated in the same manner, were members of the last house, and have been re-elected.

Van Buren.		Fourth district.
John B. Scott		Edmund Varney*	1
Isaac L. Varian*	2	Fifth district.
Second district.		Joseph Clark
Daniel Johnson		Samuel Ely
John Hunter		Henry A. Foster
Robert Deniston		William Ruger*	4
Abraham Boeck*	4	Sixth district.
Third district.		James Faulkner*
Alonzo C. Paige		Seventh district.
Henry W. Strong		Lyman Sherwood*
Erastus Corning*	3	William Bartlett*
Cattaraugus.		Whig.
First district.		Andrew B. Dickinson
Gabriel Furman		Nehemiah Plank
Morris Franklin*	2	Scratch district.
Robert C. Nicholas		Robert C. Nicholas
Erastus Root		Elijah Rhoades
Fourth district.		Henry Hawkins
Bethuel Peck		Abram Dixon
James G. Hopkins		Samuel Works
John W. Taylor		Gideon Hard*
Sixth district.		Whig.
Alvah Hunt		Adam Strong	3

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Van Buren.		Whig.
John A. Dix		Adam Strong	3
Corelius G. Palmer		Lemuel Weston
Jonas Shear	3	Columbia.
Cayuga.		A. J. Van Alstyne
Alvares Tupper		Jared Winslow
Veney Vincent		James Knickerbocker	3
John L. Cuyler	3	Delaware.
Cattaraugus.		Orin Griffin
Samuel Barrows		Samuel Ellis	2
Lewis P. Thorp	2	Dutchess.
Chemung.		John M. Ketcham
Sam'l T. Hathaway, Jr.	1	P. C. Van Wyck
Chemung.		R. C. Dubois	3
Samuel W. Julland		Fulton & Hamilton.
Clark Burnham		John Patterson	1

Green.		Potomac.
A. T. Van Slyck		Ebenezer Foster	1
John Laraway	2	Queens.
Herkimer.		John W. Lawrence	1
Arphaxad Leonis*		Richmond.
Michael Hoffman*	2	Henry Cole	1
Jefferson.		Rockland.
Elhu M. Church			1
Edbert G. Church		Russell.
John W. Lynde	3	George R. Davis
Kings.		Martines Lansing
William M. Udell	2	Silas W. Waite
Lewis.		St. Lawrence.
Carlos F. Scotland		George Redington
Calvin Morse		Calvin T. Hubbard	2
S. C. Hitebeck		Saratoga.
Job Wells	3	John Cramer
Montgomery.		Halsey Rogers	2
Lawrence Marcillis	1	Schenectady.
New York.		Jonathan C. Burham	1
Auguste Davezac		George Wright
Daniel C. Peutz		William Fink	2
Paul Groul*		Seneca
Conard Swackhamer*		Wm. C. Kelly	1
S. J. Jones Townsend*		Steuben.
George W. Erwin		Ziba A. Lebard
William L. O'Sullivan*		Francis E. Wier
John M. Murray*		Aaron W. Beach	3
William B. Macley*		Suffolk.
David R. F. Jones*	10	Benj. P. Wells
Ontario.		Richard A. Udell	2
Ebenezer Robbins		Matthew Brown	1
De Witt C. Stevens		John McQuigg	1
Ichabod C. Baker		Tompkins.
Orlando Seymour		Charles Humphrey
Oneida.		Bernardus Swartwout	2
David Munro*		Wm. Taylor
Wm. Taylor		Wm. Fulmer*
John Spencer	4	Jeremiah Russell
Orange.		Abraham Jansen
Robert Lawson		Warren.
Stacy Beakes		Benj. P. Burhans
Russell Mead	3	Wayne.
Saratoga.		Theron R. Strong
Sanford E. Church		James M. Wilson	2
Onecege.		Westchester.
Robert C. Keonoy		Horatio Lockwood*
Peter Devendorf	2	Joseph T. Carpenter*
Otsego.		Fates.
Levi S. Church*		Henry Spence	1
Leonard Caryl	95
Festus Hyde	3
Allegany.		Whig.
Lorenzo Dana*		Monroe.
Horace Hunt	2	Frederick Star
Broome.		H. K. Higgins
Robert Harper		George Stone	3
Emory F. Warren		Montgomery.
Rosier P. Johnson		James Devendorf	1
Austin Pierce	3	New York.
Cortland.		John Tucker
Oren Stinson		Wm. Jones
Jesse Ives	12	Nath'l G. Bradford	3
Squire S. Case.		Niagara.
Wm. A. Bird		Thomas C. Flagler
Bela H. Colegrove	3	Francis O. Pratt	2
Ess. x.		Otsego.
Geo. A. Simmons*		Peter M. Dox
Franklin.		Staten Green
T. B. Powell	1	Joseph C. Shelton	3
Greene.		Washington.
Albert Smith		David S. Wright
Robertinson Smiley	2	James McKie, Jr.	2
Livingston.		Wm. Jones
Chester Bradley		John W. Brownson*
Gardner Arnold	2	Eleazer Baldwin	2
VOTES OF THE CITY FOR A SERIES OF YEARS.			33

Van Buren.		Whig.
*November, 1836,	17,417		16,348
April, 1837,	(13,712)		(4,434)
*November, 1837,	16,049		15,913
April, 1838,	19,200		19,723
*November, 1838,	19,381		20,203
April, 1839,	21,145		20,086
*November, 1839,	20,016		18,057
April, 1840,	21,241		19,624
*November, 1841,	21,936		20,558
April, 1841,	18,602		18,306
The votes of April in each year are for mayor.
*Votes for president	† Do. for governor.	‡ Do. for

*Sons of officers of the army. †Sons of officers of the navy.

COMPLETION OF THE GREAT CHAIN OF RAIL ROAD FROM ROCHESTER TO ALBANY. The last link is at length finished; and this day witnesses the passage of cars over the whole line of the Auburn and Rochester road. This is indeed a great object accomplished.

NEW YORK. The Great Western rail road between Albany and Boston, the New Englanders who, twenty years ago, thought this region almost the farthest boundary of civilization, will be brought into close intimacy with the people of the celebrated "Genesee country." The route to and from New York, via Boston, will be nothing uncommon in winter and the Tremont house will soon reap a share of the harvest which western travellers afford to the landlords of the New York hotels.

The intercourse between New England and western New York, by rail road, through the winter, will prove mutually advantageous to the people of both regions; and we congratulate them all upon the prospect of a speedy and cheering fruition of the commercial benefits which cannot fail to flow from the completion of the long line of rail road which connects Rochester and Boston; a line which, completed toward now, as far as Batavia, will next year be finished to Buffalo, thus connecting with iron bonds the frontiers of Niagara with the seagirt shores of New England.

[Rochester Evening Post.]

NEW JERSEY.

MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Bergen.—Council—John Cassedy. Assembly—J. C. Zabriske, James J. Denarest.
Hudson.—Council—John S. Candlish. Assembly—Abraham L. Van Bockerken.
Passaic.—Council—Silas E. Canfield. Assembly—George M. Ryerson, Garrett Van Dien, jr.
Essex.—Council—William Chetwood. Assembly—William B. Baldwin, James Cook, Stephen Congar, Benjamin F. Brookfield, James Smith, Alexander Wilson, David B. Linn.
Morris.—Council—James West. Assembly—James W. Drake, Thomas C. Willis, Samuel B. Halsey, William Stephens.
Sussex.—Council—Alexander Boyles. Assembly—David Hayward, Isaac Russell, Nathan Smith.
Warren.—Council—Henry H. Van Ness. Assembly—John Moore, George W. Smyth, Jacob H. Winter.
Middlesex.—Council—George T. McDowell. Assembly—John J. Jekon, Frazee Ayres, David Dunn, Jaron Gulick.
Somerset.—Council—Joseph W. Scott. Assembly—Daniel Cory, Henry H. Wilson, Arthur F. P. Sutphen.
Mercer.—Council—James White. Assembly—Isaac Baker, Isaac W. Lansing, John B. Mount.
Hunterdon.—Council—John Lilly. Assembly—Isaac R. Strobe, John B. Mattison, Jonathan Dawes, Leonard N. Flowerfeld.
Burlington.—Council—William Kirk. Assembly—John Emley, William Black, Isaac Stokes, Levi Berton, Thomas H. Richards.
Monmouth.—Council—James Patterson. Assembly—Thos. C. Throckmorton, John R. Conover, Joseph H. Brindley, Benjamin L. Irons, Samuel R. Olinp.
Gloucester.—Council—William H. Cooper. Assembly—Joseph Z. Pierson, Thomas H. W. Halsey, John B. Miller, Charles Knight.
Atlantic.—Council—Mallon D. Canfield. Assembly—Joseph S. Reid.
Cumberland.—Council—Ephraim D. Whittear. Assembly—William P. Seely, Benjamin F. Chee, Elmer Ogden.
Salem.—Council—Robert Newell. Assembly—John G. Battenger, William H. Nelson, Thomas Flanagan.
Cape May.—Council—Thomas P. Hughes. Assembly—Marner Berdey.

The names of those in italics are whigs.

*Reported contested by Samuel A. Van Sued.

EXTRA SESSION. A resolution for an adjourned session of the legislature of this state, passed the house of assembly on Thursday last, by a vote of 38 to 16, the Van Buren members with few exceptions voting in its favor.

PENNSYLVANIA.

LEGISLATURE, 1842.—SENATE.

Dist. 1. Philadelphia city—Henry S. Spackman,* Jacob Gratz.*
Dist. 2. Philadelphia county—Benjamin Crispin, Edward A. Pennington,* Thomas McCully.*
Dist. 3. Montgomery, Chester and Delaware—Nathaniel Brooke, Abraham Brower, John T. Huddleston.
Dist. 4. Berks—Samuel F. Smith.
Dist. 5. Berks—Samuel F. Smith.
Dist. 6. Lancaster and York—John Strohm, Thomas E. Cochran, William Hiestor.

Dist. 7. Dauphin and Lebanon—Levi Kline.*
Dist. 8. Huntingdon, Mifflin, Juniata, Perry and Union—Robert P. Macley, James Mathers.
Dist. 9. Columbia and Schuylkill—Samuel F. Hoadley.
Dist. 10. Lehigh and Northampton—James S. Gibbons.
Dist. 11. Luzerne, Monroe, Wayne and Pike—Luther Kidder.*
Dist. 12. Lycoming, Centre, Clinton and Northumberland—Robert P. Fleming.*
Dist. 13. Bradford and Susquehanna—Asa Dinwiddie.*
Dist. 14. Franklin, Cumberland and Adams—James X. McLanahan,* William Gargus.*
Dist. 15. Bedford and Somerset—George Mullin.*
Dist. 16. Westmoreland—John C. Plumer.
Dist. 17. Washington—John Ewing.
Dist. 18. Fayette and Greene—William F. Copley.
Dist. 19. Allegheny and Butler—Charles C. Sullivan, George Darsie.*
Dist. 20. Beaver and Mercer—William Stewart.*
Dist. 21. Crawford and Erie—J. W. Farrelly.*
Dist. 22. Jefferson, McKean, Potter, Tioga, Venango and Warren—Samuel Hays.
Dist. 23. Indiana, Armstrong, Clarion, Cambria and Clearfield—William Bigler.*

New members this [*]—Names in italics Van Buren.

RECAPITULATION.

	1841.	1840.
Dis.	W. Op.	W. F. B.
1 Philadelphia city	2 0 2 0
2 Philadelphia county	0 3 0 3
3 Montgomery, Chester and Delaware	3 0 3 0
4 Berks	0 1 0 1
5 Berks	0 1 0 1
6 Lancaster and York	3 0 3 0
7 Dauphin and Lebanon	1 0 1 0
8 Huntingdon, Mifflin, Juniata and Union	2 0 2 0
9 Columbia and Schuylkill	0 1 0 1
10 Lehigh and Northampton	1 0 1 0
11 Luzerne, Monroe, Wayne and Pike	0 1 0 1
12 Lycoming, Centre, Clinton and Northumberland	0 1 0 1
13 Bradford and Susquehanna	1 0 1 0
14 Franklin, Cumberland and Adams	0 2 1 1
15 Bedford and Somerset	1 0 1 0
16 Westmoreland	0 1 0 1
17 Washington	1 0 1 0
18 Fayette and Greene	0 1 0 1
19 Allegheny and Butler	2 0 2 0
20 Beaver and Mercer	1 0 1 0
21 Crawford and Erie	1 0 1 0
22 Jefferson, McKean, Potter, Tioga, Venango and Warren	0 1 0 1
23 Indiana, Armstrong, Clarion, Cambria and Clearfield	0 1 0 1
	17 16 18 15

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Adams.—Thaddeus Stevens,* George L. Fauss.*
Armstrong.—George W. Marveland.
Allegheny.—Isaac Lightner,* David Decker, William Karns, John Murray.
Berks.—Matthew T. Kennedy,* John Ferguson.*
Bedford.—Abraham Weisel, M. Halderbaum.
Berks.—Samuel Moore, John Selrenck, John Pottiger, John Bachman.
Bradford.—William Elwell.
Bucks.—John Apple, Abel M. Griffiths, Joseph Thomas.
Butler.—Samuel M. Lane.*
Centre.—James Macmannus.
Chester.—William K. Correy,* Robert Futley.*
Emmon.—Elliot, Robert Laverty.
Columbia.—Daniel Snyder.
Crawford.—Morrow B. Lowry, John P. Brawley.
Cumberland.—William Barr, Joseph Culver.
Dauphin.—Samuel H. Clark,* Benjamin Musser.*
Delaware.—John P. Eyre.*
Erie.—James D. Dunlap,* Steven C. Lee.*
Fayette.—Aaron Hughes, John H. Decker.
Franklin.—Andrew Saylor,* Peter Cook.
Greene.—Thomas P. Pollock.
Huntingdon.—Jesse Moore,* Thomas Weston.*
Indiana.—John Cummins.*
Jefferson.—McKean and Warren—Lewis B. Dunham.
Lancaster.—Christian Kiedler,* Joseph McClure.*
Philip Van Neida,* Jacob Foreman,* Hugh Andrews,* Benjamin Pennell.*
Lebanon.—John Bruner.*
Lehigh.—Benjamin Fogel, Peter Hans.
Luzerne.—Hendrick B. Wright, A. Cartright.
Lycoming, Clearfield and Clinton.—James Gamble, George B. Barrett.
Mercer.—James Banks,* James Montgomery.*

Mifflin, Juniata and Union.—John H. McCrum,* William Ross,* John A. Vanvalzch.*
Montgomery.—William Bean, William B. Hahn, Charles Kugler.
Northampton and Monroe.—Joseph Kerr, Jefferson K. Heckman, Asa Packer.
Northumberland.—David B. Montgomery.*
Perry.—George Beaver.
Philadelphia city.—William A. Crabb,* E. Joy Morris,* Wm. F. Boone,* James B. Beers,* John Rush,* George Sharswood,* C. B. Trego.*
Philadelphia county.—John Felton, John W. Ryan, William Benschel, John Painter, Joseph L. Hancock, John J. McCahan, A. L. Romford, Thomas M. Scott.
Schuylkill.—Christian M. Straub.
Somerset and Cambria.—John Hanna,* John Royer,* Susquehanna—Calvin Leet.
Tioga and Potter.—D. L. Sherwood.
Warren and Clarion.—James R. Snowden.
Washington.—Wallace McWilliams, James McFarren, Jesse Martin.
Wayne and Pike.—J. H. Broadhead.
Westmoreland.—Samuel Hill, William Johnson.
York.—James Garretson, Adam Ebaugh, William S. Picking.

The names with a * are whigs.

RECAPITULATION.

	1841.	1840.
Counties.	W. Op.	W. F. B.
Adams	2 0 2 0
Armstrong	0 1 0 1
Allegheny	1 3 0 3
Beaver	2 0 2 0
Bedford	0 2 2 0
Berks	0 4 0 4
Bradford	0 1 0 1
Bucks	0 3 1 2
Butler	0 1 0 1
Centre	0 1 0 1
Chester	0 4 0 4
Columbia	0 1 0 1
Crawford	0 2 0 2
Cumberland	0 2 0 2
Dauphin	2 0 2 0
Delaware	1 0 1 0
Erie	2 0 2 0
Fayette	0 2 0 2
Franklin	1 1 2 0
Greene	0 1 0 1
Huntington	2 0 2 0
Indiana	1 0 1 0
Jefferson, McKean and Warren	0 1 0 1
Lancaster	6 0 6 0
Lebanon	1 0 1 0
Lehigh	0 2 0 2
Luzerne	0 2 0 2
Lycoming, Clearfield and Clinton	0 2 1 1
Mercer	2 0 2 0
Mifflin, Juniata and Union	3 0 3 0
Montgomery	0 3 0 3
Northampton and Monroe	0 3 0 3
Northumberland	0 1 0 1
Perry	0 1 0 1
Philadelphia city	7 0 7 0
Philadelphia county	0 8 0 8
Schuylkill	0 1 0 1
Somerset and Cambria	0 2 0 2
Susquehanna	0 1 0 1
Tioga and Potter	0 1 0 1
Venango and Clarion	0 1 0 1
Washington	0 3 3 0
Wayne and Pike	0 1 0 1
Westmoreland	0 2 0 2
York	0 3 0 3
	36 64 51 49

APPOINTMENT. John B. Butler, has been appointed, by Gov. Porter, equal commissioner.

MARYLAND.

ELECTION STATISTICS. One of our friendly correspondents sends us the following table—which it will be observed is calculated upon the supposition that Mr. Thomas' majority was as at first announced in the newspapers 539 votes, instead of 639, as in fact it proved to be. Our correspondent we presume was not apprized of the error.

Again, his calculation is predicated upon the supposition that the same individuals voted, or had a right to vote, that voted at the presidential election. Now the fact is that a more considerable change occurs in this respect every year than those who have not attended to it minutely would imagine. This change occurs by removal in and out of the respective places—by persons becoming of age—by deaths—by naturalization &c. &c. We ascertained for a community of 300 voters, not remarkable for change, that there was such a difference every year from these causes alone. In the city of Baltimore we have no doubt it would average nearly the same proportion.

To the voters of the State of Maryland.
Your respective editors placed before you the official statement of the two last important elections viz.

1840.		1841.
Harrison,	33,533	Johnson,	28,430
Van Buren,	28,759	Thomas,	28,559
Total	62,292	Total	57,379
Harrison's maj.	4,774	Thomas maj.	539
RECAPITULATION.
Harrison,	33,533	28,759	Van Buren,
Johnson,	28,430	28,559	Thomas,
Divide by 2	61,933	57,718
Average vote	30,976	28,859	maj. 2,117

You perceive from these facts, that 30,976 is the standard average Harrison vote, and 28,859 is the average Van Buren vote; maj. 2,117.

Permit me to place before you the number of voters of the different cities and counties who stood at home or neglected to vote at the last election, 1841. Also the number who voted for Harrison, now Thomas.

	Less voted at home Harrison.	Less voted at home Thomas.	Van Buren.	Total Harrison now Thomas.
1 Allegany,	236	none	86
2 Annapolis,	8	11	none
3 Anne Arundel,	499	30	none
5 Baltimore county,	537	392	none
6 Calvert,	58	72	none
7 Caroline,	85	none	14
8 Cecil,	260	19	none
9 Charles,	228	72	none
10 Carroll,	110	none	8
11 Dorchester,	239	23	none
12 Frederick,	375	none	165
13 Harford,	228	88	none
14 Kent,	81	none	11
15 Montgomery,	150	none	65
16 Prince George's,	182	none	25
17 Queen Anne's,	76	none	55
18 Somerset,	382	46	none
19 St. Mary's,	153	none	35
20 Talbot,	66	none	93
21 Washington,	269	none	56
22 Worcester,	210	none	70
	5102	653	730

Agreeable to the returns of the different districts it appears that 5,102 voters who voted for Harrison did not vote the last election, 1841—also 653 who voted for Van Buren, did not vote—and 730 who voted for Harrison voted for Thomas. All which, respectively submitted for your consideration, without comment, by AN OBSERVER.
—N.Y. 1841.

GEORGIA.
ELECTION. The legislature of Georgia on the 2d inst. opened the returns of the late election for governor of that state, and the result was as follows:
For Charles J. McDonald, Van Buren 37,547
William C. Dawson, whig 33,703

Van Buren majority, 4,144
The return of the election in Muscogee county, where Gov. McDonald had a majority of 42 votes did not reach its destination.

ALABAMA.
LEGISLATURE. Tuscaloosa, Nov. 4, 1841. The two houses of the Alabama legislature organized by the election of major N. Terry, of Limestone, president, and Dr. Moore, of Madison, speaker, both V. Buren, and without opposition. Philpot is elected secretary of the senate, and Tunstall clerk of the house.

MISSISSIPPI.
ELECTION. The election in Mississippi for governor, members of the legislature, two members of congress, and a great number of state officers besides, commenced on Monday, 1st inst., and continued for three days. Mississippi is the only state unrepresented in congress. The two members to be elected, with those to be chosen to fill vacancies by resignations, will complete the house of representatives.
The whig candidate for governor is D. O. Shattuck; the Van Buren anti-bond candidate is T. A. Tucker.
The whig candidates for congress are Adam L. Bingham and William R. Harley; the Van Buren candidates are William M. Gwin and Jacob Thompson.

—[Nat. Int.]

LOUISIANA.
YELLOW FEVER IN NEW ORLEANS. A letter from New Orleans to the New York Commercial, dated October 29th, states that the yellow fever had ceased to attack new cases, and adds:

